Baxter returns, and visits Ruth in her husband's absence. Learning of this, Norton decides to go away, but at the station is stopped by a vision of his wife's dead father. When he returns to Ruth he finds she has awakened to the value of his love, and throws herself into his arms. Darwin Karr, Richardson Cotton, Beverly Bayne and Herbert Haywood are the players.

"The Fable of the Roystering Blades." (Essanay. Wed., Aug. 25.)—One of George Ade's keen fables. This time it is of the two leading citizens who led the "dry" movement, but for one week in each year they would have a time in Chicago, waking up swathed in towels each morning, and ending when their bodies were carried to the Union Station. Nevertheless when they reached home again they would lead in the singing of "Yield Not to Temptation." The story is delightfully told in excellent photography.

"The Drug Clerk." (Essanay. Thurs., Aug. 26.)—The druggist and his wife, notified that a rich uncle is coming to see their five-year-old boy, dress the clerk up for the part, and he "gets away with it" in great shape. The druggist hires a fruit vender to kidnap the lad, and hold him for $5,000 ransom. This the uncle pays, but the druggist gets it back for him, and makes himself so "solid" that the uncle leaves him all his money. The acting is excellent, and the whole a really funny farce.

"Rule Sixty-three." (Essanay. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 28.)—The tribulations of three loving couples, who are estranged, separated and divorced, and happily for all concerned. Tremayne, divorced from his wife, consults a Disentangling Agency, for aid in preventing his falling in love with Amelia Benton, who also consults a disentangler.

The two disentanglers become entangled with each other, as do also the president of the agency and his former fiancee. Then "Rule Sixty-Three" is invoked successfully to bring the divorced couple together. In the cast are Raymond Washburn, Hugh E. Thompson, Royal Douglas, Jean Moyer, Charlotte Mineau and Leota Lorraine.

"Ham and the Experiment." (Kalem. Tues., Aug. 24.)—Ham and Bud are sacrificed to the cause of science. They are inoculated with a wonderful serum, which compels the admiration of every woman they meet—and they land on the grounds of a ladies' seminary.

The fun is furious, but it is real fun, and the locations make an attractive showing on the screen. Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan are supported by Ethel Teare, Betty Teare, Lucille West, Martin Kinney, Fernandez Galvez and Margaret Keys.

"A Double Identity." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 25.)—This, the sixth of the twelve "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," revolves around the theft of valuable diamonds from a salesman guest of the hotel. After the first attempt at stealing the gems, the occupant of an adjoining room is discovered bound to his chair, supposedly by the thief.

He is released, and soon afterward the gems are stolen, and the supposed victim disappears Later it is found that he and the man occupying the room on the other side are the same person. The gems are found hidden in cakes of soap. The action is rapid, and the interest well held throughout.

"A Battle of Wits." (Kalem. Fri, Aug. 27.)—Alice Joyce is at her best in this charming story of the woods and mountains. As a mountaineer's daughter, she is the victim of an unscrupulous man, who is endeavoring to get possession of her valuable property. Through the machinations of this man, her father is turned against her sweetheart (Tom Moore) who is imprisoned She brings about his release, and the plot is exposed.

"Train Order Number 45." (Kalem. Sat., Aug. 28.)—A real thriller in the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series. An operator, who has forgotten a train order, which results in a wreck, shifts the blame to Helen. Later the conductor of one of the trains, who has been crazed in the accident, is discovered hopping a freight car, and the operator plans to dynamite this car, which he turns loose to run down a steep grade.

Helen pursues the car on horseback, overtakes it, climbs aboard and sets the brakes. The missing train order is found and Helen is exonerated. There are several stirring scenes of trains and railroad offices in action.

"The Spark and the Flame." (Lubin. Mon., Aug. 23.)—A strong plea is made by this picture for the "back to nature" cult. In fact we might call this phrase the slogan of the tale.

It shows how Bob Benham, a "down and outer," is redeemed by meeting Mary Hamilton, a little country girl, also engulfed by the hungry city. When Bob meets Mary on a park bench and steals her pitiful wages, he selfishly thinks only of his own desperate needs, but later when he sees the girl about to fall a victim to the wiles of the floorwalker from the store where she is employed, remorse overtakes him and he saves Mary, to be himself led to salvation through her.

She persuades him to go back to the country, and there the future opens happily before them. Robert Gray, Dorothy Barrett and George Routh are the cast.

"Dog-gone Luck." (Lubin. Tues., Aug. 24.)—In this comedy by Fred Hayn, produced by Will Louis, "dagoes" furnish the laughter. A cute-looking dog figures in the film.

The plot tells how Tony and his wife, Rosa, plan to get the money of an uncle just over from Italy. The uncle catches on to their antics and makes his will, leaving them his all, which proves to be only the dog. The characters are taken by James Levering, Vincent DePascale and Mabel Paige.

"The Victorious Jockey." (Lubin. Tues., Aug. 24.)—On the same reel with "Dog-gone Luck." The ever-popular cartoon comedies seem never to pall on the average audiences.

Vincent Whitman here shows his weekly release for Lubin. A jockey rides a wonderful race, the prize for which is the hand of a beautiful heiress. All sorts of exciting adventures are his portion before success crowns his efforts and the girl becomes his very own.

"Kartoono." (Cartoon comedy, by Hy Gage.)—This is the first effort of Hy Gage for the screen, although known as a cartoonist for a large syndicate of newspapers from coast to coast.

Aside from some crudities scarcely avoidable in a first effort, this is very commendable work; funny (as the cartoon should be), absurd in the usual exaggerations, with original touches.

The green color of the undersea scenes is novel and attractive. "Kartoono" draws himself and then starts on his adventures. These lead him far afield on land and sea, in the air and under the sea, ending with success. This will be released on one of the prominent programs, several being under consideration by the author.

"The Mirror." (Lubin. Fri., Aug. 27.)—From time immemorial a mirror has been the symbol of a woman's vanity, but here the authors have made this bauble the salvation rather than ruination of Lydie, the simple mountain girl of the story.

Not being able to decide between her two sweethearts, she gives them a test. Ned meets it by presenting a new dress and the first mirror Lydie has ever had. Ned seems the winner, but when the girl finds that Joe has instead put his hard-earned money into the price of an operation for his old mother, her heart is touched, her vanity forgotten and Joe wins. Crane Wilbur, Ethel Clayton and Thurston Hall in the leads assure an exceptionally well acted picture.

"Billie Joins the Navy." (Lubin. Sat., Aug. 28.)—As this scenario was written by Lieutenant J. C. McCracken, U. S. N., you may be assured it has the proper naval atmosphere in spite of the absurdities that a farce comedy necessitates. Billie Reeves is the whole show, with a background of Uncle Sam's natty white clad sailors.

The story tells how Billie, tired of his hardships as a moving picture star, joins the navy. His comical adventures, including his dream of being an admiral, fill the rest of the reel.

As usual, Arthur Hotaling directed.

"A Lucky Deal." (Selig. Sat., Aug. 21.)—The story of the devotion of two partners, Joe and Doc, in a mining property. Both young men are in love with Hazel, daughter of the village storekeeper, but Doc, realizing he has no chance, sells his interest in the mine to Joe for $200 and plans to leave. Riding to the mine, Joe is followed by a highwayman, who plans to steal his valuable horse.

The animal, pawing up the ground, discovers a vein of rich ore, which Joe begins to work. The thief gets the horse, but is stopped by Doc. He overcomes his captor, but Joe and Hazel arrive, the sheriff is summoned and the thief arrested. Doc, acclaimed by Joe and the girl, places her hand in that of his late partner and rides sorrowfully away.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Animated Weekly, No. 180." (Wed., Aug. 18.)—An auto race at Allentown, Pa.; raising the partially submerged "Eastland" from the Chicago River; $50,000,000 of British money being carted through the lower streets of New York City; and the funeral of the two American sailors killed in Hayti are the main scenes in this number.

"Mrs. Plum's Pudding." (Broadway Universal Feature. Five reels. Mon., Aug. 23.)—Reviewed at length in issue of August 21.

"His Lucky Vacation." (Nestor. Mon., Aug. 23.)—This is rather conventional and lacks in comedy interest. A seashore flirtation in which the man goes to extremes to win the favor of the girl is the substance of the plot. A few good comedy moments. Herbert Stanley and Billie Rhodes are featured.

"Extravagance." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Aug. 24.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Billy's Love Making." (Imp. Tues., Aug. 24.)—The old story of the girl whose mother persists in dressing her in child's clothes. At the beach she meets a very attractive young man, who takes her for the young girl she appears to be. The ending can best be imagined. This has some humor in it. William Garwood and Violet Mersereau are the leads.

"Mr. Flirt in Wrong." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed, Aug. 25.)—The department store owner discovers that his floorwalker is the man who has been flirting with his wife and a mix-up of huge dimensions follows as a result of his detection. Harry Gribbon again appears as the floorwalker, while the supporting cast includes a number of young ladies in one-piece bathing suits.

"The Mystery of the Tapestry Room." (Big U. Three reels. Thurs., Aug. 26.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Seeking an Inspiration." (Powers. Split reel. Thurs., Aug. 26.)—A vaudeville act. A performer and her two dogs do some effective posing.

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Aug. 27.)—A reissue of an old Universal release with King Baggot in the title roles.

"The Box of Bandits." (Victor. Fri., Aug. 27.)—A fairy story of interest mainly to children. It is adapted from one of L. Frank Baum's yarns and features Violet McMillan.

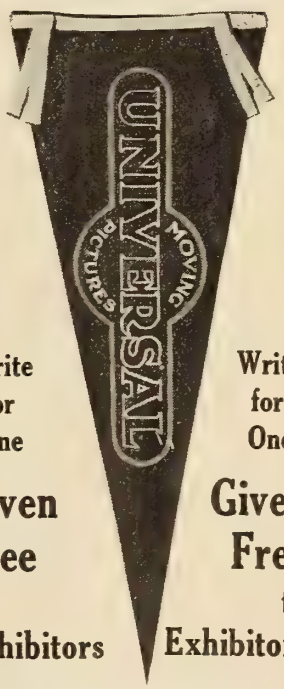
"His Egyptian Affinity." (Nestor. Fri., Aug. 27.)—A violent farce with an Egyptian setting. Nothing startlingly original but many laughs. Just a little too much running indulged in by the various characters. Victoria Forde, Lee Moran and Ed. Lyons head the usual Nestor cast.

"The Social Lion." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 28.)—Good, clean comedy, with a slight smattering of drama. The rancher marries an Eastern girl and in society he appears to very poor and to very humorous advantage. His transformation into a polished gentleman by the aid of his wife's brother alters matters.

Herbert Rawlinson and Anna Little appear in this enjoyable feature and both are called upon to exercise no little histrionic ability. And both play their parts exceptionally well. William Worthington directed.

"The Bravest of the Brave." (Joker. Sat., Aug. 28.)—An Allen Curtis comedy, written by Tom Delmar The much-abused husband turns out to be braver than a society criminal who has attracted the attention of his wife. The reel is of average laugh-provoking qualities. The usual Joker cast appears.

"She Loved Both." (Powers. Sat., Aug. 28.) This drama is so strong in its climax, which is an unusually long scene, that it will make a great big appeal to all. Sydney Ayres produced the film and it is one of the best that he has turned out for the Universal Company. Immediately after a wedding ceremony, the bride is stolen by a man whom she really loved better than her husband.



He carries her away and uses her to attract men to his saloon and dancing hall. Many years later the deserted husband wanders into the place, discovers his wife, and after a series of powerfully dramatic moments, he shoots at the other man, who draws his gun at the same time, with the result that both men are killed. Val Pal, Doris Pawn and Carmen Phillips are the supports.

"The Valley of Regeneration." (Big U. Two reels. Sun., Aug. 29.)—Through constantly coming in contact with good people a vampire forsakes her old life, finally entering a convent. A fair drama written by F. McGrew Willis and produced by Burton King. Adele Lane, Ed. Sloman and R. E. Bradbury are the leads.

LATE GENERAL FILM REVIEWS

"In the King's Service." (Selig. Two reels. Mon, Aug. 16.)—Here is a thrilling melodrama, revolving around a battle with Canadian moonshiners. The hero, Rupert, is an officer of the royal mounted police, who is sent to capture illicit whiskey makers in the neighborhood of his own home. The men he seeks are the brother and fiance of Philomel, a girl whom Rupert also loves, and who endeavors to make him a traitor to his trust. He refuses, and they part.

Learning that the girl has later sent for Rupert, her brother imprisons her in the cellar of their home, and when the officer arrives, tells him the message is a ruse. There is a battle, in which the girl's fiance is routed and takes refuge in the still. Her brother repents his ways, and joins the officials in a successful attack on the barricade. Philomel also repents, and she is reunited to Rupert.

"The Prima Donna's Mother." (Selig. Tues., Aug. 17.)—An appealing story, well told, with attractive settings and photography. Myra Barnes, scorned by her schoolmates because of her degraded mother, disappears from her home town. Ten years later she is the famous prima donna, with Phillips, her manager, and Quesno, a famous violinist, rivals for her hand.

Her tour takes her back to her old home, where her mother is still living, in such state that Myra dares not recognize her. During the performance the aged woman rises and calls to Myra, and Quesno rushes roughly to put her out. Phillips, however, interferes, and gently leads the woman home. Myra quickly makes her choice between her suitors, claims her mother, and weds Phillips.

"The Girl with the Red Feather." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 23.)—A clever story by Meredith Nicholson, of a banker who becomes interested in the fortunes of an ex-convict's daughter and her sweetheart, who also has just finished a prison term He is induced to assist the young couple in getting married, and while he is at the girl's home the police surround the place, but the criminals sought escape. The banker, however, persists in aiding the young couple, and finally brings them together at the home of the bishop.

"The Master of the Bengals." (Selig. Sat., Aug. 28.)—Another thrilling and elaborately staged Selig animal picture. Gordon, a young animal trainer, goes to India on a trapping expedition, and falls in love with a Rajah's daughter. A native suitor tells the Rajah that Gordon's real object is to foment a rebellion, and the visitor is condemned to death in a cage of tigers. One by one the animals are loosed on him, but he quells them as they come, and soon all are doing his bidding. The Rajah, in admiration, commands that his life be spared. Later the conspiring suitor is overthrown, and the Rajah's daughter becomes Gordon's bride.

"The Doughnut Vender." (Selig. Tues., Aug. 24.)—A simple but appealing tale of a woman forced to support herself and little grandson, who hits upon the idea of selling doughnuts at the circus. She is annoyed by several rough characters, but finally one takes her part, finds her a good location, and defends her while she disposes of her wares.

"The Goddess" (Vitagraph. Two reels. Fifteenth chapter.)—This, the last chapter of the serial, depicts the gruesome death of the three millionaires. Two of them are shot and killed by Gunsdorf. Old Mr. Barclay dies in attempting to rescue Gunsdorf from the water

Celestia and Tommy are of course made very happy with each other, while Freddy the Ferret is set up in a profitable business by Tommy. Mrs. Gunsdorf does penance for all her misdeeds by joining the Salvation Army

These last two reels of the thirty comprising the photoplay cap the body of the action with a finale that is most decidedly fitting.

"The Wardrobe Woman." (Vitagraph. Fri., Aug. 27.)—Kate Price is the real heroine of this strong drama of stage life. As the wardrobe woman with a musical comedy show, she saves a young chorus girl from the clutches of a human vulture, and starts her in the right direction. W. A. Tremayne, the author, has provided a number of thrilling situations, which are improved to the utmost by a capable company. In the cast are also Mary Anderson, Billy Billings, Donald Hall, George Debeck and Richard Clarke. Theodore Marston produced the picture.

"The Cub and the Daisy Chain." (Vitagraph. Mon.., Aug. 2-.)—A light comedy vehicle for Mr. and Mrs Sidney Drew. There is plenty of fun in the unusual situation, and the popularity of Mr. and Mrs. Drew add to the strength of the picture. Walter Horton and Donald MacBride are also in the cast. Mr. Drew has produced the picture from a scenario by L. Case Russell.

"The Good in the Worst of Us." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Aug. 26.)—This is rather an intense drama which cannot fail to give several thrills to any audience. It involves a criminal, who finds a girl companion of days gone by happily married. He begins to persecute her, and in protecting her, the husband nearly loses his life.

In a desperate situation, the wife calls on the police, and the criminal is fatally shot. He repents, and his dying words clear the young wife of all suspicion. Gladden James plays the criminal, Harry Morey the husband, and Carolyn Birch the wife. Elizabeth R. Carpenter is the author, and William Humphrey the producer.

"A City Rube." (Vitagraph. Wed., Aug. 25.)—Here the "Rube" comes into his own. He gets a green city boy out among the cows and chickens and has all manner of fast fun with him. Such things as supposing the milking stool is for the cow to sit on, and collecting all the china eggs and bringing them to the kitchen, are enough to disgust the farmer, and to send Adolphus, the unsophisticated son of the city, flying for the railway station, two jumps ahead of a flock of bird shot. Alfred Vosburgh, George Stanley, Mrs. Jay Hunt, Margaret Gibson, Jack Mower, and Don Clarke compose the cast. Ulysses Davis is the producer, and Franklyn Getter the author.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Little Lumber Jack." (Reliance. Sat. Aug. 21.)—An absorbing story of Paul, the little mascot of a lumber camp in the north woods. Edgar owner of the camp, takes up his residence in the woods, with his litlle daughter, Mildred, who forms a close friendship with Paul.

The boy teaches her woodcraft, which later stands her in good stead when she is kidnapped by enemies of her father. She knows how to mark a trail through the woods, which Paul is able to follow and rescue her. Paul Willie and Mildred Harris are especially pleasing as the children. Other parts are taken by Bert Hadley, Mrs. Harris, and Dark Cloud.

"Faithful to the Finish." (Komic. Sun., Aug. 22.)—Fay Tincher is a busy commedienne in this comedy, which is one of the best she has done. She portrays the stenographer to Colonel Boom, and two conspirators, who are trying to steal the "plans" hear that she has fallen heir to a fortune. One of them tries to win her for himself, and tries to blacken the name of the bookkeeper whom Fay intends to marry. Bobby, the office boy, spoils their scheme.

"The Fatal Hour." (Majestic. Two reels. Sun., Aug. 22.)—Interesting, but impossible story of family discord, and a feud between brothers, which culminates when valuable diamonds are stolen, and their father is found dead in his chair, with a bullet hole in his body. Both sons are arrested, but the wife of one hires a detective, who finds that the aged man has been shot automatically, when the sun's rays were focused on a cartridge lying on the table, by a pair of spectacles.

Both young men are cleared. There are several exciting moments, one being when one of the sons fires through the curtains at a supposed burglar, the bullet missing the intruder, who is in fact, his own brother. Edwin Harley, Charles West, Frank Bennett, Vester Perry, Margie Wilson, and Sam De Grasse, compose the cast.

"In a Japanese Garden." (Thanhouser. Sun., Aug. 22.)—A pretty little tragedy, in which a young American naval officer falls in love with a Japanese maiden of high caste, and because she has received him alone, she is condemned to take her own life, according to the laws of the Samurai. The American adds his pleas to those of the girl, but they are unavailing, and forced to the act, she slashes herself, and falls lifeless at his feet.

Then the American awakes, and finds he is only a crippled boy, poring and dreaming over his miniature Japanese garden, which is his most prized possession. The story is played by Mr. Maida, Miss Mitzu, George Marlo and Towhichi Kamada.

"Glorianna's Getaway." (Falstaff. Mon., Aug. 23.)—Hattie Williams is featured as the colored maid to a popular actress, whose happy and exciting life she envies. The actress is obliged to decline her fiance's invitation to a maskball on account of rehearsal, and the negro is trying on her mistress' new gown when the fiance arrives to find the cause of the refusal.

Seized with an idea, Glorianna slips on a mask, and passes herself off as the actress. Her mistress happens to drop in at the ball later, and finding her fiance with another woman, snatches the mask from Glorianna, and exposes her. There is a riot of fun in this picture.

"Drawing the Line." (American. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 23.)—Reviewed at length in another part of this issue.

"His Mysterious Profession." (Beauty. Tues., Aug. 24.)—A baseball story well filmed and acted by Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell. The latter plays the role of the popular pitcher of the home team. He falls in love with the niece of two maiden aunts, both violently opposed to baseball. They are finally won over on seeing him play, become enthusiastic fans and consent to their niece's marriage.

"Snapshots." (Thanhouser. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 24.)—The story of how a negative in a child's camera brought a young couple together, and at the same time prevented a thieving banker from crushing a poor editor who knew of the crime. The banker had conspired with his cashier to steal a sum of money, the cashier disappearing and taking the blame.

The banker then loaned money to the local editor, taking a note which would enable him to seize the plant if the newspaper's attacks became dangerous. While the banker was in New York, meeting the missing cashier, a cousin of his daughter was taking pictures in the park, and obtained a negatie of the transaction.

Another negative of the girl was seen by a young man, who was so attracted that he kept up a search until he found the original. Justus D. Barnes, Grace De Carlton, Ethyle Cook, Leland Benham, Harris Gordon, Arthur Bauer and M. Howard are in the cast.

"Jerry's Busy Day." (Cub. Thurs., Aug. 26.)—Reviewed on another page of this issue.

"The Little Cupids." (Majestic. Tues., Aug. 24.)—A pretty story of two sweethearts who quarrel, and unknown to each other, take passage for a sea trip on the same vessel. The small brother and sister of the pair, who have been taken along, combine with the cabin boy, to form a sort of Cupid coalition and dispel the storm clouds which gathered when the estranged ones first spied each other.

A curate who is on board is called in for the happy ending. Joseph Henabery, "Billie" West, Violet Radcliff, Carmen De Rue and George Stone are in the cast.

"Editions De Luxe." (Reliance. Wed., Aug. 25.)—This is another of the crook plays which have become so popular with fiim patrons. It relates the story of a girl crook who reforms, and becomes engaged to a detective. Later she is led back to the life of crime by a former "pal," and the detective becomes betrothed to another girl.

In following up a band of criminals, he comes across his former fiancee, who mistakes his kindness toward her for a return of his former love. She is undeceived when the detective's fiancee appears, and leaves heartbroken. In the cast are "Billie" West, A. D. Sears, G. M. Blue, Richard Cummings, C. Rehfeldt and Eleanor Washington.

"Pinto Ben." (Broncho. Two Reels. Wed., Aug. 25.)—This is the story of a cow pony, told by its owner. The little horse saved the cowboy's life when a herd of cattle stampeded in the narrow passages of the Chicago stock yards, sacrificing its own life in a leap.

The film is a succession of "fade ins" as the cow puncher relates the incident to his companions gathered around a campfire.

"Mixed Wires." (American. Wed., Aug. 25.)—Two John Smiths live in the same town. One telegraphs his wife that he will be home at midnight, the other wires that he has been delayed until morning.

The messages become mixed, each going to the wrong wife. This supplies the ludicrous situations which land one husband in jail for what appears to be attempted house-breaking. Edward Coxen, Winifred Greenwood, George Field and Lizette Thorne play the principal parts.

"That Poor Dumb Cow." (Falstaff. Fri., Aug. 27.)—An unique comedy woven about the adventures of a collector of rare art objects, to whom a cow is sent as a gift. He rejects the gift, but the animal stays around anyway, and driven to desperation, the collector imbibes a number of drinks.

In a mellow condition, he sees the cow standing homeless in a pouring rain, and takes it home with him, stabling it in his parlor. That night two burglars call to rifle the collection, and the cow, stumbling about, closes the door on them, and goes to sleep against it.

The collector is able to catch the intruders, for whom a reward of $5,000 each has been offered. Riley Chamberlain, N. S. Woods, Leo Pos, Charles Emerson and S. Swinburne compose the cast.

"A Bold Impersonation." (Reliance. Two Reels. Sat., Aug. 28.)—Olga Gray is starred in this dramatic story of love and knavery among the European nobility. As Louise, Reviere, Olga Gray is betrothed to a dissolute young duke, for the sake of a loan to his father A young Italian, who loves her devotedly and unselfishly, conspires to help her escape, but in the meantime she falls in love with an actor.

This actor impersonates the young Italian, and in a fight with the duke is wounded. Louise seizes a sword and mortally wounds the duke, and she and her lover escape on horseback. They swim to the Italian's yacht where they are married. Supporting Miss Gray are Eric von Ritzau, Carl Forms, Jr., Maxfield Stanley, Francis McDonald, George Walsh and Alberta Lee.

"CAPITAL PUNISHMENT"

(Knickerbocker—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

"CAPITAL PUNISHMENT" affords an excellent medium for the talents of the young and beautiful star, Lenore Ulrich. She appeared to excellent advantage in numerous scenes, allowing full rein to her abilities.

In some respects the play is structurally defective, and several scenes are unnecessarily prolonged. But this drawback is offset by an interesting story developed in a series of scenes holding the attention by their tense action. Perhaps a few of the prison views bring home to people of peaceful disposition a disturbing sense of inharmonious personal relations between some of their turbulent and distressingly cantakerous neighbors. The penitentiary episodes are not many, however.

The jailyard scene showing a gallows under construction might be reduced to a flash without detracting from its purpose in producing a thrilling effect on the spectator.

A great number of pleasanter scenes make up for these sordid phases of life, and perhaps stand out with greater vividness because of the contrast.

Judge Baxley, father of Olive and Vivian, is a strong advocate for the abolition of capital punishment, and threatens to lead in a movement for the impeachment of the governor if the head of the state does not recede from his firm stand for capital punishment.

After a referendum vote indicates the desire of the people for the retention of capital punishment, his daughter Olive and the fiance of his dead daughter Vivian are charged with murder. The young man is convicted and the governor refuses to interfere with the findings of the court, or act contrary to the expressed wishes of the people.

Judge Baxley, convinced of the condemned man's innocence, makes every effort to have the death sentence commuted, but fails, although he succeeds in arousing public opinion against the coming execution. A crowd of sympathizers attack the prison and burn the gallows. In the meantime an important witness to the events upon which the young man was convicted learns by accident of his plight, and believing him innocent, rushes back from Honduras to the States. His testimony clears the prisoner, who is able to go forth into the world freed from the stain of guilt.

FAMOUS NEWARK STOCK THEATRE GOES TO PICTURES

THE Orpheum theatre, Newark, N. J., devoted to dramatic stock performances during the last four years, will be reopened Saturday night as a motion picture playhouse. M. B. Schlesinger, formerly associated with the Mark Brock Amusement Company, will be the resident manager of the Orpheum.

Since the Fosburg players closed their season at the Orpheum six weeks ago the house has been renovated and redecorated.

"SALVATION NELL"

(California—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

THE quotation "Man's extremity is God's opportunity," is aptly illustrated in Edward Sheldon's play "Salvation Nell." Yet how much better and more forcibly is it brought home in this latest release of the California Motion Picture Corporation.

A theme of more absorbing heart interest, more tense situations, or even more pathos would be hard to find, and in the film it would seem as though it were made for it.

Beatriz Michelena certainly is to be congratulated and, too much credit cannot be given her for her wonderful characterization of Nell Saunders, who, in her dire trouble, joins the Salvation Army. She has put her whole soul, as it were, in her part and in one scene especially, a close up, real tears are shown welling from her eyes.

William Pike, who so ably assists her in his representation of Jim Platt, Nell's lover, is a new one in the ranks of film stars, but he is good. He is deserving of special mention, although the entire cast is an able one and shows good generalship on the part of the director.

The interior settings and exteriors are all well chosen and show great attention paid to detail. The photography throughout is out of the ordinary, so clear and sharp with good lighting as to make it a pleasure to witness.

A good plot, interesting throughout, excellent photography, masterly acting on the part of the principals, and a director alive to his work, make this release one of the best of the month, and suitable for any audience.

"JANE," FIVE-REEL MOROSCO, UNDER PRODUCTION

THE filming of a five-reel comedy, "Jane," adapted from the stage production written by Lestocque, was taken up last week by the Oliver Morosco Company. Charlotte Greenwood, who is being starred in the Oliver Morosco comedy with music "So Long, Letty," is playing the name part, supported by Sidney Grant, Myrtle Stedman, Forrest Stanley, Herbert Standing, Lydia Yeomans Titus and Howard Davies.

The direction is in charge of Frank Lloyd. More than one hundred scenes of this will be taken in a five-room set constructed entirely of oak. The lumber represents an outlay of more than a thousand dollars, and the paneling contains more than a thousand square feet of quartersawed oak

Miss FLORENCE ROCKWELL

HER reputation is established as a Broadway Star and leading woman, in roles requiring skill and talent, from Juliet and Ophelia opposite Richard Mansfield and Robert Mantell, to the creation of tense and charming leads in some of Klaw and Erlanger's greatest productions.

But behind reputation is a personality; one shortly to be proved especially strong and winning in photo-drama. Miss Rockwell, who has never made public appearance upon the screen, has been engaged for a feature production yet to be announced.

"IT'S TIME THE PEOPLE KNEW THE TRUTH. 'GUARDING OLD GLORY' WILL TELL IT." Major General LEONARD WOOD.

F. O. NIELSEN

presents to the American People

Five Reels of the most timely, important and at the same time the most thrilling subject

GUARDING OLD GLORY

Will make every red-blooded American sit up and take notice! Will "pack" any theatre on its merits!

The First and Only Peace Preparedness and Patriotic Picture to tell the Truth by presenting in a vivid and striking manner the actual facts pertaining to Uncle Sam's Army and Navy at the Crucial Moment when the Press and Public are beginning to realize our Unpreparedness in the event of war.—The First and Only Peace Preparedness and Patriotic Picture to have earned the solid endorsements of Press, Public, Patriotic Leagues, and various Government Heads.

"I WISH EVERY CITIZEN COULD SEE 'GUARDING OLD GLORY'"
Lindley M. Garrison

"I TRUST THAT THOUSANDS WILL SEE 'GUARDING OLD GLORY'"
Josephus Daniels

"YOU ARE DOING A PATRIOTIC DUTY IN SHOWING 'GUARDING OLD GLORY'"
Hugh L. Scott, Major General, Chief of Staff

"'GUARDING OLD GLORY' IS OF REAL EDUCATIONAL VALUE"
Leonard A. Wood, Major General

"EVERY PATRIOTIC AMERICAN WILL BE BENEFITED BY SEEING 'GUARDING OLD GLORY'"
Admiral W. S. Benson, Chief of Operations

NOW RELEASED FOR STATE RIGHTS

No live buyer will overlook the fact that "GUARDING OLD GLORY" is the picture of "the minute." Your daily paper prints columns of the very subject covered by "GUARDING OLD GLORY." It means a clean-up, because—the Press is with us—the various Patriotic Leagues are with us—the Government Heads are with us—and the Public which is just beginning to become aroused over Uncle Sam's Unpreparedness is with us.

THE VOICE OF THE COUNTRY DEMANDS A 12-REEL PROGRAM

After months devoted to a country wide investigation into the needs of the exchangemen—after consultation with the most influential exhibitors from coast to coast, the one incontrovertible key-note struck by our exhaustive inquiry is that the almost universal demand today is for a diversified program of twelve reels a week of unimpeachable quality and merit.

NO FURTHER DELAY

We are now releasing a weekly program of 12 reels comprising mirth provoking comedies and high class dramas in one, two and three parts.

SAFETY FIRST

We have now and will continue to have in reserve a ten weeks' supply of 120,000 feet of film in our vaults which will absolutely insure the exchangeman against the remote possibility of a delay in productions.

AN ASSURED AND CONTINUOUS SUPPLY

Behind our program stands an organization of eight of the most experienced and successful of American producers, who will make what the public demands.

OUR SYSTEM ECONOMICALLY PERFECT

The main feature of our operating policy is the elimination of the middle man's profit. A conservative business profit is all we want and all we expect. This means that you will be able to buy our productions at a price which assures to you a profit measured actually by your own efforts and activity.

WE ARE IN A PERFECT STATE OF PREPAREDNESS

Three weeks' supply of film awaits shipment on a moment's notice. Lithographic paper of the highest class of all our subjects is now upon the press of the Lithograph Co. and is practically available for an instant's use.

in the

4-ACT FEATURE of Regeneration

"The Way Back"

Miriam Nesbitt, whose searching insight has given such convincing impersonations of underworld characters, is given ample scope in "The Way Back," in her ranging from a rich respectable woman to comrade of a crook, and back again, carrying others to the higher life. Not a dishing up of "dirt" but a picturizing of the underworld's struggles and sorrows in a heart interest way. Mary Rider, the author, is vivid because her stories come from the lips of the people portrayed.

George Wright, versatile as clever, with Frank McGlynn, give realism of a high order to this feature which has had the direction of the creator of remembered screen characters, Carlton King. Friday September 3d.

Raymond McKee in the one-act comedy, "The Simp and the Sophomore." Direction Will Louis. Wednesday, September 1st. One of those gingery, snappy laugh getting reels.

Bessie Learn and George Wright in the one-act unusually strong drama of a heroic but lost love. Direction E. C. Taylor. Saturday, September 4th.

The Detective

"JERRY"

was hot on his trail. He had been elusive but the sleuth's net was growing taut—little hope for escape remained, when—

"Mister, please, just a moment!" excitedly begged two pretty girls of the pursued Jerry. "We have been annoyed by mashers and we want you to be our protector. You'll dress in a maid's outfit, escort us around and thrash the rowdies when they speak to us again."

"Fine! I'll take the job," eagerly exclaimed Jerry. And aside: "That detective won't know me in a maid's uniform." So Jerry became a maid and unwittingly jumped from the frying pan into the fire.

That's part of the story of "Making Matters Worse," a screaming one-reel Cub Comedy, with George Ovey, the funniest man in America, playing "Jerry," which is to be released Thursday, September 2, on the Mutual Program.

Every audience will howl at Jerry's efforts to extricate himself from the situations into which he is thrown. "Making Matters Worse" is funny—very funny—one of the best productions ever turned out at the David Horsley Studios, which is recommendation enough.

Every exhibitor should book it.

Motion Picture Projection Simplified

Copyright, 1915, by J. H. Hallberg

19 I—Suppose your current supply is the Edison three-wire system with 220 volts between outside wires and 110 volts between the neutral or middle wire and each outside wire. How would you connect your machine to this service?

Ans.—The rheostat or other controlling device which is furnished with the machine may be made for either 110 or 220 volts. The voltage of this device naturally determines whether the machine should be connected to the outside 220 volt wires or to the middle and one outside wire.

19 J—Is there any preference as far as the machine is concerned in using the 110 or 220 volt service?

Ans.—In all cases where it is possible 110 volts should be used because with 110 volts there is plenty of resistance in series with the arc to secure steady operation and when 220 volts is applied a resistance consuming 110 volts unnecessarily giving off a lot of useless heat at great expense must be installed.

19 K—Why must 220 volts sometimes be used on the three wire Edison system for projector arc lamps?

Ans.—The electric lighting company sometimes and, in fact, in most cases, demands that where a load exceeding 20 amperes and in some cases as low as 10 amperes is applied to the three wire system it must be connected across the outside wires so as to not interfere with the regulation of the system.

You understand that if a 30 ampere projector arc with a 110 volt rheostat is attached to the middle and one of the outside wires of a three wire system, when the carbons are put together there is a considerable rush of current for an instant until the carbons are separated, which has a tendency to lower the voltage on that side of the three wire system.

This unbalancing not only may interfere with the illumination of stores and factories in the neighborhood, but it also throws an unbalance on the power plant if by accident or carelessness a number of projector arc lamps should be put on the same side of the three wire system.

Electric companies exercise great care in preventing unbalancing of their system and cannot be blamed for objecting to projector lamps taking 20 amperes or more being connected on one side of the system. Sometimes it is argued that two machines installed on opposite sides, each one requiring 30 amperes or more at the arc, constitutes a balance.

Don't forget that the two machines are not in operation at the same time for more than a very few minutes. Consequently the system is unbalanced to the extent of the arc more than three-quarters of the time.

19 L—Why is the three wire system used in place of the regular two wire system in the distribution of electricity?

Ans.—There are two reasons for the use of the three wire Edison system in preference to the ordinary two wire system of distribution. The main reason is a financial one because it allows for the use of much less copper in the distribution system cutting the cost of installation down to a considerable extent.

The second reason is that the three wire system permits two different voltages without complication or inconvenience on the same system by the use of only three wires instead of four, and there may also be a third reason which manifests itself in the greater convenience by using smaller wires, switches and other fittings which can be installed with greater ease. The possibility of operating incandescent lamps at 110 volts and motors at 220 volts is of considerable advantage from a commercial and economical point of view.

19 M—How would you demonstrate the financial advantage of the three wire system over the two wire?

Ans.—The accompanying Fig. 16 illustrates the ordinary 110 volt D. C. generator distributing current over a two wire system. The particular installation in this case calls for a distance of 1,000 feet between the generator and the load with a maximum loss of ten per cent. in the transmission with a load represented by two projector arcs of 50 amperes each, making a total load of 100 amperes. For this installation there would be required two wires of 210,000 circular mills each, which is practically two No. 0000 wires.

By referring to Fig. 17, which gives exactly the same operating conditions, but which operates on the three wire system, it will be found by calculation that three wires of only 105,000 circular mills each, or three No. 0 wires, will perform the same work.

To put the saving in copper down to the actual figure it may be interesting to know that the system in Fig. 16 calls for 1,281 pounds of copper, whereas the three wire system in Fig. 17 calls for only 959 pounds, showing a saving of 322 pounds of copper for this comparatively small installation. With these figures before you, you can easily comprehend the tremendous advantage there is in the use of the three wire system of distribution over two wire from a financial point of view.

19 N—What is the usual percentage of loss allowed in electric wiring and transmission?

Ans.—In the foregoing example I allowed for convenience of figuring, a ten per cent voltage drop or loss in the wires. The usual loss allowed within buildings is between one and two per cent.

For transmission of current for light and power the electric lighting companies calculate their lines for a loss or voltage drop of between two and ten per cent. It is evident that if the loss in the foregoing example was made only two per cent. the saving in copper would be much greater.

ACTIVITIES OF THE PHILADELPHIA THEATRES

THE Arcadia, at Sixteenth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, has been put in summer dress by its energetic manager and owner, Al Boyd. The chairs have been covered with cool gray linen and attractive living plants in artistic white tile boxes adorn the lobby.

The Bluebird, Philadelphia, Elliott Goldman manager, will next week inaugurate a daily change of program instead of the tri-weekly as before. This change is demanded by the patrons, the Bluebird being a neighborhood house at Broad and Susquehanna.

The Park at Ridge avenue and Dauphin, Philadelphia, has just installed a new Seabury organ. Paramount pictures will be the policy of the theatre in the near future.

The Kriterion theatre, at Forty-fifth and Lancaster avenue, Philadelphia, has been leased to Thomas Smith, of New York.

Mrs. A. Ingham, of Philadelphia, has bought the Victor at Seventeenth and McKean. C. Stamper, who has recently taken over the management of the Tioga at Seventeenth and Venango streets, Philadelphia, is an old photoplay man, having been in the motion picture business for several years.

William Katz, of the Stanley theatre, Philadelphia, has just returned from a five weeks' trip of business with pleasure. The vacation part was spent by the "wild waves" of Atlantic City.

C. J. Bradfield, of the Family theatre, on Market and Juniper, Philadelphia, has just returned from his vacation spent at Betterton, Maryland. The Family is one of the few photoplay houses left on a big business thoroughfare able to make a success with a five-cent admission.

The new Pilcher organ which is being installed in the Jefferson, at Twenty-ninth and Dauphin, Philadelphia, will be complete on August 30, when a special musical program will be a feature of the occasion.

The Alhambra, at Twelfth, Morris and Passyunk avenue, will be closed for a week in order to facilitate the alterations and improvements now under way. This theatre carries a Paramount program in addition to vaudeville. A new organ has been put in the house and special musical programs are featured.

S. K. Melvin and C. Goldstone, managers of the Garden theatre, at Sixty-first and Lansdowne avenue, Philadelphia, have acquired the Rittenhouse at Sixty-third and Haverford avenue. A grand opening will mark the initial performance on August 28.

A. Goldenberg, the present manager of the Globe, at Juniper and Market, Philadelphia, has succeeded R. Ertel as manager of the Central Market Street Amusement Company's theatres. There will be under the management of Mr. Goldberg, in addition to the Globe, the following houses: Victoria, Savoy, Princess, Auditorium and Market Street theatre.

Carl Miller, manager of the Knickerbocker, at Fortieth and Market, is taking a motor trip through the White Mountains and Maine with a party of friends. The Knickerbocker will change from a photoplay policy to a stock company house on Labor Day.

SIZE OF FUSES ON FEEDERS

Y. Z., Tampa, Fla.:—Will you be kind enough to answer the following question?

Suppose you have the Edison 3 wire system with all three wires entering the operating room and terminating in a switchboard and you have attached to one side, 3 circuits of 10, 15 and 40 amperes each respectively and on the other side there are also 3 circuits of 10, 15 and 40 amperes each respectively, or a total load of 130 amperes at 110 volt. What size fuses would be necessary on the feeders? Be kind enough to answer this question and it will be appreciated.

Answer. Taking for granted that your Edison 3 wire system carries 110 volts between the neutral and each outside wire and 220 volts between the outside wires, then your arrangement will be like that which I illustrate in Fig. 1 herewith.

You will note that while your total load is 130 amperes at 110 volts the current supply is 220 volts, therefore, when all circuits are operating side A and B are equally loaded which means that the current will go through the load on side A, then across through the load on side B and back through the other outside wire in which case no current is flowing through the neutral, or middle wire. Under this condition you have two equal load units. On side A you are drawing 65 amperes at 110 volts which is connected in series with an absolutely equal load on side B at 110 volts on the 220 volt circuit. Therefore 65 ampere fuses are sufficient.

The middle or neutral fuse is generally figured to take care of maximum unbalance. You realize that maximum unbalance will occur when all of the circuits on one side are out or disconnected, which would throw a load of 65 amperes on the other side, that is, between one of the outside wires and the neutral. In view of this fact, the neutral fuse should of course be equal to the outside fuses.

In special cases, especially in the early days of the three wire system it was claimed that the neutral or middle wire could be smaller and carry a smaller fuse, because the system is, or should be, as a general rule balanced, with equal load on both sides. Theoretically, therefore, it would be permissible to use a smaller neutral fuse, but in practice this is not recommended.

The fusing of the neutral is a very important matter and it is necessary to always insure perfect contact of all neutral connections all the way through the system because if for any reason the neutral should become disconnected or a neutral fuse should blowout and the system should be unbalanced all incandescent lamps on the side having the lightest load would burn above candle power and the chances are they would burn out, in most instances, if left for only a few seconds.

The large Edison Lighting companies throughout the country guard against a defective neutral connection by making the neutral out of solid copper all the way through and besides grounding it at frequent intervals. The grounding of a neutral of a 3 wire alternating current system is also of great advantage in that it offers a certain protection from possible shock because if the neutral is grounded on the secondary and there should be a leak in the transformer the chances are it would blow the line fuses on the transformer which would cut it out and make it harmless. On the Edison 3 wire system with D. C. 220 volts where the neutral is grounded it is impossible to get a shock of higher potential than 110 volts whereas if the neutral is not grounded then it would be possible to get a 220 volt shock.

KIND OF SCREEN TO USE

E. L. M., Wichita, Kan.:—Read your article in the "News" of July 24. Want to put on the best picture possible and would like to know what sort of screen to use.

Dimensions are as follows:—Lens to screen, 85 feet; size of picture, 12 x 14 feet; lens above bottom of screen, 18 feet, first row of seats to screen, 31 feet; width first row seats, 35 feet; width last row seats, 57 feet; distance last row from screen, 81 feet.

I wish to have the house as light as possible.

Answer. Not knowing the kind of current you are using at the arc, whether alternating or direct, the number of amperes carried at the arc and the means used for controlling same, I am not in a position to give you an absolute answer, but I will give general information on the subject from which you can make your own deductions.

For a distance of 85 feet with a picture approximately 14 feet wide, under the conditions which you specify which call for a wide house in proportion to its length, the screen used should not be very smooth. The surface should be fairly rough. If you use a plastered wall have it in the sand finish; that is, as it would be before the smooth white coat, as usually applied to a wall, is put on.

SPEER PROJECTOR CARBONS

MADE IN U. S. A.

You know Uncle Sam never fails to produce results when he is up against it—You know everybody believes the only Projector Carbons which are considered good by M. P. operators have been made in Germany—You know the war has reduced the supply of imported carbons and increased the prices—You don't know that one reason why German carbons have been used is that it costs more to make a carbon superior to or even the equal of the German carbon in U. S. A., notwithstanding the duty and freight on the German product—You don't know that Speer, "The Carbon Man" of Saint Mary's, Pa., has been working for several years on the carbon problem and could have put the best Projector Carbon in the world on the market long ago—But it simply couldn't be done at the old prices—Now when a decent price is obtained for carbons, and when child labor, as used abroad, does not stand in the way, and we can afford to pay men's wages to make a superior carbon, we have produced and are willing to guarantee the delivery to you of the finest Projector Carbon in the world, and we take pleasure in herewith announcing that we are ready to book orders for the Speer Projector Carbon, made in U. S. A.

Stern Manufacturing Company

109 N. 10th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

After the plastered screen in the rough finish has been made it may be coated with any one of the dull white or slightly bluish whitewashes usually applied for the purpose. With a screen of this kind you have very fine definition with soft grading between the shadows and the high lights but you require a good light behind the film on such a screen. Under this same class of screen the ordinary muslin screen may be put which should of course, be similarly coated with a suitable white wash paint.

Now where the illumination is limited behind the film it may be desirable to use a screen having a metallic coating such as aluminum or gold bronze finish. You understand the application of a metallic surface of that kind immensely increases the contrast between the shadows and the high lights. In order that the picture may be seen to good advantage on the sides of the house it is well that the surface should be rough. Several of the screen manufacturers are prepared to furnish rough surface metallic coated screens, especially made for use where the theatre is more than 25 feet wide.

Please remember one thing and your last paragraph brings this forcibly to our attention and that is, where you wish to have a house as light as possible you must burn a number of electric lights in the ceiling or on the walls of the theatre. The presence of this illumination, no matter how it is shielded will always in one way or another interfere with the picture and this interference is greater the more brilliant surface you use on your screen. Therefore, if you use the metallic screen of any kind be sure to very carefully shade all lights in the theatre so that there can be no direct or reflected rays of light to fall upon the picture screen, as this would materially reduce the efficiency of the metallic coated screen causing the picture to look hazy or blurred in the shadows.

MANUFACTURER OF MONARCH PROJECTOR

S. B. L., Montpelier, Vt.:—Inquired about the name of the manufacturers of the Monarch Projector in one of the recent issues.

I am pleased to advise that through F. M. Ledlie, operator in Kansas City, Mo., I am advised that the Monarch is manufactured by National Moving Picture Company, Ellsworth Building, Chicago, Ill.

Information also came from Milan B. Roberts of Lansing, Mich., that the Monarch machine is put out by Dearborn Novelty Company, of Chicago. Judging from the fact that two different addresses and names are given it seems that maybe these parties are only dealers and still we are not at the bottom of who manufactures the machine, but I guess Vermont will find out who makes the machine by communicating with either of the above parties.

I thank brothers Ledlie and Roberts for the information which I am sure will be appreciated by those interested.

FLICKERING OF PICTURES AGAIN

Operator Star Theatre, Chillicothe, Ohio:—I have been an ardent reader of Helps to operators and you seem to be the operator's best friend. I also have a question to ask you which has puzzled me for sometime.

I am using a New Power's 6-A, 3 blade shutter, 133 cycle current, Fort Wayne Compensarc, and a Mirror screen. My throw is 110 feet (9 x 14 is the size of my picture). My light is excellent and the objects in the picture are clear and sharp. Now will you please tell me why my picture flickers.

Answer. The use of the Mirror screen, which is no doubt the most brilliant of all, naturally increases the contrast between the dark and light parts of the picture.

You know if the contrast is increased the tendency to flicker is greater. In other words, the brighter the surface upon which the picture is projected the greater the tendency to flicker.

My suggestion to you is to do either one of two things. First change your ordinary three wing shutter which has one wide blade and two narrow ones, for one having three wide blades of equal width. If you don't want to do this you may widen the two narrow blades to make them equal to the wide one. To do this put a strip of opaque material on each side of the narrow blades.

The other suggestion for the solution of your problem would be to use a two wing shutter having two equal width blades and these could perhaps be made almost an inch wider than the ordinary blade. Try the above which you can do in a few minutes and report. I shall be pleased to publish what you find.

SAN FRANCISCO OPERATORS MAKING PREPARATION FOR THIRD ANNUAL BALL.

THE moving picture operators of San Francisco are making preparations for their third annual ball, which will be held shortly in the Civic Auditorium. The proceeds of the ball will go to the sick and death fund benefit of the operators' union and the owners of theatres are taking a great interest in it, as well as the operators. Those having the plans for the event in hand are W. Osterfeldt, Edward Jones, T. Noreiga, Edward Parker, J. Ford, E. Cohn, C. Connors, N. Monahan, Chris Jones and E. Howell. Extensive advertising is being carried on in the daily press and through the use of billboards as well as by means of slides shown in theatres throughout the Bay region.

OAKLAND, CAL., OPERATORS THREATEN BOYCOTT AT GEM THEATRE

THE Gem Theatre, Oakland, Cal., conducted by Allen E. King, is threatened with a boycott. Until recently two operators have been employed, but a short time ago it became necessary, owing to a falling off in business at Oakland, to reduce expenses and one operator was given a two weeks' notice, one week only being required, according to the union regulations.

The proprietor then undertook to carry on the work of the man who had been dismissed, but a walking delegate informed him that he could not do this, and that if he persisted a boycott would be declared.

CUSHMAN MOTOR WORKS WORKING OVERTIME

THE latest reports from the home office at Lincoln, Nebraska, is that the Cushman Motor Works factory has been operating on a twenty-four hour schedule for the past two months with thousands of orders behind.

One of the largest orders ever given by the government has just been received by them, calling for sixty-six engine generator sets for use at various army posts. These machines are of light weight, compact and easily operated.

ASTOR, $100,000 DETROIT THEATRE, MODELED LIKE ROMAN HIPPODROME

A PROSPECTUS has just been issued describing the new Astor theatre to be erected at the corner of Grand River and Bagg streets, Detroit, Mich. It is to be the largest playhouse in Detroit and will be constructed somewhat along the lines of the Majestic theatre with its seats arranged in amphitheatre style.

Harry J. Goldstein is promoting the new Astor. He was one of the men who helped to promote the Majestic. He says the Astor will eclipse all other photoplay houses in the Middle West. Mr. Goldstein's office is at 22 East Forest avenue, while the office of the theatre is temporarily in the Dime Bank Building.

The prospectus says: "The site is one of great strategic importance from a business standpoint. It is on Grand River avenue at the intersection of five city car lines, two interurban lines, and is the center of a district that is one of the most populous in the city.

"It is one mile from the heart of Detroit, and faces on four streets. The total cost of erecting the Astor theatre will be $100,000 and $50,000 will be saved by using the walls of the present building now on the property, formerly used for baking purposes.

"As to the theatre itself, it will have a capacity for 2,000 seats, and will be on the new Roman hippodrome style, all seats being on the main floor. A feature orchestra will be the policy of the Astor. All seats, with the exception of boxes, will be fifteen cents.

"A massive pipe organ (70 stops), a washed air system of ventilation, and the indirect lighting idea will be installed. There will be exits to four streets. The expenses of the house will be $1,000 per week. The new building will have eight stores on the first floor and twelve suites of offices on the floor above. These will bring in a yearly revenue of $10,800.

"Added to this the receipts of the theatre, the yearly income from both sources should be $175,050. Subtracting the expenses from the gross, the net profits remain $123,500. The company will be capitalized $200,000. We are offering ten thousand shares of stock at par, which is $10 per share. No blocks of less than one hundred shares sold."

3,100-SEAT THEATRE FOR GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

LEE DeCAMP, the well-known Grand Rapids, Mich., architect, is preparing plans for a new $500,000 photoplay theatre in Grand Rapids to be built on Monroe avenue, near Division avenue. The theatre will not only be a handsome structure, but will be unique in design.

It will seat 3,100 people, and will be so constructed as to accommodate sixteen automobiles, which will mean that these machines will not have to be parked on the public streets. The building itself will be 132 feet square, the front being 56 feet above the sidewalk and will be of steel and reinforced concrete, marble and tile.

The front will be of white enamel brick and white enamel terra cotta. The lobby will be finished in white marble with the box office and the manager's office on the right. There will be large passenger elevators running from the ground floor to the top of the balcony with three floor openings, the ground, mezzanine and balcony. There will be also a stairway and an incline to the mezzanine floor.

The garages will be to the right of the main entrance and the entrances will be 34 feet wide. If there are more cars than can be conveniently parked on the ground floor, they will be taken to the second on elevators designed for this purpose.

The first floor will have six front and ten rear boxes, and a general seating capacity of 1,500; there will be five aisles on this floor. The balcony will have fourteen loges on each side; these with the center seats will take care of 1,600 people.

On the mezzanine floor will be the gentlemen's and ladies' cloak and rest rooms with a large nursery for the accommodation of the babies. Slides, swings, sand piles and other means of amusement for children will be installed.

The stage will have a proscenium arch 56 feet wide; it will be 30 feet deep and 72 feet high. The orchestra pit will be nine feet wide and there will be room provided for a pipe organ. In the basement will be sixteen dressing rooms, a music room and shower baths. A ventilating system will be installed which will change the air every eight minutes.

The cost of the building will be $250,000 and the site will cost $250,000.

LARGE TALKING MACHINE IN LOBBY PREVENTS CROWDS FROM GETTING RESTLESS

AS a unique lobby display to attract patrons to the fact that "The Bombarding of the Dardanelles" was being shown at the Strand, Buffalo, N. Y., Manager Edel resorted to his friendship with one of the Buffalo Naval Militia officers to help him out. The result was that one of the cannons belonging to the organization was hauled to the Strand and placed in the front of the lobby pointing into Main street.

Views of the fleet in the Bosphorous were borrowed from the local newspapers and pasted on a large board near the cannon and in addition there were several painted billboards about the lobby. The result was most gratifying, as the business showed. During the past few weeks the Strand has done such good business that large crowds waiting patiently in the lobby have been no unusual sight.

Manager Edel thought that music would help to soothe the nerves of these people and bought a large Victrola and many records and placed it in the lobby. When the waiting crowd becomes fairly large the concert starts. This plan has been a success. The Strand also placed an attractive advertisement in the papers this week, giving most of the space to the greatness of the United States, showing its large wheat, corn and other grain crops, with the sun rising over the national capital in the background, and the words "Better Times" and "Happier Times" on each side of the dome. "Our Impregnable Fortifications" was the word which covers the grain illustration and the names of the attractions for the coming week.

As the Strand uses Paramount service exclusively in Buffalo, the names had some weight. The advertisement created much favorable comment among readers of the dramatic page. It might be said that better times have also come to the Strand, those times being made by the excellent attractions being booked. Mr. Edel has an artist whom he employs exclusively all week to work on Strand billboards, advertising and other decorating. During the showing of the Eastland disaster pictures, Mr. Edel cornered all the available pictures of the press associations sent to Buffalo on the disaster and placed them in the lobby.

They proved to be a drawing card for the real article. The Strand is one of the few photoplay houses that has kept up the size of their advertisements in the local papers during the summer months. The result of this policy will be shown in the fall.

UNIVERSAL AND UNIVERSAL EXCHANGES ENDORSE FEASTER MACHINES

THE Feaster no-remind system has the endorsement of both the Universal and General film exchanges, and customers of the Feaster Company may hereafter procure their shows on special Feaster reels from the above exchanges, upon request.

FEASTER MACHINE SAVES 90 PER CENT. BREAKS IN FILM DURING WINDING

FEASTER Film Feed Company has installed its non-rewinding magazines in the Paramount theatre, Newark, N. J., upon recommendation of Gus Benner, chief operator for Tali Esen Morgan.

Mr. Morgan owns and operates the Paramount theatre, Newark, and the Ocean Grove theatre, Ocean Grove, N. J., the latter being the largest motion picture theatre in the world, having a seating capacity of nearly 10,000 people. The picture is thrown on the screen from a distance of two hundred feet.

Both of these theatres are equipped with Feaster Film Feed Company's no-rewinding magazines. Both Mr. Morgan and Mr. Benner claim that since installing the Feaster machines they not only save the cost of a rewinding boy, but that the Feaster machines have reduced the breaks in their film at least 90 per cent., and that much steadier projection has been spoken of by some of their patrons.

Previous to installing the Feaster attachments there have been a number of complaints of rewinding on account of the noise, but lately steady patrons who have noticed there was no noise wondered where the rewinding was done.

Mr. Benner informed them that "We are now equipped with the Feaster no-rewinding magazines, therefore we never do any rewinding, and you will also find that our Newark theatre, the Paramount, which is one of Newark's most beautiful motion picture theatres, also has the Feaster equipment." The patrons seemed delighted, as the noise had bothered them considerably.

$100,000 THEATRE IS UNDER CONSTRUCTION IN NASHVILLE

WITH the filing of a charter in the office of a county register on Monday August 9, for the Empress Amusement Company, a $100,000 corporation, the first step in the building of a big motion picture house in Nashville, Tenn., and the establishment of a line of shows throughout the state was taken.

W. H. Wassman, manager of the Crystal Theatre is president of the new corporation.

The entire block length from Sixth avenue to Capitol boulevard of the old Wilson estate, will be the site of a new theatre. The foundation is being laid now and work on the construction of the building will begin within a few days. The theatre's main entrance will be on Capitol boulevard, but there will also be an entrance on Sixth avenue, leading to the main floor and gallery. According to present specifications that have been placed in the contractor's hands, the ventilation system alone of the theatre will cost upwards of $10,000. The auditorium will seat 1,200 people.

THE POLLOCK, IN NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y., NEARING COMPLETION

THE Pollock Theatre at 80 and 82 Beekman avenue, North Tarrytown, N. Y., is now well under construction and will be ready about August 25. This is a beautiful brick and stone building with a seating capacity of 900 people, and will be the largest moving picture theatre in Tarrytown.

J. H. Hallberg, of 36 East Twenty-third street, is making the complete installation of the projection machinery and supplies, which includes two Power's motor driven machines, a Hallberg A. C.-D. C. economizer, a special Hallberg switchboard, spotlight, also ticket selling machines, ticket booth, fire extinguishers, artificial stage scenery and ticket choppers. Mr. Hallberg was given a free rein by Mr. Pollock.

KEMPNER STAYS IN CHICAGO DURING RADIUM GOLD FIBRE TESTS

THE Radium Gold Fibre Screen Company has been busily engaged in making important installations in theatres in Chicago during the past few weeks. This is the result of tests to which the screens were submitted during the presence in Chicago of J. L. Kempner, of the Radium Company.

Mr. Kempner went out to Chicago to sell screens and remained until he had convinced a number of important Chicago exhibitors of the superiority of his wares, with the result that the Chicago field has been particularly fruitful during the past two or three weeks.

ALABAMA

THE Strand theatre, operated by the Strand Amusement Company, opens in Birmingham, Alabama, on September 6. This is one of the largest houses operated by the company, and has a seating capacity of 1,000. The opening bill will be "The Avenging Conscience," followed by "The Escape."

Both films were booked by the Peerless Feature Film Company of Louisiana. Alabama is a virgin field for motion pictures, claiming some of the finest houses in the South, and the promoters will undoubtedly enjoy success with their newest house.

CALIFORNIA

S. S. Thaller, who conducts a moving picture theatre at Yreka, Cal., has been making several improvements of late, including the addition of an Edison projection machine.

A moving picture theatre has been opened at Fairfax, Cal., by C. A. Timblin. This suburban city is regarded as being one of the most beautiful in California and is the home of several producing companies, the Keanograph Company having a finely equipped studio there.

Chinese trade is an important item in the amusement field at Cortland, Cal., and a moving picture theatre has just been opened there by Yat Sun, of the Flowery Kingdom.

C. Robinson, who conducts the Bagby theatre at Monterey, Cal., a small city near San Francisco, pai da visit to the Exposition City recently, and while here purchased new projection equipment and other equipment.

The Bay Station theatre at Alameda, Cal., has been taken over by new interests and is being renovated and new equipment installed.

G. Hanline has closed his house at Anderson for a few weeks and has come to San Francisco to enjoy the Exposition.

The Star theatre at Colusa, Cal., is running again after having been closed for a while.

The Central theatre, at Oakland, Cal., is to be reopened under the direction of F. Manchini.

The new Lyric theatre at Fresno, Cal., has been opened by J. Moore and C. Beck. This new house is located in a large commercial building just being completed, and has a capacity of about five hundred. Its appointments are strictly up-to-date, a feature being the finely upholstered opera chairs that are used. An organ costing $8,000 has been installed.

The Sequoia theatre at Sacramento, Cal., is devoting considerable attention to return bookings of several of the best of the William Fox productions, including "Samson," "The Nigger," the "Kreutzer Sonata," and others.

The Spreckles theatre at San Diego, has adopted a feature picture policy and in the future will show only big subjects. Heretofore this theatre has been used for a number of film attractions, but had heretofore held to a policy of being the road show theatre of the southern exposition city. This house is in charge of Jack Dodge.

The Grand theatre at San Diego, located in the business district, has been sold by Mr. LePearl to A. W. Leonard, who owns the Illusion in that city. The Illusion, a few doors from the Grand, will be closed and Mr. Leonard will give all his attention to the Grand.

A regular Mutual program will be used at the Fairyland theatre at twenty-fourth and Hoover streets, Los Angeles. This theatre has been closed for the past several months and has been leased by T. A. Thomas and reopened this week with a Mutual program.

From San Diego comes the report that theatres have been closed at Coronado, National City, Ocean Beach and LaJolla. It is believed all of these theatres will reopen in the fall.

ILLINOIS

W. B. Finn is erecting a motion picture theatre at Virginia, Ill. The building is to be 30 by 100 feet and will have a seating capacity of 300. There will be a ten-foot lobby in the front with glass walls and decorated arched ceiling. Latest fixtures will be used in the projection department and the interior of the theatre will be attractively decorated. Mr. Finn expects to have his new theatre open by October 1.

Charles Schneider and Joseph Belaski will open a new motion picture theatre at Lincoln, Ill., about September 1. They have secured the building formerly occupied by the Vogue theatre and will remodel it.

The Majestic theatre at Springfield, Ill., opened its 1915-16 season, August 22, showing vaudeville and motion pictures.

The Majestic motion picture theatre, on North Main street, Paris, Ill., has been purchased by Thomas Reid and Edwin Mackey of Lafayette, Ind., from H. H. Johnson. The new proprietors plan a number of improvements.

Plans have been completed for the erection of the Academy theatre at Waukegan, Ill. The theatre is to be built by George K. Spoor of the Essanay Motion Picture Company, and will be located on the corner of Clayton and North Genesee streets. It is to be thoroughly modern in every respect.

Manager L. Burnstine of the Star motion picture theatre at Lincoln, Ill., has installed a Peerless orchestral pipe organ in his house.

The Fox theatre at Aurora, Ill., reopened August 29, showing vaudeville and motion pictures.

INDIANA

T. W. Dees of Browns Valley, Ind., has bought the Joy theatre at Crawfordsville, Ind., from O. J. Bambiotte. It is one of the most popular theatres in Crawfordsville. Mr. Lambiotte has not decided just what he will do. He has several propositions under consideration, among them being an offer to become manager of one of the largest theatres in Louisville, Ky.

Mr. Lambiotte went to Crawfordsville from Marion two years ago, and ran the Joy as one of a chain of four theatres, owned by Sipe and Lambiotte. He later bought Sipe's interest in the Joy and has been running it since that time himself.

A new theatre is being built at Topeka, Ind. It will have a seating capacity of 250 persons.

Wallace Sawyer, proprietor of the Grand theatre, at Bluffton, has leased the E. S. Walmer place in that city and plans to open a moving picture show about September 10. Smith and Tangemann plan to continue operating the Grand theatre after Mr. Sawyer's lease expires.

Perry W. Horton, one of the owners and musical director of the Airdome at Rensselaer, Ind., was married recently to Leone W. Cowger of Ft. Wayne. Mr. and Mrs. Horton will live at Rensselaer.

J. O. Mallen has bought a moving picture theatre at Summittville from E. R. Fuller.

The Crystal theatre at Columbus, Ind., is to be remodeled and when the improvements are completed will have a seating capacity of 800 persons. The contract for the improvement has been let by the Knights of Pythias lodge.

The Goshen Amusement Company, of South Bend, Ind., has filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of State of Indiana, for $1,500. Charles J. Allardt, S. H. Miller and George Harrop are named as directors. The company was organized in connection with the Jefferson theatre, at Goshen, which was purchased recently by Mr. Allardt of South Bend for between $30,000 and $35,000.

Stockholders of the Jefferson Theatre Company, Goshen, Ind., have lost practically all they invested. The theatre was built in 1905 at a cost of about $50,000. The theatre burned in 1906 and was rebuilt at a cost of about $70,000. Before it was completed a mortgage of $30,000 was given the Elkhart Trust Company, which foreclosed the mortgage in 1914. The trust company sold the property to Mr. Allardt a few days ago. He will run pictures and vaudeville, giving a continuous performance.

The Colonial theatre at Vincennes, Ind., is being remodeled. A balcony which will seat 200 persons is being added. The theatre is under the management of Bruce Kixmiller and Harry Mitchell. Vaudeville will be given in addition to a picture program.

The Blinn theatre at Frankfort, will book a road show occasionally during the coming season, besides running a picture and vaudeville program.

John Thomas will take possession September 1, of the Irving theatre, 5507 East Washington street, Indianapolis. Thomas has leased the theatre from O. M. Moore.

The rooms occupied by the Princess and Empress theatres, in Market street, Huntington, Ind., have been re-leased by John Dumbauld to T. Guy Perfect, manager of the Huntington Motion Picture Company. A five-year contract was made, leasing the lower floors and basement of the buildings.

Edgar Allen's new picture theatre, "The Star," located in a room in the Citizens Trust Building, formerly occupied by the post office, at Sullivan, Ind., opened its doors to the public Saturday afternoon, August 14.

Mr. Allen obtained Richard Harding Davis' "The Lost House," for the opening day at his theatre. Mr. Allen intends to make a specialty of his Saturday matinees, using the highest priced films. He states that he intends to give the farmers the benefit of the Saturday afternoon matinees, and will select programs that will be sure to please them. The new picture house is modern in every respect and the management intends to produce nothing but the best in the moving picture line.

KANSAS

A new theatre with a 150-foot frontage is being built in Wichita, by the Southwestern Amusement Company.

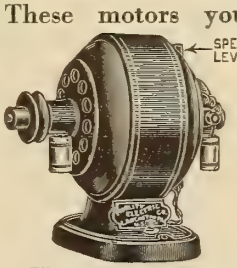
Chenney and Baker at Milan, have put in a new show that has been opened to the public.

G. A. Helm is putting in a new show at White City. It will be open to the public in about a week.

The labor unions of Hiawatha are raising money to build a theatre in that city. Up to date about $400 is in the treasury, and it is expected that work will start in a short while. It will be run on the co-operative basis, the profits going to the several different unions of the city.

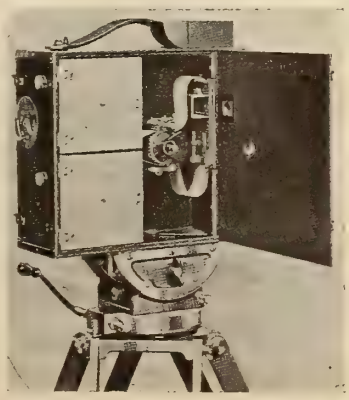
KENTUCKY

The Novelty theatre, a large picture house in Fourth avenue, Louisville, may pass into the control of the B. F. Keith interests within a short time. The present lessees of the theatre have been negotiating with the Keith people for some months and a change in management is said to be practically certain



The Novelty was erected about five years ago by Michael Switow and others who obtained a long lease on the property known as the Parr block. The house has been sublet several times during the past two years.

Julius Zahler, of Chicago, a son of Manager Louis Zahler, of the new Strand theatre, which is now being erected in Main street, Lexington, Ky., will assist his father in the conduct of the business there. He will serve in the capacity of assistant manager. Mr. Zahler reports that the work on the new house is progressing rapidly and that the doors will be thrown open as soon as possible. The stucco work is now being put in place while rapid progress is being made in other portions of the building.



The management of the old North Broadway opera house and the Ben Ali theatre at Lexington, Ky., is considering the proposition of continuing the Ben Ali as a motion picture house throughout the year and reopening the old show place for road shows. The Ben Ali has been showing pictures since the beginning of the summer. Estimates on the rewiring and general repairing of the opera house have been requested. If the plan is carried out it is probable that Charles Scott, manager of the Ben Ali, will be placed in charge of both houses.

N. A. Wilkinson, manager of the Tabb theatre, Mt. Sterling, Ky., has announced that he will not renew his lease which expires September 1, and that he will quit the motion picture business in that town. The theatre will be conducted by I. F. Tabb, the owner, pending other arrangements.

MAINE

A new ground floor theatre, seating 1,400 people, is to be built at once in the city of Portland, Me., and will be used for vaudeville or moving pictures, or possibly both. This is the outcome of the recent organization of the Elm Theatre Company. Prominent in the new company and the largest investors of capital are the Wolf Brothers, owners of a large Portland drug store.

The theatrical or moving picture business is not entirely new to them and with experienced advisers they ought to be able to avoid the pitfalls that sometimes appear in the pathway of the unexperienced. While the company will not state at present just what class of entertainment will be offered, the stage is to be made large enough to handle almost any production and the house will have a spacious gallery. It is expected that Daniel J. Leader will be the manager.

MICHIGAN

Battle Creek's newest theatre was thrown open to the public Saturday evening, August 14, the Strand, on East Main street, between Jefferson and Madison avenues. Hundreds of people were unable to gain admittance. The Strand, a three-story structure, was built by C. E. Kolb, a local capitalist, who ordered lavish interior decorating, as well as a beautiful exterior. The opening feature was Nat C. Goodwin in "The Master Hand."

Architect B. C. Weitzel and Company, Dime Bank Building, Detroit, Mich., is preparing plans for a theatre one story high, 25 by 42 feet, for Maybelle Will, of the Highland Park theatre. The building will be erected at once as an addition to the Highland Park playhouse.

The Isis Theatre Company, Grand Rapids, Mich., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $45,000. The company will erect a theatre building on Monroe avenue, near Crescent. The stockholders include John W. Goodspeed and George C. and William S. Nichols. The contract for the theatre has been let, the price being $30,000, without equipment. The theatre will be ready to open about November 15.

MISSOURI

The Lafayette theatre and Russell Garden on Jefferson avenue, St. Louis, is under the management of A. W. Warner, son of S. Warner, the proprietor and former manager of the two amusement places, since the resignation of H. D. Rauschkalb, who assumed charge two months ago.

S. Warner, who had been running the theatre at Lafayette avenue, and the Garden, at Russell avenue, during the summer for a number of years, was taken seriously ill several months ago. In the meantime young Warner is successfully managing the theatre and airdome, which enjoy a large patronage in the prosperous neighborhood in which they are situated.

S. D. Bromley, manager of the New Grand Duchess theatre, on 15 South Sixth street, St. Louis, opened his house for the fall season on Saturday, August 7, with two squads of pickets handing out bills, one faction saying that the theatre was unfair to organized labor, and the other side saying that the theatre was fair to organized labor.

Mr. Bromley declares that all his employes are union men, and that the trouble is between the unions. The report is that business has been good since the opening night, however.

Meyer Brothers and Pracht's new theatre building that is being erected on the corner of Thirty-ninth street and Shaw avenue, is fast nearing completion, and will open for business in the early fall. Meyer Brothers and Pracht are owners and managers of the Knickerbocker theatre and airdome on Park avenue, and the new theatre on Shaw avenue is ample proof of the successful business done by the Knickerbocker in the past few years it has been running.

The new house will be strictly a motion picture theatre, and the neighborhood selected is an ideal one, as there is not another theatre within walking distance, and the district is one of the fastest growing sections of St. Louis.

Another legitimate house in Kansas City is to be opened the first of September with features. It is the Grand Opera House, and has been having road shows since its opening. Extensive improvements have been made in the house and features exclusively will be shown.

The Cosmos theatre at Forty-sixth and Prospect avenue, in Kansas City, has again changed hands. It is now run by Mrs. L. A. Stevens and her son. Improvements were made and this is the first time since it opened about a year ago that a profit has been shown.

NEBRASKA

E. M. Valentine has sold the Lyric theatre, Valentine, S. D., to H. E. Fisk, who took possession August 9.

Manager Vosktko, owner of the Gem theatre in Omaha, has also opened the Wonderland at Thirteenth and William streets.

William Stein of Thayer, Neb., has taken on the Universal service to be used in his new house, which opened August 1.

Ben Johnson recently opened the Gilbert theatre at Beatrice, Neb. He showed a Fox feature on the first day. "My theatre is a big success from the start," said Johnson. "The people were lined up out in the street, awaiting their chance to get in."

OHIO

Cleveland is to have four new theatres added to its amusement facilities this fall. Theodore Schmitt has signed a 99-year lease on property at the southwest corner of Detroit avenue and West 116th street, taking title from John Kling. Mr. Schmitt plans to erect an $80,000 block, to contain a theatre, store and office suites. The lease calls for an average rental of $25,000 a year, and covers an area of 150 x 200 feet. Plans have been prepared and construction will start at once.

The Thompson-Schactel Company, which was incorporated recently with C. G. Thompson and S. M. Schactel, of the Victoria Film Service, as owners, will erect a theatre and store building at Altoona avenue and West 35th street, a rapidly growing section of Brooklyn, a suburb of Cleveland. The theatre will seat 800, and the building will cost about $50,000. The land has been owned by Messrs. Thompson and Schactel for a number of years.

Plans have been prepared by architects Koehl and Van Rensselaer, for a $35,000 motion picture theatre for W. A. Barnes, to be erected on Hower avenue, near Superior avenue.

The Yale Amusement Company will erect a theatre and office building at St. Clair avenue and East Eighty-second street. It will seat 1,000. Officers just elected by the company are: President, George M. Lynch; vice-president, Joseph M. Ott, and secretary-treasurer, William Keller.

The Majestic theatre, Bucyrus, Ohio, which was bought by the Bucyrus Amusement Company a few weeks ago, has again changed ownership. Dr. G. W. Grant, as trustee for the Bucyrus Amusement Company, sold the real estate and motion picture theatre to Tom Chacopulos, who operates a store next to the theatre.

Nicholas Fleischman, proprietor of the Majestic theatre on Dorr street, Toledo, Ohio, recently died after a sudden illness. He was forty-nine years old. His son, Clyde, who was associated with him in the management of the theatre, will continue in charge of the Majestic.

OKLAHOMA

Garrity and Bevis, have sold their house at Winfield to Finch and Smith. The new owners will make extensive improvements and additions and will open about the first of September.

Commerce is a town now about one year old, with a population of about three thousand. G. E. Shelcut of Nowata, came in and is building the Rex theatre that will seat five hundred. This town will have a picture show, but no railroad.

Music and the Picture

Edited by Ernst Luz

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

THE VALUE OF MUSIC IN THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE

THERE are a great many different opinions as to the value of music in the picture theatre. I have in my discussions heard enough contradictory statements in one day to make me wonder whether there was anything at all fundamental in music, or which one could rely as arbiter.

The fact that the theatre music receives the greater part of picture theatre criticism, should convince us that it is of value.

One thing has been very forcibly impressed upon my mind and that is that when but one musical synchronization is impressively accomplished in any one program regardless of the many other opportunities neglected, the music is appreciated and the audience never fails to make favorable comment.

I could cite theatres and managers that make a specialty of following the weekly with appropriate music, giving their orchestras an opportunity to play an overture, wherewith to fascinate the audience. When well done by competent performers, you can rest assured that the musical reputation of the theatre has been positively assured. Such work caters to the eye by its ostentatious impressions, not to the senses.

While the above is only possible when the theatre is in a position to maintain an expensive equipment, it does not constitute what I would term the real value of music to the picture theatre.

Grandioso Style Must Be the Performance

Music in grandioso style is self-important and consequently cannot be a part to a performance, but must be the performance.

Were this the only means whereby music could be made profitable to the picture theatre it is needless to say that few theatres would be able to profit by it, being financially unable to maintain it.

In the same theatres where such a pompous musical display has been made, I have noted many opportunities overlooked for creating equally as important musical impressions, obtainable at an infinitesimal expenditure.

While the weekly was played well and the overture was played better, still in the feature film I noted that when the characters on the screen danced to a Bolero movement, a Habanera was being played and many other equally as effective opportunities for musical rhythm with screen action were entirely ignored.

The profitable music for the picture theatre is that which appeals to the senses, not the eye.

The profitable patronage of any theatre is that class which comes to the theatre to relax and be entertained. When such patrons criticize you can be sure it is dictated by instinct, which should be of value to the exhibitor as well as the musician.

That music has a psychological effect on the mental condition of its hearers has been admitted by our most noted scientists and psychologists, and in this fact we find the value of music to the picture theatre.

You will notice that when our most renowned actors and actresses deliver lines, intent upon creating sympathetic impression among the audience, there will be a certain tonal color to their voice not unlike music.

Just as the great actor or actress depends upon his or her ability to play on the senses of the public, to make the situation in question impressive and their work a success, so depends the success of music in the picture theatre on its power to properly control the senses of the picture theatre audience.

Musical Appeal Does Not Depend on Quantity

To musically create such an appeal does not mean that an expensive organization must be maintained, for I have heard it accomplished with the one-man-instrument, the lone violin, trios and in fact every known combination.

Musical appeal does not depend on quantity, but on what is played, how it is played, and when it is played.

When the musical organization of a theatre is large, naturally more musical color can be obtained, but a pathetic appeal is nothing more than a pathetic appeal whether obtained by one man or twenty.

The ultimate success of music and the picture theatre depends on the possibilities of music playing on the senses of the audience, thereby creating a receptive mood for that which appears on the screen, and the means wherewith we can be assured that it can be intelligently accomplished; namely, the producer's as well as the capable musician's earnest co-operation.

What to play and how to play it, is the problem for the musician and can be mastered by him with some study. When to play it, is up to the producer of film.

NEED OF PICTURE PLOT DISTRIBUTION

I HAVE many requests for plots of feature pictures each week and am sorry that I am not in a position to deliver them.

I see most features released but the necessary amount of work to put up such a feature properly is worth more money than it would be fair to ask the exhibitor or musician to pay.

The business man will know what it would cost to have a public stenographer typewrite such a form. I am endeavoring to create a means whereby these can be obtained and used, but all things take time and method. I can assure my readers that if I could obtain understandable plots it would relieve me of a great amount of work.

Their distribution on an economic basis is a solution of the near future. I have mailed quite a few of these plots gratis at a great inconvenience to myself, wanting to have my readers satisfied and am sorry that I cannot continue the practice. I do not want to refuse any requests, therefore I would ask my readers not to ask for them.

I want your co-operation in a movement to have such plots furnished you. That they will cost some one money goes without saying. Who is to pay and what the price of the same should be is a matter still to be solved.

The plots as they appear in this department are there to agitate fair and competitive criticism, which I freely invite. We will thereby arrive at a means which will relieve the picture musician of 75 per cent. of the present mental strain in picture playing.

RAGTIME VIOLINIST ENGAGED FOR PALACE THEATRE, BUFFALO, N. Y.

FOLLOWING the successful engagement of Miss Buffalo, the Girl in the Mask, whom Manager Schlesinger of the Palace, Buffalo, N. Y., booked a leading local society girl and who sang several songs during the program, it is now announced that a well-known ragtime violinist will be the next attraction at the Palace. Miss Buffalo has been engaged for another week, so good an impression has she made.

Milton Blanckstein, who has been leader of the Elmwood orchestra for the past month, goes to the Strand theatre as second violinist on the first of September, when the Strand orchestra will be augmented to ten men, including the best men in Buffalo.

Music Plot for Metro Feature "The Royal Family"

This plot is given to illustrate a musical method for covering lengthy tumultuous action. Nos. 13, 14 and 15 cover 17 minutes of riot, fights and other excitement resulting from a revolution. To play hurries or melodramatic numbers for such a length of time is tiresome, consequently I give these suggestions for your approval.

Metro Feature. Ann Murdock in "The Royal Family." 5 Reels. Projection time, 1 hour 10 minutes.

	Musical Classification.	Number Suggested.	Cues to Stop Number.
1.	Desc. (Hy-Dr) (Plotting)	"Adagio Cantabile" (Strauss) (G. Schirmer)	End of Prologue.
2.	Gavotte (Regal)	"Imogen" (Cundy & Co.)	"The meeting of the conspirators."
3.	Hy. Intro & Waltz	"Sentiers Fleuris" (Cundy & Co.)	"Under the assumed name," etc.
4.	Inter. (Light Classy)	"Wedding of a Rose" (Carl Fischer)	Connects 1 and 2.
		PART 2.
5.	Desc. (S-Hy. Rom.)	"After Glow" (W. Jacobs)	"The Dowager Queen grieved," etc.
6.	Waltz Lento (Leg)	"Druid's Prayer" (Jos. W. Stern)	After King sends Princess into house.
7.	Desc. (Light Leg)	"Shadowland" (Leo Feist)	Princess seated having hair dressed.
8.	Short Battle Hurry	"Lake Hurries" (Carl Fischer)	After battle vision.
9.	Desc. (Hy. Rom.)	"Spring Dreams" (Leo. Feist)	Connects 2 and 3.
		PART 3.
10.	Inter. (Classy)	"Fairy Dreams" (Chappell & Co.)	Princess dressed in military uniform. "Under Duke Barascon's command," etc.
11.	Galop	"Ringmaster" (W. Jacobs)	Princess captured.

		PART 5.	"...ed hours were over."
17.	Short Ens. & Waltz XXX	"Brides and Butterflies" (J. Remick & Co.)	After "The Minister of Police," etc.
18.	Desc. (S-Hy. Rom.)	"Red Rose Garden" (Remick & Co.)	To end.

NOTES.—Nos. 1 and 12 must be slow numbers with a dramatic plotting appeal, No. 2 a stately or regal gavotte, with marked tempo. No. 3 a concert waltz with a slow dramatic introduction. Nos. 4 and 10 must be 2/4 Intermezzos that are classy and not common. Nos. 5 and 8 must be slow numbers, with a romantic appeal not too heavy. No. 7 a light legato caprice. Nos. 9 and 16 must be slow, romantic numbers, with a positive serious appeal. No. 13 must be an overture with a hurried tempo, and a continuing dramatic appeal. Merry Wives of Windsor, Norma, Midnight Dream or Golden Sceptre can also be used. For No. 14 I know of no number so well suited as the Schubert-Liszt arrangement of Erlking. No. 17 is a concert waltz, with short introduction.

Organ can be appropriately used for 5, 6, 7 or 16, 17 and 18.
Drummer with traps can materially assist in Nos. 8, 13, 14 and 15.

INTERMEZZOS—THEIR VALUE IN PICTURE PLAYING

THE definition of the term Intermezzo is "a short movement, connecting the larger movements." As a rule the intermezzo is a light number, seldomly of serious intent, which makes it valuable in picture music. The exceptions to the above rule are very misleading, the term intermezzo having no definite temperamental meaning in music.

The number when properly understood is, however, very valuable as a connecting movement for the more important and impressive numbers used in the picture.

The temperamental difference in intermezzos will be readily understood after making a comparison of what is known as the Western or Cowboy intermezzo, and the Intermezzo Sinfonico from the Mascagni Opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana."

While they are both correctly termed intermezzos, in picture playing the Intermezzo from Cavalleria would necessarily be a serious number and as the picture drama requires a great deal of serious music it is of greater advantage that the intermezzo should be light and relaxing, thereby making the preceding or succeeding serious number more effective.

While the intermezzo "Cavalleria Rusticana" is an intermezzo in the opera, in picture playing it should be classed as a serious number having a semi-religious appeal.

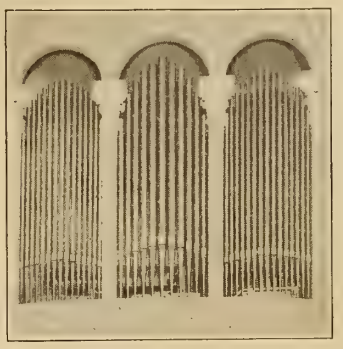
The same is true of many numbers in ¾, 6/8 or 4/4 moderato tempo called intermezzos. In fact all so-called intermezzos, when the tempo cannot be hurried or retarded without being detrimental to the musical composition, are never safely used as intermezzos in picture playing.

The proper numbers are written in 2/4, 4/4 alla breve or 4/4 Allegretto. In 2/4 tempo you find the Western, Oriental, Intermezzo-March and the Characteristic.

The Western is well known to picture playing, being very appropriate in the Western drama, Aisha and Apache, published by Berlin and Snyder, New York City, are good examples of these. While the Indian Intermezzo is sometimes classed as Western, it should remain in a class of its own, being a distinct characteristic type and used at positive picture suggestion alone.

The 4/4 Alla Breve or 4/4 Allegretto are light descriptive numbers. They are easily known by the fact that they could be played counting two to the bar or four with a noticeable change in the number.

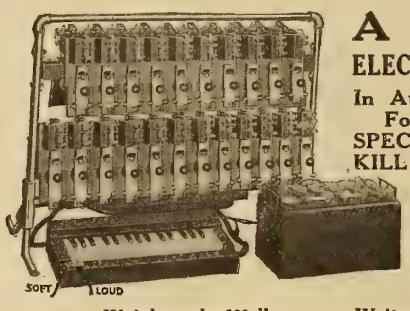
The value of these numbers as connecting movements in picture playing cannot be overestimated. Their use in programing is an actual necessity. In heavy dramas they are often the only means whereby the possible monotone playing can be avoided.



It is needless to say that when the music remains heavy for a length of time some lighter relief movements are necessary if one desires the heavy numbers to stand out. At such points they are truly advisable connecting movements or intermezzos. Most of these numbers have no temperamental suggestion, therefore do not detract from the picture action.

The Intermezzo-March is always correctly classified by the composer and is therefore not difficult to locate.

The Oriental Intermezzo is always in 2/4 and is known by its predominant minor strains. These numbers can be greatly humored by fast or slow playing.



The Characteristic intermezzo, while it is usually thought to be suggestive of some race or nation, is also characteristic in bird, childhood, water and many other animate and inanimate suggestions. Such numbers are in any of the above mentioned tempos. Characteristic numbers should be used only at picture suggestion.

700-SEAT THEATRE FOR NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

THE Pollock theatre, at 80 and 82 North Beekman avenue, North Tarrytown, N. Y., is now well under construction and will be ready about August 25. This is a beautiful brick and stone building, with a seating capacity of seven hundred people, and will be the largest moving picture theatre in Tarrytown.

J. H. Hallberg, of 38 East Twenty-third street, New York, is making the complete installation of the projection machinery and supplies, which includes two Power's motor-driven machines, a Hallberg A. C.-D. C. economizer, a special Hallberg switchboard, spotlight, also ticket selling machines, ticket booth, fire extinguishers, artificial stage scenery, and ticket choppers.

BOSTON CONSERVATORY ORGANIST AT HARRISBURG THEATRE

HERMAN V. YEAGER, who for years has been leader of the orchestra of the Orpheum, the leading vaudeville theatre in Harrisburg, Pa., has been selected to preside at the new Moller pipe organ to be installed in the Colonial theatre which is to be reopened as an exclusively motion picture house on August 23.

Mr. Yeager has been regarded as one of the best orchestra leaders on the Keith circuit, but it is as the master of the pipe organ that he has reached the highest attainment of his musical success. He is a graduate of the Boston Conservatory of Music where he took a thorough course of instruction on the pipe organ.

CROUSE MANAGES INTERNATIONAL LABORATORIES IN LOS ANGELES

F. H. CROUSE, formerly head of the laboratories at the Universal, has accepted the management of the International Laboratories, Los Angeles, where commercial developing and printing is done. Mr. Crouse is one of the best-known laboratory men on the West Coast, and in this work has been most successful.

Prior to his seven years' experience in motion picture studios he was engaged in photographic work, and knows every detail of the business.

WISCONSIN SEATING OPENS BOSTON BRANCH

W. A. BISHOP, general sales manager of the Wisconsin Seating Company, New London, Wis., recently opened temporary quarters at 174 Pleasant street, Boston, where he has a large assortment of chairs and other equipment on exhibition for the benefit of managers in and around the Hub contemplating buying new theatre furnishings. David Cowan has been appointed manager for New England.

A. B. C. Dramatic Music

Music composed and arranged for picture playing only. Entirely new. So adapted that dramatic scenes can be played correctly without any interruption in the music. Every pianist, One Man Instrument Player and Orchestra leader should have one or more copies.

SET NO. 1 is three numbers for Premeditated Murder scenes, consisting of a new kind of mysterioso, and agitato movement and a plaintive number for the aftermath. SET NO. 2 is two long numbers, one illustrating heavy plotting or dramatic action leading up to fights. The second being a long allegro-hurry for fights or tumult. SET NO. 3 is a two-numbered set illustrating fights or tumultuous action, ending in death or despair. No. 1 an agitato-hurry and No. 2 a plaintive.

SET NO. 4 is a light agitato and Dr. andante movement, a musical illustration for domestic quarrels or agitation, with a romantic or pathetic aftermath. SET NO. 5 is 4 numbers, a pizz. mysterioso, agitato, hurry and plaintive. Excellent number for burglary scenes, illustrating the sneaky entrance, agitation leading to a fight with a plaintive as the aftermath. SET NO. 6 is 2 numbers, a heavy mysterioso and allegro-hurry. An excellent illustration for threatening action or plotting, ending in confusion or excitement. Prices: Piano, 10c. a set. Small orchestra, incl. Cello, Organ, 25c. a set. Full orchestra, 35c.

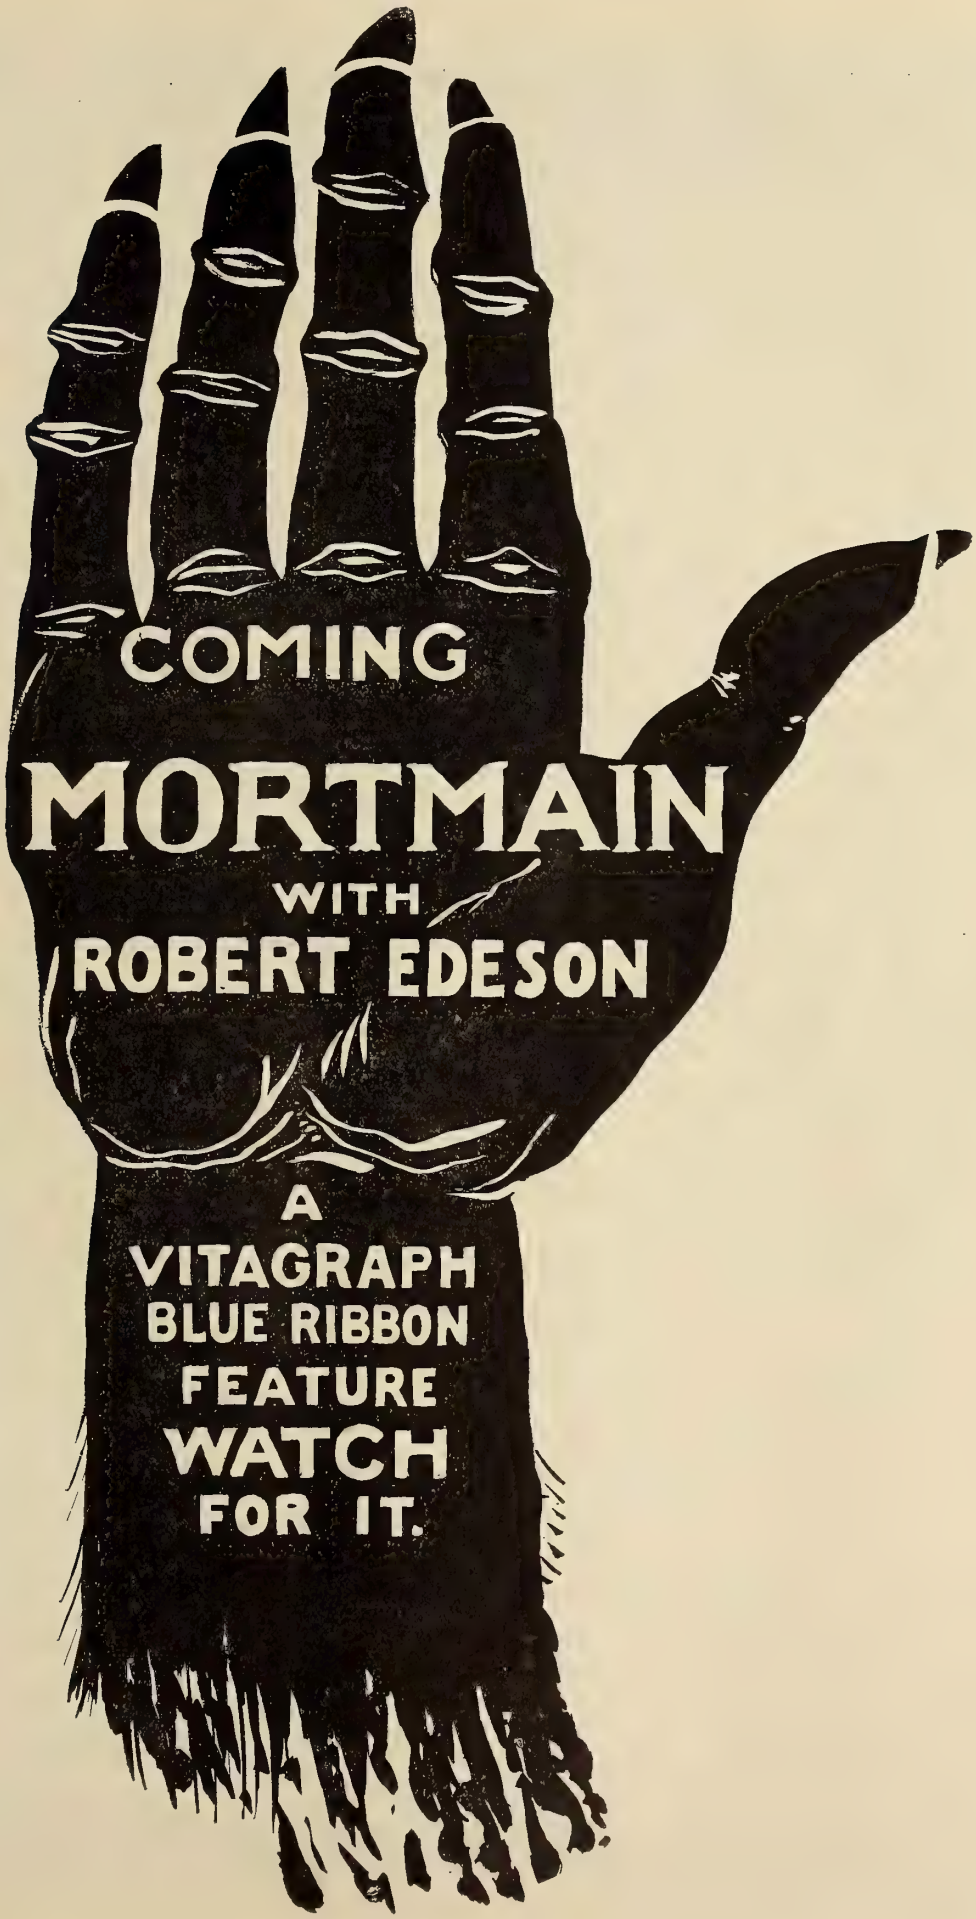
VITAGRAPH ONE, THREE AND SIX-SHEET POSTERS

The releases on your program are the staff of life. They are the bread of your picture success. You depend on them year in, year out, to hold the clientele that your features bring. The trouble is, you don't give this branch of your business half enough thought. You neglect it for your features.

Vitagraph Regular Releases mean more to you than you can imagine for the simple reason that they are not only consistently good but have those marks of individuality which you do not find on the shortest subjects that others release.

THE VITAGRAPH CO. OF AMERICA

EAST 15TH STREET AND LOCUST AVENUE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.



The "News" advertisers believe YOU worth while; justify them.

The great difference between the common-place serial and a continued photoplay in chapters is--
The former depends entirely on its advertising to make it a success,
the latter on merit.
The difference is not unlike a modern novel and the known works of the masters of literature.
You buy the highly advertisd novel because it is advertised.
But the works of Shakespeare,
Mark Twain,
Washington Irving are read and enjoyed for the sparkle which they contain.
They are works of art that do not need advertising.

THE GODDESS

a continued photoplay in chapters, is like them in this respect ----- Enjoyed by your audiences for the sparkle which it contains.

The vogue at present
Is to take a name
And use it
Regardless of its fitness
To the subject to which it is applied.

This is particularly true of Broadway Star Features
A name which was originally applied to Vitagraph photoplays of merit
Which had actually been shown
At our theatre on Broadway.

The name Broadway Star Feature
Means nothing
Unless it is applied
To such productions as
"One Performance Only"
"West Wind"
"From Out The Big Snows"
"Through Troubled Waters"
Which have been exhibited on Broadway.
In this instance the name

Is aptly applied.

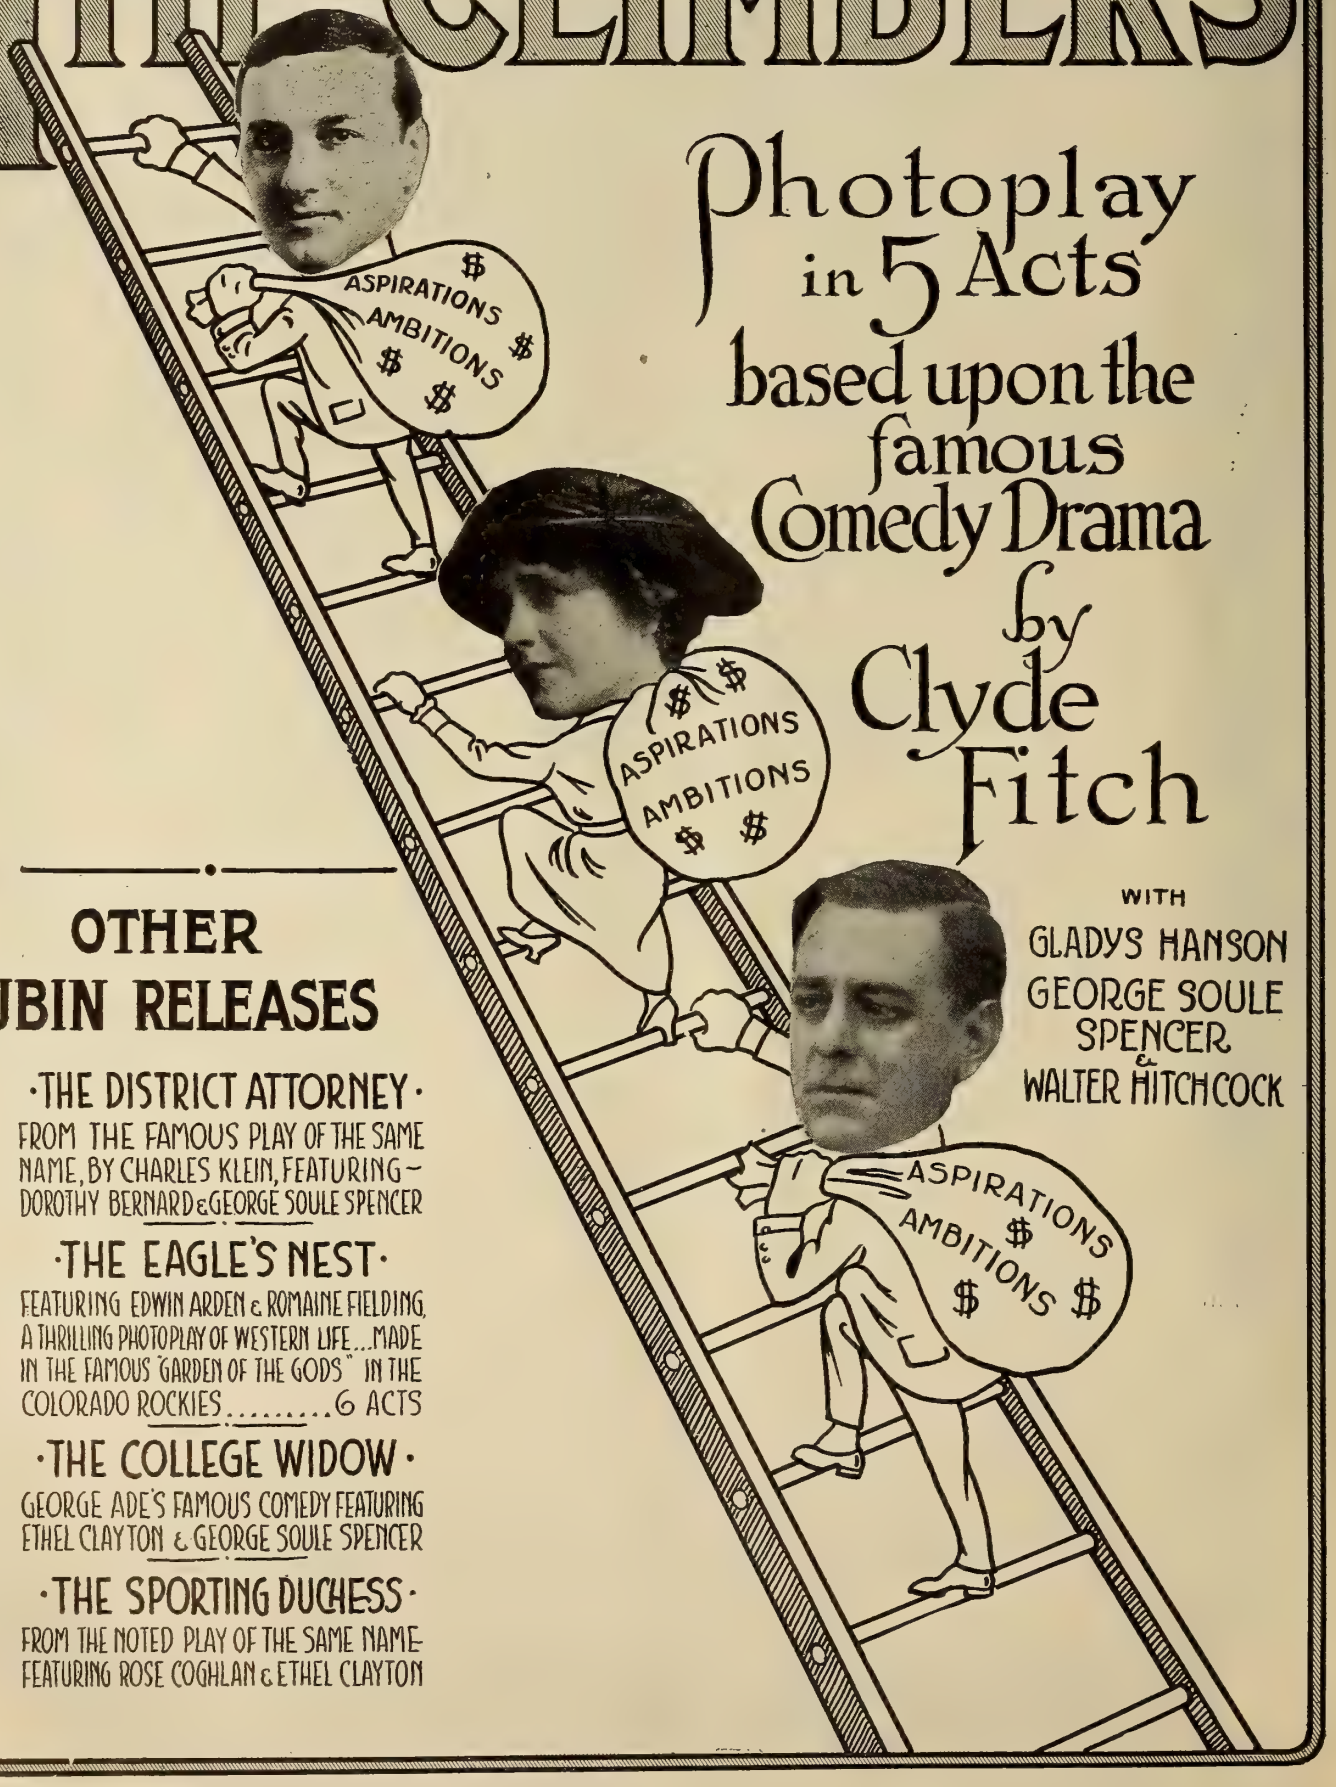
THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE



THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE deals with the subject which is today nearest the heart of every American citizen—the problem of America's unpreparedness.

It portrays the defenseless condition of our country; the consequences to which this condition may lead; and the way to avoid these consequences.

Hudson Maxim, international authority on arms and ammunition, supplied the facts; J. Stuart Blackton made these facts live. From them he constructed a powerful drama; produced it on a stage whose limits are the boundaries of the United States itself; the actors, the most prominent names in current American history.

The Press and the Picture

ON Monday of last week the New York Evening Mail combined its stage and photoplay departments under the significant heading: "Drama" with subheads: "The Stage," "The Screen," and with the following announcement:

"HEREAFTER the dramatic and motion picture departments of this newspaper will be run as one department under the editorial supervision of the dramatic editor.

"The rapid growth of the feature film as an amusement and the serious efforts of film producers to improve the standards of their screen dramas have added a dignity and importance to the artistic side of the motion picture industry which, The Evening Mail believes, deserves both recogtion and support."

THIS recognition of screen productions by one of the metropolittan newspapers, however tardy from the viewpoint of those closer to the progress of the picture art, is nevertheless of extreme importance and vast significance.

It shows the tenor of the press. It is a proclamation from New York, from whose dailies many of the country's papers take their editorial cue in such matters. It ought to and will aid greatly in the movement just stirring now in many editorial offices to give to the modern picture the status and support it so fully deserves.

UNDER the heading, "Photoplays Will Soon Be Reviewed Like Spoken Drama," the dramatic editor of the Boston Evening Record has just wrtiten:

"The standard of camera production is getting so high, the popular impression that they are an 'art' just like the spoken drama so strong that little by little all over the country papers are beginning to criticise them.

"This, of course, is as it should be. It means better pictures all the time.

"I could not help thinking of this new criticism of cinemetagraphics at the Park last evening. Why should a theatre that offers such an attraction as that offered at that popular playhouse fear criticism? The two chief pictures, Pauline Frederick in 'Sold,' and Blanche Sweet in 'The Secret Orchard,' have a much higher artistic standard than half the so-called $2 plays."

ALL this is of great moment to the whole industry. Its direct, practical value to the exhibitor, especially the exhibitor in the larger centers of population, must be apparent to those who think ahead.

So must it be and so must its lesson be apparent to every producer whose aims are high.

THIS newspaper attitude which means inevita cation of its readers, will bring to the th those uneducated millions—and there are mi still look upon the motion picture as a cheap ar form of amusement.

No greater good, no more practical benefit in cents could be gained for this industry than t educational co-operation upon the part of the

THESE millions of people who don't go to atres constitute the biggest prospective this business is facing today.

To gain them, to make regular patrons of the them the quality of amusement they demand w solve the internal problem of profits which is this business today.

THIS journal could be of no greater assi picture industry in any way than if it p issue these appeals:

To the producer: Make pictures for the g ment-going public, of such artistry and int tastes will be satisfied.

To the exhibitor: Let the people, all the that you've got such pictures and where a can be seen.

THE very worst thing about the motion traditions; the very best thing about it i

Its traditions are largely the making of pictures of ordinary quality, and the showin that minority of the public which is attract

ITS future consists of standing to the fore ment world where it will be in direct and e tition with the best offerings of the stage a publication, where it will appeal satisfacto class—but to the entire public, irrespective culture.

IN this greater—much greater—future the c the press is the one great essential. Only t can give satisfactorily the offerings of this d change business; and they constitute not educational force of the times, as every one k as every good advertising man knows, the medium. To secure this complete co-operati two things are indispensable: First, good second, the regular merchandising of them nd through the exhibitor. WILLIAM A.

that makeshift remedy, they do not reach any ground.

to prohibit certain kinds of scenes, regardless t these scenes are merely one minute element in enforcing and completing the meaning of the picture as a whole.

And that is the highest point they reach. This is the most that the best of them accomplish. It is a pin-point of dogma in a sea of uncertainty.

HERE are some of the results that are obtained under this irresponsible, catch-as-catch-can, happy-go-lucky method of censorship:

The Ohio Censor Board forbade the exhibition of Shakespeare's "Hamlet" because of "Hamlet's ungallant behavior to Ophelia!"

"The Merchant of Venice" was forbidden because it is offensive.

"Ten Nights in a Bar-room" was prohibited, presumably because of the pictures of saloon life it contains,—though it has long been regarded as a "prohibition tract" on the stage and in print.

"When We Were Twenty-one" was barred by the Kansas Censor Board because it contains a few drinking scenes.

"THREE WEEKS" was objected to by J. Louis Breitinger, of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors because the name of Elinor Glyn appeared on the title-piece of the film.

Likewise, this estimable gentleman objected to the use of the title, "Kreutzer Sonata," though he was informed by people acquainted with music that it was nothing but the name of one of Beethoven's symphonies.

"The Birth of a Nation" was barred by the Ohio censors.

So was "Hypocrites!" without, it is said, being given so much as the formality of an examination.

The same trio raised objections to "The Devil's Daughter" because they declared, the devil never had a daughter.

Major Funkhouser, of Chicago, declared that "The Scarlet Letter" was not fit to be shown in a motion picture theatre.

"The Spoilers," the Kansas Censor Board announced, long before the picture came before them for examination, would be forbidden unless the fight scene was eliminated.

Mr. Oberholtzer, of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, when asked in court why he had objected to "The Secret Orchard," said that he and his colleagues were tired of seeing that sort of picture, and they had decided to ban the next one that came along.

THESE are merely random examples selected from the mass of absurdities, whimsicalities, nonsensicalities, and illegal tyrannies that are being daily perpetrated by the censors, to the sorrow and indignation of every producer and every exchange man.

Why?

Because, by act of legislature and from the unalterable nature of his position and the subject he is dealing with, there is not and can not be any responsibility or restraint upon the motion picture censor.

ONLY one thing is necessary to become a motion picture censor under the present laws,—a firm conviction that motion pictures ought to be censored. Whatever he chooses to do by way of putting that conviction in practice, he can justify under the law which created him.

And this will continue to be so until the injustice, the lack of equity in this situation is brought squarely before the courts, and they are compelled to realize that certain individuals are enforcing laws against large bodies of other individuals in a manner which amounts to a usurpation of the right of private judgment and thought.

Be Formed to Smash Censor Menace

ational Motion Picture Trade Association to Combat Local, State and National gulate" the Industry—Every Move of the Organization Against Evils ill Be Directed by the Concentrated Efforts of Powerful Forces who believed themselves endowed with a divine mission to reform and regulate the motion picture. He had protected his own business from them by simply appealing to the spirit of fair play in the majority of the board he was dealing with, or a majority of the politicians. The result had justified his course.

Carl H. Pierce, the special Eastern representative of the Morosco Photoplays Company, gave some memorable illustrations from his experience with the Ohio and Pennsylvania Boards of Censors. In addition, he commented upon the "let-well-enough-alone" attitude of many exchange men in the jurisdiction of the Ohio and Pennsylvania censors, and scored them for preferring to take slashed pictures from the boards to opposing them, antagonizing them—as they feared—and being deprived of service as a result.

Failed to Use Publicity Weapon

W. W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, who headed the delegation that advocated the Eisner amendment at the New York State Constitutional Convention a month or two ago, discussed the need for a relief from the miscellaneous, haphazard censorship that was working more and more havoc with the business. He dwelt with emphasis on the fact that, of all the great businesses, the motion picture alone, with one exception, had failed to avail itself of the great defensive weapon of publicity in its own behalf.

The Standard Oil, Mr. Irwin reminded his hearers, had made the same mistake. When it at last awoke to the need of publicity, it was too late. The publicity of its opponents had been working too long and too well in the public mind. It was for the motion picture manufacturer to profit by the lesson.

Chairman Brenton's initial address, in which he pledged the cordial and sympathetic support of the National Board of Censorship and its co-operation with the producers to maintain the motion picture upon its present high level, as well as to advance it, was echoed in spirit by those of his colleagues who succeeded him.

Dr. Orrin G. Cocks, in particular, pressed upon his hearers the earnest desire of the National Board of Censorship to work with the manufacturers, to furnish practical assistance, and to be a reliable medium of information to the producers regarding the temper of public opinion and the state of public taste to the best of its ability.

Delete the Word "Censorship"

A very concrete recommendation was that of Mr. Binder's in urging the National Board of Censorship to remove he word "censorship" from their title. f the board's function had ever been that of censorship, it had long since ceased to occupy any such inflammatory position toward the business. Rather, it was a counsellor and friend—an unofficial ambassador of the people to the producers. Its very lack of statutory authority, if nothing else, made it advisable to dispense with a troublesome and incongruous part of its title.

Of the invited guests, only three, George K. Spoor, of Essanay; Winifield R. Sheehan, of Fox, and J. A. Berst, of Selig, were unable to be present. Those at the luncheon were: P. A. Powers and R. H. Cochrane, Universal; John R. Freuler and John Cecil Graham, Mutual; Edwin Thanhouser, Thanhouser; W. W. Irwin, V-L-S-E; Carl H. Pierce, Oliver Morosco Photoplays Company; Lewis J. Selznick, World Film; B. P. Schulberg, Famous Players; H. Whitman Bennett, Lasky; P. A. Parsons, Pathé; Arthur James and W. E. Atkinson, Metro; John A. Kent, Great Northern; Felix Malitz, American Correspondent Film Company; Frank Bannon, Edison; Charles Goldsmith, Lubin; Cranston Brenton, W. D. McGuire, Orrin G. Cocks, J. W. Binder, Matthew P. Adams, J. K. Paulding, National Board of Censorship; George Blaisdell, "Moving Picture World"; Lesley Mason, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"NATION," PASSED BY CENSORS, WILL BE SHOWN IN PHILADELPHIA

"The Birth of a Nation" has passed the Pennsylvania Board of Censors and will have its initial showing in Philadelphia within the next two weeks. Samuel F. Nixon, managing director of several of the most important legitimate houses in this city, announces that this famous screen play will be the opening attraction of the regular winter season at the Forrest theatre, one of the finest of the Quaker City's playhouses. Saturday evening, September 4, is the date fixed for the opening.

In view of the protests already made by the colored people in that city, it will be interesting to note if any active steps will be taken by them in this regard.

Not anticipating such an early showing of this picture, a prominent colored organization (the Emancipation and Civil Rights League) decided to celebrate Emancipation Day, September 22, by a large mass meeting protesting against the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in Philadelphia, instead of the usual parade which marks the day. This action was taken after a committee had viewed the play in Atlantic City. All churches, societies and other organizations of color were invited to join in this demonstration.

"NEAL OF NAVY" FOR FIRST RUN

Manager Beinfeld, of the Boston Pathé exchange, has placed "Neal of the Navy" for first run at the Boston theatre.

OAKLAND MAYOR BACKS DOWN AFTER BANNING "NATION"

Oakland, Cal., was given a bitter taste of censorship in its worst form recently, when Mayor Davie peremptorily closed the Macdonough theatre to prevent the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation." This act of the chief executive of the city was entirely unexpected, and was all the more surprising when it is realized that this production recently enjoyed a run of several weeks there without interference, and for fifteen consecutive weeks was shown in San Francisco.

Immediately following the closing of the house the theatre management took steps to secure an injunction to restrain the authorities from further interference, and on the following day an action was commenced in Judge Waste's court. However, these steps were scarcely necessary as City Attorney Morf was on hand to see the judge.

"I am afraid the mayor made a mistake," apologized the representative of the mayor. "It certainly looks like it," announced Judge Waste. It was announced on behalf of the chief executive that he had merely intended to have eliminated from the films certain features that he considered objectionable, and that his orders had been taken too literally.

The manager of the show stated that he was perfectly willing to eliminate the portions designated by the mayor and the court proceedings were abandoned.

AUGER RESIGNS FROM WORLD IN NEW ORLEANS

It was announced officially in New Orleans, August 16, that E. Auger, manager of the southern division of the World Film Corporation, had severed his connection with the company. Mr. Auger is now in New York City, at the Elks Club. It is rumored in Southern circles that he is to become the general manager for a large Eastern Company, though this is not verified.

Mr. Auger is one of the best known film men in the South. He grew up with motion pictures, and was a veteran when they were so new that it was a distinct novelty. He was "broken in" in Canada, where he was general manager for several companies successively. Later he came to the states, and still later went to Southern territory, there to accept the general managership of the southern division of the World, which was tendered him only several months ago.

Maurice F. Barr is manager of the New Orleans office of the World Film.

MUTUAL IN FRISCO ESCAPES FIRE

The Mutual Film Exchange, located on Turk street, San Francisco, had a narrow escape recently from destruction by fire. A blaze started in some dry grass in a vacant lot at the rear of the structure and caught in a window sill and secured a foothold in the poster department inside.

An attendant who was working overtime saw the fire and turned in an alarm, the fire department extinguished it just before it reached the stock of films.

Herrington, Acting on This Supposition, Is B of Pennsylvania Managers for Membership Ca

Harrisburg, Pa., August 25.

Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, the newly elected president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has been in communication with prominent local exhibitors making arrangements for a meeting in Harrisburg at an early date for exhibitors of this and nearby cities for the purpose of strengthening the Harrisburg local of the State branch of the national league.

This is taken to indicate that Mr. Herrington, who is known as the "live wire" of the Pennsylvania exhibitors since he was responsible for welding all the independent exhibitors into one statewide body, is about to start an aggressive campaign to induce more exhibitors to join the Pennsylvania league.

It is estimated that there are from 1,800 to 2,000 exhibitors in this State who have not yet joined the organization, and it is believed here to be the ambition of Mr. Herington to get as many of these men in line as possible. Everyone is convinced that no one is better qualified than the wirey little Pitsburgher to undertake the always difficult task of organization, and the fact that the national body has honored a Pennsylvanian with the highest office that it can bestow is likely to prove a strong argument for inducing more Pennsylvania exhibitors to get in line.

The wonderful work that has been accomplished already by the state league which, as an actually statewide body, is less than one year old, is another strong argument for increased membership.

It is to the state league alone that the PLANS for the launching of the new Kriterion program, early in September, have been practically completed, and S. L. Mr. Newman, who has been devoting his energies to the organization and signing up of exchanges to distribute the new films all over the country, said that reliability and permanency will be the watchword for that branch of the concern, which will be known as the Kriterion Sales Corporation, with offices at 1600 Broadway, New York. "The acid test is being applied to every exchange in our system," he said. "We are making absolutely sure that we have none on our list who is not able to continue in business for years. New Jersey Threatened With State Censorship

Exhibitors Lining Up to Fight Movement—Censors in Various Towns Fail to Agree on Merits of the Same Film—Ministers in One Case Passed Favorably on a Picture and Sapient Policemen Elsewhere, with More Keenly Attuned (?) Sensibilities, Condemn the Picture for Immorality—Censorship Evil Hits Newark

Newark, N. J., Aug. 25.

EXHIBITORS of northern and central New Jersey are perfecting plans for a State-wide organization to protest against a censorship, which during the past year has proved both meddlesome and incompetent. With the announcement that an attempt will be made this winter to force State censorship in New Jersey, promoters of the exhibitors organization declare they will wage an educational campaign among their patrons that will go far toward establishing the injustice and lack of practicality that characterize the proposed plan.

Exhibitors of Newark, Bloomfield, Elizabeth, Jersey City and Summit, who have especially suffered at the hands of local censor boards, declare the proposed organization will include every motion picture exhibitor in the State and will represent so large and powerful an element of public opinion a hearing whenever it is requested.

Local censorship of the past year is responsible for the feeling among exhibitors that an organization is necessary to protect their interests. Almost every town and city in northern New Jersey has, within the past few months seen fit to instruct local boards of censorship to pass on films that have been announced for production. These local boards of censorship are only temporary affairs and are either appointed by the chief of police or the mayor.

They are usually appointed wholly without regard to the qualification of its members—as long as a minister or a police officer is named on the board the appointing power takes it for granted that a mistake cannot be made.

The work of the local censors in northern New Jersey proves interesting. In Elizabeth the Fox feature, "The Nigger," was passed upon by a board of local censors made up of ministers and declared to be most praiseworthy. In Orange, less than six miles away a board of local censors made up of police sergeants and patrolmen unanimously decided "The Nigger" was immoral.

One member of the Orange board told the writer he had not been to a motion picture show before in two years.

"I thought the picture was all right," he declared, "but I guess the ministers don't want it shown here. I don't want to get the police chief in trouble, so the safest way for me to do is to vote against it."

Censors Do Not Agree

One of Bosworth's films, "Hypocrites," had a similar experience. The film had long and most successful runs in Newark, Jersey City and Elizabeth. In each place it passed the local boards of censorship without a murmur of disapproval. A month after it had shown in these three largest of the cities in northern Jersey it was held up by a board of censors in Bloomfield.

The film had been shown a day in Bloomfield before the mayor's orders forbidding its production reached the theatre manager. More than 10,000 persons saw the film in Bloomfield and upon receipt of the mayor's decree to discontinue the exhibition the manager invited his patrons to personally inform him of their impressions of the film.

More than 6,000 accepted the request and among that number not one was found who criticized the film adversely or believed it to be in any way detrimental to the moral welfare of the public.

And among the 6,000 were many women of social prominence, as Bloomfield is a suburban residential district. Several hundred of the most prominent of those who witnessed the film expressed their willingness to have the manager use their names in statements approving the film. The mayor who admitted that he had never seen the film frowned upon the activity of the theatre manager in seeking the expressions of his patrons and officially ordered the closing of the playhouse for three days as a punishment for his activity in taking exception to his board of censors.

Newark Does Not Escape

Newark has not escaped the censorship evil. Films against which no criticism was ever heard have been prohibited here. The Newark board generally consists of but one person appointed by the chief of police. Sometimes it is a woman, more often a police sergeant or minister. He makes a verbal report to the chief from which there is said to be no appeal.

Exhibitors here have calmly submitted to what they have described as outrages among themselves hoping that in time the question of local censorship would solve its own troubles.

But when it became known that State censorship was definitely planned the determination to oppose it became crystallized. The exhibitors are determined to show their hand and they are positive the public will rally to their support when they are placed in possession of the facts.

Metro's List for September Contains Noted Players

Emily Stevens Will Appear in "The Soul of a Woman," a Rolfe Production, on the Fifth—"The Silent Voice," Featuring Bushman, Is Scheduled for the Thirtenth

ANNOUNCEMENT of the autumn offerings of the Metro Pictures Corporation, which was made at the Metro offices in the Heidelberg Building early this week, contains a notable list of stars of the stage and screen in a series of pretentious feature productions during the months of September and October, the schedule for which is now complete.

Emily Stevens is the first of the September stars. She will appear in "The Soul of a Woman," announced as a five-act play supremely contrived by Director Edwin Carewe of the B. A. Rolfe forces. This picture will be released on September 7, and probably will be given an invitation showing at one of the Broadway theatres with a special musical program, to give exhibitors and the critics a chance to inspect it.

Francis X. Bushman in "The Silent Voice," a Quality picture, brought to New York from the Los Angeles studios during the present week by F. A. Balshofer and Francis X. Bushman personally, will be released on September 13. This adaptation from the Otis Skinner drama is in reality an elaboration of the play, and its enthusiastic reception at the preliminary showing in Chicago at the Studebaker, and in New York at the Broadway, were most gratifying to the Metro forces.

"The Silent Voice" will be followed by "The Better Man," the Rupert Hughes play produced on the speaking stage with Guy Bates Post, under the name of "The Bridge." The stars are Henry Kolker, well known to Broadway by his career on the legitimate stage, and Renee Kelly. This five-act feature has just been completed by Director John W. Noble, of the B. A. Rolfe Company. It has socialistic elements that are calculated to arouse animated discussion.

"The Better Man" will be released on September 20.

George Bronson Howard's "An Enemy to Society," with Hamilton Revelle and Louis Meredith as the stars, will follow on September 20. This is a Columbia product in five reels, unfolding a story of high crime and penalties with the love theme predominating.

Mary Miles Minter in "The Storks' Nest," a five-act picture, will be released in October. The play is now in preparation at the Rolfe studios, with Edgar Nigh directing.

For Ethel Barrymore a new play by George Scarborough has been secured, and Miss Barrymore found the vehicle so much to her liking that she expressed a desire to present it later on the speaking stage. Edwin Carewe has already begun work upon its presentation.

The third week in October will see Olga Petrova in "My Madonna," and William Faversham in "One Million Dollars," to be followed by Edmund Breese in "The Song of a Wage Slave."

This is the second of a series of plays from poems which began with "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

Booth Tarkington's "The Turmoil," will follow, and a special announcement concerning this picture is to be made later.

FOX'S GREATER NEW YORK OPENS BRANCH IN PITTSBURGH

The Greater New York Film Rental Company, of which William Fox is president, is opening a branch office in Pittsburgh in the second floor of 121 Fourth avenue, adjoining the Fox Film Company's offices. Ellis Cohen, of the New York office, is in Pittsburgh superintending the opening of the branch and will remain here several weeks and will put a man in charge of the office before his return to New York.

The Greater New York company will make a specialty of single reel comedies for exhibitors running feature programs. The productions of Edison, Biograph, Kalem, Lubin, Selig, Essanay and Vitagraph will be handled, including multiple reel releases, and a regular program can be furnished exhibitors at prices that will compare favorably with other programs.

"Carmen" Calls Forth Praises of National Board

Lasky Subject, Based on Original Story by Prosper Merimee, Featuring Geraldine Farrar, Brings Out Largest Attendance of Its Members for Months

THAT men and women interested in the development and advancement of the photoplay industry appreciate the significance and importance of the recently completed feature photoplay, "Carmen," with Geraldine Farrar as the star, was unmistakably indicated this week when the photoplay was presented privately in New York before a committee of the National Board of Censors.

The completed photoplay, which was produced at the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, at Hollywood, Cal., under the personal direction and supervision of Cecil B. DeMille, arrived in New York almost on the same day that Miss Farrar herself returned east in her private car with members of her party. Realizing the importance of presenting the photoplay before members of the National Board at the earliest possible date, the private showing took place early in the week in the projection room in which the Lasky productions always are privately shown.

The great demands on the time of members of the National Board, who constantly are reviewing productions, has limited to a large extent in the past the attendance at important exhibitions of only a few members. Seemingly every member of the board who was able to arrange to see "Carmen" was desirous of viewing the photoplay at its first showing.

The attendance of members was by all odds the largest at any single exhibition in many months.

Among the members of the board who were present were Mrs. J. N. Whaley, Mrs. Josephine Reading and J. H. Sargent, who are among the oldest members of the National Board; Mrs. Elsie Crosby, Mrs. L. McCormick, Mrs. Elizabeth Chittenden, Mrs. M. Scudder and Mr. O. C. Weist.

There were, in addition, about twenty persons, most of whom were friends of the censors. Carl H. Pierce, of the Bosworth organization, and several other well-known motion picture men were present.

Before the presentation a representative of the Lasky Company explained that William C. DeMille, who made the photodramatic version, had drawn the material for his photoplay from the original "Carmen" story, written by Prosper Merimee, and from which, also, Bizet had taken the story for the opera.

At the conclusion of the exhibition the censors and their friends burst spontaneously into applause which lasted nearly a minute. After a few minutes' discussion a vote was taken, and "Carmen" was passed unanimously by the censors, who placed themselves on record as being highly pleased with the work of Miss Farrar and the extremely fine direction of Cecil B. DeMille.

"Carmen" will be released through Paramount Pictures Corporation on November 1.

Essanay's Crawford Play Will Show 5,000 People

Chicago Company Has Under Way "The Palace of the King," Featuring Three Broadway Stars: Arline Hackett, E. J. Radcliffe and Richard C. Travers; Released in October

ESSANAY has engaged three Broadway stars to take parts in the photoplay dramatized from F. Marion Crawford's novel, "In the Palace of the King." This is a six-act production, to be released in October on the V-L-S-E program.

Arline Hackett, who has been engaged as William Faversham's leading woman in "The Hawk" for next season, will take the leading feminine role of Dolores de Mendoza in the photoplay. Miss Hackett has had a wide experience on the speaking stage and for the past three years has starred on Broadway.

She played last season in "Today," and in "Dicky Bird" with Mary Shaw. The year before she appeared in "Damaged Goods." She has been featured under the Morosco and the Frohman managements and has starred in Ibsen, Strindberg and George Bernard Shaw plays. She also made a great success in Shakespearean roles, playing Ophelia, Portia, Lady Macbeth and Rosalind.

Miss Haskett is well known from coast to coast as a strong emotional actress. Before her advent on Broadway she appeared in stock on the coast, acting for a time in her own theatre in San Diego and later appearing in Los Angeles under Oliver Morosco.

E. J. Radcliffe, the noted legitimate stage actor, has been engaged specially for this play, to take the part of King Phillip II of Spain, while Lewis Edgar, another well-known speaking stage star will take the part of the court jester.

Richard C. Travers, leading man with Essanay, who played opposite Viola Allen in "The White Sister," will take the leading masculine role, that of Don Juan.

The play will be one of the most stupendous six reel productions ever produced. Five thousand persons, in all, have been engaged to take part. This includes five hundred cavalrymen and the same number of infantry, members of the Illinois National Guard.

One hundred professional dancing girls will appear in the play, dancing before the king in the great court scenes. These were largely recruited from the speaking stage in shows appearing in Chicago. A dancing instructor is now engaged in training them for their parts.

The whole of the Essanay grounds of several acres is being turned into a camp where most of the extra actors will live in tents during the production of the photoplay. A replica of an old Spanish castle has been erected at one end of the grounds, where many of the scenes will be taken. The palace is complete throughout and bears an exact resemblance to an ancient stone castle.

The leading parts are taken by players of wide experience and well-known ability. Ernest Maupain, who was Sarah Bernhardt's leading man for several seasons, will take the part of General de Mendoza, Lillian Drew is the Princess of Eboli, Thomas Commerford, Gomez, the prime minister, Nell Craig, Inez de Mendoza, the blind girl and Sydney Ainsworth, Parez. The play is being produced under the direction of Fred E. Wright.

"MY VALET" AND "THE MAN AND THE TEST" FOR CHICAGO TRIANGLE OPENING

The attractions selected for the Triangle opening bill next month at the Knickerbocker theatre, New York, and Studebaker theatre, Chicago, will be Raymond Hitchcock, with Mabel Normand and the Sennett company, in the original farce, "My Valet"; Douglas Fairbanks and the Griffith company in "The Man and the Test," a modern adventure story, and Frank Keenan in Thomas Ince's new Civil War play entitled "The Coward."

No date has been set for the opening, but it will undoubtedly take place not later than the middle of September. Besides the New York and Chicago playhouses under lease, negotiations have already been opened for theatres in Philadelphia and Boston.

Triangle Completes First Releasing Plan

New York City Will See Initial Griffith-Sennett-Ince Creation at the Knickerbocker Theatre on September 18—The Trio of Producers Have Personally Supervised the Subjects Coming from the Company's Studio—"The Lamb" Is Practically Completed—Marshall and Thomas Jefferson Will Be Seen in Stirring Story of Adventure

PLANS for the release of the first feature pictures on the new Triangle program were completed this week, and announcement made that the New York public will get its first glimpse of these Griffith, Sennett and Ince creations at the Knickerbocker theatre, September 18. The first films have already been completed and will be released promptly on the date set.

In announcing the successful accomplishment of the preliminaries in launching this immense program, this statement was issued from the offices of the Triangle Film Corporation:

"Substantial progress was made last week in carrying forward the plans of Triangle Film Corporation. These plans when realized will mean the re-flowering of the story-telling art—a renaissance as remarkable as that of the Elizabethan era in England or of the literary era of the Grand Monarch in France.

"Since Scheherazade charmed the Caliph with her stories for one thousand consecutive nights till he quite forgot all about cutting off her head, the storyteller has been a most important human factor—more important, Carlyle said, that the statesman or the warrior. The masters of great narrative have swayed the hearts and the intellects of the world. But in the modern age an entirely new storytelling art has developed, in which the fact or fictive historian has used pictures instead of words, screened action instead of action on the old-fashioned dramatic stage.

"Principal among the plans of the Triangle Film Corporation is, that those born pictorial story tellers, David W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, are to film the world's greatest stories for the American public in a consecutive series of dramatic narratives which they have personally supervised. That they have undertaken a huge task, everybody admits. But with the magnificent resources of the Griffith, Keystone and Ince studios, with more than fifty star players already contracted for, with long lists of copyrighted new scenarios in hand, and with the financial direction of Messrs. H. E. Aitken, the Kessels and Charles Baumann, there is every confidence that their undertaking will be successful.

A List of Important Dramas

"Mentioning but a few of the stories under way, it may be noted that the Griffith studio has practically completed 'The Lamb,' starring Douglas Fairbanks; 'Martyrs of the Alamo,' a stirring historic narrative of the Mexican War; 'Old Heidelberg,' a beautiful idyl of student life in Germany; 'The Lily and the Rose,' starring Lillian Gish and featuring Rozsika Dolly. To come are DeWolf Hopper in some of the most famous comedy characterizations; Frank Campeau in Sir Gilbert Parker's 'Jordan is a Hard Road'; John Emerson in a detective-crook story, and Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson in an adventure story with Oriental flavor.

"In the meantime Mr. Ince has been working with such sterling stars as Frank Keenan, Dustin Farnum, Orrin Johnson, Kathryn Kaelred, Bessie Barriscale, W. S. Hart in dramatizations of the forceful themes for which he is noted. Mr. Ince will have at least eight of the Triangle five reelers completed by September 1, which is more than two weeks before the date of the New York Triangle opening at the Knickerbocker theatre.

"Among the big subjects he has chosen are the Dumas 'Three Musketeers' story for Orrin Johnson; an Alaskan story named 'The Iron Strain' for Dustin Farnum; a Civil War story entitled 'The Coward' for Frank Keenan, and a new vampire story entitled 'The Winged Idol' for Kathryn Kaelred. By the date of publication of this journal, Billie Burke will be out there working on a new modern comedy and by mid-September at least fifteen more stars will be employed before the camera on new stories provided for them by Mr. Ince himself and his literary assistants, C. Gardner Sullivan and Henry C. Warnack.

"Mack Sennett at Keystone Studio is keeping an even pace with the other two directors, working with Raymond Hitchcock, Eddie Foy, Hale Hamilton and momentarily expecting the co-operation of Weber and Fields and other tsar comedians who are to join him at Edendale, Los Angeles, presently. Mr. Sennett's first release is to be 'My Valet,' a farce in which he plays the part of servant to Raymond Hitchcock's master and in which Mabel Normand and Fred Mace are also congenially cast. Eddie Foy is working on 'A Favorite Fool,' a circus picture, and Hale Hamilton promises an amusing romance in 'Her Painted Hero.'

"In this he is to be supported by Polly Moran.

"No changes have been made in the list of the opening attractions at the Knickerbocker on September 18 aforesaid, including Mr. Hitchcock in the play just referred to, Fairbanks in 'The Lamb' and Keenan in 'The Coward.' The release dates for the theatres outside the four large cities of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston will probably be about the middle of October."

HENRY JAMES JOINS METRO

Metro Pictures Corporation announced on Tuesday that it had signed up Henry James, formerly of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Henry James will be associated with his brother Arthur James in the advertising and publicity work of the Metro, and will engage immediately on a special campaign in behalf of the most vigorous of the young plants in the feature field.

Henry James made an enviable record as business, advertising and circulation manager of "Reel Life," and as the result of his expert handling that publication was turned from a money loser into a profit maker in twelve months.

He brings to his new position special training in efficiency and economy methods as, prior to his entry into the motion picture industry he headed one of the largest selling organizations in Europe, the Orient and the Antipodes.

KLEINE'S "THE WOMAN NEXT DOOR" IS BOOKED HEAVILY

George Kleine's recently completed "The Woman Next Door," featuring Irene Fenwick, is booking heavily throughout the New York state territory as a result of the private showing for exhibitors at the Candler theatre last week.

Practically every house on Broadway from Greeley Square to Yonkers booked the attraction, being granted only the usual territorial protection.

The entire Marcus Loew and B. S. Moss circuits, Shea's Hippodrome, the Strand theatre, Hartford, Conn., along with representative houses in the principal cities of the East booked the feature immediately after the showing.

LABOR DAY WILL BE CELEBRATED AT SELIG ZOO

The labor organizations of Los Angeles, Cal., will engage in a great Labor Day celebration at the Selig jungle-zoo, on September 6. An extensive and interesting program has been planned for the day.

There are to be races, contests of strength, a big baseball game, and one of the features of the day will be a wild animal show.

Van Loan, Baseball Fiction Writer, Joins Mutual

Mustang Brand with Series Entitled "Buck Parvin and the Movies," Three Reels, Will Portray Author's Well Known Character—"Keeping Up With the Jones," Also Listed

BUCK PARVIN and his creator, Charles E. Van Loan, have joined the Mutual Film Corporation's new $8,000,000 program.

This announcement came after the conclusion of arrangements at the offices of the Mustang Film Company, one of the new Western manufacturers for the Mutual.

The Mustang will release on the Mutual program a series of three-reel star features under the general title of "Buck Parvin and the Movies." This series will present on the screen the comical sketches which made Mr. Van Loan's stories under that name in "The Saturday Evening Post" a national hit.

Mr. Van Loan and his writings on the motion picture are known to every American. But among his newspaper friends Mr. Van Loan is tagged for fame principally on the fact that he was the first and only man to successfully steal second with the bases full.

Mr. Van Loan is writing the scenarios for this series and is sitting in with the officers of the Mustang company for the selection of the cast.

The title role will be played by Arthur Acord, the celebrated cowboy motion picture star, who, by the way, was the inspiration of Mr. Van Loan's famous fiction series of "Buck Parvin." Naturally, Mr. Acord must make a perfect Buck Parvin, for he is indeed Buck himself.

Lawrence Ross Peyton has been cast for the role of Montague, the character of the Western director in the "Buck Parvin" stories. Mr. Van Loan deems this a very fortunate choice for the interpretation of the foibles and frenzies of that mercurial Mr. Montague.

Anna Little, who is widely known to film fans, will play the leading feminine role. She is not only agile and an equestrienne of great ability, but also beautiful of face and form. She has appeared in some of Otis Turner's greatest serials and features.

This series will be directed by William Bertram. According to present plans, the first of these Mustang star three-reelers will be ready for release on the Mutual's regular program on October 2.

The Mutual also announced the completion of arrangements for the production of the Gaumont split reel, comic and scenic. It will carry in animated cartoons a motion picture version of "Keeping Up with the Joneses," by "Pop," a syndicated newspaper comic feature. This will occupy 500 feet of the reel, while the remainder will be given over to scenic matter under the title "Seeing America First" and other educational material.

The week's developments have added to the array of three-reelers coming on the Mutual's program. The first of these releases will be a Rialto Star Feature, Gaumont, entitled "The Unsuspected Isles," with Fania Marinoff, Broadway star, in the lead. It will be released September 8. Next comes "Shorty's Ranch," a Broncho full of ginger. The first American Star Feature three-reeler, entitled "The Great Question," starring Harold Lockwood and Mae Allison, will be released September 18. Next in order is "The House with Nobody in It," another Rialto, release September 22. This will be followed by a Thanhouser three-Reeler entitled "A Disciple of Nietzsche," starring Florence LaBadie, Lorraine Huling and others.

Coming along on the schedule is an American three-reel feature, "The Idol." The leads are Helene Rosson and E. Forrest Taylor. This is the production of the second company formed to make these features for the American. Following "The Idol," the American will release "Pardoned," in three reels, featuring Harold Lockwood and Mae Allison.

This is a play with strong "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" elements.

"DIAMOND" CAST FILMED ON BOARD PACIFIC YACHT

Director William D. Taylor, Lottie Pickford, Irving Cummings, William Russell, Charlotte Burton, George Periolat and William J. Tedmarsh, members of the all star cast of "The Diamond from the Sky," the North American Film Corporation's prize continued photoplay, passed two days recently on the "Ituna," one of the swiftest and most completely equipped yachts along the Pacific coast. Most of the time spent on board was taken up in the filming of a number of scenes, which form part of one of the latest chapters to be released.

Although the trip took them far out into the swells, not a single member of the cast was taken down with sea sickness.

Miss Pickford, who as Esther has the feminine lead in this stupendous screen undertaking, had never been so far out from shore before.

Nevertheless, she enjoyed the trip immensely and declared that at the first opportunity she was going to take a much longer trip on the deep.

FILM "NEAL OF THE NAVY" SCENE UNDER DIFFICULTIES

Three members of the Harry Harvey "Neal of the Navy" Balboa-Pathé serial made it possible to film some exceptional scenes along the coast last week when they stood in the water up to their arms and held the camera from being swept away by breakers. The scene desired was that of a cave in the mouth of which the action took place.

"THE FIXER" IS NEW TITLE FOR "HELLO BILL"

"The Fixer" is the title of the first Kleine comedy featuring Bickel and Watson. This was selected to take the place of "Hello Bill," the original title of Willis M. Goodhue's famous stage farce.

"The Fixer" is scheduled for release through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service, September 15.

Film City in New York Is Famous Players Plan

Company Secures Vast Tract on Marble Hill, in Upper Part of Manhattan, at 225th Street, Where Extensive Laboratories, Studios, Open-Air Stages and Factories Will Be Erected Under the Direction of Edwin S. Porter for the Production of Elaborate Features—Total Investment Represents a Million Dollars

THE Famous Players Film Company, through the A. N. Gitterman Realty Corporation, has secured a plot of thirty-one lots atop Marble Hill, in upper Manhattan, at Two Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, one block west of Broadway, and overlooking the Harlem and Hudson rivers, New York City, for the purposes of erecting extensive studios, laboratories, open-air stages and factories, designed for the production of elaborate feature motion pictures.

The property is assessed, for tax purposes, at over $160,000. The Famous Players' decision to widen its producing activities within New York City on so gigantic a scale may be considered in motion picture circles as the first move toward the conversion of upper Manhattan as a motion picture producing center, similar in physical scope to the larger film aggregations now operating in California.

It is estimated that with the substantial improvements which the Famous Players' architects are planning, when the various studio, laboratory, factory and office buildings are completed, they will represent a total investment approximating a million dollars.

It is of interest that the Famous Players Film Company should be the first to seek grounds within New York City when the growth of the industry demanded expansion.

A novel feature of the plans being made by the Famous Players lies in the fact that a special experimental laboratory will be constructed, in which research work will be conducted with a view of improving the mechanical factors of motion picture production and projection. This experimental work will be under the supervision of Edwin S. Porter.

Film Vault in Solid Rock

Another interesting fact connected with the Famous Players plans will be the use of the natural rock on top of the hill upon which the studios will be built as a vault for film. The vault will be cut through the solid rock, thus forming one of the safest and most impregnable receptacles for film possible.

The transaction was culminated following negotiations conducted between E. J. Ludvigh and Ralph A. Kohn, attorneys for the Famous Players Film Company, and the A. N. Gittterman Corporation, representing the sellers.

In a statement concerning the significance and purposes of this unusual land purchase, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players, said:

"This initial investment is only the inception of a tremendous constructive plan which we have been developing for some time past. It is our purpose to create the largest and most comprehensive producing plant devoted to motion pictures in the world, and to do it within New York City, regardless of the expansion of our activities elsewhere. The studios and open-air stages will be so designed and constructed as to permit the adequate and facile production of every type of feature.

Construction Under Porter's Eye

"The unusual situation secured by us permits us to obtain a variety of woodland, park and marine scenes with little effort. These advantages are increased by the fact that we are within the city, and therefore in constant contact with metropolitan environment, when subjects require it.

"When, recently, we closed a contract with the Paramount Pictures Corporation for twenty-five years—the longest period ever covered by a contract in the amusement world—we were convinced that the feature motion picture had become a standard part of the modern world of art, and would live forever.

"It is in order not only to insure the endurance of the feature, but to advance its merit constantly and to make its chances of improvement virtually illimitable, that we are to erect the most complete group of buildings ever yet contemplated for the production of motion pictures.

"The construction of the various studio, laboratory and factory buildings will, of course, be under the direction of Edwin S. Porter, who built the Edison studios (one of the first practical producing plants in America, which has been constantly utilized for twelve years with only minor changes), the Rex studios and the present Famous Players studios.

"As remarked before, this extensive building plan by no means signifies the curtailment of our studio plans in California or abroad. After the European war we will in all probability complete the plans inaugurated a year ago for the erection of an elaborate studio in London, for the purpose of producing pretentious transcontinental subjects, such as 'The Eternal City.'"

BEATRIZ MICHELENA RETURNS TO WEST COAST

Beatriz Michelena, the operatic star who left the stage somewhat over a year ago to join the producing forces of the California Motion Picture Corporation as leading woman and who has since become one of the most popular favorites of the screen, is just returning from a visit of several weeks to New York City and other Eastern points to begin work on her next picture at the California studios at San Rafael.

While in New York Miss Michelena attended the first private showing given her last big feature, "Salvation Nell." The projection was arranged for prominent film men of the city and the picture declared by them one of the most promising now awaiting release.

MARGARET JOSLIN TRAINS COMEDIANS FOR ESSANAY PARTS

Margaret Joslin, the famous Sophie Clutts of Essanay comedies, has been assisting G. M. Anderson in training comedians for their parts in the new Broncho Billy films which contain a new style of humor, which acts as a foil to the dramatic parts.

Miss Joslin has shown remarkable ability to handle players and proves useful in capacities other than characterizing the famous Sophie Clutts.

ROCK ON APEX OF HILL WILL BE CONVERTED INTO A NATURAL FILM VAULT

Five Experts, World, to Aid Theatres' Publicity

Advance Agents Well Known in "Legitimate" Will Be Stationed at Distribution Zones with Sole Object of Rendering Help to Managers Without Talking "Selling"

THE Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, now drawing close to the date of its first release, September 20, at which time "Trilby," the work of Maurice Tourneur, and featuring Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye, will be sent out as a regular release, announces another innovation, looking forward to the direct aid of exhibitors, as intimated in the announcement of that concern in last week's trade papers.

The plan is a simple but effective one and demonstrates to what extent this new and determined organization is going to make good its pre-release promises.

There are five division points of the World Film distribution zones. Each of these divisions are under the direct and personal influence of a proven expert. This expert has by reason of long and ardent attention to detail, reached his position from some more obscure position with the World Film. At each of these division points, beginning within the next few weeks, there will be stationed an advertising and exploitation expert. These experts will have but one object, namely, to aid the exhibitor who feels that outside aid will help his business.

These advertising men will be instructed that in no manner should they talk "selling." Their sole object will be to aid and assist the exhibitor to reach his public.

The men to be engaged for this experiment are well known "legitimate" advance agents, who for the past ten years have been traveling ahead of high class legitimate attractions, blazing the trail of their shows by original methods and by hard, efficient work.

These advance agents will be under the control of division managers and when the division manager happens across an exhibitor whose attention to exploitation, or lack of knowledge along advertising lines, prevents him from getting what he should out of the attractions showing in his house, if that exhibitor is playing Equitable or World Film attractions or contemplates playing them, the division manager immediately installs one of the advertising geniuses at the house, for a short period, at no cost to the exhibitor and the work of exploitation and lobby display is handled by the agent, under the eye of the manager who, when he is given the proper start, can be relied upon to continue the good work that is started.

The men selected by Equitable are well known in their line and men who have enjoyed prosperous, successful careers with such prominent and exacting managers as Belasco, Henry B. Harris, John Cort, the Shuberts and Klaw and Erlanger. The men will receive salaries equivalent to their usual recompense with high class shows and will be given free hands after appointment by division managers to Equitable or World Film houses.

The agent will spend about a week at each house, or double from one house to another, until the work is well under way and so arranged that the manager can continue it.

Screen Gives Drama a Body Blow, Says Nicholson

Author of "The House of a Thousand Candles," Selig Red Seal Play, Declares That It Has "Taken the Melodrama Clear Off the Stage"

MEREDITH NICHOLSON, author of the novel upon which the six-reel Selig Red Seal Play, "The House of a Thousand Candles," which will be released through V-L-S-E on August 23, recently commented on the great difference between screen subjects and those of the stage and printed page.

Said Mr. Nicholson:

"Things that we see in the motion picture drama and which are plausible in every way on the screen would seem utterly out of place on the stage or written in fiction form," he said. "This may be one of the reasons motion pictures has given the speaking drama a body blow and has taken the melodrama clear off the stage. The screen has, without a doubt, been established for all time, and all those within the industry must now bend their efforts toward improving the quality of the productions and the mechanical devices used in presenting them.

"The motion picture is a part of the great American democracy; it places the theatre within reach of anyone, for even the poorest of families can afford a nickel for each member of their home circles at times to enjoy subjects at one of the neighborhood houses. Such a boon was unheard of until the advent of the picture.

"That was the great trouble with the speaking dramas—it was presented in theatres whose prices were beyond the reach of the poor. Motion pictures can be made a pulpit in which social and political ideas may be placed before the people as in no other way.

"Their moderate admission price is their great democratic feature.

"Doubtless there are many plays which will not be as appealing in motion pictures as on the speaking stage, because of the absence of the human voice, but there is no fact quite so visible at the present time as that the stage has suffered greatly from the popularity of motion pictures. It seems almost too bad, too, for only within the last fifteen years has the American playwright had his chance.

"Up to that time the producers refused to consider the work of any American playwright on general principles.

"They thought if a play was written by an American it was not worth producing.

"It was only after they had been proven wrong that the producers changed their point of view. Then motion pictures entered and the playwright is now forced to work under a handicap, unless he turns his hand to the new art, as many of them are doing."

IVY TROUTMAN, BROADWAY STAR, IN GAUMONT RELEASE

Ivy Troutman, a famous Broadway star, will make her debut in motion pictures on the Mutual program in the second Rialto Star feature release of the Gaumont Company, entitled "The House With Nobody in It." This will be released September 22.

This is one of the early smashes of the Mutual's new $8,000,000 program.

Miss Troutman made her first appearance on the professional stage ten years ago. The first four years were spent principally with companies touring through the West.

IVY TROUTMAN

The last six yearss she has never played outside of New York City, which shows that she has been connected only with successful plays which have had long New York runs.

Among the successful plays in which Miss Troutman has appeared may be mentioned "The College Widow" and William H. Crane's production "Father and the Boys." In 1911, she appeared in "Baby Mine," and in 1912 with Mme. Simone in "The Return from Jerusalem." In 1913, Miss Troutman had the lead in "A Pair of Sixes," and last year she played opposite Lou Tellegen in "Taking Chances," at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre.

CURWOOD WILL WRITE EXCLUSIVELY FOR VITAGRAPH

The Vitagraph Company has secured the services of the well-known author, James Oliver Curwood, who will write exclusively for this company. Mr. Curwood has already written a number of picture stories for the Vitagraph that have been exceptional features, besides some hundred that have made particularly interesting one-part screen dramas.

A few of Mr. Curwood's best known pictures include, "The Young Man Who Figured," "A Study in Tramps," "The Battle of Frenchman's Run," "The Awakening," "The Strength of Men" and "In the Days of Famine."

Film Attendance Touches High-Water Mark in London

Increase in Wages from Manufacture of Munitions Gives Public Command of More Money for Amusements, Says Carl Anderson, Returned from a Trip Abroad in Interest of the Paramount Pictures Corporations—Lithographs Valueless on East Coast, Where Towns Are in Total Darkness

FULLY confident that if a torpedo did not hit the good ship "Philadelphia," she would hit a mine, Carl Anderson, who went abroad some six weeks ago in the interests of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and the Famous Players Film Company, and about whom it was reported on the eve of his departure that he had allied himself with the Paramount Pictures Corporation, set sail from a port "Somewhere in England" not so very long ago, and landed safely, much to his surprise, in New York on Sunday evening, August 22.

To be exact it was on July 10 that he left New York on the "St. Louis." During his absence he visited every cinematographically strategic point on the east coast of England, the Midlands and Bonnie Scotland, being, according to unquestionable authority, the first American film man to penetrate so far into the interior. He went for the purpose of ascertaining the influence of the war on the industry. He even received an invitation from M. Adrianoff, head of the biggest exchange in Russia, who, though a large landowner and banker, finds time to handle the Famous Players and Lasky productions in the land of the Steppes. Since M. Adrianoff is situated at that particular spot on the Black Sea where a continuous battle has been raging for lo! these many moons, Mr. Anderson regretted that urgent business demanded his presence in London.

"In fact," he said, "I declined—with thanks!" That the biggest and best motion pictures in Great Britain should not be in England is an amazing thing.

"Yet," he said, "I assure you that such is the case. The most elaborate and beautiful houses are in Scotland.

"Here," he continued, "the average admission price is twenty-five cents. The first ten rows downstairs are the cheapest. The next ten are slightly more expensive, and so on, and the seats in the balcony are the most expensive of all.

Tea Served in Theatres

"At each side of the theatre there is what amounts to a raised platform on which are little tables lighted with red lamps, where tea is served, and the spectators may sit at the tables and watch the performance.

"I noticed also that in the largest houses in England and Scotland, where there are no tea tables, there is a large tea-room run in connection with the theatre. The tea is not given away, as in Mr. Ames' Booth theatre here, but like everything else abroad, is sold. Things may look cheap at first glance, but later you find that incidentals mount up.

"In London and in all the East coast towns where munitions are being manufactured, there is absolute darkness at night. Lithographs are therefore valueless. People go about the streets with little pocket flashlights, with which they recognize their friends and guide their footsteps. Despite all this, the motion picture business in London is now in the best condition in its history. The reason for this is that at the beginning of the war the labor unions took advantage of the situation to force higher wages. They are now receiving more money than they ever have before and the consequence is that they have more to spend. In most instances the American manufacturer has been content to appoint a London agent, an Englishman or an Anglicized American, who sits down at a desk and waits for business to come to him.

"The American film interests are realizing but a slight percentage of the profit in England, Africa and the Far East. London is the natural center for this business on account of shipping conditions, and nothing will shift the base to New York.

"The European manufacturers are taking full advantage of this condition and are reaping their just rewards. The pictures produced by them are shown in England for six months and then shipped to China, Africa and other foreign countries. In Hong Kong these prints—old and rainy—are shown for two dollars. This has been the case for a year."

Mr. Anderson, during his stay in London, was known as a "disciple of better pictures and fresh air."

He is authority for the statement that many of the theatres in England are not at all well ventilated.

To give the English exhibitors an idea as to how far their American brothers have gone in this end of the business, he has arranged to bring a large party of them to this country in January so that they may study the situation at first-hand and take back with them ideas which will raise the standard of motion picture presentation in England to the high plane it has attained in this country.

Censorship Wave May Swamp New Orleans

All the Restless Reformers in the City, Looking for Something to Uplift According to Their Exalted Notions, Are Apt to Act Unopposed Against Pictures

New Orleans, August 25.

WITH rumors of approaching censorship plainly apparent, it now appears that the exhibitors in New Orleans territory are not organized nor prepared to fight. Recent inquiry elicited the fact that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Louisiana, while not totally disbanded, had fallen into innocuous desuetude.

It seems that at the last two meetings of that body, held several months ago, only a few enthusiastic regulars showed up, and meetings have now been discontinued altogether. Of an initial membership of thirty, there remains now but a scant half dozen who take any interest at all in the organization.

Delving into motion picture history in Louisiana, it was learned that two years ago Andrew Gugel and a few other exhibitors organized the Louisiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which, it is understood, applied for membership in the national body. This league, of which Mr. Gugel was president, also fell into a state of apathy, and last March a few enthusiastic exhibitors launched in the Grunewald Hotel the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Louisiana, only the first word being transposed, it is noted.

Subsequently, Mr. Gugel, of the original association, was invited to a meeting of the newer organization, and the proposition to merge the two bodies was proposed. Mr. Gugel alos declared that the new organization become a branch of the national league. At this time a membership campaign was launched, and it is noted in this connection that two of the largest exhibitors in New Orleans, two Canal street operators who practically control the moving picture situation here, were conspicuous by their absence. This lack of co-operation from those from whom it was most needed, it is claimed, did much to cause the present deplorable situation in Louisiana.

These officers were elected in March: M. L. Costley, Jr., president; Jac. Miller, vice-president; B. F. Brennan, treasurer, and George Grusch, secretary. Mr. Costley is now an exhibitor. He sold his houses in the past month or so, but remains president of the organization in status quo until something is done in the matter of reorganization.

The exhibitors of Louisiana might do well to bear in mind that not always a they going to enjoy the golden liberties they at present revel in. Only recently a board of censorship was appointed, by Mayor Martin Behrman to witness the film "Twilight Sleep."

This picture was subsequently passed by them.

The Constitutional Convention comes on in October, and while it is a little too early to forecast any of its probable doings, it is openly hinted that motion pictures will be mentioned by this body of lawmakers in some way or another.

The feminine sex, the suffragette party, who are legion in Louisiana, are going to have their say in all things, and its likely to include motion pictures. But, however, deplorable or bright the situation may seem, it is highly necessary that exhibitors in the New Orleans territory be prepared to fight adverse legislation, else they forfeit rights which have been theirs since the introduction of moving pictures.

INGENIOUS OMAHA FINDS NEW PLAY TO HARRY EXHIBITORS

In a recent war waged against signs in Omaha, the motion picture houses have not escaped. A City Planning Commission recently recommended to the city commissioners an ordinance regulating the size, location and appearance of signs.

That most of the motion picture theatre posters come under the forbidden class and will have to be kept down is the contention of several commission members. The situation has not become acute as yet, although several exhibitors have been compelled to take down more objectionable signs and posters.

Undersea City, Ten Acres, for Fox Subject

Unique Municipality Is In Course of Construction in Jamaica for Picture Featuring Annette Kellermann Amid Splendors of Tropical Scenery and Gorgeously Costumed "Extras"

WHEN the United Fruit Company's steamer "Carillo" sailed for Kingston, Jamaica, Wednesday, it carried the van guard of one of the greatest motion picture enterprises ever attempted since the films came into commercial life. On the "Carillo" was the first installment of the William Fox players who are to make the new Annette Kellermann spectacular feature picture that is to cost more than three quarters of a million dollars.

In this party was Miss Kellermann and William E. Shay and the supporting members of the company, together with William Brenon, who is to be director-in-chief of the expedition. Also all the members of the scenic department, the property men, and almost a hold full of cameras, supplies and the like. Next Wednesday another expedition under direction of Edward Morrissey, who will direct part of the picture, will leave to join the first outfit.

This expedition is unique in a score of ways. Owing to war conditions it is necessary to carry on the trip $100,000 worth of photographic supplies. Fifteen new cameras, the latest models with every known improvement, were included in the shipment. Because of difficulty in securing money on the island, two huge oaken, iron-bound chests filled with gold were also taken along. Each of these chests contained $100,000 in gold coins.

Costumes for 2,250 supernumeraries, six automobiles and dozens of other paraphernalia went along with the party that sailed Wednesday. Next Wednesday on the "Santa Marta," of the same steamship line, another great crowd will leave to join the others at Kingston. In the second outfit will be more than a hundred professional diving and swimming girls, all of whom have been picked with particular care by Miss Kellermann.

For many weeks, hundreds of workmen have been at work on the island of Jamaica and Yucatan, building the sets and effects for the picture. An underwater city covering nearly ten acres is in course of construction in Jamaica. Following the work here the four companies will board a specially chartered steamer and start for Yucatan and other islands in the West Indies picking up locations as they go along. In this great undertaking, Mr. Fox has adopted one slogan, namely, "Spare no expense, and count no totals in figures, only get the results." The following is a list of the staff:

Principals: Florence Deshon, Walter Miller, Violet Rockwell, Mark Price, Marcelle Hontabat, Harry Burkhardt, Louis Rial, Walter McCullough, Millicent Liston, Hal De Forest, Edward Boring, Henry Armetta, Alice Turner, Katherine Lee, Jane Lee, Catherine Lee.

Kalem Danseuse Star Never Took Dancing Lessons

Like Dogberry's Reading and Writing Her Skill Just Came by Natur' and She Tripped the Light Fantastic Toe with Finished Grace at First Impulse

YANCSI DOLLY of the Dolly Sisters has signed a contract to appear in "The Call of the Dance," one of Kalem's four-act "Broadway Favorites" features.

Yancsi Dolly has long been rated one of the most popular dancers on the stage.

YANCSI DOLLY

Her piquant beauty and grace won for her instant favor when she made her debut at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, some years ago.

One of Miss Dolly's crowning achievements was her performance at Cornelius Vanderbilt's Newport home, several years ago. Together with her sister, the danseuse, who is to appear in the Kalem drama, was one of the features of "The Merry Countess," a musical comedy which has just opened at the Casino theatre. Mr. Vanderbilt attended the first performance and, enchanted by the Dollys' grace, determined to engage them to give a special performance at his forthcoming ball. The whole company was taken to Newport for the event.

Photoplay patrons who see Miss Dolly's work in "The Call of the Dance," will undoubtedly be surprised to learn that she has never taken a single dancing lesson. According to this artiste's own story, the impulse to dance came when her parents took her to see a ballet given at Buda-Pesth, Hungary, where she was born.

This proved to be the guiding factor in her life. Upon little Yancsi's return home that evening she assiduously practised the steps she had seen. Nor were her parents' most strenuous protests able to sway the child from her decision to become a danseuse.

In "The Call of the Dance," Miss Dolly appears as an East Side girl whose love for dancing raises her out of the slums and enables her to take a place among the great artistes of the stage. Before she wins success, however, the girl's beauty almost brings about her destruction. Only the pluck and determination exhibited by a young attache of the district attorney's office, saves her from the clutches of the powerful head of the Vice Ring. "The Call of the Dance" will be released Monday, September 20.

TULLY MARSHALL IN "THE SABLE LORCHA"
(Griffith Fine Art)

Next 12 Months Will Usher in Film Changes

Walter W. Irwin, General Manager of V-L-S-E, Predicts Different Methods of Manufacture, Marketing and Exhibiting Within That Period—Reports from Exhibitors Indicate Unusual Reception of the Company's Releases, Many Dramas, Like "Blindness of Virtue" and "The Rosary" Entering Long Runs

"THE motion picture industry has seen many great and startling changes, especially during the last three years, but I believe the greatest change in the manufacturing, marketing and exhibiting methods will be noted within the next twelve months," said Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, in a statement made to representatives of the trade press.

"This company was incorporated to carry out a definite policy born of years of observation and close study of the public's desires. We started in to carry out definite ideas, and put into practice certain theories which we believed would benefit the industry in its entirety.

"The move was an urgent necessity to the maintenance of the industry on a plane where it could achieve greater perfection.

"It was a sheer impossibility to produce features of real artistic quality and high dramatic value, such as picture play patrons now demand, unless the manufacturers could receive a fair monetary return on the ever-increasing cost of production. This meant the calling upon exhibitors to pay higher rental prices. But in order to enable the exhibitor to pay this increase, it was absolutely necessary to show the theatre managements how they could increase their box office receipts.

"With this object in view, namely, the increase of the exhibitor's profits, the V-L-S-E as a selling organization was formed.

Importance of Advertising

"The problem of increasing the exhibitor's proceeds has as its principal solution advertising—the most potent form of advertising—word-of-mouth publicity. Exhibitors have long overlooked this great force. The observations of our four companies showed that even in the case of small length productions, exhibitors had wasted a great opportunity in not taking advantage of the recommendations of their satisfied patrons.

"So, in giving to the trade its biggest dramatic offering, the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies instituted the policy of advocating long runs and the heralding in advance of the exhibition of the features. The object of the advance advertising in the newspapers and on the billboards is to attract the greatest number of people to the first showing.

"The people that make up the first audiences become at once units in the great advertising force. The pleasure satisfaction they receive in viewing features converts them practically patronage solicitors for the theatre. description they give, and the they accord the production arouses friends a desire to see the pic-

"These people in turn influence others.

"The exhibitor who books strong features for long runs, takes full advantage of the favorable impression the feature makes, whereas the exhibitor who books a picture for only one or two days loses all or a great percentage of that great advertising force—word-of-mouth publicity.

"The success we have met with in introducing these ideas to the exhibitors is most gratifying."

Long Runs and Re-bookings

Evidence of the value in long runs and re-bookings continues to show the soundness of the Big Four theory that a strong feature gains strength with every showing.

In giving out this statement, Mr. Irwin had before him reports just received from several branch managers that illustrated his declarations. From these reports Mr. Irwin cited the case of the Empire theatre in San Antonio, Texas.

This theatre is probably the finest and most representative motion picture theatre in the middle Southwest. W. J. Lytle, proprietor of the Empire and several other fine theatres in San Antonio, has just closed a contract with the V-L-S-E for first, second and third runs of the Big Four productions.

Mr. Lytle states that he will play "The Rosary" and "The White Sister" in the Empire theatre. He will then move them to one of his other houses and will then return them to the Empire theatre and still later bring them back to other theatres in his chain.

In a letter to the V-L-S-E, Mr. Lytle stated that he intends using all of their subjects first and second run in his best houses, and will use all of the subjects that have already been shown in San Antonio, regardless of where they have been exhibited.

Branch Manager H. D. Naugle reported that after noting the success and continued increase of patronage during the three-day run of "The Island of Regeneration" at the Cabrillo theatre, San Diego, the management of the Spreckels Opera House, the largest theatre in that city, immediately booked the feature for a run of seven days, making a total of ten consecutive days. This established a record for long feature runs in the city of San Diego. It is the first time that any feature has been for ten days in that city.

"Virtue" Receives Its Reward

"The Blindness of Virtue" is now in its fifth consecutive week in the Loop District of Chicago, playing in three theatres, each separated from the other by two square blocks, and indications point to this production appearing in the same district for several weeks longer.

In the Far West, "The Eagle's Nest" has been brought back to one theatre five different times, and is re-booked in every theatre where it has been shown.

In Kansas City at the Big Ben theatre, "The Rosary" accumulated much popularity by word-of-mouth advertising during a full week's engagement that the management has booked it for three days.

These few instances were mentioned by Mr. Irwin because they are typical cases. "With slight changes," says Mr. Irwin, "they apply to practically every feature that has so far been released on the Big Four program.

"We are keeping an accurate record of the amount of advertising V-L-S-E exhibitors are doing, and our records show that wherein the average exhibitor was purchasing about 1 per cent. of advertising, he is now spending in advertising an average of 20 per cent. of the amount he invests in films, while the increase in attendance is between fifty per cent. and sixty per cent."

Seven Applicants for Chicago Reel Fellows

Board of Governors Act Favorably on Applications—Rathacker, McGee, Stevenson and Walthall Talk to Guests—Movie Inn Will Remain Club's Dining Headquarters

Chicago, August 25.

THE August monthly dinner of the Reel Fellows Club was held at the Movie Inn on Wednesday, August 18. For the time being it was decided to make the Movie Inn the headquarters of the club.

A talk by Henry B. Walthall of the Essanay Company was to have been the feature of the evening's program, but at the last moment Mr. Walthall was unable to be present, so the meeting was principally a business one.

George V. Stevenson, publicity manager of the Trans-Atlantic Film Company, the European selling agents of the Universal, was present, having just returned to Chicago from London, where he has spent a most successful season. He gave an interesting talk on film condition in Great Britain.

Watterson R. Rothacker, who has just returned from an extended trip to the coast, told of his visit to the exposition and the film centres of the Pacific.

George McGee, who has been managing Universal City, was also present at this meeting, and talked on general conditions on the coast.

Seven new applications for membership were favorably acted upon by the board of governors, and passed by the

Ri[illegible]to Star Features at Regular Mutual Rental

President Freuler Decides Upon Usual Program Prices to Exhibitors for Subjects Made in the Gaumont Studio to Give Fania Marinoff Opportunity in Variety of Parts

THE alluring atmosphere of Broadway bi[illegible]ches from the motion picture screen in Rialto Star Features, the new brand produced by the Gaumont Company for release in the new $8,000,000 program being arranged by President John R. Freuler, of the Mutual Film Corporation.

These new Rialto Star features, in con[illegible]y with President Freuler's promises [illegible] exhibitors, are to be presented to [illegible]l exhibitors on the regular Mutual [illegible]am without additional rental cost. [illegible]best talent available has or will be [illegible] for their presentation and, thirdly, [illegible]hey are of feature quality require[illegible]th big plots dramatically handled [illegible] staged.

[illegible]e list of speaking stage celebraties already corralled by the Gaumont Company for these Rialto Star features is a notable one, headed by Fania Marinoff, who for many seasons has been ardently admired on the legitimate stage. Miss Marinoff, who makes her debut to Mutual audiences in "The Unsuspected Isles," is a Russian by birth, and she is gifted with the rich, versatile temperament of her countrywomen. Her supple imagination lends itself to a limitless variety of parts.

T. More Koupal, another favorite of the speaking stage now a member of the Gaumont Company stock, who plays opposite Miss Marinoff, is of pure American stock. His ancestors fought in the War of Independence, and he is the only Koupal of his direct line thus far who has not served on the battlefield in the cause of his country.

To day he is eminent for his fine work in "The Darling of the Gods," "The Jungle," "The Heart of Maryland," "The Prodigal," "The Ghost Breakers" and is especially remembered for his impersonation of Wilhelm Hoffman in "The Deadlock," in which he supported Edythe [illegible]Mathison.

James Levering, venerable character man, for the last year has been starred by the Gaumont Company. He went to the Flushing, L. I., studios from motion picture experience with Edison, Lubin, Pathe and Solax. Before that he had played the full range of dramatic and musical productions.

Flavia Arcaro, handsome "heavy" of the Rialto dramas, made her initial success in musical productions and opera. she played opposite William Farnum in the feature drama "The Plunderer." She also supported Alice Brady in "The Cup of Chance" and Leonore Ulrich in "Capital Punishment."

John Reinhard, Miss Arcaro's confederate in crime for picture purposes, went to the Gaumont Company from the Thanhouser studios where he made his debut before the camera about a year ago. Eighty multi-reel pictures stand to his credit in the annals of New Rochelle. The Rialto Star feature releases will offer a wide scope to Reinhard's personality.

Former Secretary and General Manager of Company Also Severs Connections with Commercial Motion Picture, Subsidiary of the Producing Corporation

AS a result of the determination of Bernard Loewenthal, majority stockholder of The Life Photo Film Corporation, not to manufacture or release in the future or at least not for a period of several months, Jesse J. Goldburg, the secretary and general manager of that company, disposed of his stock holdings to Mr. Loewenthal and resigned as secretary, director and general manager of that company as well as the Commercial Motion Pictures Company, the subsidiary corporation allied with the Life Photo.

The news came as a distinct surprise to the trade because of the close alliance and friendship which is known to exist between Mr. Loewenthal and Mr. Goldburg, but largely because of the fact that Mr. Goldburg, one of the organizers of the company was in active managerial control of the entire business.

The feature successes of the Life Photo, which included among others "The Banker's Daughter," "The Greyhound," "Captain Swift," "The Ordeal," "Springtime," "The Avalanche," and "The Unbroken Road," were produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Goldburg.

He it was who pressed to a successful conclusion the suit against License Commissioner Bell to restrain him from interfering with the public showing of "The Ordeal," in which action the powers and status of The National Board of Censors were judicially defined. As a result of that action "The Birth of a Nation" successfully litigated with the constituted authorities in Chicago.

The versatility of Mr. Goldburg in the motion picture field is best evidenced by the fact that he chose all the productions released by The Life Photo Film, supervised the writing of scenarios, selected the cast from leads to extras, passed upon the final assembling and cutting of the features, managed solely the advertising and publicity end of the enterprise and acted alone as sales manager of the company's products.

Mr. Goldburg made a complete tour of the country studying trade conditions.

The indefatigable and thorough manner in which Mr. Goldburg performed his labors at times was cause for comment. His working hours were never less than fourteen and he was often seen at his desk until the early hours of the morning.

Mr. Goldburg has not yet definitely determined his plans for the future excepting that he will remain to ally himself with the executive end of production.

Several offers have been made him which he has taken under advisement.

MEAT PACKING PROCESS SHOWN IN ST. LOUIS

Manager F. M. Wotke, of the Arco theatre, 4207 Manchester avenue, St. Louis, ran a film on August 5, depicting the manner in which the Independent Packing Company prepares meat for the market, from the time the animals are slaughtered, (the actual killing is not shown) till they leave the plant for the many markets supplied by the company.

The packing plant is in the neighborhood of the Arco, and many of the plant employes are regular patrons of the theatre. The film was made to be exhibited at the San Francisco Fair, but Mr. Wotke was able to secure it for a first showing at his theatre before it was sent away.

The Arco not only had the whole neighborhood to entertain on the night of the showing, but the officials of the packing plant were there, as was State Inspector of Food Fricke.

ORANGEADE SERVED BY GIRL USHERS ON HOT SUMMER NIGHT

How to keep his theatres crowded on oppressively hot August afternoons and nights has been solved to the satisfaction of Peter Magaro, proprietor of the Regent, 410 Market street, Harrisburg, Pa., and of a theatre in Carlisle, Pa.

In addition to maintaining high-class feature attractions Mr. Magaro has adopted a plan of serving orangeade in attractive shell glasses, which are passed around among the spectators by girl ushers garbed in cool and spotless white.

Sitting within range of an electric fan and sipping orangeade, which costs the spectators nothing extra, by the way—have led patrons to declare the Magaro theatres among the most comfortable spots to be found on a sultry afternoon or evening, and the box office receipts are telling the story of the extraordinary popularity of the innovation.

CARDBOARD CUT-OUTS REPRESENT CHURCH WINDOWS FOR "ROSARY"

What in this photograph appear to be church windows are really the cardboard cut-outs that are part of the lobby display for the Selig V-L-S-E production, "The Rosary."

It will be noted that the cut-outs were hung high in the lobby, banked in front by potted plants, and even the beauty of the display as shown in the photograph, taken during day light, was greatly enhanced at night when the electric lights behind the cut-outs were turned on.

These cut-outs have transparent colored paper, representing a church window, and the lights filtering through this harmonious display of colors, gave an effect as charming as it was appropriate to this Big Four production.

FINDS MEN LIKE NEWS WEEKLIES BETTER THAN WOMEN

Charles Schwartz, manager of the St. Charles and the Broadway, two of the Associated theatres that are situated almost directly across the street from each other on St. Charles, between Broadway and Sixth street, St. Louis, has made some valuable discoveries in regard to the kind of programs his patrons like best.

He has found that one and two reel photoplays are more popular than longer features, with his audience, especially on week days. On Sunday large features of four, five, or six reels are well received. He has discovered that men like the news weeklies and topical films much better than women. The women like plays best.

WAGONS, SIGNS AND A BAND FOR "FOX WEEK"

E. F. Johnson, manager of the Empress theatre at Fremont, Neb., is not only giving away an automobile and doing much more advertising than the ordinary exhibitor, but he started a new thing in his part of the country when he put on a "Fox Week."

For one whole week he ran a Fox feature every day. Special advertising with wagons, signs and a band brought out the crowds the first night, and then, he says, "The job was not to hold them back."

FANS KEEP HOT THEATRE OPEN

The Palace Theatre, 1310 Franklin avenue, is one of the few theatres in St. Louis that has no airdome in connection. Scherrer Brothers, who own the Palace, in order to keep their house open all summer, have had thirty-two electric fans placed at intervals along the side walls of the theatre, which is a long building. The hurricane of cool fresh air that these fans keep in constant motion makes the Palace equal any outdoor theatre for comfort.

Manager Declares He Is Only the Representative of the Public; Is on Watch for Suggestions

WHEN early in July R. B. Wilby was made manager of all three motion picture houses controlled in Montgomery, Ala., by the Strand Amusement Company, a change in the policy of that company went into effect before Mr. Wilby was manager twenty-four hours.

For, contends this efficient exhibitor-manager, he belongs not to the company that owns the silent-drama houses, but to the public itself. To this end Mr. Wilby has opened a suite of offices in the Strand Theatre Building to which the public is invited at any time of day or night. It doesn't make any difference what the suggestion may be, Mr. Wilby's strictly on the job there to jot it down and later to instill it into Strand management if the suggestion in any way tends to increase the attractiveness of its program.

"I'm only your representative," Mr. Wilby has announced to the public.

And that the latter likes the new and progressive plan is indicated by reports from that live Alabama city, one of the best on the South's movie map.

"The organization of the new Strand Amusement Company was not prompted by a spirit of monopoly," Mr. Wilby declares, "but as the result of earnest consideration of the desires of the photoplay going public. I believe that there are two different types of moving picture theatres analogous to the legitimate and vaudeville theatres. By organizing the new company and taking over the three theatres—the Strand, Plaza and Orpheum—Montgomery will be given two houses of each of these types.

"The Strand theatre will be made an exclusively feature house, in which four, five and six reel pictures made by the V-L-S-E, Metro, World, General, Mutual and Universal, will be run.

"At the Plaza and Orpheum theatres the program daily will consist of one, two and three reels, selected from the best known programs. My experience has been that there are a great many people who delight in moving pictures, but who prefer the short reel programs. Many will not sit through the long feature films. Our endeavor will be to provide the very best for both classes of patrons by giving the people just what they want. By buying practically all the standard services, we will be able to put on at all our theatres the best programs obtainable."

KLEINE'S BOSTON OFFICE MOVES TO LARGER QUARTERS

Steadily increasing business with the expectation of still further increases as a result of the Kleine-Edison merger, caused the removal of George Kleine's Boston office from 597 Washington street to a handsome new three-story building at 14 Piedmont street.

The removal will allow the Boston office greater facilities in all departments. An unusually beautiful projecting room, where exhibitors may lounge in comfort, is one of the features of the new quarters, which will commend itself strongly to that class of New England exhibitors who spend much time in stuffy, little projecting rooms reviewing features before booking.

Dual Personality for Edith Storey in a Vitagraph

Paul Scardon Is Promoted to Producing Director, with Charge of "The Island of Surprise" —"Youth" Is Directed by Harry Handworth

DIRECTOR GEORGE D, BAKER, is producing for the Vitagraph Company, "A Queen for an Hour," in which Edith Storey, in the dual personality of a country maid and a rich city belle is seen talking to herself. This scene was accomplished by means of a double exposure that was so successful as to stamp it one of the most unique photographic achievements ever accomplished in a film story. "A Queen for an Hour" enlists the services of such well-known Vitagraph players as Miss Storey, Albert Roccardi, Evart Overton, Jay Dwiggins and Hughie Mack.

Paul Scardon has been promoted from the ranks of the Vitagraph stars to a producing director and given the manuscript of "The Island of Surprise," a picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel of the same name, as his first picture. Mr. Scardon will direct the work of such well-known players as William Courtenay, who will make his initial Vitagraph appearance in this picture; Eleanor Woodruff, Zena Keefe, Charles Kent, Ander Randolf and Julia Swayne Gordon, who will be seen in the principal characters and some five hundred extra people representing a horde of savages.

MLLE. VALKYRIEN

In "Youth," a Vitagraph feature now in course of production under the direction of Harry Handworth, Mlle. Valkyrien, in the character of Ione, as a dancer, is seen to come to life from a still picture that Antonio Moreno is holding in his hand, and perform a classic barefoot dance.

In the scene in question, Mr. Moreno gradually drifts into the unconsciousness of sleep and starts to dream. As the brain fancies become active, the dancer in the picture begins to move in rhythmic motion until she is in the full sway of the dance and continues until the dream passes.

The scene was a trying one for players and director as the fraction of a second in the concerted action of Mlle. Valkyrien or Mr. Moreno would have spoiled the illusion.

Outside of the rehearsals, an absolutely correct registry of the scene on the film was accomplished at the third trial.

"Youth," when completed, will be a Vitagraph Broadway star feature, and will include in its cast, besides Mlle. Valkyrien and Mr. Moreno, Jessie A. Stagg of the Art Students' League, Donald Hall and Frankie Mann.

Triangle Studios Are Bustling with Activity

Stage Is Added with Area of Sixty by One Hundred and Ninety Feet—Alan Dwan Will Make First Subject at Western Plant Before Going East

Los Angeles, Aug. 23.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made here last week regarding the first release of the recently formed Triangle Film Corporation by Henry McMann, manager of publicity and advertising departments of this corporation, in which it was stated the date had been fixed for Labor Day in Chicago and New York where the triple bill will be shown at the theatre in charge of the corporation at from twenty-five cents to two dollars. The program will consist of productions by Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett, and the opening bill will consist of two 4,500 feet subjects and a Keystone of four reels.

From the studio of Mr. Griffith came the announcement that subjects made under the direction of Mr. Griffith would be known as Fine Arts Films. At the present time the players engaged as stars for these include Douglas Fairbanks, who is being featured in "The Man and the Test," staged under the direction of William Christie Cabanne.

This will in all probability be the first release. Others now being produced are "The Lily and the Rose," with Lillian Gish, Rosika Dolly, and Wilfred Lucas directed by Paul Powell. "The Sable Lorcha," with Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson is being made by Lloyd Ingraham. Other releases now being completed are "The Martyrs of the Alamo," "The Mother and the Law," and "Old Heidelberg."

DeWolf Hopper, Helen Ware and Frank Campau are expected to arrive at the Griffith studios in the near future.

It has been decided that Alan Dwan will make one subject at the Western studio before taking up work in the East, where he will be in charge of the Fort Lee studio, and the work of filming this will be taken up in the near future.

"The Sable Lorcha" company made a trip to San Francisco last week for scenes in the Chinese fishing district located along the coast of San Francisco bay. The party included Tully Marshall, Thomas Jefferson, Elmer Clifton, Loretta Blake, George Pearce, Hal Wilson, Mazie Radford, Charles Lee, William De Vaull, Henry Krotani, Photographer Hugh McClung, a crew of stage hands, and twenty natives of China.

Additional improvements are being made at the Griffith studio, including the adding of another stage built on an additional piece of ground just purchased. The floor space will be sixty by one hundred and ninety feet, and will be used exclusively for large sets.

This week, one entire stage one hundred and twenty feet long and sixty feet wide is being utilized for a set of a charity workers' organization, and contains no less than forty offices each with desks, stenographers and similar equipment.

The players of the Griffith and Reliance studio have organized a gymnasium association and caused the erection of a fifty by thirty foot building to be used for a gymnasium. An expert trainer will be employed and special days will be reserved for the women of the studio.

Frank E. Wood, manager of Reliance production department, took his first vacation during the past week, when he in company with Mrs. Wood motored to San Diego for a day. J. C. JESSEN.

PATHE OPENS FIVE OFFICES

The Pathé Exchange, Inc., announces the opening of new offices as follows:

Detroit, Mich., 40 E. Larned street, with L. E. Franconi as manager.

Indianapolis, Ind., 27 Willoughby Building, with Jay G. Lytle as manager.

A new office is being opened in Des Moines, Iowa, Cohen Block Building, with L. A. Sheridan as manager.

The Portland office will be re-established as an independent branch office with Mr. Wessling as manager, and W. W. Kofeldt as cashier.

F. C. Quimby, manager of the Pathé Denver office, is now engaged in establishing an independent branch office in Salt Lake City, and on completion of his work there will take the managership of the Seattle office. He will be succeeded in Denver by Harry L. Knappen, who has been a Pathé solicitor in the San Francisco territory.

The opening of these exchanges is significant of the tremendous increase in the Pathé business.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

PARAMOUNT EXCHANGE MANAGERS WILL MEET IN 3-DAY CONVENTION IN CHICAGO, SEPTEMBER 2

IN the first two private cars ever coupled to the Twentieth Century Limited in the interest of a motion picture company, W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, accompanied by many of his department heads and representatives of all the Eastern exchanges, as well as the producing companies whose output constitutes the Paramount program, will leave New York on September 1 for Chicago, where in a convention to be held at the La Salle Hotel, he will be met by sixty-five human links of the Paramount chain. The meeting will last three days, during which time many matters of importance will be definitely decided.

Howard E. Spaulding of the H. B. Lesan Advertising Agency is now known as advertising advisor to the Paramount Pictures Corporation and to Paramount exhibitors. Naturally the advertising, publicity and sales departments will work hand in hand in an effort to make the Paramount of the next year even a more important factor than is the Paramount of today.

Mr. Hodkinson will be called upon to attend to only matters of the very greatest importance, and the details will be handled by competent assistants.

A concerted sales effort is to be made throughout the country, and Frank D. Sniffen has been appointed general sales manager of the company to oversee this work.

The Chicago convention is but another indication of the spirit of co-operation visible in all the operations of the company. That there is nothing like the personal equation in the film business just as in any other is the firm belief not only of W. W. Hodkinson, but of all his lieutenants, both those who have been with him since the inception of Paramount and those who have come into the organization later.

The heads of the Paramount exchanges will, in all cases, make an effort to be present in Chicago. From the South will come representatives of the Southern Paramount Pictures Company, in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas, of which C. E. Tandy is the head. From Los Angeles, Seattle and San Francisco will come the progressive Motion Picture Company's men. The Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City and Denver, Colo.; the Famous Players Star Feature Film Company of Minneapolis, the Kansas City Feature Film Company, Kansas City, and the Casino Feature Film Company of Detroit will all meet the Eastern contingent at the La Salle.

In New York, W. W. Hodkinson, Raymond Pawley, Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldfish, Mr. Weinberg, B. P. Schulberg, Carl H. Pierce, William L. Sherry, W. F. Seymour, H. E. Spaulding, Frank D. Sniffen, George R. Meeker and Tarleton Winchester will be joined by Hiram Abrams of the Famous Players Film Company of New England, W. E. Smith of the Famous Players Exchange, Philadelphia; George Mann of the Famous Players Exchange, Washington, and others. John C. Flinn, of Lasky, will be one of the party.

LEWIS, PARAMOUNT MANAGER IN LOS ANGELES, MARRIED

Announcements of the wedding of Myron H. Lewis, manager of the Los Angeles Paramount exchange, and Enid Nora Gleeson, of Salt Lake City, have been received by Los Angeles friends. The wedding occurred at Salt Lake City, August 8, and the couple will be at home in Los Angeles after September 1.

Mr. Lewis is the first member of the film exchange board of trade to take this vow since the organization, and there are indications that the exchange will have a regular high-jinks upon the return of Mr. Lewis and his bride.

PARKS IS APPOINTED SUPERVISOR GENERAL OF EXCHANGES FOR ASSOCIATED FILM SALES

LESTER PARKS, who has been appointed supervisor general of exchanges by the Associated Film Sales Corporation, has had a long and varied career in the motion picture field.

Mr. Parks became interested in moving pictures before the coming of the regular motion picture theatre, and for several years operated a chain of motion picture circuits of one-night stands throughout the Rocky Mountain territory. He opened the first motion picture theatre in Salt Lake City, Utah, and later became associated with Max Florence in his exchange interests and numerous theatrical enterprises.

When the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was formed he negotiated for the releases, remaining in the Film Supply Company, and after organizing a local corporation to handle the territory, tributory to Salt Lake City and Denver, coming to New York to close the deal. After learning that the plans of the Mutual Film Corporation, which had just been formed, contemplated eventually handling all of the Film Supply Company's releases throughout the United States, he abandoned his exchange plans and accepted a commission from J. R. Freuler, then general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, to open the Mutual offices in Denver, Colo., Salt Lake City, Utah, and Butte, Mont.

At the organization of the Columbine Films Company, in Denver, he was made president and general manager of this company and established offices in New York City. After releasing a number of productions he secured a regular release for his company on the Warner program, and accepted a position as special western representative for Warner's Features, Inc. In this capacity he installed all office managers and inaugurated the new policy of the company in every exchange, from Kansas City and Dallas on to the Pacific Coast.

For the past year and a half, Mr. Parks has been engaged in Atlanta, Ga.; Birmingham, Ala., and Chattanooga, Tenn., in working out plans for the establishment of a large producing organization, with studios in each of these three cities.

Mr. Parks' headquarters will be in the executive offices of the Associated Film Sales Corporation, 110 West Fortieth street, New York.

UNITED PHOTOPLAYS TO OPEN OFFICE IN NEW YORK

The United Photoplays Company of Chicago is about to open an office in New York to handle the bookings of its features, which, among others, include "Sarah Bernhardt at Home." Fred Linick, the general sales manager of the company, located in Chicago, is in charge of the booking of their films for the Western territory.

Mr. Linick has been associated with the motion picture industry from its start, and at different times has been connected with every phase of the business. He is the former manager of the Lyceum and Yale theatres of Chicago and afterwards was connected with the Central Film Company. Since last May he has most efficiently directed the sales for the Photoplay Releasing Company.

COBE TO HANDLE NATIONAL SUBJECTS ON STATE RIGHTS

Andrew Cobe, late head of the Alliance Film Corporation, who has been in Los Angeles for the past three weeks, has arranged with the National Film Corporation to handle its feature subjects on the state rights basis, and will take up this work within the next few days.

Mr. Cobe's wide experience practically assures success in his new venture.

PHILADELPHIA EXCHANGES FIND BUSINESS ACTIVE; FEATURE DEMANDS LARGE

ARTHUR LUCAS, who was general district manager for Mutual, has become general district superintendent of the Triangle in Philadelphia, with all branch offices under his supervision. Mr. Lucas in speaking of his resignation from the Mutual said:

"I have been associated with H. E. Aitken ever since the inception of the Mutual Corporation.

"When he resigned to become president of the Triangle, I naturally cast my lot with him in the new concern, for I think his name associated with any venture spells success."

J. M. Butner, manager of the Philadelphia offices of the Mutual, has become manager of the Triangle offices in that city. The temporary offices of the new firm are located at 1202 Race street. About October first, however, coincident with the first Triangle releases, the firm will move to the new building, being erected for its especial use, by Benjamin Alexander at 1227-29 Vine street.

The Triangle will conduct all its business on the first floor, which will be fitted up with all the latest devices known to filmdom. Several thousand feet of floor space will give ample room for all activities.

The Mutual Film Corporation, one of the few exchanges still out of the recognized film district, expects shortly to change its present quarters at 902 Filbert street, to new offices in the neighborhood of Twelfth and Vine.

G. S. Powell, formerly manager of the Continental Film Company, has severed his connection with that firm to take the management of the Mutual, left vacanat by Mr. Butner's resignation.

J. W. Pope, Jr., who was assistant manager to J. M. Butner of the Mutual, has become head of the Continental at 902 Filbert street.

The offices of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., have been moved from 1126 to 1325 Vine street. The new quarters are much larger than the old, and far better adapted to the growing business of this exchange. Oscar Libros, the local manager, reports great success with the big features in which Tom Terriss is the star.

J. J. McCarthy and J. S. McSween, forming the firm of McCarthy and McSween, have instituted a shipping department at 1325 Vine street, in addition to their booking office at the Chestnut street theatre. This firm handles only big features, such as "The Christian," "The Spoilers" and "The Avenging Conscience."

The Stanley Booking Company has just completed a contract by which it will control all first runs of the Kleine-Edison Corporation's photoplay masterpieces in the Philadelphia district. As about forty houses book through the Stanley Booking Company, this new deal pleases the management.

Starting September first, a five part Kleine feature will be released every other Wednesday, alternating with the Edison features.

H. A. Bugie has become manager of the George Kleine offices at 1309 Vine street, succeeding J. J. Roxford in the position.

J. H. Hennessey has resigned as manager of the General Film Company, 1308 Vine street.

Jerome Sobel, of the V-L-S-E Company paid a flying visit last week to George Beihoff of the World Film.

Milton C. Work, of the World Film, is spending a week with Lewis J. Selznick in New York.

It is said that among the Philadelphia exchanges are several diamond experts. V. R. Carrick, William Sachsenmaier, H. Bennethum and L. J. Swaab are those named as having this second string to their bow.

HOUSE AND MARIE KIRNER MARRIED

The marriage of George C. House, assistant manager of the Interstate Film Company, of Philadelphia, and Marie Kirner, stenographer for the same firm, will take place on Tuesday next, at St. Peters Church, Fifth and Girard avenue.

This union reveals a little romance. Miss Kirner was on the vaudeville stage. Tiring of the footlights and knowing stenography, she applied for a vacancy in the Interstate and won it on a wager. She kept the position a year and now her bet has also won her a husband.

PATHE OFFICE CLOSES CONTRACT

The Pathé Cincinnati office, through Manager C. E. Holah, has just closed a contract with the Hurtig and Seaman enterprises whereby the Colonial and Lyric theatres of Dayton, Ohio, get the entire output of Gold Rooster Plays and the "Neal of the Navy."

The approximate amount of the contract is $10,000.

WORLD FILM MANAGERS MEET IN HOME OFFICE AND DISCUSS SALES PLANS

FOR three days during the past week the division managers of the World Film Corporation were in executive session, in New York City, for the purpose of having placed before them a general sales campaign for the new Equitable program, which World Film will put out beginning September 20, and a general course of instructions on the sales development work and the territorial handling for that company.

The five division managers in attendance were: George J. Schaefer, Eastern division manager, New York; Denham Palmer east central division manager, Cleveland; W. W. Drum, west central division manager, Chicago; W. E. Knotts, western division manager, San Francisco, and Joseph E. Klein, southern division manager with office at New Orleans.

In order to hasten the work, that the division manager might get back in the field to launch the fall campaign as soon as possible, night and day sessions were held in the banquet room in the Hotel Astor, set aside for that purpose.

The first three days and most of the first three nights were spent entirely with the assistant general manager, Harry C. Drum, in reviewing and outlining in detail the general sales development methods and business systems which he has inaugurated for the World Film Corporation.

After these were discussed at great length, a general consideration of the film business and work of the World Film Corporation was gone over and advance methods for the future handling of the film business were outlined and recorded.

One of the most advanced and thorough methods of sales development and sales handling ever established in any commercial line was thoroughly outlined by the assistant general manager, and it is being compiled and put in book form for distribution throughout the World Film Corporation branches and the World Film division managers.

Tuesday night, Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, and vice-president and advisory director of the Equitable Film Corporation, held a reception to the division managers, at which time, he with A. Spiegel, president of the Equitable Film Corporation, and Milton Work, chairman of the executive board of the World Film Corporation, reviewed the work that had been accomplished and went over in detail the plans outlined, and adopted, and all of them were enthusiastic in pronouncing them by far the best that they had ever seen.

They also expressed their assurance that these methods and the men handling them, would unquestionably give to the World Film Corporation, the maximum possibilities to be obtained in any particular territory.

Wednesday morning was consumed in a general outline of the Equitable sales campaign as outlined by the assistant general manager, the party being joined by Felix Feist, secretary and general manager of the Equitable Film Corporation.

A campaign for the efficient development of the entire United States on advanced commercial lines was outlined and adopted, and the division managers were thoroughly acquainted with the Equitable proposition, its creation, purposes and its product. They were unusually enthusiastic in their praise of the Equitable proposition.

Wednesday afternoon was entirely devoted to the consideration of the departmental details of the home office and a reviewal of the auditing, purchasing, advertising and film departments, as they relate to the branches.

The division managers departed for their respective territories Wednesday night, and are now busy inaugurating in their branches the various methods and systems which were outlined at this meeting, as well as pushing to rapid completion the sales campaign for the Equitable Corporation.

New York Filmdom Gaily Turns Out for Carnival

Brighton Beach Race Track Becomes Scene of Holiday Activity for Throngs in the Industry and a Host of Admiring Fans, on the Spot to See Their Favorite Players in the Flesh—Field Day Events with Playerfolk Entrants Lend Keen Interest to Spectators

THE day of Saturday, August 21, was to many inside and outside of the film business a gala occasion. For on this day the New York local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America celebrated carnival and field day at the Brighton Beach Race Track, N. Y.

Festivities got under way somewhere around the hour of twelve, noon, and ceased not for some select few until the clock had ticked away several hours of the Sabbath. A huge crowd swarmed over all corners of the race track from one o'clock until five, composed of motion picture fans, and watched a crowd of their film favorites almost as large, disport themselves on the track in various field, athletic and eccentric events.

Festivities commenced with a mighty parade, which started from the track and took its course down Surf avenue, through Coney Island until it reached Ravenhall's. All Coney Island momentarily halted in its mad chase of break-neck pleasure to pack the curbs of Surf avenue and cheer their favorites of the films.

There was President Rowland, Francis X. Bushman, Mary Miles Minter, Emily Stevens, and other Metroites in Treasurer Joe Engel's handsome Fiat that was so decorated with artificial roses and morning glories that one could have almost taken it for a flivver.

There was "Spike" Robinson, the Biograph wild and wooly Indian, mounted on horseback leading fourteen Biograph automobiles which contained such celebrities as Mr. and Mrs. Vale, Vera Sisson, Franklin Ritchie, Isabel Rhea, Miss V. Smith, Allan Hale, Gretchen Hartman, Jose Ruben, Claire McDowell and others. And Ned Finley also decorated the back of a noble steed, dressed as O'Garry of the Royal Mounted, preceding a large number of Vitagraph cars and a huge float crowded with Vitagraph beauties.

Attractive Floats and Pretty Girls

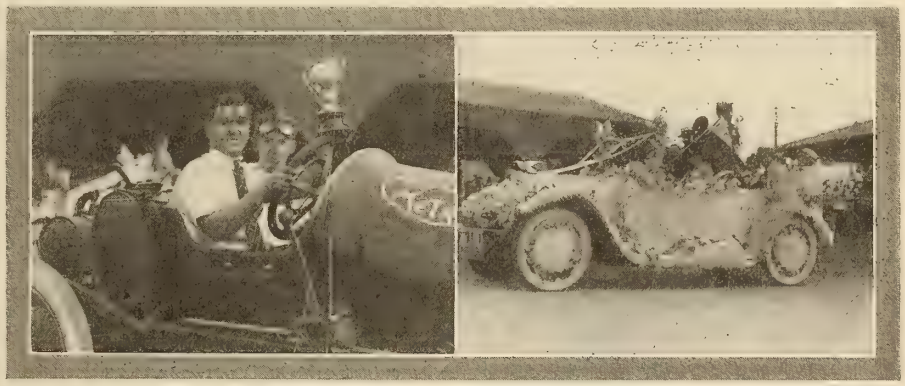
World Film was ably represented by such celebrities as Lewis J. Selznick, Vivian Martin and Arthur Ashley. Pathé scored an instant success with its monster float showing a battleship surrounded by a hundred pretty girls in sailor costume, all of which represented "Neal of the Navy." Kleine-Edison forces were out en masse, headed by Irene Fenwick. And there was so much else in that parade, including film executives and press agents, that to indite all the names would give one writer's cramp

And at the race track, besides the numerous field events which excited everybody all the time, there were numbers of goddesses floating blithely about, and Anita Stewart, the original and only, was on hand shaking hands with all who could get in touch with her. Charley Chaplin could scarce have been able to find himself in that crowd, so great was the number of his imitators. Billie Reeves cut drunken capers and fought drunken boxing bouts with other notorious drunks, while several Flivvers, greatly disguised, indulged in a comedy automobile race.

The shore dinner provided by the exhibitors was excellent, and afterwards dancing was the main order of the evening. The prize dances for cups were hotly contested. Anita Stewart, Dorothy Kelly, Kate Price and others bore away cups, while ably upholding the sales end of the business was Jerome H. Sobel of the V-L-S-E, who danced often, and every time he danced his partner won a cup.

Others present were: William Fox, Marcus Loew, Pop Rock, Joseph Engle, Pearl White, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Costello, Viola Dana, William Farnum, Oscar Eagle, Hughie Mack, Kate Price, William Shea, Wally Van, Gus Mohme, H. H. Brunner, Zoe Beck, Harry Reichenbach, Jake Wilk, Charles Gugerich, John Grey, Paul Panzer, Frank Powell, Mary Charleson, King Baggot, Joe Brandt, Carl Laemmle, Ben Wilson, Bill Haddock, and scores of others no less prominent.

And perhaps that's all except for the fact that iron-voiced Joe Humphreys announced things in sonorous tones from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m. inclusive.



Victories for Everybody

At the moment of capering to press, the committee of judges has been unable to single out the winners of the various field and aquatic events. Perhaps at some future date, probably quite remote from the present writing, an announcement will be forthcoming from the League as to who the actual winners were, but just now, amidst the heap of entries, winners, seconds and thirds, it seems impossible to single out those that were triumphant. Here are the number of victories that some companies claim: Vitagraph, 14; Thanhouser, 6; Metro, 5. Others range from one to a dozen.

Thomas Howard, financial secretary and chairman of the publicity committee, was active in the preliminary arrangements for the carnival. Through him the manufacturers became enthusiastic over the possibilities in the parade for advertising, and induced many producing companies to declare a holiday at the studios for the benefit of players and employes who wished to attend the carnival.

Mr. Howard exercised general supervision over the whole affair—preparing the souvenir program and even soliciting advertising for its pages. He also arranged the details of the games and entries for the field day events.

An elaborate souvenir program of seventy-six pages announced the order of exercises and the field events of the day. The program was well patronized in its advertising pages by producers and exchanges, and was an excellent example of the enterprise of the Exhibitors' League. In addition to the order of the day, the pages were embellished with portraits of the league's officers and committee heads, and others prominent in the motion picture industry.

OVEY NOT TO LEAVE HORSLEY

Spiking the rumor that changes are about to be made in the playing force of his company producing Cub Comedies, David Horsley, who is sponsor for this new brand of one reelers on the Mutual program, sends out an emphatic denial of the story declaring that changes have not even been considered.

In speaking of the rumor which had gained some circulation Mr. Horsley said:

"There is absolutely no foundation in the rumor that I have contemplated or proposed any changes in my company now playing in the Cub Comedies. This refers especially to Mr. George Ovey, whose name has been specifically mentioned.

"I have signed Mr. Ovey to a contract which has a long term to run, and I am sure he is satisfied. As far as I am concerned I want Mr. Ovey to stay with me.

Navy League Approves "Guarding Old Glory"

Rudolph and Nielsen Gratified with Interest Taken in the Subject by Exhibitors and State Rights Buyers—"Little Sunset" Territory Disposed of

W. H. RUDOLPH, Eastern representative for F. O. Nielsen, of Chicago, and general manager of the Eiko Film Company, of New York, reports success with "Guarding Old Glory," the Peace and Preparedness Picture by that name, on which a big advertising campaign is being launched.

Both Mr. Nielsen and Mr. Rudolph were dumfounded at the interest immediately taken in the picture by exhibitors and state rights buyers alike. As soon as the first four-page advertisement appeared announcing that "Guarding Old Glory" was released on the state rights plan a flood of mail arrived at both the Chicago and New Work offices.

On receipt of urgent wires from Mr. McNally, Mr. Nielsen's Western manager, he huried home to take care of that end, while Mr. Rudolph remains to conduct the selling and advertising campaign from New York.

"Guarding Old Glory" not only has the endorsements of the various government chiefs, but has the solid backing of the patriotic leagues throughout the country. The following letters from Col. Robt. M. Thompson, executive chairman of the Navy League shows the strength and value of the picture as a drawing card for exhibitors.

"New York, Aug. 23.

"Mr. F. O. Nielsen,
"Chicago, Ill.

"Dear Sir:

"I have seen your moving picture, 'Guarding Old Glory.' Every American should see this picture. It is interesting, instructive, and of immense value to the country. The Navy League will co-operate with you in every way to receive wide publication for the picture.

"Yours very truly,
"(Signed) Robert M. Thompson,
"Executive Chairman."

"Guarding Old Glory" is a timely picture that comes at the psychological moment when Peace and Preparedness is the topic of the day, and in the opinion of those who know will do much to awaken the people to the fact that our country is unprepared for war.

Mr. Rudolph also reports that he has disposed of the following territory for "Little Sunset":

New York State, All Theatres Film and Accessory Company; Greater New York, Greene Photo Play Company, Inc.; New England, Boston Photo Play Company; Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio and Indiana, F. O. Nielsen, of Chicago, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas City Feature Film Company; Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Notable Feature Film Company; Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Zenith Feature Film Company; East Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, and District of Columbia, Electric Theatre Film and Supply Company; Southern States to Southern Film Company; western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, the Noted Players Feature Company.

Mr. Rudolph has also been very successful with the German war pictures, which are controlled in this country by the Eiko Film Company of America.

Stellar Light of Beverly Bayne to Shine for Metro

Heroine of "Half a Thousand Photoplays," Whose Work Opposite Bushman in Essanay Subjects Brought Actress a Large Following, Is Induced by Balshofer to Sign with Quality

BEVERLY BAYNE, heroine of half a thousand photoplays, in many of which she played opposite Francis X. Bushman, the distinguished screen star now appearing exclusively in Quality-Metro productions, on Tuesday attached her signature to a contract which ensures her appearance for a term of years in the photo dramatic offerings of the Quality Pictures Corporation, which are released exclusively on the Metro program.

BEVERLY BAYNE

Miss Bayne, who has achieved notable distinction as an actress with an exceptionally wide range of emotional expression, was associated with Mr. Bushman during his connection with Essanay studios in Chicago and on the coast, and starred with him in many of his biggest screen successes. It is expected that she will be featured with him in many of the forthcoming productions of the Quality Pictures Corporation in the Metro program.

The addition of Miss Bayne's name to the list of stellar lights of the stage and screen already under contract with the companies who release through the Metro program is in line with the progressive policy of President Rowland of Metro, whose efforts to give the exhibitor and the public the highest artistic talent obtainable in motion picture productions of equal popular appeal have done so much to make Metro one of the biggest factors in filmland in the few short months since its organization.

In this particular instance, however, much of the credit must go to Fred J. Balshofer, head of the Quality Pictures Corporation, who came East with Francis X. Bushman to attend the initial showings of "The Silent Voice," a forthcoming Quality-Metro feature, in New York and Chicago. Mr. Balshofer, ever on the alert to add to the stellar material at the Los Angeles studios, noted that whenever Miss Bayne's name was mentioned Mr. Bushman, on the different occasions that he addressed motion picture audiences in both cities, it elicited round after round of applause. At the time he made no comment, but on reaching New York and learning that Miss Bayne had severed her connection with Essanay, he arranged a meeting, with the result that sufficient inducements were offered to persuade her to join the Quality Pictures forces for a term of years.

Announcement of the premier feature productions in which Miss Bayne will be starred under the Quality-Metro direction will be made in the near future.

KLEINE'S GRANDIN FEATURE RELEASED SEPTEMBER 6

After more than eight weeks' preparation, the first of a series of two-reel subjects featuring Ethel Grandin will be released by George Kleine on the General Film program commencing September 6.

"Her Secret" is the title of the first release, a vehicle especially chosen for Miss Grandin's entry into the General program ranks.

"Her Secret" will be followed by "The Social Law," "A Woman's Mistake," and "The Mysterious Visitor" at weekly intervals.

CAST PICKED FOR PATHE'S "MARY'S LAMB"

Pathé announces the cast of Donald Mackenzie's production of Richard Carle's play "Mary's Lamb" as follows: Richard Carle, Jessie Ralph, Marie Wayne, Lillian Thatcher, James Renne and W. J. McCarthy.

Mr. Mackenzie has just started work upon his production, which will be one of the Gold Rooster plays. Details of release will be given later.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

"TRILBY" WILL HAVE PREMIER AT 48TH STREET THEATRE SEPTEMBER 6

"Trilby," the inaugural release of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, in which Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye are starring jointly, will have its premier at a first-class theatre, right on Broadway; for, by reason of the impression created upon Lee Shubert, the directors of the Equitable concern have decided to place the picture in the Forty-fourth street theatre, beginning September 6, for a run of two weeks, after which it will be released on the regular Equitable basis, through the World Film.

"Trilby," from the famous dramatic classic of the same name, with the two famous stars, was produced under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, and from what those who have seen it say, Equitable spared no pains or expense to turn out a feature of the supreme class. "Trilby" will, during the run at the big Shubert house, play at first-class prices. Two shows a day will be the policy.

S. L. Rothapfel, whose Rialto is now in the course of construction, after witnessing a presentation of "Trilby" at the Equitable studio, suggested that the picture be staged at a Broadway house, and consented to handle the musical end and stage the film.

The entire orchestra that Mr. Rothapfel will assemble for his new Rialto, will be used at the Forty-fourth street theatre during the run of "Trilby." An immense organ, special scenic equipment and decoration schemes are being installed at the Forty-fourth street theatre now.

OWEN DAVIS DRAMA FOR WORLD FILM

World Film is to convert the Owen Davis drama "The Family Cupboard," which was produced by William A. Brady, into a motion picture under the direction of Frank H. Crane. Irene Fenwick's part in the drama is to be played in the film by Frances Nelson, the actress who made such a pleasing success in World Film's "Stolen Voice."

VITAGRAPH FILMS FLAGG STORY

"Miss Sticky Moufie Kiss," the first story from the pen of James Montgomery Flagg ever secured for motion pictures, has been put in production by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Sidney Drew.

The story was picturized by Mrs. Sidney Drew, who together with her talented husband, will be seen in the portrayal of the principal characters.

BARRYMORE AND FAVERSHAM AT WORK FOR METRO

Two of America's greatest stage stars, Ethel Barrymore and William Faversham, will soon be working side by side and under the same roof and for the same releasing company as soon as production can be started on the Rolfe-Metro feature in which they will be seen.

Miss Barrymore will appear in an original play, especially suited to her talents, written by George Scarborough, author of "The Lure," and other stage successes. The screen adaptation is now being made by Edwin P. Carewe, who will direct the production. This vehicle affords Miss Barrymore ample opportunity for the exercise of the histrionic ability which has made her famous.

Mr. Faversham will appear under the direction of John W. Noble in "One Million Dollars," the scenario of which has been prepared by George D. Proctor from the novel "One Million Francs," by Arnold Fredericks. In "One Million Dollars" Mr. Faversham appears in a peculiarly suitable role, that of a rich young club man whose leisure hours are devoted to the study of criminology. The scenario is worked out with skill.

While on the staff of the metropolitan detective bureau he is called out on a case that not only calls for the exercise of all his wits, but ends by his losing his heart. Several unusually pretentious interior scenes are being constructed especially for this production.

LUBIN'S NEW WAR PLAY ON THE STOCKS

The Lubin Company has decided to name its war play, now being filmed under the direction of Jack Pratt, with Rosetta Brice and Richard Buhler in the leading roles, "The Rights of Man, the Story of War's Red Blot."

OCTAVIA HANDWORTH AND SOME SCENES IN "THE GREAT RUBY" (Lubin Liberty Bell-V-L-S-E)

SOME OF THE ANIMAL STARS WHO WILL APPEAR IN THE CENTAUR FEATURES ON THE MUTUAL PROGRAM

The theme of this play was suggested by Thomas Paine's reply to Burke's attack on the French Revolution, but the larger and more humanitarian thought involved in the photoplay is that of Louis Reeves Harrison, its author.

Mr. Pratt has filmed about half the play so far, and from present indications it will be one of the few really big productions of the year. It will be released through the V-L-S-E on a date to be announced later.

After many weeks of hard work the new Marie Dressler picture, which will be released by Lubin in September, "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," is completed. Of course, Miss Dressler plays Tillie. But she was not the only one who worked hard to make a success of this amazing five-act farcical comedy.

Howell Hansel, the director, labored night and day. Mr. Hansel has had much dramatic experience, having been three years with Charles Frohman and two years with Liebler & Co., playing leads in "A Gentleman of France," "The Fourth Estate," "The Fighting Hope" and "The Woman."

Three years ago Mr. Hansel decided that there was a wider field for his activities in the motion picture world. He began his career as director by producing the film version of "Ben Bolt." His next venture was "The Million Dollar Mystery" in forty-six reels, which is said to have made a million dollars for its owners. His last production prior to "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" was "Colonel Carter of Cartersville."

The amazing thing in "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" is that it contains neither a movie policeman, a movie telephone, a movie seltzer bottle, nor a movie revolver.

"YORK STATE FOLKS" PORTRAYS SIMPLE COUNTRY LIFE

"York State Folks," released August 16, featuring James Lackaye and Ray L. Royce, is full of human interest and comedy of rural life.

Simon Peter Martin is the former village postmaster, a man who exacts obedience to all his wishes. Myron Cooper is a simple minded organ builder and music teacher. The two clash and the fate of a young couple, Simon's son and Myron's niece, is involved.

The trouble arises over a vote of the villagers in favor of the railroad entering the town. The old organ builder meddles in politics for the first time and votes for the railroad, and thereby draws upon himself the wrath of the village president, who is a wagon builder, and fears the railroad will ruin his business. He casts his son adrift for daring to fall in love with his opponent's niece, and tries to ruin the old organ builder.

But the railroad goes through, the wagon builder relents, and all is well in the end. Simon comes in time to bless the young couple and renew his friendship with Myron. The railroad has purchased his property and made him comfortable for life. Myron sells an organ for a large sum of money, and the life long friendship of the old men is renewed and all are happy.

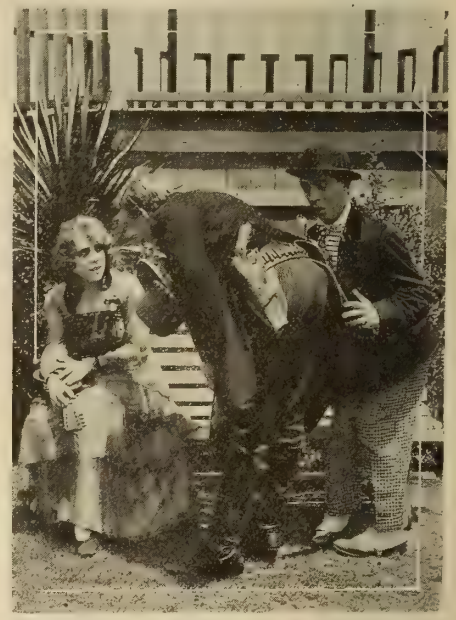
MURIEL OSTRICHE JOINS EQUITABLE

Muriel Ostriche, formerly star of the Thanhouser Princess brand, and known throughout filmdom as the Thanhouser Princess, and recently star of numerous Vitagraph productions in which she appeared jointly with Robert Edeson in big features, has been engaged by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation for appearance in that concern's productions.

After a brief vacation in Atlantic City she will begin work at the Equitable Flushing studio in a series of serious and important dramatic vehicles now being selected for her by the directors of the Equitable concern.

Miss Ostriche, although but eighteen years of age, has had four years' constant experience before the camera and during her career has appeared in the leading parts in various important productions to sufficient appeal and advantage to warrant the rapid advance that has characterized her career.

The scenario department of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation will begin work immediately upon the adaptation of several successful novels and plays which have already been selected and which are adaptable to Miss Ostriche's peculiar talent and youthful beauty.



Miss Ostriche will divide her time between the Flushing studio and the Fifty-second street Equitable production headquarters and be under the direct influence of either Webster Cullison or John Ince.

This matter, however, will be settled at a meeting of the Equitable directors called for next Tuesday, at which time an allotment of stars and plays to the various producing directors will be made.

CUB COMEDY BURLESQUES WESTERN "BAD MEN"

To have a rival for the hand of one's fiance means trouble enough in ordinary circumstances, but when that rival is a six-foot Westerner, carrying around a young arsenal, besides a reputation as a general "bad man," one may expect almost anything to happen.

That's one of the situations confronting Jerry in the latest Cub Comedy, called "Jerry and the Gunman," to be released

SCENE FROM "JERRY THE GUNMAN" (Cub-Mutual—Sept. 9)

September 9 on the Mutual program. Dead Shot Dick, for that is the name of the Westerner, wanted the coast clear for himself to the heart and hand of pretty Jessie, so he ruthlessly cast Jerry into the distant shrubbery.

Determined upon revenge, Jerry prowled around until he found out that Dick had a big price hanging over his head. This reward Jerry set out to get—and he did get it. So Jerry was happy. But his joy was short lived, for the police took his reward away and, to add insult to injury, he was thrown into jail with the man he captured.

The Cub company, headed by George Ovey, as Jerry, plays the farce with a reckless abandon. Every scene is a [illegible] of fun and Ovey will add to his stage [illegible]ers a host of film fans by this sub-

Bostock "Beasties" in Centaur Features on 16th

Two Reelers, Giving All the Four-Legged Little Bostocks a Chance to Gambol in Diverting Postures, Will Form Part of Mutual's Thursday Releases

ON Thursday, September 16, the first of the much heralded David Horsley animal productions, featuring the world famous Bostock animal performers, will be released on the Mutual program. Thereafter one of these subjects, which will be in two reels and known by the brand name of Centaur Features, will form a part of the Mutual's Thursday releases each week.

This announcement is of the utmost importance to the trade, as with the advent of the Centaur Features animal pictures in an advanced form are introduced.

The idea of animals in motion pictures has been with him for some time. Following up this idea Mr. Horsley set forth to obtain a collection of animals of sufficient numerical strength and performing ability to give the pictures the distinction he desired. When it seemed that he would be compelled to abandon the idea for lack of animal material, his opportunity came.

The European war had just broken out and the Bostock menagerie was quartered and exhibited at White City in London. The British government at once requisitioned every bit of available space for military quarters. White City park came under the government's classification of available property and orders were issued to remove the Bostock animals.

With Europe in a turmoil of strife and without a home for her charges, Mrs. Bostock, who came into possession of the animals upon the death of her husband, decided to sell at the advice of Harry E. Tudor, her general manager. Mr. Horsley heard of this and immediately cabled Mr. Tudor for further information. The negotiations finally terminated in Mr. Horsley becoming sole possessor of the entire performing collection.

Mr. Horsley's next move again evidenced his far sightedness. He arranged at once to take with him all of the original Bostock trainers, ten in number, including Capt. Jack Bonavita, M. Gay, and others. These trainers have been and are recognized as among the best in their profession.

With so much arranged Mr. Horsley removed the animals, with the trainers, from London to Los Angeles, where he leased a five-acre plot of ground, upon which to build studios especially designed and arranged to produce animal pictures. The outfit arrived in Los Angeles last November 17, and rehearsals were immediately started. They have been going on ever since.

Meanwhile the work of erecting the animal arena or studio Mr. Horsley had devised was under way. He built a great hexagonal arena, wherein animal pictures are taken far more expeditiously, with greater effect, and amid the most precise surroundings. The arena is unique in studio construction—there is not another like it or nearly like it in the world. Still not content he engaged Francis Worcester Doughty, a wonder at contriving novelistic tales, to write his scenarios. Then he secured Frank Montgomery, a producer of unquestioned ability to direct the pictures in conjunction with Capt. Bonavita.

Such is the force making the animal picture under Mr. Horsley's personal supervision. The first release is called "The Rajah's Sacrifice," and in two reels, tells the story of a young American girl who falls into the hands of a cunning and barbaric high priest, who pleads with her to marry him.

She refuses but accepts the Rajah, whom she truly loves. At the Rajah's temple the sacred animals are kept and, one day, upon entering the lion's den the Rajah is attacked and killed.

It is the custom of the country that upon the death of a husband his widow is to be burned at the stake. The Rajah's widow is led to the stake and the funeral pyre lighted, but the high priest, desiring the girl for himself liberates her and places her in charge of the keeper of the sacred animals, who is in love with the high priest.

Upon learning of her lover's inconstancy the keeper dispatches a note to the girl's friends who immediately organize a rescue party and after a thrilling battle amid the sacred animals take the girl from the place. Enraged at the keeper's infidelity to her trust the high priest commands that she be thrown to the animals, but before the hirelings can obey the order the keeper springs upon the dictator and kills him. She then escapes and joins the homeward bound rescue party.

Besides a big array of Bostock animals the cast of human players is large and includes: Capt. Jack Bonavita, Roy Watson, M. Gay, Herr Batty, Mlle. Ottowa, Vera Robsom, Mlle. D'Orsey, Gavette and Ora Cecil. Capt. Jack Bonavita and Frank Montgomery directed.

MOROSCO SIGNS DAL CLAWSON

After protracted negotiations the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company has succeeded in grabbing one of the plums in the cinematographic field away from four of the biggest film concerns in the country in the person of Dal Clawson, the celebrated cameraman. At a salary that will cause the ordinary camera man to gasp, Clawson has been engaged by the big Occidental Boulevard studio to take entire charge of all camera work in Morosco productions.

Dal Clawson's work in taking the now famous "Hypocrites," "Captain Courtesy," and other sensational features noted for particularly beautiful photography, put the biggest producers in the country on his trail, and Oliver Morosco had to outbid at one time or another practically the entire field. He is recognized as one of the best "idea photographers" in the industry.

In "Hypocrites" he set a record by running one part of the film through the camtra twenty-four times, this being the famous "Mirror of Truth" scene, and his "visions" and "dissolves" have become standards by which this class of work is measured.

Dal Clawson was the cameraman whose anecdotes formed the principal part of the widely read moving picture article in the August 14 issue of "The Saturday Evening Post."

JUNE KEITH SHOT AT IN CAR ON WAY HOME FROM ESSANAY REHEARSAL

June Keith, new leading woman for Essanay, avers that dodging bullets is not at all her specialty, although she successfully accomplished this feat a few nights ago.

Miss Keith, who takes the leading feminine role in "The Man Trail," Essanay's six-act feature, was returning to her home in Chicago from "The Pines," where the piece was staged, when a man stepped out in front of her car from behind some trees at the side of the road in Lake Forest. It was dark and the chauffeur thought the man was a robber and instead of halting, put on all speed.

The man opened fire, three bullets striking the car, one passing through the windshield and barely missing Miss Keith. She decided it was time to halt. The man proved to be a policeman and arrested the chauffeur, who was later discharged.

Miss Keith is well known on the legitimate stage and has made a distinct hit in Essanay's "A Bunch of Keys" and "The Man Trail." She played the part of Nang Ping in "Mr. Wu," produced by Walker Whitesides in connection with Henry W. Savage. She also has starred in "The Woman," "Stop Thief," "The Man of the Hour," and "The Spendthrift."

Miss Keith is a pretty brunette who can laugh or cry as the part requires. She is a Chicago girl, daughter of Douglass Smith, a wealthy Chicago banker.

PHOTOPLAY RELEASING SECURES ELGIN SPEEDWAY PICTURES

The Photoplay Releasing Company, which was so successful in filming the Chicago Speedway auto races last June, secured exclusive motion picture rights for the Elgin Speedway Races, which were held Friday and Saturday, August 20-21.

The rights to these pictures will be sold through the Chicago office in the Mallers Building.

Beauty and Talent Take Lillian Lorraine to Stardom

Pathe-Balboa Actress Is a "Daughter of the Golden West," Born in San Francisco, and Began Her Stage Career in a Child's Part in a Stock Company in That City While a Pupil in the Public Schools—She Rose Rapidly in "Legitimate" Before Becoming a Screen Player

LILLIAN LORRAINE, the new Pathé-Balboa star, whose piquant beauty adorns the colored supplement with this week's edition of the NEWS, is new to the screen, but one of the most popular of all the Broadway stars in New York, where she is best known. She is so typically an expression of the great metropolis that it somehow or other comes as a surprise to know that she was born in San Francisco, and came to New York only nine years ago —when she was fourteen years old, to be exact. New York adopted her and made her its own, paying her the tribute of such long and fine engagements that she has appeared but little outside of that city.

Like a number of other of the popular stage favorites of the day, the little Lillian made her debut at an exceedingly tender age, playing Little Eva in that great nursery of American dramatic talent, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," when she was only four years old. After a year or two of "Uncle Tom," she secured a child's part in a stock company at the old Central Theatre in San Francisco, at the same time studying in the public schools.

Just three months before the great San Francisco earthquake she left for New York, that great Mecca of stage aspirants. Miss Lorraine was fortunate, for she secured an engagement almost immediately upon her arrival, playing a small part in a musical comedy with Richard Golden. The next season she secured an engagement with Eddie Foy in "The Orchid."

Broadway Favorite in Short Period

Still very young and inexperienced, her part with this show was a very small one, most of her work lying in the chorus. Miss Lorraine, however, has a personality that cannot be hidden. Before long Mr. Foy became conscious that a certain member of his chorus needed recognition, and he offered her a song, that first step in the ladder leading out of the chorus. Miss Lorraine saw her chance, and made the most of it.

In consequence the newspapers began to speak of her and the next season saw her in "The Great White Way," with Blanche Ring and Jeff de Angelis. Then came her big chance when she was engaged by Florence Ziegfeld to appear in support of Anna Held in "Miss Innocence." Our San Francisco girl was climbing fast now for the next year she was featured in the 1909 "Follies" with Nora Bayes and Jack Norworth. With the "Follies" she remained for the next three years, being starred in the 1912 production when Nora Bayes dropped out.

Thus she became the sensation and favorite of Broadway in a remarkably short time. Today it seems like a far cry to the old peregrinating show of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and the humble infantile part of Little Eva. Vaudeville managers wanted to capitalize her popularity and offered her a six months' engagement over the U. B. O. eastern time, as a headline feature in a single singing act with original songs. In 1914 she was featured in the big "Whirl of the World" cast, an all the season New York success.

She was filling another U. B. O. vaudeville engagement when approached by the Balboa company who were about to put on "Neal of the Navy" for Pathé, and wanted her to star in it. This was not the first offer she had received to appear in pictures, but the inducements made by the Horkheimers were so flattering that she accepted and left almost at once for the coast, thus returning to the scene of her childhood triumphs.

Miss Lorraine, while she has stuck pretty closely to musical comedy, confesses to an ambition to sometime star in drama on the stage as well as on the screen. She has been frequently offered such engagements, but has always declined, owing to the large salaries she has been receiving in musical comedy. She expects, by the way, to star in a big production of the latter sort this fall.

Miss Lorraine is "very easy to look at," as they say out West. She has a superb figure and her gowns are the despair of her rivals. She is athletically inclined and her skill as a swimmer has often been admired down at Long Beach, L. I., where so many of New York's theatrical people spend their summers. Director Harvey, who is putting on "Neal of the Navy" will tell you that she has plenty of nerve, too, and does not shrink from difficult and dangerous work in the filming of the serial. Her screen work so far has shown a special aptitude for this line of dramatic endeavor.

So with beauty, youth, an exceptional personality, plenty of talent and a long experience in things theatrical, it may be safely prophesied that Lillian Lorraine is destined to become very popular as the star of "Neal of the Navy."

DOROTHY KELLY ACHIEVES PLACE ON V-L-S-E PROGRAM

Dainty Dorothy Kelly, whose charming personality and exceptional talent have brought her from the ranks of the unknown to a place among the most popular of screen celebrities, has now been honored with that coveted position, a place on the Big Four program.

Miss Kelly has made her first bow on the V-L-S-E program in "The Wheels of Justice," the four-part Blue Ribbon feature that went into screen evidence on August 23.

All of the popularity Miss Kelly has achieved, has been in Vitagraph productions. This charming young lady has known no other film company except the Vitagraph Company since her debut in pictures, a few short years ago, when she joined the ranks of the famous Vitagraph players at the close of her schoolgirl career.

In "The Wheels of Justice," Miss Kelly is seen in the character of Julia Dean, and her visualization of the part, marks her greatest dramatic triumph.

SUIT AGAINST KEYSTONE CENSOR BOARD IS ESSANAY PLAN

FROM information received at the executive offices of the Big Four, it is learned that legal proceedings will be instituted at once against the Pennsylvania Censor Board in the matter of their action on the Essanay feature, "The Blindness of Virtue."

"The Blindness of Virtue" in its original form has been passed by every board of censors in the United States with the exception of the Pennsylvania board. The feature has been universally praised by the press, and has been endorsed by many prominent clergymen and civic bodies.

Gardner W. Wood, Eastern representative of the Essanay Company, states that these facts were brought to the attention of the Pennsylvania board, yet in their rulings they ordered such eliminations that if complied with would utterly ruin the picture as a dramatic offering and make it valueness as a moral force.

The action of the Pennsylvania board in this instance is but another illustration of the incompetence of the average censor, and the un-Americanism of censorship as an institution.

With the opinion of all other censors against it, with the recommendations of the press backing it up, and with exhibitors who have seen "The Blindness of Virtue" unanimous in declaring it a feature worthy of being shown in their theatres, a small body takes it upon themselves to declare the subject unfit to go to the public.

DALLAS PASSES CENSOR LAW

The city board of commissioners of Dallas, Texas, by an ordinance passed August 18, provided for a censor and a board of appeal to consist of seven persons to be appointed by the city commissioners. The ordinance is entirely acceptable to the moving picture interests and it is believed will satisfy the majority of moving picture goers.

NO PRIZES WITH ADMITTANCE TICKETS, SAYS OHIO MAYOR

Mayor F. A. Hartenstein, of Youngstown, Ohio, has issued an order that motion pictures in that city must discontinue the general practice of giving prizes to holders of numbers on admittance tickets.

A prize giving in this way is said to be in the nature of gambling, and Mayor Hartenstein says that he will not tolerate gaming

AMENDMENT TO INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION LAW IS NOT CLEARLY DEFINED; SHIPPERS SEEK LIGHT ON MATTER

THERE has been more or less confusion among shippers of motion picture films for the past few weeks as to the exact meaning of the Cummins Amendment to the Act to Regulate Commerce with respect to the valuation of merchandise transported in interstate commerce. On May 7, the Interstate Commerce Commission in Washington, D. C., issued a report expressing tentatively its views on various questions arising in connection with this amendment and, among other things, attention was called to the provisions of section 10 of the act penalizing any person who by false statement as to value, or by any other device or means, obtained or attempted to obtain transportation of property at less than the regular rates.

The numerous inquiries regarding this matter indicated confusion in the minds of many as to the correct application of the penalty section and made desirable a further expression of opinion by the Interstate Commerce Commission on this point.

There is no provision in the Act to Regulate Commerce, including the Cummins Amendment, the commission states, that requires a declaration as to the value of property shipped in interstate commerce. Nor has the commission issued any ruling that requires such declaration. The Cummins Amendment does, however, provide that if the goods are hidden from view by wrapping, boxing, or other means, and the carrier is not notified as to their character, "the carrier may require the shipper to specifically state in writing the value of the goods."

In such cases rates and charges for transportation, dependent upon the value of the property shipped as specifically stated in writing by the shipper, may be established and maintained.

It is the view of the Commission that, so far as declarations as to value are concerned, the necessity for the application of the penalty section are, first, the election of the carrier to require a shipper to state in writing the value of the goods; second, the existence of graded rates or charges dependent upon the value of the property shipped; and, third, that the shipper shall knowingly and willfully, by false statement as to value, obtain or attempt to obtain transportation of such property at less than the regular rates.

COLORED ORGANIZATION IN SPOKANE, ALARMED OVER "NATION," WILL WAGE WAR AGAINST OFFICIALS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" will be made an issue in the election of city commissioners in Spokane, Wash., this fall. The Colored Business Men's League and the Colored Men's Civic League, which cover together most of the negro population of the city, have launched the campaign, declaring war upon the present commissioners and other candidates who indorse the present system of film censorship in Spokane.

The first step will be to register every colored voter in the city, and every white voter who is in sympathy with the campaign. The city council next will be asked to pass an ordinance to prevent exhibition of films tending to create race hatred.

Leaders of the colored element announced that they would make a determined effort to elect to office men who will be in sympathy with their proposal. Three of the five city commissioners are to be elected this year, giving a majority and the control of the city council to the faction which wins.

"We expect to co-operate with labor organizations and socialists in this fight," announced F. A. Stokes, president of the Colored Business Men's League.

"The Birth of a Nation," booked at the Clemmer for a run of two weeks, with the option of a third week, ran the fortnight to practically capacity business, and is now in the additional seven days.

J. B. Bertelson, advertising manager of the Casino theatre, who handled the business end of the Griffith film's run in Spokane, has gone to Portland, Ore., as the representative of James Q. Clemmer, of Seattle, who has booked the spectacle for four weeks at the Heilig in the Webfoot city. He will be absent from Spokane six weeks.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Los Angeles, Aug. 22.

"THE SECRET SIN," an original scenario by Margaret Turnbull, is being produced by Frank Ricker at the Lasky studio with Blanche Sweet and Tom Meighen playing the principal parts, supported by Hal Clements and Sessue Hayakawa. In this, the principal characters, those of two sisters, will be played by Miss Sweet, the sin referred to being the secret habit of one of the sisters using opium.

Pedro de Cordoba, specially engaged by the Lasky company to play with Geraldine Farrar, has signed with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company to appear in several productions, and will take up the work at the Morosco studio after an engagement at the local Morosco theatre and the Greek theatre at Berkeley.

The James Forbes drama which was the starring vehicle for Rose Stahl for several seasons, "The Chorus Lady," is being adapted for the screen by the Lasky scenario department and will be produced with Cleo Ridgley in the name part. Production on this will not be taken up for several weeks. Its long run on the speaking stage is a matter of history.

Edna Goodrich will arrive at the Lasky studio in the near future for an engagement in one or more subjects, but at this time it is not definitely known what the titles of these will be.

It has been announced that Lou Telegan, now playing in "The Explorer" under the direction of George Melford, will next appear in "The Red Mirage," an adaptation from the well-known novel of the same name.

Farrar Gifts Reach $1,000

Geraldine Farrar before departing from the Lasky studio made it clear to all members of the producing staff of her appreciation of the many favors and courtesies shown her, by the distribution of a number of cash gifts, aggregating about one thousand dollars, the gifts ranging from five dollars to fifty dollars. They went to the messenger boy, stage help, and practically all technical men, as well as players, directors and others.

Motion picture rights have been secured by the Kalem Company for "Stingaree," by Hornung, author of "Raffles," and the scenario is now being prepared by James Horne, of the Glendale studio. However, this will not be produced for several weeks, as Mr. Horne will next take up the making of two Broadway favorites pictures, stars for which will come to the West coast from New York.

Mr. Horne and company are now engaged in the eleventh episode of "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel." This one is entitled "The Silver Service." For many of the scenes the banquet silver of the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles was used, in all more than three thousand pieces. Every member of the company was given a big scare one morning when they went to the studio and found the silver was missing from the place it was supposed to have been stored for the night. The mystery was cleared after three or four hours of fumming and fussing by the return of one of the three property men who had been sent to Los Angeles after some article for a set.

Friday of last week was explosion day at the Kalem Glendale studio, at which time a railway water tank and a log cabin were dynamited. The cabin used in "The Grand Hotel" series was first set on fire for interior pictures and later blown to atoms to secure an exterior. It is needless to say the water tank was for "The Hazards of Helen" series, the company now being on one of the forty odd subjects. Originally fifteen releases of this title were to be made, then came orders for ten more, then ten more, and now there is a standing order to continue as long as the muse plays fair.

McGowan Goes to Universal

Robert A. Brackett, who handled "The Indian Wars Re-Fought" and a number of other state rights subjects, and was formerly manager of downtown theatres here, has accepted a position with the California exchange of the Universal as outside salesman, and is now booking for regular program and the Broadway star features.

J. P. McGowan, who first began "The Hazards of Helen" series, and who for the past two months has been with the

MABEL NORMAND AND RAYMOND HITCHCOCK IN "MY VALET" (Triangle)

Lasky company as director, has been signed by the Universal and began work there last week. The first subject to be taken up will be "The Yellow Streak," by Randall Parish. This is a detective story in which Marie Walcamp appears as the sweetheart of the detective and saves him from injury at the hands of a band of smugglers.

One of the big scenes for "The Long Chance," featuring Frank Keenan, Universal Broadway star feature, was made at the specially constructed Western set this week and more than one hundred cowboys with horses took part.

"The Broken Coin" company has been busy for the past few nights making battle scenes between the armies of Gretshaffen and Greyhaffen, and all members of the company, because of the recent order from the New York office of the Universal to add seven episodes to the serial, together with the strenuous work day and night, are coming to believe this a cold hard world. The order for additional numbers was received last week, and Emerson Haugh, who is writing the newspaper serial for the scenarios by Grace Cunard, has arrived to complete his work. The change will require very little alteration and affect only the fourteenth and fifteenth episodes, which were nearing completion. It will be necessary for these to be remade in order that the story may be carried out.

Robert Ross, who has been assistant director of the special feature company, has been named as assistant to Director General Henry McRae, and took up his work at the Universal last Monday.

Lulu Glaser and Edna Aug Arrive

Lulu Glaser and Edna Aug have arrived to appear in Universal subjects, both of which will be made by Director Al. Christie. The scenarios for these two are being prepared at this time, and active work will commence in a few days. The subject in which Miss Aug appears will be made first.

These are indeed strenuous days for Al. E. Christie, in that it is necessary for him to make two single-reel Nestor pictures each week, one being under the supervision of Horace Davey, in addition to the direction of special features. Mr. Christie is now two one-reel subjects behind his regular release, but with the confidence of a Napoleon he is keeping everlastingly at it.

The "Big Bill Brent" company, headed by Hobart Bosworth, is spending the week in the mountains filming Western scenes.

Otis Turner is at Arrowhead, Hot Springs, for a week, where he is writing a scenario for the George Fawcett Broadway feature which will be entitled "Tainted Money."

Work was taken up this week on the filming of "The Lass of Lowrie's," adapted from the Frances Hodgson Burnett novel of the coal fields of Lancastershire, England. There being no coal fields in California, it is necessary to build replicas of a coal mining town of the English type, and this is being done at the rear of Universal City.

Helen Ware will be featured in this production, which will be staged under the direction of Robert Leonard, who has just completed the Julia Dean feature "Renunciation," after working the company day and night for four days. Part of the English set of particular significance is the rectory, around which many scenes will be made. An interior replica will be built on one of the new stages.

In addition to building another large exterior stage of the same size as the present one at Universal City, it has been found necessary by Business Manager H. A. Caulfield and Director General Henry McRae to have another enclosed studio for interior scenes and night work and this is now being built. It will have a stage seventy-five by one hundred feet and this will be equipped with the latest lighting devices.

George Ade Visits U City

Universal City has had a number of distinguished visitors during the past week, including George Ade, who spent an entire afternoon at the city. Another was Marcus Marks, alderman of New York City. One day ninety young women from Canada and the New England States, winners of a popularity contest, were guests of the Universal.

Monday of last week was U. S. Navy Day and six hundred bluejackets from the Atlanta practice fleet on their way to San Francisco were given a barbecue and rodeo. The bluejackets also took part in a number of scenes that were made.

Officers of the International News Service spent an afternoon at the studio, and another distinguished visitor was Mr. Neiter, in charge of the Hawaiian exhibit at the San Francisco Exposition.

The company producing "The Fair God of Sun Island," a three-reel drama being directed by William Worthington, is spending a week at Catalina Island, where South Sea Island pictures are being made.

Number 8 of the "Lady Baffles and Detective Duck" comedy series is being made by the Al. Curtis Joker company and entitled "The Ore Mystery," wherein the preventer of crimes takes the property desired by a band of crooks and thus prevents a bold robbery. Max Asher is appearing as Duck and Gail Henry as Lady Baffles, and they are supported by William Franey, Lillian Peacock and Milborn Moranti.

A three-reel jungle picture with heretofore unused thrillers, "The Queen of Jungle Land," is a drama being made by J. J. Franz. The story for this is by James Oliver Carwood, and was adapted for the screen by Ben Cohn. Wellington Plater appears as the young man who becomes addicted to the drink habit and goes to South Africa for a hunt in order to be away from where he could secure liquors.

Thrills in Jungle Setting

In the heart of the jungle he finds a beautiful girl, and through the negro woman, whose tongue had been cut off and who waits on the girl, he learns that the girl had been kidnapped and the negress deprived of her sense of speech in order that she could not tell of the misdeeds of the supposed father of the girl, who is now chief of a tribe of savages.

The girl is rescued amid sensational fight scenes with both man and beast. Lule Warrenton is playing the character part of the negress, Edith Sterling the girl, Sherman Bainbridge the father, and Rex de Roselli another hunter.

"The Morals of Guido Morea" is a story of an Italian inventor who came to America after being banished from his own country because he refused to give his invention to the government. There is a pretty love story in this, and the principals are Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn and Jack Sterling. The direction is by Lynn Reynolds.

The Nestor comedies of the week are "It Almost Happened" and "Snatched from the Altar." Both are written by Al. E. Christie, and the latter is being produced by him with a cast composed of Eddie Lyons and Elsie Greeson as the prospective bride and groom whose romance was destroyed when the youth married an old maid the night before the wedding—that is, he thought he married her.

Catalina Setting for Fine Arts Brand

Horace Davis is making "It Almost Happened" with Billie Rhodes, Lee Moran and Neil Burns as principals. This is another beach story wherein jealousy makes the plot entertaining.

The Harry Wulze Joker company is filming "Kitty from the City," a Western comedy wherein the ranchman's daughter returns from spending four years at college and father has a hard time in preventing her from marrying the ranch boys. Bob Vernon and Marcia Moore play the leads.

An elegant yacht, the property of Captain Banning, who owns the largest of the Catalina Islands, has been leased for use in "The Sable Lorcha," the Griffith Fine Arts film featuring Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson, and having a cast composed of Elmer Clifton, George Pearce, Lauretta Blake, Hal Wilson, Raymond Wells and Mazie Radford. For this subject three very expensive genuine oil paintings have been purchased for use in a fashionable home scene.

MADAME SCHUMANN-HEINK AND THE UNIVERSAL DIRECTORS BEFORE THE CAMERA AT UNIVERSAL CITY

JUST TO MAKE TALK

Francis X. Bushman and the Vitagraph company carried off the honors at the memorable carnival at Brighton-by-the-Sea, under the auspices of the New York local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. It was a large affair all right. A whole lot of the magnates were there. A few of them are: George Kleine, Ad Kessel, C. O. Baumann, Carl Laemmle, Bill Oldknow from Atlanta, Jim Keane from the coast, L. J. Selznick, Max Karger, Joe Farnham and Adolph Zukor. Of course, that's only a few.

Screen players were as thick as flies, some of them thicker. Frank Bushman was the center of attraction among the heroes, with Bill Farnum a close second. Anita Stewart, Pearl White, Mary Fuller and Theda Bara drew the most attention among the heroines, never forgetting Lillian Walker and Dorothy Kelly in Lillian's car, nor Flora Finch in her "Goddess' make-up. There were enough amateur Charlie Chaplins around to start a Mexican revolution, and enough "Goddesses" who never were on the screen, to make Dan Cupid lay off and point up some new arrows.

Arthur Ashley started with the others in the photoplayers' auto race and finished alone—but not first. Still everyone knows Arthur really can drive, but a mouse got in his engine, and the cheesemeter for luring stray mice was at home under the dressing table.

If you want to know more, that's what the news columns are for.

Getting back to the things of the work-a-day world, it is a pleasure to note one thing—that the day of intensive exploitation of features is arriving. Feature producers have often let features go by the board in a few weeks because another feature came along and the advertising was concentrated on the second feature.

Turn to the stage for a minute. A speaking show is exploited for all it is worth. It usually starts its career in a big city—New York, Chicago or San Francisco—and plays there till its drawing capacity is exhausted, because everybody has seen it. Then it spends a year on the road, during which time several companies carry it into the big cities. Oftentimes road companies are sent out the second year, and practically the whole country is covered. Then it is released for stock companies and motion pictures. Every possible cent is gotten out of it.

Not so with pictures. A manufacturer plans, or used to plan, an expensive feature, hire stars, build big scenes, advertise the picture during production and until release, then drop it and go on to the next. Whatever exploitation the picture received after release was through word of month, by the boosting of the exchange employes.

But times really are changing, as witness V. L. S. E. and Metro ads. Their pictures are advertised long after release and an effort is made to get the most out of each picture. It's really the logical thing to do.

For after all, age should not and does not affect the drawing power of a picture, provided it is first run in its neighborhood and the print is a clean one. Even the first-run question is getting of less and less importance. Think of the repeat bookings made on "The Island of Regeneration," to single out one particular picture for attention.

TERRY RAMSAYE

The slogan of "few pictures, better pictures," has been sounded time and again in other columns of this publication, and it is right. With it will come the intensive exploitation of the few and better pictures, more money for the manufacturer, more money for the exhibitor and more satisfaction for the public.

Those keen, incisive features on this page belong to Terry Ramsay, the new director of publicity for the Mutual Film Corporation. Terry (he rather likes being called Terry) is a graduate of the fine training school, the newspaper mill. He has hammered typewriters from Buffalo to Omaha and back to Park Row, seventeen newspapers in all. His last appearance "on the street" was covering the Eastland disaster for a Chicago daily.

Terry was one of the board of judges that decided the American $10,000 prize photoplay, won by Roy L. McCardell, in which he read 19,003 scenarios. The extra three are thrown in for luck.

Now he is editing and reconstructing Reel Life beside doing the Mutual publicity work and boosting the new $8,000,000 program. More power to you, Terry.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, is a firm believer in the permanency of the motion picture industry. This fact is well illustrated by the recent purchase, at a reported outlay of at least $115,000, of a parcel of thirty-one lots of land on Marble Hill, New York City, bounded by West 225th street, Adrian avenue, Jacobus and Van Corlear places.

On this plot the entire force and plant of the Famous Players will be located. Two studios and a laboratory will be built at an outlay of more than $500,000 exclusive of the cost of the land.

All this was gleaned over the pastry from Ben Schulberg.

Phil Gleichman is making one-reel comedies for Paramount. E. Mason Hopper is the director.

The Fad Films Company is a new concern to enter the field, making comedies. Bert Kirkman, Frank P. Donovan, W. P. Adams, scenario writer, and J. A. Fitzgerald, who directed the "Peaceful Rafferty" series, are the men.

Among the players signed up are Tammany Young, Marie Weirman, Billy Bowers, Joseph Chaillee, George Thelian, Lou Story, Marie Rohmere, Mary Cunningham, Francesca Ward, Marie Jensen, Raymond Burgman and Julius Timer.

Romance will out. Will S. Davis, the rising young director, now making Fox features, was recently married to Miss Florence Boggs, after a ten-day courtship. Miss Boggs' beauty impressed Davis when she applied for a position, and in a few days he led her before Rev. J. H. Price, of the Methodist Church at 153rd street and Amsterdam avenue, and they were wedded.

George W. Lederer, the theatrical producer, and John W. Rapp are heading a syndicate which plans to invest $2,000,000 in a tract of land, about fifty acres, near Flushing, Long Island. The idea is to rename the place Film City and make it a producing center. The matter of permission to go ahead is now pending before the Flushing aldermen.

While waiting for the new Rialto to assume definite form, S. L. Rothapfel, former managing director of the Strand, is staging the shows at William Fox's Acadamy of Music on Fourteenth street.

The biggest change of the week among the directors is the acquisition by Lubin of Edgar Lewis at a really fabulous salary. Lewis starts work September 20. His latest picture, "The Bondsman," with William Farnum, is a Fox feature.

FANIA MARINOFF AND JOHN REINHARD IN "THE UNSUSPECTED ISLES," RIALTO STAR FEATURE, MUTUAL PROGRAM

Charles E. Van Loan, writer of Western stories and creator of "Buck Parvin," will write for the Mutual program. He will do a series of Mustang three-reelers to be issued under the general title of "Buck Parvin and the Movies." Art Acord will play the title role with Anna Little, late of Universal, opposite him.

The Van Loan family is busy these days. Young Herbert has just finished a five reel travesty, "The Mirth of a Nation," for Universal, which will appear simultaneously with a book by the same name to be published by Grosset and Dunlap.

Arthur James, director of the Metro publicity and scenario departments, will have his little joke. He looked at the exhibitors' outing ticket.

"I see this admits me to one dinner," he said. "It ought to admit one dinner to me."

In-again, out-again Bert Ennis was in town long enough to introduce his boss, Sir Bostwick, to the writing fraternity at the Hotel Astor. The Eastern Film Corporation has completed releasing arrangements, and is in a very comfortable position, thank you.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

D. W. Griffith is at the Astor.

Francis X. Bushman dropped in to show himself at the exhibitors' outing, and then went back to the coast. He was accompanied by Fred Balshofer, of Quality pictures, who will remain for at least a week.

James Keane, of Keanograph, is in town from the coast.

James Slevin, the man who photographed the Pope, is in town after his first vacation in years. He spent it in his native state, California.

Ashley Miller and his wife, Ethel Browning, after a two weeks' cruise on their house boat, Arkady, are back at their Summer home at the anchorage of the Huguenot Yacht Club, New Rochelle.

Frank L. Greenwalk, of the Columbia building, Cleveland, was in town last Friday on a flying trip.

Geraldine Farrar, Jesse L. Lasky and Cecil B. DeMille are back from the coast.

Betty Nansen, who has been playing in Fox features, has sailed for her home in Denmark.

De Wolf Hopper, musical comedy comedian, has left for the coast to play two years for Griffith in Triangle films.

Henry McMahon, general representative for Triangle, has returned from the coast.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal exchanges, is off on an inspection trip which takes him as far west as Denver and as far south as New Orleans.

CHANGES OF THE WEEK

O. A. C. Lund, feature director, goes with Fox.

Lloyd Robinson leaves The Morning Telegraph for Famous Players.

F. C. Gunning ("Wid") is no longer with The Evening Mail.

Herbert Brenon is recovering from a slight indisposition.

Robert Walker goes from Bob Vignola's Kalem company to Edison.

Anna Little goes from the Universal to the Mustang-Mutual pictures.

James Dayton, scenario editor, is with the American at Santa Barbara, leaving the Universal West Coast forces.

Ed August is making pictures for the Shuberts.

Sam Spedon was the guest of honor at a dancing party given by Anne Schaefer, of the Western Vitagraph, at Ocean Park, Cal.

Harry Benham, leading man, late with Thanhouser, joins Universal.

Cleo Madison, leading woman, is reported leaving the Universal.

Leon J. Bamberger, manager of the sales promotion department of V-L-S-E, is now editing The Big Four Family, the V-L-S-E publication for its employees.

"Sultana of the Desert," Selig, Released October 4; "Man's Law" by Campbell

"A SULTANA OF THE DESERT," a Selig Special in two thrilling reels, will be released in regular service on Monday, October 4. This Selig Special was written by and features Kathlyn Williams. Miss Williams achieves even a greater artistic triumph, if that were possible, than in her recent Selig Diamond Special triumph, "The Strange Case of Talmai Lind."

Again, the charming Kathlyn is seen in association with wild beasts of the Selig jungle-zoo. The Selig Company promises another out-of-the-ordinary story, realistic action, and an all-star supporting company of players. The pictureplay public, and the exhibitors, will welcome the charming Kathlyn's return to jungle-zoo wild animal dramas.

On Monday, September 13, Mr. Colin Campbell, the world-famous director and author, will present as a Selig Special in two reels, released in regular service, a motion picture de luxe entitled "Man's Law." Mr. Campbell not only produced the drama, but originated the plot.

He produced such noteworthy Selig productions as "The Spoilers," "The Carpet from Bagdad," "Sands of Time," and his latest production is both beautiful and appealing.

"Weary Goes a'Wooing," is the title of a one-reel Western comedy featuring dashing Tom Mix, to be released by the Selig Company on September 14. The story has to do with the exploits of the famous cowboy character "Weary," originated by B. M. Bower, the famous writer of Western cowboy stories whose "Chip of the Flying U" proved so popular as a Selig production.

"THE SENTIMENTAL LADY" WITH IRENE FENWICK, IS NEXT KLEINE FEATURE

"The Sentimental Lady," one of Owen Davis' delightful stories, will be Irene Fenwick's next feature following her recently completed "The Green Cloak." Miss Fenwick and a cast of Broadway players are now at Lake Saranac, New York, where many of the out-of-door scenes are being made.

"The Sentimental Lady" is an unusually charming story of big business, containing many dramatic scenes interspersed with much of the summer life at the fashionable summer resorts.

"THE HOUSE OF LOST SOULS"

SHE RECOGNIZES HER SON AMONG THE REVELLERS

"DESTINY; OR, THE SOUL OF A WOMAN"

(Rolfe-Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

ON the theory that those things in art and nature which are really good need few words of commendation, and will stand by themselves in the face of all condemnation, there is little to be said of this latest Metro offering. It is a rare example of the extent to which real art can be carried in such a commercial business, and the fact that art can be carried to such an extent in commerce may explain in part why the film has such a grip on the public.

The coming of "The Soul of a Woman" is bound to be an event in many a city and town this fall. It is real life and striking allegory so artfully mingled as to make a story of great strength. And, grasping the possibilities furnished by the author, the director and his company have thrown themselves into the spirit of the story, bringing all the resources of magnificent settings, scenery and photography to the assistance of an exceptional company.

Emily Stevens is the feature. Her work has been difficult, but the result is all that could have been desired. The human appeal will reach all classes and bring them into the story to share the tears, smiles and wistful sadness of the characters on the screen. The director who can look through his company and see his public is predestined to success. This is just what Edwin Carewe appears to have done in this case.

The story, by Anthony P. Kelly, begins in the home of an artist, who suddenly discovers that his wife has a "past." He scorns her explanation, and drives her out with her infant son. The boy is left on the steps of a monastery, and the woman, in desperation, takes the "easiest way." Years later the boy, now a man, wanders from the monastery to see something of life, and enters the "House of Lost Souls," of which his mother is now proprietor. This part of the story is almost wholly allegory, on the order of Hobart's "Experience." The youth is disgusted, and returns to the monks, later getting as a charge the chapel in which hangs the Madonna for which his mother posed.

The woman, now an outcast, wanders into the chapel during a violent storm, and falls on the chancel. The young priest assists her, and from the crucifix around his neck learns who he is. She dies without revealing her relationship.

George LeGuere is effective as the young priest, and Theodore Babcock's work as the husband-artist is also excellent. There is much commendation also for the others in the cast, which includes Walter Hitchcock, Fred Stone, Howard Truesdell, Henry Bergman, Effingham Pinto, Del DeLois, Florence Short, Vivian Oakland, Ralph Austin, Edwin Martin—and the baby.

"SILENT VOICE" IS GIVEN SPECIAL SHOWING IN CHICAGO

Chicago, Aug. 25.

Fred J. Balshofer, director general of the Quality Pictures Corporation, gave a special inaugural presentation of "The Silent Voice," its latest production featuring Francis X. Bushman, at the Studebaker theatre on August 19.

Mr. Bushman was present in person at the showing in order to express his appreciation to his many Chicago friends.

"THE DIVINE DECREE"

(American—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

WHILE there is nothing about this production to make it stand out vividly among two-reel features, nevertheless it is a good picturization of a clean story which contains sufficient human interest to make it thoroughly entertaining. There is some touching juvenile acting at the outset which will appeal to any audience.

The story deals with childhood love which exists between Tom and Dora, two children who live with their criminal parents in the same tenement house. At the death of her mother, Dora is sent to live with her aunt in the country. Shortly after this, the two fathers are convicted of robbery and sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary. Tom grows up in his squalid surroundings and follows his father's vocation of crime, while Dora in the healthy atmosphere of her country home develops into wholesome womanhood thinking that her father is in Alaska. The two fathers are released and return thoroughly reformed to their respective families.

Tom scoffs at his father's admonition to lead an upright life, but the thought of his childhood sweetheart has more weight with him, and the vision of Dora appearing before him while he is cracking a safe causes him to decide to reform. Hopping a freight train, he is carried to the vicinity of Dora's home, and arrives just in time to soundly thrash Dora's country sweetheart who is in the act of forcibly kissing her. They discover each other's identity and their youthful love is revived, much to the joy of the two reformed fathers.

Winifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen, as leads, are assisted by Lizette Thorne, Edward Rainey and Otto Nelson.

"MORTMAIN"

(V-L-S-E—Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS subject of Vitagraph's is a distinct triumph in regard to its construction, acting and direction. It is an adaptation from Arthur Train's story of the same name and embraces a theme almost untouched in the world of motion pictures. It is uncanny, weird, tremendously startling and ever increasing in interest with each successive scene. It is full of surprises, unthought of revelations and ultra dramatic episodes that command the spectator to keep his eyes fastened to the screen every instant.

Mortmain is in debt to Russell, who on the surface is his friend. Moreover he is in love with Russell's ward, Belle, whom Russell covets himself. Mortmain's notes falling due, Russell demands payment, knowing that his debtor will be unable to comply with this exhortation. That night Russell is murdered and by a peculiar coincidence Mortmain falls and cuts his hand. Before dressing the wound the doctor gives him ether. Later he discovers that he must lose his hand. The doctor suggests that he graft one in its place. Belle's brother offers his for a sum of money. During the operation the brother dies while Mortmain's end of the operation is successful.

Later he becomes maddened. He believes that the dead man committed the murder—the grafted hand repels him. And finally when Belle discovers that her brother died in saving her sweetheart, and when Mortmain sees culminating evidences of a double murder gathering about him the unexpected climax arrives.

All the action following the taking of the anaesthetic has been due to distortions of the mind. On his awakening Mortmain discovers Belle's brother still alive and the real murderer apprehended in the person of a man who was formerly ruined by Russell.

This dream, however, has been so skillfully introduced that the termination is altogether unexpected, yet perfectly logical. Mortmain's visions, depicting blurred and changing faces while entering and coming out of the effect of the ether, are clever bits of technical work well handled by Director Theodore Marston.

Counting largely in favor of the picture are the most significant facial expressions of the various players. Robert Edeson, who appears in the title role; Donald Hall, who enacts the part of Russell; Muriel Ostriche, playing Belle, and James Morrison, as her brother, are the chief members of the cast and all do credit to the general excellent tone of the photoplay.

The scenes are all admirable. It is impossible to believe that some of the substantial appearing settings are of studio construction. The photography is excellent throughout, while the light effects deserve to be especially mentioned regarding their effectiveness.

The supporting cast consists of J. Herbert Frank, Edward Elkas and M. Osborne.

For offering original entertainment in a style most artistic and appropriate, we do not hesitate in refering all exhibitors to "Mortmain."

"POOR SCHMALTZ"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

NEVER before to our memory has Famous Players produced that sort of a comedy which is popularly designated as slapstick. Here it has offered one to the many who exhibit pictures of the Famous Players brand, starring no less a distinguished comedy artist than Sam Bernard, the noted character comedian of the legitimate stage.

Slapstick though the comedy is, it would count as nothing if the perfected mannerisms of Bernard's were absent. He will undoubtedly score a genuine laughing success in "Poor Schmaltz," and it is to be fondly hoped that in the future he will again symbolize humor in a Famous Players production.

The action of the comedy is not allowed to drag to any great extent. The fun is practically in successive episodes from one end of the picture to the other, and while not all of it excites boisterous laughter, it is all unadulterated humor.

Schmaltz makes little money as a barber, so, discovering that he closely resembles a count, he completely disguises himself as this gentleman and introduces himself to a wealthy brewer and his daughter. The brewer is delighted with the prospect of having a count as his son-in-law, but daughter takes most unkindly to the idea, she being in love with a plain young man. Then it develops that the real count, being a member of some sort of anarchist society, has been selected to put an end to the brewer and further uproarious complications are the result.

In the end poor Schmaltz goes back to barbering, finding it a much safer and saner business.

As is usually the case, a skeleton of the plot does little justice to the humor of a comedy offering. There are bits of incidental humor, comical situations and clever characterizations, all of which aid in the ultimate success of the picture. Mr. Bernard has been allotted a competent supporting cast composed of Robert Broderick, Conway Tearle, Dick Bernard, Ruby Hoffman and Leonore Thompson.

"A MOTHER'S CONFESSION"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SMALL doubt exists as to whether Mr. Abramson's pictures are favorites with a sundry class of the motion picture public. His visualized stories have always entertained, perhaps enthralled an untutored audience. He puts the peculiar strength in his productions that is undoubtedly appreciated by the aforementioned slice of the country's population.

With the case of "A Mother's Confession," every word of the above holds true. The picture is endowed with an appeal, which will have its best effect among the audience of the variety already described. We sincerely hope that none will take offense at the above statement. The story is the only thing in the picture that is just a little rough, but just that little is enough to cause it to be disliked by persons of refinement.

In photographic effects the picture easily ranks with the better class, the histrionic ability of the cast is appropriate, while the settings as well correspond in effectiveness. The theme, however, is somewhat disagreeable, though powerful; sometimes its sensuality is startling.

The entire story may be suggested from the idea given by the title. A young man and woman, ignorant of the fact that they are related through possessing the same father, are about to be married when the groom's mother steps in and halts the proceedings.

The greater portion of the picture is employed to show the circumstances which create the denouement. It rests largely on this point: husband and wife are separated, due to the former's business for a period of years, and the husband to gain wealth and social prominence commits bigamy.

Contained in the story are scenes which are striking because of their power and fearlessness. The theme has been developed with an appreciation of all the properties productive of suspense by Mr. Abramson.

In the roles of the husband and wife Sydney L. Mason and Chrystine Mayo perform. The lovers of the second generation are played by Otto Kruger and Bargaurot Adair. Austin Webb, featured in the picture with Miss Mayo, does good work throughout.

"THE SILENT VOICE"

(Quality-Metro)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN has raised himself to the position of the Matinee Idol of the Films. Wide-awake exhibitors do not need to be reminded of this, but it must be taken into account in criticising a picture which is all Bushman, from a trade standpoint. His name is a great asset in any theatre lobby; a conservative estimate is that there are 840,000 of the "home-town girls" between Tenth avenue, New York, and Oakland, Cal., sighing over Mr. Bushman, and where the home-town girls go, the whole town goes.

This is the strong point in Mr. Bushman's "art" and it is strongly emphasized in "The Silent Voice." There is no weak spot in the picture—one that a captious critic could put his finger on and say: "Here it is bad." He might see too much Bushman, and be impressed with Mr. Bushman's inability to get himself out of the character of Francis X. Bushman, but these are just the qualities the picture "fans" are howling for, so why not let them have them?

Nothing has been overlooked by the Quality studios to make the picture technically and artistically excellent. The expedient of advancing, receding and swinging the camera to command one vast exterior, instead of showing the corners of a big room by so many different sets, gives unusual atmosphere and attraction to these parts of the picture. The exterior locations are beautiful, and the photography is of the highest order. Nearly all the film has been re-developed into a rich sepia tone, adding greatly to the beauty of the general effect.

The story is that of a young musician, who is stricken with deafness on the eve of his great success. He becomes bitter, and secludes himself, until he meets the Girl, when the world takes on a different color. After his marriage, a false friend tries to estrange his wife from him, with so much of success that the musician casts off both, and takes a vow to give the remainder of his life to the destruction of all beauty. He is turned from his purpose by an opportunity to aid a young couple in sore distress. Later he regains his hearing, and is happily reunited to his wife.

Marguerite Snow is convincing and finished in her portrayal of the girl and wife. There is no doubt "The Silent Voice" will be one of the most successful of Mr. Bushman's pictures.

"THE GALLOPER"

(Pathé—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

AUTHOR, scenario-writer, director and actors have worked harmoniously together to achieve a triumph of polite comedy in this picturization of a much-told Richard Harding Davis story. Readers who get the impression from this that the four are mentioned above in the order of their seeming importance to the production will be correct.

"The Galloper" was first written by Mr. Davis as a novel; then, with the assistance of Wallace Irwin, was made into a musical comedy, and under the name of "The Yankee Tourist" was successfully played by Raymond Hitchcock and company all over the country; now it is a picture, with Clifton Crawford and Fania Marinoff doing the chief honors.

"COPE" DECIDES ON ANOTHER HUNTING TRIP

As presented by Pathé, it is a comedy in which real humor has been produced without resort to slapstick or ancient stage devices. The director, Donald McKenzie, has grasped the fact that logic and consistency are not enemies of real humor, and the arm of coincidence is not stretched beyond the point usually found necessary in farce on the spoken stage. Clifton Crawford proves himself a screen actor of rare excellence, and his comedy "gets across" with telling effect every time.

One sees the hounded war correspondent start for Greece on the same steamer with the pretty nurse and the idle millionaire, who has decided on another hunting trip to relieve his ennui; sees the millionaire fall in love with the nurse, and impersonate the war correspondent in order to follow her to the front; and also sees him fall heir to the little annoyances which followed the real correspondent, such as a divorced wife, an insistent fiancee, and a small squad of Greek officers anxious to fight a series of trifling duels. And, of course, the happy ending.

The settings have been carefully arranged, and the atmosphere is correct—so far as the average stay-at-home can tell, at least. The photography is faultless.

"HELENE OF THE NORTH"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE verbiage of the press agent cannot often be taken at face value, but with the case of "Heléne of the North" no exhibitor need hesitate regarding the sincerity of this gentleman's outbursts of enthusiasm. He remarks that Marguerite Clark attains greater success in this picture than in any of her previous screen triumphs, and also that Heléne is an unique character, both of which laudatory statements are unquestionably true.

But in the review on the herald, the press agent delves little into the entrancing personality of Miss Clark, perhaps believing that that is too obvious to comment upon. At all events, we will comment upon the attractive characterization rendered by the star. A considerable portion of Miss Clark's role calls for light playing, in which phases of the picture she is particularly effective and pleasing. In fact, this winsome atmosphere created by Miss Clark, which runs its course intermingled with the dramatic intensity of the story, creates an added interest and suspense.

It is due to the excellent construction of the story that Miss Clark has been afforded such an appropriate role. Heléne is the daughter of a once proud Englishman who exiles himself to Canada when revealed as a card cheat. In the northern wilds he continues his evil life in company with one Pierre, a half-breed.

They are constantly in danger of capture by the soldiers, one of whom Heléne loves dearly.

Through all the scenes in which Heléne is attempting to remain loyal to her father, and at the same time longing to fulfill the dictates of her heart, the story, by nature of its construction, commands undivided interest. Toward the end of the picture its dramatic intensity increases, and Miss Clark's role is wholly heavy.

Situations of a most original nature are introduced, too cleverly formed and numerous to be related here, but which aid materially in the production's success.

The direction has been capably handled by J. Searle Dawley. The scenes are convincingly appropriate in all instances save for the noticeable appearance of an artificial back drop. Conway Tearle as Heléne's lover, Elliott Dexter as Pierre, Frank Losee as her father, and Brigham Royce as the Indian have the roles next in importance to Miss Clark's.

THIRD GERALDINE FARRAR SUBJECT SHOWN IN LOS ANGELES

Los Angeles, Aug. 23.

The third Geraldine Farrar-Lasky subject was given a private showing at the Iris theatre, Hollywood, Saturday evening, August 14, at eleven o'clock, the guests being members of the Lasky company and well known players now at the West coast.

This subject has been named "The Temptation" and has more heart interest than either of the preceding Farrar photoplays. The grand opera singer is supported in this by Pedro de Cordoba as an ambitious composer, Theodore Roberts, the impresario, and Elsie Jane Wilson, the opera star, while Miss Farrar appears as the girl of talent who prefers to sing in music halls rather than do the bidding of the opera manager.

When her sweetheart's life depends upon the production of his opera, the girl accepts the conditions of the manager, but he is prevented from perpetrating his evil desires by his former star, who commits murder.

This subject, like all previous Lasky-Farrar plays, will be a notable one for its beautiful sets. One scene is a replica of the Metropolitan Opera House stage, and another represents one of the most fashionable cafes of New York City. A very unusual feature, and one that is not noticeable, is the fact that this does not contain an exterior scene, all having been made on the Lasky stage.

The attendance at this showing was a very notable one, in that the audience was made up of perhaps the best known players of the American legitimate and motion picture stages. There were many technical men and writers present, and the leading players were showered with congratulations following the showing.

"NEAL OF THE NAVY"

(Selig—Three Reels)

(Panama-Pathé—Second Episode)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

WITH Lillian Lorraine and William Courtleigh, Jr., introduced for the first time, the second chapter of this serial has especial interest. There are a number of new thrills which keep the standard of action fully up to that of the opening chapter, reviewed last week. One of these, the climax of the episode, is furnished when the huge, brute-man in the employ of the two conspirators, cuts a rope ladder with his teeth, and hurls two pursuers down a lofty cliff.

There is also a chase by revenue officers, and the capture of the outlaws, who are imprisoned, but freed by the ape-man, who tears the iron bars from their cell window. "The Yellow Packet" is the title of this chapter, as the action revolves around the struggle for possession of the map of Lost Isle, which was wrapped in yellow oilskin, by Annette Illington's father, and left to her fifteen years before.

Annette is now shown as a charming girl of eighteen, and Neal as a boy of about the same age, the favorite of the naval officers and sailors with whom he has been thrown in contact. Annette assists Neal with advice and moral support in his struggle to rise, and when he reveals an ambition to try for Annapolis and become a real naval officer, she enthusiastically supports him.

The pictures show an unusual care in attention to details, and the scenes have been made as logical as is possible with a "thriller."

"THE MAN WITH THE IRON HEART"

(Selig—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

HENRY KOLKER is the author of this play of modern industrial conditions, which takes the form of an allegory in its closing scenes. The types are somewhat exaggerated, and the plot is of the style which has been popular in the films of recent months, judging from the frequency with which it has been used. Mr. Kolker, however, has managed to inject a great deal into it that is new, and the action is rapid, with situations which hold the interest and create a smooth story.

The "Man with the Iron Heart" is a great employer of labor, which he rules in harsh and brutal manner. His faithful cashier is late one day, because of lingering with his dying wife, but his explanations are disregarded, and he is discharged. He tells his story at union headquarters, and the dissatisfaction comes to a focus.

A petition from the men is torn up by the employer, who declares he will close his shops and starve them out.

The discharged cashier then appeals to the employer's wife, and she takes their part, separating from her husband, and declaring she will remain away until he shows a better spirit toward the men. There are strike riots, and in one of them the iron-hearted man is shot. Conscience and Death both appear at his bedside.

He overcomes Death, but Conscience he cannot quiet. He is led to repent his cruelties, and is reunited to his wife.

The cast is capable, including Al. Filson, Lillian Hayward, Fred Hearn, Lafayette McKee, George Demerest, Vivian Reed and Cecil Holland.

"HEARTS AND ROSES"

(Essanay—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

THIS production initiates Darwin Karr to Essanay pictures. The success of his debut promises that he will be a happy addition to their continually growing list of stars. He shows marked ability in the portrayal of the character of Dr. Frank Norton.

Playing opposite him is Beverly Bayne, who, as Ruth Willard, displays both charm and talent. The part of her father, Daniel Willard, is well executed by Richardson Cotton. Herbert Haywood, in the heavy role of John Baxter, registers the villianous characteristics of the mercenary heartbreaker, to the extent of overacting the part at times.

The story, written by Joseph A. Roach, tells how Ruth Willard scorns the honest love of Dr. Norton, a respected friend of the family, and accepts the proposal of marriage made by John Baxter, a fortune-seeking heart-breaker. He jilts her when she is left penniless at the death of her father. Dr. Norton assumes the financial responsibility of Mr. Willard's bank, and finally Ruth listlessly agrees to marry him. As time passes, Ruth continues to ignore the doctor's affections, and when Baxter later returns, she allows him to visit her in her husband's absence. Dr. Norton decides to leave his wife and allow him to obtain a divorce, but at the station a vision of her dead father appears and he falters in his decision. Ruth, when she finds that her husband is gone, realizes that she is really in love with him, so when he returns to the house, she joyously throws herself into his arms.

"THE COTTON KING"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

EXHIBITORS who cater to that throng of the motion picture public that takes particular delight in witnessing an old fashioned melodrama, a melodrama that in its mad and rushing course quite disregards logic and detail, will find "The Cotton King" a money-making picture. It cannot be classified with the artistically good productions, in fact, it is most remote from this class, yet judging from the warm reception accorded past productions of a like nature it is destined to receive a cordial welcome from the lovers of melodrama.

We might stop to take exception to a dozen or more incidents in the picture, some of little significance and others of larger consequence, but coming after the foregoing statement, this would be stretching the point. Let the exhibitor judge for himself whether his patrons are likely to take kindly to "The Cotton King" which may harmlessly be defined as a "crude melodrama."

The story outlines the attempt of one Stockley to ruin his employer, the owner of certain cotton mills. For monetary purposes he covets Osborne's fiancee and finally failing in his attempt to alienate her affections by casting her innocent lover in a hateful light he throws her down the elevator shaft in the cotton mill and intends murdering her by allowing the lift to descend. But happily for the heroine, Osborne turns up in the nick of time, rescues his love and captures the villain.

It takes five reels to tell the story of villainy and love and at times the film seems to approach a termination but it branches off again on some other theme and only reaches an end after almost every melodramatic trick has been utilized.

In the leading role George Nash makes a manly figure of Osborne. Julia Hay as his fiancee and Eric Mayne as the heavy furnish fitting support. Oscar Eagle directed.

"RANSON'S FOLLY"

(Edison-General—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

ADMIRABLY adapted to screen presentation, Richard Harding Davis' story has been admirably adapted and screened by the Edison studios. The most has been made of the action, and the color of official and army post life has been well retained. Marjorie Ellison and Edward Earle, as Mary Cahill and Lieutenant Ranson, easily hold the center of interest, and the work of both justifies their being cast in the respective parts.

The picture covers a wide variety of life. Opening with scenes in a convent, the action passes to a Bowery saloon, to Washington society, to official surroundings, and finally to an army post in the far west. There is a "fade-in" scene of a battle in the Philippines. The scenario expertly allows for a logical flow of the story through all these vicissitudes, and a cumulative interest which holds the spectator to the finish. For these reasons it has an appeal directed to every type of audience, and every section of the country, as the experiences of the characters portrayed carried them through so many environments, that one will find a response in almost any group of spectators.

The story is that of Patrick Cahill, saloonkeeper, who sells out and takes his daughter Mary west, in order to live down the odium of his past life. She meets Lieutenant Ranson, a dashing young officer with most of his experience ahead of him. To show his fearlessness, he playfully holds up the stage coach, and boasts of his achievement, until he learns that at almost the same hour the army paymaster was held up and the driver of his rig killed. Ranson is accused of the crime, and seeing that the young officer is in danger, Cahill commits suicide, leaving a note saying that he was the highwayman and murderer.

EDUCATIONAL FILM MOVES FROM CHICAGO TO CLEVELAND

Cleveland is to be the headquarters of the Educational Film Corporation, which formerly was located in Chicago. President G. L. Warson of the corporation says that a complete motion picture studio will be in operation in Cleveland by December 1.

R. H. McLoughlin, manager of the Colonial theatre, and Paul C. Mooney, Cleveland, manager of the Fox Film Corporation, also announce that a motion picture company they have been organizing is to be affiliated with the new Cleveland studio.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR THE BUSY EXHIBITOR

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"A Triple Winning." (Biograph. Mon., Aug. 30.)—Isabel Rea and Hector V. Sarno are featured in this story of a young deputy sheriff of the West, in love with the sheriff's daughter. She tells him she will not wed until he has won his spurs. At the same time a reward is offered for the capture of a notorious bandit. The young man fails to connect with the posse, is accused of cowardice and stripped of his badge. Dejected, he wanders in the forest, when he meets the bandit, grapples with him, and with the girl's aid, makes his capture.

"The Mystery of Henry Villard." (Biograph. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 31.)—In this we are offered an unusually interesting and well-produced picture of Southern life before the war. Villard's fiancee dies of a broken heart on discovering his perfidy, and her sister's sweetheart vows vengeance on him. The next day Villard is found shot to death, and the threat is recalled.

The young man is arrested, but the mystery is explained when an idle character of the town tells of a duel, in which Villard employed him to hide in the wood and shoot Villard's adversary before he had a chance to fire. The assassin, however, applied himself to the bottle, and forgot his part, with the result that Villard fell in the encounter. Isabel Rea, Helen Bray, William J. Butler, Hector V. Sarno, Madge Kirby and Frank Newburg compose the cast.

"Dora." (Biograph. Three reels.)—Reviewed in the issue of August 28.

"The Stranger in the Valley." (Biograph. Thurs., Sept. 2.)—Claire McDowell is very effective in this film. It is the story of a doctor's wife who, separated from her husband, takes her child to live in a country town. The mill owner's son falls in love with her, but she tells him she cannot wed. Later, the child of a neighbor becomes seriously ill, and the doctor's wife telegraphs for her husband. On the way he is killed in an automobile accident, leaving the woman free to marry her admirer.

"The Wanderer." (Biograph. Fri., Sept. 3.)—Here is another Griffith re-issue, in which Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh and Lionel Barrymore appear. The story is poetic, telling of a wandering musician, whose flute is heard in farmhouse and village, recalling those who have wandered into crime, back to the paths of their childhood. A murder is stopped, a sordid marriage prevented, and happiness spread over the countryside.

"The Wheel of the Gods." (Biograph. Sat., Sept. 4.)—This is a story to be especially commended through its delicate treatment of a delicate subject. The middle-aged doctor's wife falls in love with a younger man, and is about to flee with him when her husband returns to the house. The lover sees him coming and quickly descends to the office, where he pretends to have called for a consultation.

The physician, suspecting the real situation, makes an examination, and tells the young man his heart valves are worn out and he has only a short time to live. The power of suggestion is so strong the victim shoots himself. Augusta Anderson is charming in the lead, and Charles Bennett, Charles Perley and Clarrette Clair complete a strong cast.

"Cartoons on Tour." (Edison.)—One of the Racul Barre series with the cartoons interpolating a drama. Very funny and very well done.

"Across the Great Divide." (Edison. Sat., Sept. 4.)—He goes West to make a fortune and a home for Her. He struggles in vain for years, and at the end of that time is a telegraph operator in a railway station. There is a hold-up planned by train robbers, and one of them enters the station and, covering the operator with a pistol, compels him to send a message which will cause a head-on collision.

After sending it, he receives a message for himself, telling him She has died, leaving the message that she will meet him "across the Great Divide." Knowing that it means death, he seizes the key and cancels the train order, and the bandit immediately shoots him. He has enough strength left to shoot his murderer as the latter attempts to escape.

"The Simp and the Sophomore." (Edison. Wed., Sept. 1.)—A college life comedy. The two leading characters are Raymond McKee as the simp and Arthur Houseman as the sophomore. There is a love affair mixed up in it and, after being liberally hazed, the simp proves to be a regular fellow. Harry Eytinge, Jean Dumar and O. N. Hardy are the other players.

"The Return of Gentleman Joe." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 31.)—One of the most exciting of Henry C. Rowland's series of stories of Dominica Meduns, a "genteel thief." She steals a valuable necklace at a reception, and on the way home meets with a notorious criminal who has threatened to kill her.

To escape him she gets into a cab with a wealthy young man about town, whom she knows. He forces his attentions on her, and in trying to avoid him she discloses the pearls. He then threatens to turn her over to the police unless she grants his wishes, but in the nick of time her sweetheart shows up and saves her.

"Mixing It Up." (Kalem. Tues., Aug. 31.)—A "Ham" comedy without "Ham." Only "Bud" is in this side-splitting comedy release. A rather clever setting of a "dumb-waiter" is used in a number of scenes with good effect and many laughs are the direct results. The whole story is based on two cases of mistaken identity, both resulting from a burglar scare. An out of the ordinary slap stick.

"The False Clew." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 1.)—No. 7 of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel" series, and different from its forerunners in that it is a comedy drama instead of the regular melodrama style. Quite a clever vein of comedy runs through the two reels all resulting from a matinee idol imagining himself an infallible sleuth. The regular hotel sets as used in the earlier numbers are used and good acting on the part of the principals, coupled with the welcome comedy, make this release one of the best of the series.

"Gangsters of the Hills." (Kalem. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 3.)—A story of a counterfeiting gang with melodrama trimmings. The detective lover of a mountain girl finds her father a member of the gang, although she had been taught to believe him dead. The father is shot by one of the gang and the girl is not undeceived. Good exteriors, excellent photography, especially in the case of the mountain views, an interesting story, and good acting make this a good number.

"The Broken Rail." (Kalem. Sat., Sept 4.)—One of the "Hazards of Helen" series, with the entailing railroad-telegraph office story of the rail. A tramp operator, whose life had been saved by Helen is given a job as telegrapher in Helen's station and she is transferred to the main office. Later, in revenge for his discharge for laziness he almost kills a train crew working at a wreck caused by his negligence, only to be frustrated by Helen. Not up to the high standard set by others of the same series.

"A Mile a Minute Monty." (Lubin. Tues., Aug. 31.)—On same reel with "Avenging Bill and the Haunted Hat." This is a cartoon comedy by Leon Sells, the noted artist. The crying of his baby drives Monty from his home. In true cartoon fashion he uses a flying machine as the vehicle of his escape.

All sorts of weird and wonderful adventures fall to his lot, and he is led a merry dance in the air and the desert and all through queer countries.

"A Romance of Mexico." (Lubin. Mon., Aug. 30.)—What, with its tale of love, revenge, suspicion and peril, added to the beautiful scenery and fine photography always shown by Romaine Fielding's productions, this release should become a popular one.

The story tells how Jim French loving Carmen almost loses her through his revengeful rival Juan, who persuades Pablo, Nita's brother, that Jim is unworthy. The scene where Jim is saved from Pablo by Nita shooting the rope (up which both are climbing) between them, is most exciting. All ends as it should. Jack Lawton, Vinnie Burns, Henry Russell, Josephine Keith, John Gordon form the cast.

"Avenging Bill." (Lubin. Tues., Aug. 31.)—Split reel with the "Haunted Hat," and "Mile a Minute Monty." Slap stick for true with Epes Sargent as author, J. A. Murphy as producer. Mabel Paige, Roy Byron, Eloise Willard, Babe Hardy as actors. Lucy Slavey, Bill, a grocer's boy, Mr. and Mrs. Grouch do the chasing around. Needless to say a policeman is part of the chasing program. Of course a marriage between Lucy and Bill is equally inevitable.

"The Haunted Hat." (Lubin. Tues., Aug. 31.)—On same reel with "Mile a Minute Monty" and "Avenging Bill." A black cat, an old hat, a lot of silly excited village folk, the fire and police department, form the dramatis personae. When the villagers see the cat and the hat gyrating around they think it a spook, hence the trouble. Kitty seems to have the star part in the performance.

"In Spite of Him." (Lubin. Fri., Sept. 3.)—Very human is this little story. Every woman who goes to see it in her husband's company will be pointing the moral at him. It tells how Nathan Biddle could never see how his wife needed new clothes as long as there were no holes in the old ones.

"In spite of him" she gets a new frock from mother. When she refuses to tell him where she got her finery, he suspects her of all sorts of naughtiness. In righteous anger she leaves him.

Remorse overtaking him he prowls around the house and finds mother's letter. Hastily following the injured one, she magnanimously forgives him. Thurston Hall, Ethel Clayton, Florence Williams play the scenario of George Terwilliger, directed by Joseph Kaufman.

"An Artful Artist." (Lubin. Sat., Sept. 4.)—Billie Reeves with his usual company, usual director, usual author is with us for his usual Saturday release. Billie is here shown as a janitor who dresses up in the artist's clothes.

When the climbing society lady comes to offer big money to the society fad to paint her portrait, Bill nothing loath grabs it. Hubby, jealous and determined, follows wifie to the studio. Result, no green backs but a black and blue back for Bill. The bright, particular moment for a laugh is when Bill falls crashing through the studio skylight.

"The Way of a Woman's Heart." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 30.)—A strong story, well told. Claude Harris, an actor, parts from Rose March, his sweetheart, after their theatrical company has broken up, and goes to accept a position offered by his uncle. He falls in love with another girl, and forgets Rose.

The new love has a desire to go on the stage, and years later announces her intention to call on a famous actress and ask her help. Claude goes to the actress, to ask her to discourage the girl, and finds she is the Rose of his stage days. Notwithstanding he has wronged her, the woman in her comes to the surface, and she sends the stage-struck young woman back to Claude.

"The Leaving of Lawrence." (Selig. Tues., Aug. 31.)—Twin brothers, after inheriting fortunes, separate. Lawrence stays at home and squanders his share and finds himself in difficulties. The other goes West and strikes it rich. He returns just as a young woman who has given Lawrence her photograph and has gotten into an embarrassing position thereby, is searching the room for it. At first he mistakes her for a burglar, but in a few moments all is explained and a wedding follows.

"The Awful Adventures of an Aviator." (Selig. Split reel. Sat., Sept. 4.)—There are a number of novelties in this jungle-zoo wild animal comedy, written by Roy McCardell. Harold McFutt tells so many stories of his prowess as an aviator that his bluff is finally called, and he has to fly. His machine breaks in midair, and he falls into an oil well, continuing on through to Africa, where hair-raising adventures await him. Then he wakes to find it a dream. On the same reel is another comedy: "Knockout Dugan's Find."

"What's in a Name." (Beauty. Sat., Aug. 21.)—A lively bit of comedy in which Alderman Shea is initiated into modern methods of fishing with rod, line and other tackle. He is so grateful to the young man who has shown him the new idea that when he finds the detested admirer of his daughter and the young angler are the same person he welcomes the youth into his family. Beatrice Van, John Sheehan and John Stepling compose the cast.

"The Living Wage." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Aug. 26.)—An absorbing and instructive story of a millionaire who refused to aid a girl, on the ground that "anybody can live on $4.60 a week." To prove his point he placed himself on this allowance, and went to live for a month in a tenement. There he met the very girl in question, and learned without knowing who she is, just how deep was her distress. To help her he assists in burglarizing his own house. Later when all is explained, he weds the girl, and undergoes a change in ideas.

"A Question of Honor." (Flying A. Fri., Aug. 27.)—Joe, a miner, gives a verbal option on a claim for $1,000. Later his daughter in the city writes him that her husband is in trouble and must have $2,000 by a certain date or go to jail. At the same time another man offers Joe $2,000 for his claim, but the miner is bound by his word to sell it to the first man.

On the date of the option the prospective purchaser has not the money, and asks for an extension of time, but Joe refuses, and joyfully hunts up the man who offered $2,000, receives the money just in time to wire it to his daughter and prevent the disgrace of her husband.

"Keno Bates, Liar." (Kay-Bee. Fri., Aug. 27.)—This is a thrilling drama of life in the West. Keno Bates, proprietor of a dance hall, shoots and kills a bandit who has robbed him. From a picture in the dead man's pocket, he learns that the latter's sister is about to arrive on a visit, and when the girl reaches the camp he conspires with his friends to tell her her brother was killed in a mine accident.

A dancer, jealous of the new arrival, tells her the truth, and she shoots Bates in the shoulder. When she learns the real circumstances of her brother's death she repents and nurses Bates back to health. William S. Hart is supported in the cast, by Margaret Thompson, Herschel Mayall, Louise Glaum and Gordon Mullen.

"A Child of the Surf." (Majestic. Two reels. Sun. Aug. 29.)—"Teddy" Sampson is featured in this idyl of a seaside village, as the granddaughter of an aged fisherman. Robert, son of a contractor who is building a jetty at the town, falls in love with Nancy, but owing to her grandfather's aversion to "city fellers" is obliged to disguise himself as one of the workmen in order to meet her.

There is great opposition to the contractor and his work, in the village, but through some sharp detective work, Robert conserves his father's interests, and at the risk of his own life, saves the girl from a slander plot. The aged grandfather is finally won over. Spottiswoode Aitken, Frank Borsage and T. Butler are in the cast.

"Shocking Stockings." (Komic. Sun., Aug. Aug. 29)—An unusually ludicrous fight for the varying affections of Fay Tincher, between honest Ed Dillon and Old Doc Villian (Chester Whitey). Papa thinks Fay is safe when she is buried in the sand at the beach with only her lower limbs exposed, but Ed gets a pair of wooden ones—lower limbs, that is, covers them with real stockings, and puts them in Fay's place while he and Fay go off to the Ferris wheel.

But Villian is on the job, locks Ed in his seat on the Ferris wheel, and goes swimming with Fay. The wheel is blocked while Ed is at the top, but he dives from his seat into the sea, and joins Fay. There is plenty of action, and a good supply of laughs.

"The Vagabonds." (Thanhouser. Sun., Aug. 29.)—A picturesque version of J. T. Trowbridge's poem, in which the most convincing player is Roger, the dog. The story is told by rather primitive methods, the vagabond relating it to a chance acquaintance over a wayside inn table, while a series of fade-ins show the action. Morris Foster plays the beggar and Grace De Carlton the girl.

"A Masive Movie Mermaid." (Falstaff. Mon., Aug. 30.)—This is good comedy. It relates the troubles of the director of the Desperation Film Company in filming a geat water tagedy. The leading woman resigns after being bitten by a crab, and the substitute sent out from the studio is built on the generous lines of a summer cloud—only more substantial. Other complications result in the director, who thought he was putting on a tragedy, being hailed as a great director of comedies.

"For His Pal." (Reliance. Mon., Aug. 30.)—A strong story of the lengths to which a man's friendship for another will carry him. It is a tale of the gold fields. Jo and Jim, partners, stake out a claim together; Priscilla, Jim's wife, comes on to join him, and Jo discovers that she is a former sweetheart of his.

A discharged Chinese cook locks Jo and Priscilla in a room together, and tells Jim his partner is making love to his wife. Jim hurries to the house, furious. To save Priscilla, Jo tells Jim he came to rob him of some gold nuggets, and Priscilla is holding him up. The admission breaks their long friendship, and Jo disappears. Later, the Chinaman, dying, confesses his part in the affair. In the cast are A. D. Sears, G. M. Blue, Irene Hunt and J. P. McCarthy.

"The Divine Decree." (American. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 30.)—Reviewed at length in another part of this issue.

"Green Apples." (Beauty. Tues., Aug. 31.)—Fifteen or twenty real live, red-blooded newsboys inject considerable comedy into this picture, which shows how a young physician who goes to the country for peace and quiet finds a great lack of both, but is compensated by falling in love with a young suffragette, who is conducting a noisy newsboys' outing in the camp next door. Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell appear in this picture.

"Hearts and Flowers." (Majestic. Tues., Aug. 31.)—The highly improbable story of a musician, who is attacked by a tramp as he starts out on a tour, and the tramp, who has stolen his victim's clothes, being killed in a railroad wreck, the musician's wife is informed that her husband is dead.

Instead, he wanders for years with his memory a blank, and finally he strikes the little town where his wife and son are living. She recognizes him marching at the head of a street parade, and claims him, only to find he has no recollection of her. His mind is restored by an operation, and there is a happy ending.

"The Turning Point." (Reliance. Wed., Sept. 1.)—This is an unusual story of Washington life. Drummond, formerly an Alaskan prospector, is in love with Elinor, sister of Senator Delafield, to whom Drummond bears a striking resemblance.

Drummond learns that the Senator is in danger of becoming incriminated in a plot against the government, and to save him he seizes upon a moment when the senator is too ill to attend a meeting of the conspirators, and goes himself as the senator.

He makes a speech which saves Delafield's honor, and wins Elinor as his prize. Ralph Lewis doubles as Delafield and Drummond. Other parts are played by Marguerite Marsh, Wilbur Highby, Fred Stuart, Henry Mack and James Cosgrave.

"The Spirit of Adventure." (American. Wed., Sept. 1.)—A wealthy young bachelor, who is bemoaning the oft-repeated fact that adventure is dead in this modern age, sees a beautiful young woman apparently being kidnapped in a park opposite his home, and his desire to rescue the fair victim leads to an investigation, which results in the discovery that she is a notorious jewel thief. Entertaining in a mild and harmless way. Edward Spencer in chasing a taxicab discloses more ability as a runner than as an actor. Vivian Rich and Jack Richardson add to the strength of the cast.

"Making Matters Worse." (Cub. Thurs., Sept. 2.)—George Ovey certainly does make matters worse as to his standing with the police, but not at all for the standing of the Horsley comedies. This is the third. Although extravagantly illogical, it is diverting and really funny. To escape the police, on whom he has dropped a three-ton rock, Jerry dresses as a serving maid, and manages to make all kinds of trouble around the house until he is unmasked and arrested.

"Hidden Crime." (Reliance. Fri., Sept. 3.)—Love, jealousy and crime combine to make a thrilling story in this one-reel Western subject. A ranch owner, in love with the sheriff's daughter, becomes jealous of the sheriff's assistant, and spreads the report that the latter is an ex-convict. The sheriff orders the young man to leave the district, but the girl refuses to believe the story, and elopes with him.

They are pursued by the rancher, who assaults his successful rival and, fearing he has killed him, starts a prairie fire to cover his crime. The girl gets help, rescues her sweetheart and brings the ranchman to justice. Irene Hunt is assisted in the cast by G. M. Blue, A. D. Sears, Richard Cummings and Bessie Buskirk.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC.

"Pathe Weekly, No. 64." (Pathe.) U. S. Coast Guard lifesavers give a demonstration at Chicago; women at work on munitions of war in England; Dario Resta makes 102.85 miles an hour in auto race, with other scenes of contest in Chicago; little son of Governor and Mrs. Whitman, with his guard, at Newport; lessons of the Eastland disaster result in the ballasting of a big Chicago whaleback with 790,000 pounds of sand; South American diplomats confer with Washington officials over the Mexican situation; transference of the "suffrage torch" from New York to New Jersey women in the Hudson River; test of floating mines in Boston harbor; third log-rolling of the Woodmen of the World, at Hawkinsville, Ga.

"The Marcenay Fish Ponds." (Pathé. Split reel.)—A most interesting educational reel, showing the system of feeding and breeding fish. There are several remarkable net hauls shown, and a study of some fine specimens of carp. On the same reel is "Picturesque French Guinea," showing magnificent views of superb waterfalls. The photography in both parts is most excellent.

"The Romance of Elaine, Chapter 34." (Pathé.)—"The Flash" is the title of this chapter of the famous "Exploits." It is full of thrilling adventure, not always consistent or coherent, but it is exciting and keeps everybody within range of the camera busy all the time.

Disguising himself as a taxi-chauffeur, the professor trails one of the conspirators, and traps him as he is passing a plan of the New York Harbor fortifications to a confederate. In an automobile chase, the professor is shot, but Elaine gets the plans, and through the artful arrangement of a camera, gets a photograph of the thief as he tries to regain them.

"Colonel Heeza Liar at the Bat." (Pathé. Split reel.)—This is one of the most delightful of the cartoon series yet issued. The colonel dominates the ball park, throwing remarkable curves, intimidating umpires, and knocking the ball finally into the mouth of a pelican, which holds it while the colonel makes as many home runs as he pleases. On the same reel is the sixth part of the "Intimate Study of Birds," this one being devoted to the carrier pigeon.

"Neal of the Navy. Chapter 1." (Panama.) Reviewed in issue of August 28.

"A Merry Chase." (Starlight.)—A real active comedy, in which Heinie and Louie rescue an heiress from her burning home, and as a reward Heine gets a job as janitor. Heinie is a glorious failure at any kind of work, and this, with Louie's experience with confidence gentry, creates a number of laughable situations.

"Pathe News, No. 66." (Pathe.)—Women archers in tournament at Chicago; 175,000 gallons of oil go up in a great fire at Whiting, Ind.; R. Norris Williams defeats Karl Behr at lawn tennis; General Villa and George L. Crothers call on General H. L. Scott, U. S. A., at El Paso; western Pennsylvania firemen on parade at convention; raising the hull of the ill-fated Eastland in Chicago River; exciting motor boat races at Port Washington, L. I.; Roy Repp does "stunts" with his bucking auto at Pittsburgh; Pathé Paris Fashions, in colors.

"Pathé News, No. 67." (Pathé.)—Scenes following the lynching of Leo Frank in Georgia; steamship Arabic leaving New York on her last voyage to England; Mexican Indians at El Paso celebrate the feast of their patron saint; the only baby zebra ever born in the New York zoo; recruiting scenes at Manchester, England; firing the great disappearing coast defense guns at San Francisco; animated cartoon by W. C. Morris.

"The Fallen Standard." (Balboa. Two reels.)—This is an interesting and well-told story of a young man whose puritanical standards and devotion to the virtue of his ancestors led him to cast off the girl of his real choice and marry another, who proves later to be the real sinner. In the beginning the girl goes to the city to try literature, and is successful.

She returns, bringing with her a baby, which she adopted after it was left beside her on a park bench. The young man insists on misunderstanding, casts off the girl, and marries another. Fifteen years later the adopted son is shot while robbing a bank, and the puritan's wife recognizes him as her son. She tells her husband the story of her betrayal, and in a fury he throws her violently to a sofa and kills her. The boy also dies.

"The Galloper." (Pathé.) Five reels.)—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

"Picturesque Java, and in Dahomey." (Pathé. Split reel.)—Here is a most picturesque collection of scenes from little known corners of the world. The photography is of high character, and the scenes chosen with a great artistic sense, resulting in a charming and educational film.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Animated Weekly, No. 181." (Wed., Aug. 25.)—A view of the two-mile bridge, which structure will link Long Island to New York City; sailors from the North Dakota and Minnesota, marching at the San Diego Fair; testing a new mail express device; Art Smith flying at the fair and numerous other items of interest.

"The Broken Coin." (Universal Special Feature. Two reels. Chapter 10.)—This instalment is merely one long chase in which all the parties in search of the halves of the coin participate. It is rather confusing at times, as the action is so fast that one cannot place the different people. Much that is thrilling is introduced, including an automobile chasing a train, the former vehicle running on the railroad tracks.

"The Chimney's Secret." (Victor. Wed., Aug. 25.)—A bank cashier poses at night as a beggar. As the cashier he robs the bank, then disappears into his other character. His sweetheart discovers his perfidy. He becomes conscience stricken and dies. This is novel and well played by Lon Chaney as the cashier, and Gretchen Lederer as the girl.

"Jewel." (Broadway Universal Feature. Five reels. Mon., Aug. 30.)—Reviewed at length in issue of Aug. 21.

"A Maid and a Man." (Nestor. Mon., Aug. 30.)—An average Nestor introducing nothing extraordinarily funny, yet containing enough laughs to well maintain the interest. Mother wants to marry her older daughter first, so when Jack comes to visit she makes the younger dress as maid. But Jack prefers the latter, and after some involved situations succeeds in winning her. Jack Dillon and Billie Rhodes are the leads.

"Misjudged." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Aug. 31.)—A misunderstanding between husband and wife, due to the interference of the man's partner mixed in a slight smattering of crook psychology, furnishes Harvey Gates with a theme containing many possibilities.

It has been produced in an entertaining style by William Worthington, although the latter stages of the play tend to deal wholly with the adventures of the estranged couple, Herbert Rawlinson, Anna Little, Agnes Vernon and Richard Sterling are the principals.

"The Only Child." (Imp. Tues., Aug. 31.)—A fine comedy, with King Baggot in the leading role. He has to mind his child while his wife is at the matinee, and the little girl proceeds to play havoc with the entire office. Finally they believe that she is locked in the safe, and after much trouble they get it open and in comes the child in its mother's arms. Old, but still very good.

"For Professional Reasons." (Big U. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 1.)—A drama written by Harvey Gates disproving the statement that "blood will tell." A girl proves that, though her father and brother are thieves, she inherits no such tendency. This story is cleverly developed, and culminates in a climax of unusual significance and power. Burton King directed.

"The Eagle." (Laemmle. Thurs., Sept 2.)—A satisfying drama with Hobart Henley and Grace Thompson in the leading parts. A girl searching for her brother unknowingly finds him when she falls into the hand of a gang of crooks in which he is an active member. His reformation comes in time to save him from the hands of the law.

"Tam o' Shanter." (Big U. Three reels. Thurs., Sept. 2.)—This based on the famous poem by Robert Burns, and depicts the farcial manner in which an old Scotchman was cured of the drink habit, and as a side incident gives the entertaining love affair of his daughter. There is much that is humorous in the picture, chiefly those scenes in which the wife of old Tam keeps guard over him, and the churchyard scene.

Murdock MacQuarrie, who directed it, can do better. The atmosphere is only semi-convincing, while better types of extras could have been selected. Some of the stone scenes are most plainly faked. MacQuarrie's Tam is an enjoyable figure, while as his wife and daughter respectively, Evelyn Thatcher and Majorie Beardsley appear.

"Lizzie and the Beauty Contest." (Nestor. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 3.)—Al Christie, Nestor's chief comedy director, took occasion to weave a most enjoyable comedy about the recent trip of the beauties to Universal City. Victoria Forde appears as the beauty from Weedville, who, after strenuous treatment from a beauty parlor artist, succeeds in winning the prize.

Ed Lyons and Lee Moran appear in roles through which they are easily able to create a great amount of laughter. Ruth Purcell, the actual winner of the contest, is also shown, together with such celebrities as Carl Laemmle, Pat Powers, Joe Brandt and Al Christie himself.

"Vagabond Love." (Victor. Fri., Sept. 3.)—By L. V. Jefferson; produced by Norman MacDonald and featuring Violet MacMillan, Kingsley Benedict and M. K. Wilson. A very pretty drama depicting the manner in which a traveling musician awoke the love in a cruel husband's heart, for the woman he (the musician) once loved himself.

"Coral.' (Bison. Four reels. Sat., Sept. 4.)—Olga Prinzlau Clark has taken those three ingredients of a popular society drama, the temperamental artist, his social butterfly of a wife and the little orphaned girl of the seashore, and made them the important incidents of this picture.

The story can easily be imagined. The husband is unsatisfied with his wife, and his meeting with the girl of his own heart causes him to neglect her. She is finally killed in a train wreck and the artist is free.

It is a story full of the most unexpected happenings, but likewise it is rather crudely developed. The direction under the care of Norman MacDonald has been fair in most instances, save for the studio storm shown through the window of the house. The wreck of the express trains constitutes a good thrill as well as being a good piece of mechanical trick work.

The cast is headed by Wellington A. Playter and Marie Walcamp, while Ruby Cox is seen as the wife. Miss Cox is quite wooden in this part.

"When Hiram Went to the City." (Joker. Sat., Sept. 4.)—A fair low comedy written by Tom Delmar, and produced by Curtis. The rube goes to the city, where he tries his hand at fighting, but is a dismal failure, and consequently his waitress love forsakes him. Max Asher, Gale Henry and Lillian Peacock are the principals.

"The Shot." (Powers. Two reels. Sun., Sept. 5.)—To prevent the man who is physically deficient from marrying, his brother demands him to kill himself. Refusing, the two men fight and the reprobate is killed in the scuffle. This picture starts with the murder and afterwards works backwards and forwards, the former to demonstrate the brother's motives for the killing, and the latter to unfold further developments of the plot.

Carl Le Viness produced this with a cast headed by Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn and Richard Sterling. It will interest, although at times the different places in which the action is transpiring is not clear. The minor support is rather poor.

"Gertie's Joy Ride." (L-Ko. Sun., Sept. 6.)—Seldom has this slapstick company released such a wholesome, mirth provoking fracas as this one reel subject, which, besides being unusually funny, is entirely free from questionable scenes.

The cast is headed by Gertrude Selby, Hank Mann and Reggie Morris. The plot is the conventional lover's mixup, but the chase in the end is the feature of the picture. It is wild, sensational, breath taking and funny, and puts a novel climax on a comedy that has several other original moments.

"WHEN A WOMAN LOVES"

(Rolfe-Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

WHEN, as it sometimes happens, Intelligence joins hands with Earnest Effort, results are almost certain. A keen observer has discovered that this rule applies even in the production of motion pictures. The results obtained by the B. A. Rolfe people in introducing Emmy Wehlen to the screen are of the kind which made Intelligence famous, and again recommend it to the favorable notice of the human race.

Delightful in her own personality, Emmy Wehlen has been given every assistance in her work, and a finished and charming picture is the consequence. Rare discernment in the selection of locations, the lighting of interiors, and the arrangements of the sets have been supplemented by striking effects, obtained simply by placing the camera where the average director would never think of placing it.

An impressive example of this is the rescue scene, where the summer hotel guests, on the balcony in the foreground, watch the overturned canoe and the victims in the water far below, through a perspective of pergolas, foliage, piazzas and shipping.

Applied logic and common sense have been used to produce a photograph of living action as truthful as the camera reports everything, unless someone interferes with it, and the picture amply rewards the energy expended on it. To tell the truth, such a production is no more than Emmy Wehlen deserves. Others in the cast to be congratulated are Arthur Ashley, Mrs. Costello, Arlotta De Felice and Frank Whitson.

A country girl comes to the city seeking work, in order to care for her aged and ailing mother. She becomes involved with her renegade sister, who is connected with a crowd of card sharps, and the dainty girl is used by them as a decoy. She discovers her true position when she sees one of her companions cheating a victim which she has innocently introduced into the card game, and denounces him. He attacks his victim, and is about to kill him, when Emmy stops him with a bullet. She is arrested, but later cleared, and weds a wealthy bachelor who has watched her career.

This simple story is embellished by elaborate costuming and settings, which include a magnificent summer hotel, yachts and the like. There should be no doubt of its appeal to both country and city audiences.

"THE MASKED DANCER"

(Kalem Broadway Favorites—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

AMID a rather gorgeous setting of Oriental fittings, curios and the like, Anna Orr in the character of Hera, an Oriental dancer, gives a remarkable impersonation. To say that it is realistic would be putting it mildly, for seldom, if ever, has a director gone to the extremes that George L. Sargent has in this case. Beautiful rugs, tapestries, vases and other articles of every description, and oriental in character—genuinely oriental at that—are used in profusion, with the result that a wonderful background is presented.

In the story, which is from the pen of Mrs. Owen Bronson, Hera, the dancer, is the daughter of a wealthy Persian who is mysteriously slain during a struggle with an American tourist, Paul Wright (Cort Alberson).

The girl swears to avenge her father's death, and, suspecting Wright, follows him to America in search of revenge.

The guilty man is Alam, a secret lover of Hera's, who, knowing of her father's opposition of his suit, determines to utilize the first opportunity that presents itself to put him out of the way. During the struggle between Wright and the Persian, Alam (Rollo Lloyd) surreptitiously sticks a knife into the Persian, and slipping the weapon into the unsuspecting Wright's hand makes his getaway.

Wright, accused, breaks away from those holding him and escapes to America.

Hera, following, secures a position on her arrival in a cabaret, where she becomes a star of the first magnitude, and her dances become the talk of the town. Wright falls into a trap she has laid, and is conducted to her room in the hotel only to find Alam hidden in a closet.

In the struggles that follows Alam is killed, and dying confesses his guilt and declaims Wright guiltless.

Hera and Wright make up and the end is—well, obvious.

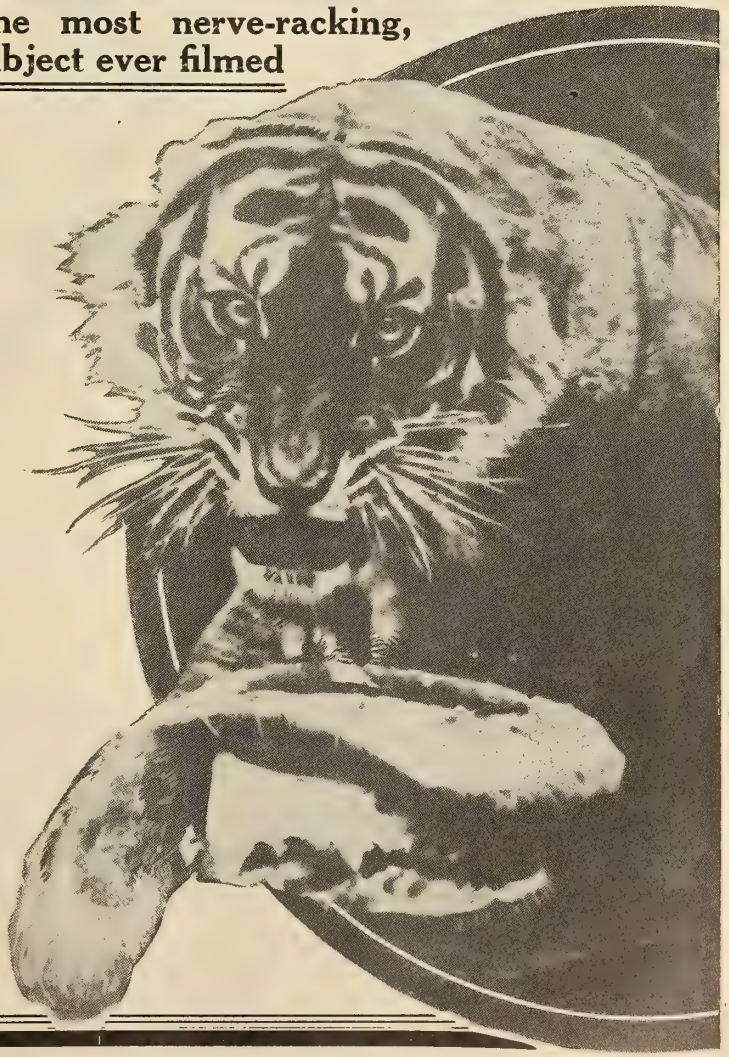
Mr. Paul Bourgeois Celebrated Holland Animal Trainer

(Formerly with Pathé Freres in France)

In the Season's Supreme



Wild Animal Picture

"Joe Martin turns 'em loose"

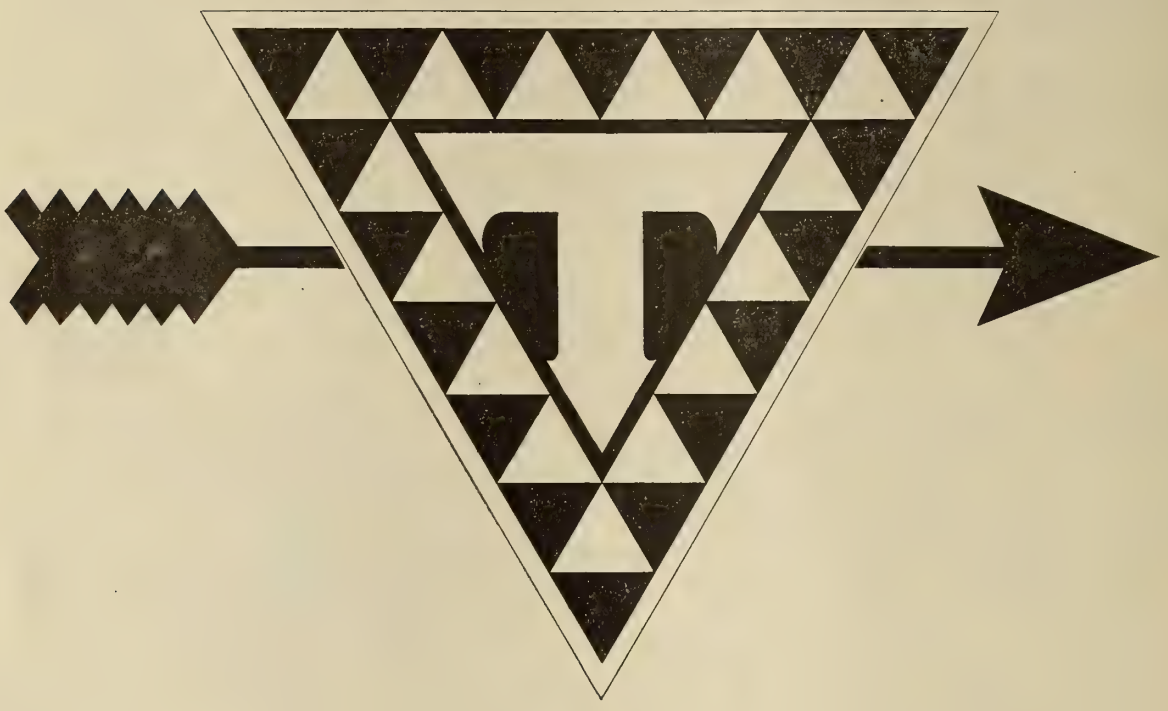
In Two of the Most Thrilling Acts Ever Presented on Any Screen

Produced at the Universal City Zoo under the direction of Rex de Rosselli and a great supporting cast.

Without a single doubt the most nerve-racking, most thrilling wild animal subject ever filmed

NO living Exhibitor—no matter how many animal pictures he has seen; no matter how hardened he may think he is to thrills in moving pictures—can say that he has ever seen anything that can even be said to equal "Joe Martin Turns Them Loose."

It is not only the most thrilling animal picture ever filmed—but it is a comedy scream from start to finish. "Joe" is a gorilla that wanders into a circus menagerie tent, and "turns the animals loose."



Then lions, tigers, elephants, camels, bears, jaguars, wild cats, as well as goats, pigs and horses race all over the lot and through the town. The lions and tigers take possession of homes and stores; the elephant pushes a police station (full of policemen) into the river; and the fun is fast and furious—with a throbbing thrill and a penetrating punch in every foot of film.

BOOK IT

Make no mistake. This picture is as different from the average animal film as you can possibly imagine.

You can't play this up too strong. Get busy with your Exchange immediately for Booking dates. You need it for the PROFITS it will bring you. It's a whale; it's a scream; it's a thriller; it's a surprise feature that will pack your house for a big comedy night.

OFFICIAL

THE Triangle Film Corporation will distribute productions made under the supervision of D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett. Every production will be of the very highest type and each will feature well known stars of the screen and of the stage, whose names will be announced from time to time.

Two five-reel dramas and two two-reel Keystones will be released each week.

As model theatres, indicating the way in which productions of this character can best be shown, the company will itself operate one theatre in several of its most important distributing points; such, for example, as the Knickerbocker in New York. These theatres, in which the prices charged will range from $2.00 down, will be of great service to exhibitors. Aside from the larger cities, it will not be the policy of the company to operate its own houses.

The first week's program, which will have an advance appearance during September, will consist of one five-reel drama produced under the supervision of Mr. Griffith, featuring Douglas Fairbanks; a five-reel drama produced under the supervision of Mr. Ince, featuring Frank Keenan, and a Keystone produced under the supervision of Mr. Sennett, featuring Raymond Hitchcock.

TO EXHIBITORS: Triangle plays will be rented to one good theatre only in each district.

SPECIAL MUSIC FOR EACH PRODUCTION IS BEING PREPARED

You Are Cordially Invited to examine the special equipment articles in the Accessory News Section of the Motion Picture News this week.

They are special, only because of the number of them assembled under one cover.

In quality they are precisely what you get in Motion Picture News any week, on any subject — that is, the best that can be gotten.

If you take the News, you know this already.

If you don't, why not satisfy yourself that it is so?

Speeding Up

With Big Mutual Special Feature

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY

A Picturized Romantic Novel

By Roy L. McCardell Directed by W. D. Taylor

Crowds! Crowds! Crowds! Crowds!

He got a late start, but he's speeding up by showing two chapters of "The Diamond From The Sky" every Saturday. Ellis Glickman, who owns The Palace Theatre, and other Chicago picture houses, can't seat all the people who clamor to see the two chapters of this wonderful continued photoplay at the Palace.

You exhibitors who haven't booked "The Diamond From The Sky"—you can do as Mr. Glickman does and rake in big profits. A new, two-act chapter of "The Diamond From The Sky" is released each week. Eighteen chapters are now appearing. Book now and make money.

For booking information, write, wire or see at once the North American Film Corporation representative at your nearest Mutual exchange, or write or wire us.

"What Happened on the Berbuda"

Place Pat O'Malley in such a lusty role as mate of a mutinous ship and we have him cast in a part which nature moulded him for—clean cut, manly and vigorously convincing. There is added interest in this splendid feature in that the ship used was the actual German ship, the Magdeburg, which has figured so theatrically in this present bloody war. However, the story has nothing to do with war, but is filled with that atmosphere of romance and adventure on the high seas which the public devours greedily whether it be in book, song or in pictures.

Augustus Phillips makes a swaggering, bloodthirsty villain while the appealing Gladys Hulette's gentleness contrasts admirably in the wireless struggle and the clever "dope" dealing trick. Direction, Langdon West, who revels in the melodramatic. Friday, September 10th. About 3000 feet.

Dear Sirs:

I have been in the motion picture business for the past ten years and have traveled all around the world. Have been in charge of a circuit of twelve theatres as chief operator and electrician and also with Film Manufacturers. Among the machines which I have operated, and I have operated machines of every make, both foreign and American, I have found the Simplex machine to be the most noiseless, the steadiest and the strongest machine for wear.

I recommend the Simplex machine as being the best machine on the market for giving good results. I am at persent using four of them in my projection rooms and cannot praise them enough.

Wishing you every success, I am
Very truly yours,

20—Why is it that the electric lighting companies can allow as much as ten per cent drop in the electric distribution system on the poles or underground?

Ans.—In the distribution of electricity for light and power, experience proves that in most cases the load on the central station is not constant. During the early morning hours, say after midnight, until the factories begin to operate in the morning, the load is light. During the day up to about dusk the load is normal or less than normal.

At dusk when the factory load is still on and the lighting load is coming on there is a sudden rise in the demand on the power supply by the central station. In consequence of this demand the voltage on the system falls unless by special means the voltage, at the power station, or in the distribution or sub-stations, is increased, maybe from ten to fifteen per cent to overcome the loss in the cables and feeders. As this peak of the load, as it is called by central station men, only lasts until about 8:30 p. m. or so, it would be foolish to invest thousands of dollars in larger cables and feeders when by merely increasing the voltage on the distribution system the lighting company can maintain practically proper voltage at the service of its consumers.

The loss lasts only during one or two hours when the load is excessive. It is readily understood that in most instances it is cheaper to lose five per cent or maybe ten per cent more than normal loss for a few hours during the 24 than it is to keep the loss way down during the peak of the load and to carry the interest on investment and the depreciation on a much larger copper installation in the distribution system.

The electric lighting companies designing engineers figure the extra cost of current to be generated for the short time of the peak of the load in the early evening as against the extra cost for the copper, and they know exactly by having a record of the load curve which is the best paying proposition.

20 A—Why does this condition interest the operator in charge of a moving picture installation?

Ans.—Every operator knows that during the afternoon, as a general rule, and always during one or two hours in the early evening the light is bad. Anyone who has had experience, especially in the average city and town where the system is not as perfect as in the very large cities, knows that the voltage is maintained lower in the afternoon because the load is light on the line and the lighting company does not wish to maintain a high voltage which would prematurely burn out the incandescent lamps on the system. At the same time during the early evening hours when the load is extremely heavy the voltage is boosted at the station and that gives some consumers high voltage and a strong light and others have a low voltage with consequently poor light until about 9 o'clock in the evening.

This effect on the voltage which in turn changes the light at the aperture plate on a moving picture machine is what interests us. If the electric lighting company had large enough wires and generating equipment then you would always have a normal constant voltage and light. For the reasons given above, however, it is not always practicable for the electric company to give a constant voltage, but it is always well whenever a great difference is observed in the voltage during the afternoon, early evening and late evening, to register a complaint to this effect with the superintendent of the lighting company.

20 B—Can the electric lighting company overcome this low voltage during certain hours of the day so as to allow a uniform and constant light on the screen?

Ans.—The company may not be able to overcome the trouble entirely, but it sometimes happens that the low voltage on a projector arc is due to the unbalancing of the three-wire system and in that case the electric light company can often, by transferring the load in the neighborhood from one side of the three-wire system to the other side, compensate for the unbalanced voltage, which will materially improve the illumination.

Many exhibitors and operators, especially in the past, have been of the opinion that the electric light companies don't care about the service they give to the theatre and that they would just as soon charge an excessive rate and have the meters run too fast. It is true that many years ago when electric systems were first installed they were controlled by unscrupulous persons.

Nowadays the electric people are only too glad to give you the best service within their power and at the lowest price, because they realize that the more pleased you are and the lower the cost is for their service the more power you are going to use to make a brighter picture than your competitor is showing, and to use more current for ventilation and advertising purposes.

If you put your complaint to the superintendent or engineer in charge of he plan you will get satisfaction and can have your voltage tested without charge and thereby have your service improved.

20 C—Does the raising of the voltage on the peak of the load which is necessary on account of less copper in the distribution system interfere with the M. P. arc on a two-wire system as well?

Ans.—Yes, the effect is just the same, but on the two-wire system there is not opportunity of shifting the load from one side to the other in case the voltage should be low, therefore the only way to remedy the excess of voltage drop on a two-wire system during part of the day would be to install more copper to minimize the loss and consequent voltage drop in the distribution system.

LANG REELS PREVENT WINDING TROUBLE

WHILE there are several different types of film reels on the market, all involving the same principal of a metal or wooden hub mounted between two circular sheet discs, and assembled with either machine screws, wood screws or even tongued and grooved, the only reel known to withstand hard usage is one with a metal hub fastened to the reel discs with machine screws.

MECHANISM OF THE LANG REWINDER

The commonly used wooden hub has two bad features, which can be overcome by removing the flat spring and the wood screws. The hub, which is fastened by tongues and grooves, should also be improved. It is a known fact that when this style of reel becomes loosened, it is necessary to hammer down the tongues again to make the reel solid.

In repeating this operation several times the result will be that the tongue will break and the reel is destroyed. The wooden hub, with its flat springs and its wood screws causes more trouble to the operator than many a theatre manager can realize. In the first place, when rewinding a film, or when it is wound on the take-up reel, a reel with the flat-spring catch, will wind the film up into what is commonly called a hump.

When winding up the first one hundred and fifty feet of film on the rewinder, it will be necessary to start pulling down the film. The pulling down process greatly thins the film around the perforations, and makes the film very brittle at these points, none too good for your take-up sprocket. By using a film reel without the raised spring catch on the hub, and one that is true in its circumference, will wind a film tight and evenly from the start, provided the film is rewound on a film rewinder of the friction-tension bearing type, and fastened down solidly.

The most important part of a film reel is the hub. It is strange to note that there is only one manufacturer who has produced a reel as above outlined. Through an endless study by Carl James Lang, inventor of the Lang rewinder, and at present a member of the Lang Manufacturing Works at Olean, N. Y., and a well known motion picture mechanic, solved the problem of making a film reel which could be threaded without the use of a spring catch, and one that could be threaded from the outside, a great relief to the operator.

As will be seen in the illustration, the hub is made in one solid piece of semi-steel, and is threaded for machine screws. It will also be seen that the face of the hub is slotted for inserting the end of the film, and by resetting the reel sides the film can be threaded by simply reaching for the end and sliding the same into the slot sidewise, that is, from the outside.

One-third turn of the reel will hold the film firmly, and the end of the film slides out just as easily from the top reel as it is inserted.

THE VALUE OF SCREEN ANNOUNCEMENTS

THE advance slide for features has received its due recognition. The producer, the publicity man and the exhibitor have now realized the value of advance screen announcements, and there is not a multiple reel production on the market today which does not carry slides as part of its publicity assets.

It is gratifying to note that exhibitors are reaping the benefit of this slide idea. The screen has always impressed me as an open door to more business—an opportunity which has not been accepted until recently.

Advertising is a necessary and important part of every business. The largest manufacturers in the business world appreciate the great value of efficient publicity, consequently the names of thousands of advertised articles have become household terms throughout the world.

Reviewing picture publicity possibilities, the advertising of the feature or serial becomes a matter of vital necessity. To create interest in your program is to insure good box office receipts.

Shrewd exhibitors are following in the wake of the large photoplay theatres in the use of proper publicity matter—and plenty of it. Posters, heralds, banners, newspaper notices are essential advertising helps, but the advance slide announcing your production ahead is about the most economical and "direct-to-the-patron" medium that you can employ. Remember that the eyes of your audience are focussed on your screen and your announcement thereon must be read.

Attractive Announcements Cannot Help But Please

Attractive announcements create pleasing and lasting impressions, and if your slides are the right sort, a desire will be compelled in the mind of almost every reader to see the picture you advertise.

Feature advance slides enable you to show a scene from the coming play, a brief description of the same, announcement of the star and producing company. The space provided for date permits of quick and easy insertion and is large enough to give the day of the week sufficient prominence.

There's an exhibitor in Shenandoah, Pa., who would as well do without his dinner as he would without his daily screen publicity, which is very carefully arranged so as to guard against the confusion of too many slides. This man is pleasing his patrons and making more money through slides.

When you stop to consider that thousands of dollars are being paid every week by national and local advertisers for the use of theatre curtains, you begin to realize that you possess a medium which can be turned into profit at your box office.

Slides can be had for every feature and serial; your exchange has them, some offices furnish them free, others for a nominal rental charge. These slides are made to attract more business to your house. Don't be selfish and keep the good things to yourself. Let your audience know what's coming, they'll do some mighty fine talking for you among their friends, if you will let them in on your bookings ahead. The advance slide is a necessary part of your publicity matter. Use it regularly and you will increase your attendance and likewise your proofits.

Choosing a Site for a Motion Picture Theatre

By C. Howard Crane

WHEN motion picture theatres were first being built the question of the location was a foregone conclusion. These theatres were located on very prominent corners or within a few blocks of the main business districts. This sort of a location was thought to be absolutely essential, and it was considered the height of folly for anyone to attempt to build a theatre at all removed from the heart of the city.

Today, however, things have changed. In every city of over 100,000 people, you will see large handsome theatres being erected in the residential sections or small outskirt business centers and tranfer points.

INTERIOR OF THE ALHAMBRA, DETROIT, SITUATED FOUR MILES FROM THE CITY ON A MAIN BUSINESS THOROUGHFARE. COST, $75,000

These buildings as a rule are fine handsome structures and an ornament to the section of the city in which they are located. They really become a center of social activities and a meeting place for the whole neighborhood.

The so-called downtown theatre, of course, has the advantage of running a continuous performance, which gives them a constant flow of patrons from morning until night, which means a large income.

To offset this fact the rents in the central locations are enormous on account of the extreme high value of the property and the space used for such a house is usually limited, which also means that their seating capacity is necessarily rather small.

This brings up the question as to what really is required to make a motion picture theatre successful. The location is a very important matter, but there are many other things that must be considered. The manner in which the theatre is run and the quality of the entertainment given is important. But first the initial cost of the theatre must be kept down as low as possible, the seating capacity must be large and running expenses reduced to a minimum.

Neighborhood Theatres and Their Advantages

This is where the outskirt or neighborhood theatre has an advantage. Property values are much lower in the outlying districts of the city, which enables the exhibitor controlling these theatres to buy their property outright, thus eliminating the high rents. There is also the possibility of getting larger pieces of property and a large seating capacity.

It has been found that the most successful way to build these neighborhood theatres is to have the entire seating on one floor, thus doing away with a large balcony. The advantage of this, to the experienced exhibitor, is obvious. The fact that the balcony is omitted materially decreases the cost of construction for the reason that the balcony houses must necessarily be built very high to accommodate same and the construction of a modern balcony is expensive.

It has been found, however, that the large one-floor theatres have sufficient height to accommodate a small mezzanine balcony in the rear part of the auditorium. These seats are very desirable, being a considerable distance from the pictures. It is quite the thing to have these small balconies made into large roomy boxes. A little extra admission is charged and the seats reserved, which makes them very exclusive and high-class and much desired by theatre parties who wish to be seated all together and more or less apart from the crowd.

Location of Theatres

In most cities on the main thoroughfares little business sections spring up two or three miles from the center of the city. These sections have shops and stores of every description and it is quite necessary to choose some such location for a neighborhood moving picture theatre.

One good reason for choosing such a location is the fact that the front part of the theatre building can be divided up into very desirable stores or shops and the second floor into offices or flats. The revenue from this source is often enough to pay all taxes, insurance and the interest on the investment, leaving the actual theatre rent practically free.

Rent is usually the largest single item entering into the operation of a theatre, therefore it stands to reason that a proposition like the one outlined above will have every advantage and ought to prove very successful.

THE MAJESTIC, LOCATED TWO MILES FROM THE MAIN BUSINESS SECTION IN DETROIT. COST, $150,000.

The question of locating a theatre at transfer points or at the intersection of different trolley lines has been much discussed. It is very hard to determine whether this sort of a location is good or not.

Some advance the idea that a large number of people thus brought to such a point are there merely to change cars and that the actual traffic is not large. This situation, however, would be different in most every city, but if such a point is on the main thoroughfare and in a small business community it would be ideal for the location of a so-called "neighborhood theatre." The section chosen must also be thickly populated and should be far enough away from the center of the city so that people would prefer visiting the theatre located there rather than going down town to attend one. The fact that they not only save the actual carfare but also the time necessary in going to and fro is the best argument for a neighborhood theatre.

The Mountain Comes to Mahomet

Instead of the exhibitor having to bring the people from the outlying districts downtown to his theatre, he is bringing the theatre to them.

Downtown motion picture theatres are usually leased propositions and at the expiration of the lease the rent is always increased. At the same time the theatre is depreciating and the owner has either to go out of business or content himself with less profit.

In the neighborhood proposition, however, where the exhibitor owns his own property, it is different. This property increases in value and if the building has been kept in repair the depreciation is very small.

As is the case in most prosperous cities the community in which he has located his theatre is growing very rapidly and his business is increasing. Naturally this condition would mean hgher rents for the stores and offices, which would all be to his benefit.

There is one drawback to such a proposition as this, however. It is very often the case when a theatre company has made a success in such a location rival theatre owners see the possibility and before long newer and larger theatres are being erected in the same block.

To Desirable Locations

The lesson to be learned by this is to build for the future. Build large enough to accommodate any condition, so that any other company would consider it folly to build another theatre equally as large. The public is very fickle and no matter how nice your theatre is, and how well pleased your patrons, the newer and larger house is going to get the business.

The downtown house of course has not this condition to contend with to such an extent as most of the patrons are transient and also for the fact the desirable locations in the heart of the city are not so easily obtained.

In any event, in the building of a motion picture theatre the owners would be very wise to provide a full size stage suitable for most any road production. The advisability of this idea is easily seen and at the same time the real stage in the moving picture theatre can be used to advantage. In the first place, the picture screen can be placed at the rear of the stage, thus making the front seats much more desirable.

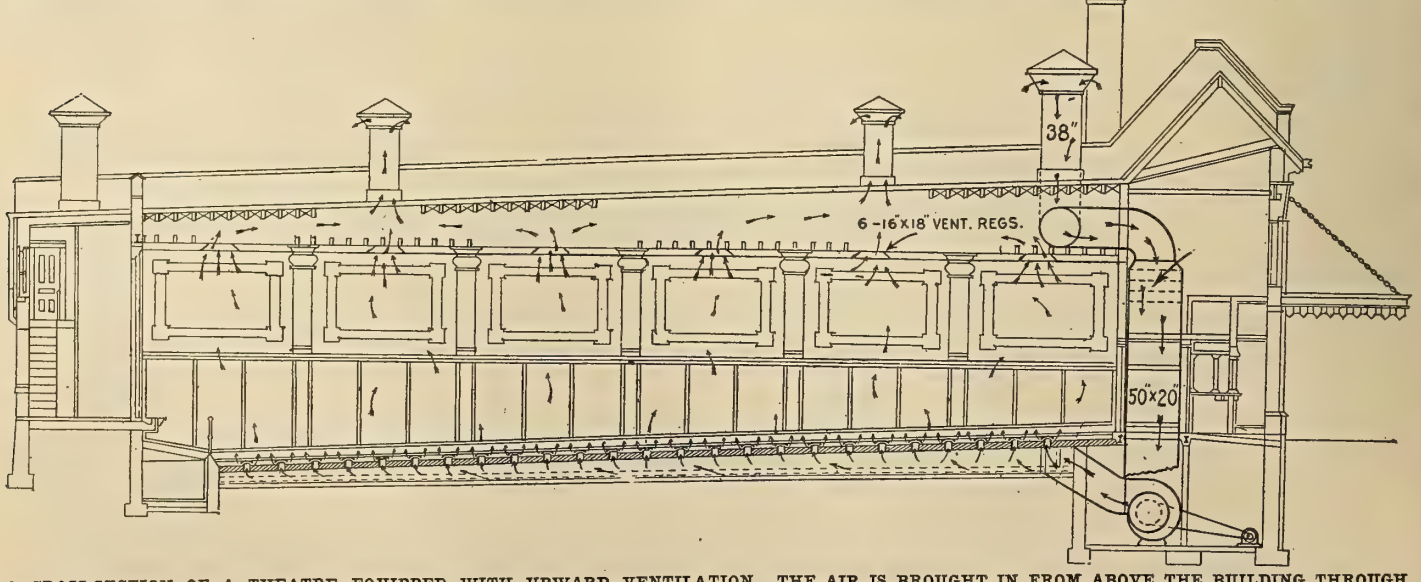
In several theatres that the writer has designed, large stage settings are used. These settings as a rule are treated in the form of Italian gardens and have clever artistic lighting effects. This sort of thing relieves the monotony and helps in the enjoyment of the picture. Much more could be said regarding the interior treatment of theatres, but this subject will be taken up in another article.

Don't Take An "In-Between" Location

In conclusion, regarding the choosing of a site for a motion picture theatre, this can be said, there are only two locations that are desirable to select, either downtown sites in the center of the city near other good theatres, or a good neighborhood location far enough removed from the downtown houses to make them independent.

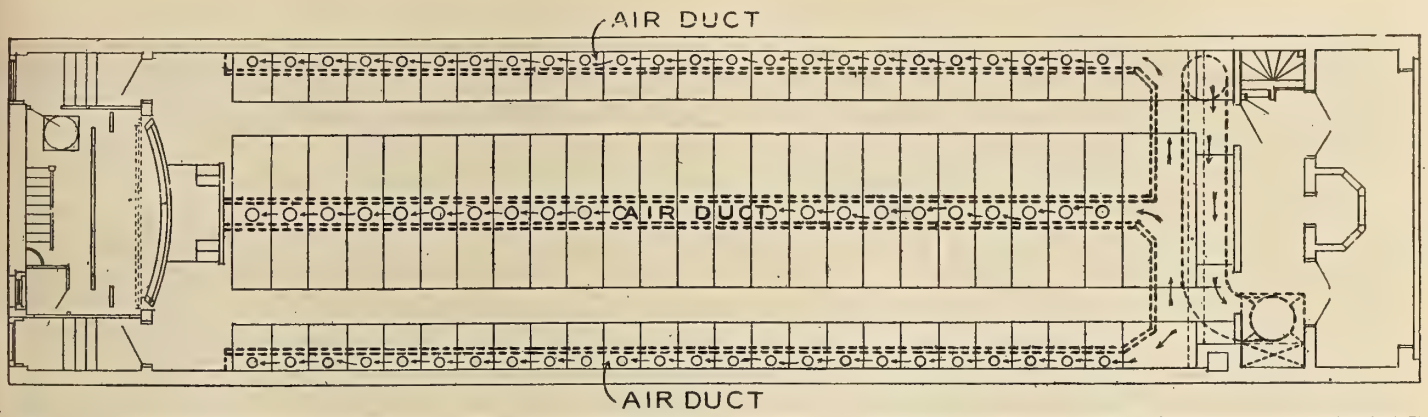
The large one-story house with a mezzanine balcony is the most successful type to use and it is advisable, where possible, to subdivide the front portion of the building so as to obtain some revenue in addition to the actual theatre. "In between" locations are not good and very few theatres so located have been successful.

Good Ventilation is Necessary to Draw Big Patronage



By Nathan Myers

MOTION PICTURE NEWS desires herewith to revive in the minds of all theatre owners and lessees an interest in proper heating and ventilating of the theatre under their charge. The time is propitious, just before the fall season when the doors and windows will no longer be swung wide open for the fresh air to enter, when the severe cold will soon again be at hand, and the coal with the snow will again begin to fly.



Today films are shown under most varied conditions, in schools, in churches and in theatres. We will not now concern ourselves with any but the last class. If we think only of the theatre, we must sub-divide such into many kinds of which might be mentioned the small house one story in height with no stage; the various size houses with one or more balconies, with and without stages; the long, narrow house and the wide, shallow house of each type; the house of very limited means; and the house of sufficient means to devote to proper designing and equipment, and so on indefinitely.

And as we see so varied a classification of types of house to be treated, we also likewise find a varied class of systems of heating and ventilation, and therefore in no short article as this can any advice or rule be planned that will cover all such propositions. Each particular work must be studied in itself, by one capable in the art and science of heating and ventilating, with a particular proficiency in theatre work.

The fundamental requirements are that there be a separate system of heating and ventilating so that they may be used separately or together. That the system of heating be such that the house may be opened at the beginning of the performance with a temperature of sixty-five degs. Fahrenheit at an outside temperature of zero, and that the radiation may be gradually reduced during the performance as the heat of the people gradually makes itself felt as an adjunct to the heating system. This is a very important factor, for it has been found that such heat of the body is almost sufficient to maintain the proper temperature of the house when the seating is well filled.

System Must Be Ready for Use When Door Opens

The system of ventilating to be installed in conjunction with the heating must be such that it may be thrown in use as soon as the house is opened, and so regulated that it may be varied approximately in proportion to the amount of the people and the kind of the audience occupying the house.

In a house where the clientele is of a higher tone, there must be supplied about twenty cubic feet of ai rper person per minute, whereas in a house where the audience is of a class where the clothing and the body are not so clean, there immediately becomes necessary at least thirty cubic feet of air per person.

Both these items are a minimum, and might well be increased fifty per cent. if the expense will allow it, and especially where continued performances are held.

In the very small house an economical system may be devised of a one pipe low pressure gravity return steam system to give the required heat, and a separate large hot air furnace to temper the fresh air for ventilation. The natural draught through the hot air furnace must not be depended upon.

A fan must be installed to force the air from the outside of the building through the furnace into the auditorium at many different places that it be properly dispersed.

An additional fan should exhaust the air from the auditorium. Whether the fresh air shall enter at the floor, at the ceiling or at intermediate places, will be determined upon the merits of each case.

The above system has the advantage of being able to properly heat and ventilate the house in mild weather without the use of the steam system.

Deficiency of Indirect Steam Coils

A more costly and more elaborate arrangement would be to have indirect steam coils instead of the auxiliary hot air furnace, but without the advantage heretofore mentioned.

Hot water heating is seldom used in theatres. Its advantage of continued mild heat over night and over Sundays when the house is closed down is not to be lost sight of. Its disadvantages of increased size of radiators, of possibility of freezing if not attended to, its slowness to get up heat when the latter is quickly wanted, its slowness to go down when it is desired to suddenly cool the house, and its increased initial cost, all clearly outweigh the advantage.

There are many kinds of steam heat. There are the one and two pipe pressure systems, the vapor, the vacuum, the atmospheric, the vapor-vacuum-pressure, and various other combinations. If properly installed none is more economical, and none more efficient than the two-pipe pressure steam system using a high class packless steam valve, and an automatic air valve on an air line.

Great care must be taken that all the lines must be run where they may be accessible at any future time for repair They must not be run in exposed walls where their heat is soon dissipated, nor should they be run in exposed or cold corners. The pipes are but passageways for the steam to other radiators, and must not themselves be counted on as radiation.

There are two types of direct steam radiators on the market. The old style cast iron radiators, obtainable in almost any style, size and shape, and the pressed sheet iron radiators. This latter product has been perfected after it has gone through an evolution of manufacture these twenty years. It is now a dependable article, costing the same per foot of radiation as the cast iron radiators, and having many additional advantages. They take up less space, are lighter and therefore more easily handled. Because of their lightness they may more readily be hung on the wall as wall radiators, and they heat up and cool down quickly.

Delivery of Air Important

We have stated the amount of air that shall be delivered to a house. The way of such delivery is highly important. Many theatres have been built with a large outlay of ventilation and yet not giving perfect satisfaction due to a lack of proper distribution of the fresh air.

The greater the number of fresh air inlets, and the greater the number of foul air outlets, the better the ventilation, for in this manner it can be readily seen there will be the greatest distribution. The air shall also have the longest possible travel through the audience and not over their heads.

In general, the most feasible system is that of admitting the air from the bottom of the house, and having the outlets at the top. This is particularly desirable where there is a balcony, and is also best for summer ventilation.

Many variations of air inlet and outlets may be designed, and conditions at times require special study and peculiar arrangements.

The question may rightly be asked—how does a proper system of heating and ventilating effect the receipts of the house?

Well Ventilated Houses an Asset

In almost every state legislation requires proper ventilation to every schoolroom. Why such for the children who are made to pay for attendance, and why should adults, using more air per minute be expected to pay for the privilege of attendance in a more closely packed unventilated theatre?

Wise legislation is now being taken by some states, and others must follow, requiring better and more perfect conditions for theatres. This legislation is, however, not necessary for the progressive owners and lessees. They see the far-reaching effect upon not only their box receipts, but also a better class of people attending. People accustomed to well ventilated houses will not go a second time to a foul, stuffy, theatre. They will prefer good air, plus good pictures, to poor air, plus the same pictures.

The writer has many instances in mind where a new, properly built, well heated and well ventilated theatre has actually put out of business a number of theatres in its district where the seating of the new project was even far less than the sum total of those placed out of competition.

It is merely the A, B, C of human nature. Give the people something better than they are used to, and it will be hard to get them to go back to poorer former conditions.

ALHAMBRA AND STANDARD THEATRES, CLEVELAND, IN THEIR GORGEOUS DRESS OF ART FLOWERS

THE UNIQUE DECORATIONS IN THESE THEATRES ARE THE WORK OF THE SCHROEDER ART FLOWER MANUFACTURING CO. OF CLEVELAND

CLEVELAND THEATRES CHANGE DECORATIONS EVERY SIXTY DAYS

THERE is nothing more to the credit of an up-to-date exhibitor than keeping his house attractive. In the winter the appearance should be that of warmth, and in the summer the parton should feel that it is a retreat from the heat of the streets.

The Alhambra theatre, of Cleveland, Ohio, and others have gone one step further in preparing for the fall season, the plan being to have the floral decoration changed every sixty days. The entire lobby has just been decorated with highly colored fire-proofed artificial leaves in their natural fall tints. Light colored yellow lamps have been intermingled with the leaves in order that the different shades of color may be brought out.

This has had a decided effect upon the revenue of the Alhambra theatre. The mere fact that every sixty days the floral decoration of the lobby and the interior are changed gives the house a new appearance, and is attracting an ever increasing attendance. The following remarks are heard on every side after each performance: "Isn't this beautiful," "They are always doing something different at this theatre," "No wonder they attract the crowds, they make the surroundings so pleasant for their patrons."

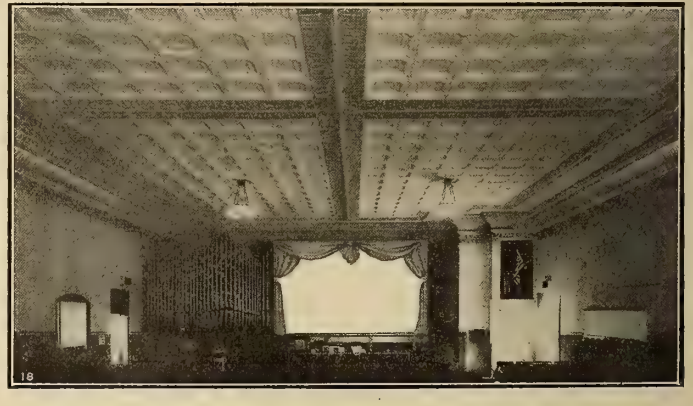
Another innovation which Mr. Bailey has made is the installation of a Victrola in the spacious lobby to act as an entertainment particularly for those waiting for admission to the second show.

Within the theatre itself there is a wire bracket in each panel. These are five feet high and filled with electric flowers, which are lit up while the picture is on the screen. This gives the house a soft and pleasing light which relieves the eye materially.

The stage has a row of window boxes across the entire front, filled with yellow flowers and foliage, which are perfectly visible while the picture is on the screen. This also tends to relieve any glare which may come from the screen.

Changes Decorations Every Sixty Days

Another illustration of the effect of floral decoration is the Standard theatre, also of Cleveland, which is managed by Mr. Grossman. This was remodeled from a private dwelling, and stands 80 feet from the street. The floral design which has been adapted for the entrance is that of an Italian pergola with large pilasters and beams made of decorated fireproof material hung with wistaria and green foliage, which is perfectly in evidence from the street. This house likewise is having its decoration changed every sixty days. The result has been similar to that at the Alhambra. The patrons are regular in their attendance, and are enthusiastic over the up-to-date and attractive appearance of the house.



The entire credit of the increase in patronage is attributed by Mr. Grossman to the floral decoration.

In the case of both these theatres the decoration was done by the Schroeder Art Flower Company, of Cleveland, which at the present time has over forty contracts for decorating houses during the coming season. Exhibitors everywhere are realizing more and more that it takes pleasant surroundings and a good picture to draw the crowds.

STEEL CEILINGS MAKE THEATRES SAFE AND BEAUTIFY INTERIOR

WE are indebted to the motion picture industry for a singularly pleasing style of architecture in which "beauty and utility" confer a double benefit upon patron and owner. While this style is still in process of formation, so to speak, evidences are not wanting that when some future distorian registers the development of early twentieth century architecture, the motion picture style will play a prominent part in his annals.

Briefly, the problem which confronts the intending builder of a motion picture theatre is this. The auditorium must not only provide ample and comfortable seating arrangements, but entrance and exit facilities must be included to keep the people moving. Ventilation must be of the very best, especially in the winter months.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE, CANTON, OHIO. NOTE COLONIAL PANEL EFFECT ON CEILING

The lighting problem must receive especially careful attention so that there will be just enough illumination to assist those who come late or leave early, without in any way affecting the picture on the screen. Lately, a great deal of thought and study has been devoted to the proper placing of the projection machine so that the pictures, when projected on the screen, may be seen without undue eye strain on the part of the spectators.

An especially important problem is that of safety in both design and construction. Much has already been done to insure that safety. Projection machines, for instance, are now required to be housed in sheet metal, asbestos or fireproof booths, so that even if a film does catch fire, the fire is confined to the booth and speedily put out without the knowledge of the patrons.

In recent years, a growing number of motion picture theatres have shown a marked leaning toward pressed steel ceilings, sidewalls, proscenium arches, box and balcony fronts. pose.

They protect the audience because the steel ceilings cannot crack and collapse. Furthermore, steel ceilings and steel sidewalls interpose an impenetrable barrier in case a fire breaks out on the floor above or in the adjoining premises.

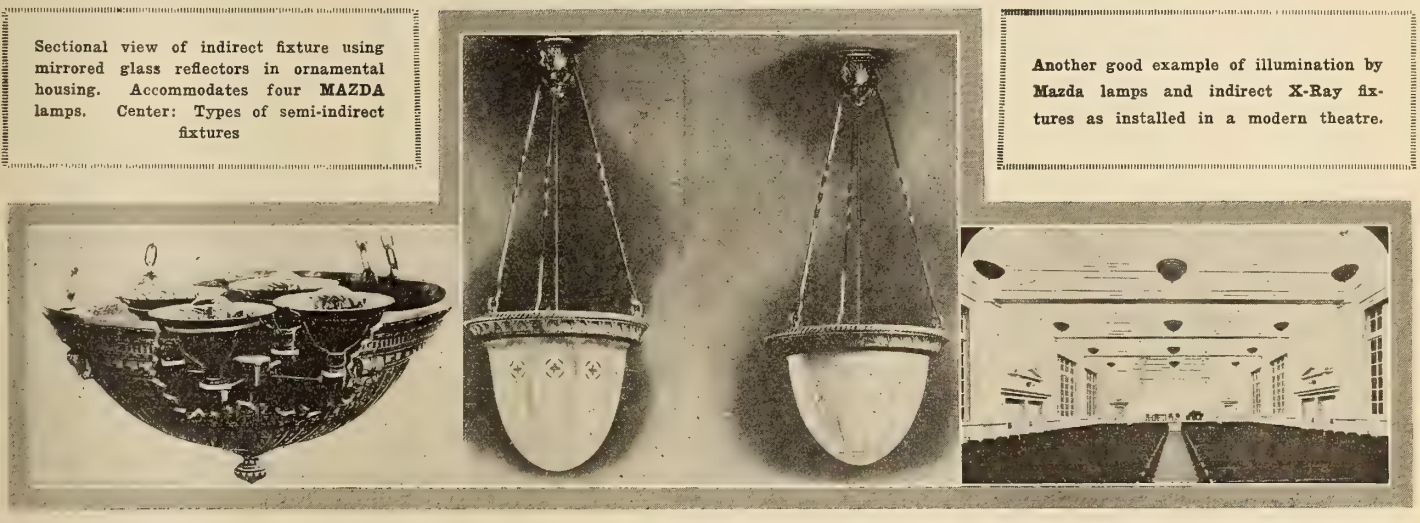
Official Fire Test in New York

The utter fire-retarding properties of steel ceilings were confirmed at the official fire test held in New York last November under the auspices of the fire underwriters. Steel ceilings remained in place one hour and ten minutes against 1,366 degrees Fahr., whereas plaster ceilings fell in 12 minutes under 849 degrees.

In other words, steel ceilings can be depended upon to withstand fifty per cent. more heat and remain in place five times as long as a lath and plaster ceiling.

Another reason why steel ceilings have grown in popularity is their classic beauty of design and the wonderful effects obtainable from a decorative and ornamental standpoint. Steel ceilings may now be had in practically every style or period of architecture—Greek, Roman, Romanesque, Rococo, Renaissance, Moorish. The Alhambra, of Canton, Ohio, shown in the accompanying illustration, is a particularly striking example of the clear-cut, impressive and altogether beautiful ceiling effects obtainable with steel ceilings. The design, however, in this case is not Moorish but a deep Colonial panel effect of classic beauty.

When it is further borne in mind that steel ceilings are easily erected, are sanitary, and can be depended upon to last virtually indefinitely, it is not surprising that so many motion picture houses point to their steel ceilings and sidewalls as additional guarantees of safety and protection. Steel ceilings are surely destined to play a prominent part in film theatre construction as their merits become more generally appreciated.



Interior Lighting For Moving Picture Theatres

TYPES OF INDIRECT AND SEMI-INDIRECT LIGHTING FIXTURES FOR THE MODERN PHOTOPLAY HOUSE

THE illumination of moving picture theatres may appear at first thought to be a subject of little importance; however, progressive managers know from past experience that satisfactory illumination is a prime requisite.

Aside from the fact that in many localities adequate lighting is required by law, it has the advantages of making the theatre more attractive, reduces the liability of panic in case of fire, eliminates the gloom which is attendant with a darkened room.

Lastly, these qualities will be features that increase the attendance, which, of course, is the end to which the management strives.

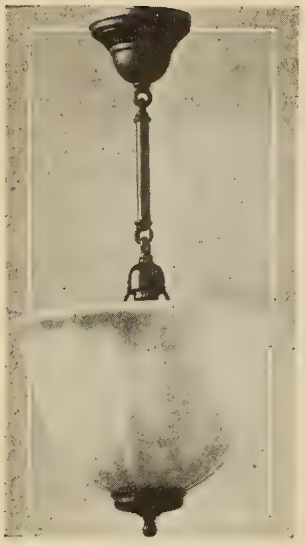
It is not due to the peculiar construction of these buildings that makes the problem of illumination somewhat difficult, but rather the exacting conditions and requirements.

While the pictures are being shown on the screen the illumination must be such as to not interfere with the vision of the spectator, neither should it destroy the contrast brightness of the screen itself.

Accident Liability Reduced

It is a foregone conclusion that there should be some illumination in the theatre while the pictures are being shown so as to facilitate the continuous entrance and exit of patrons. Then, too, there is the psychological effect of the patrons to be considered. Rarely, if ever, would persons prefer to view an entertainment in total darkness, and the public would much rather attend a theatre which presents a bright, cheerful appearance, than to spend several hours in a room which is dark and gloomy. Therefore, the ultimate outcome from a well illuminated theatre, other things being equal, would mean increased patronage with a corresponding increase in revenue.

Another very important argument in favor of provision being made for good lighting is its necessity in times of panic which is apt to occur at the least expected moment.

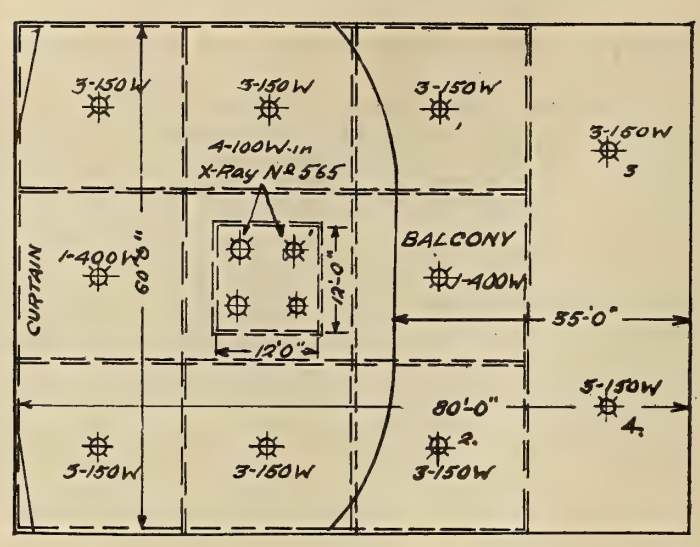


Fires, smoke, explosions, are factors that often cause an audience to become panic-stricken and unmanageable. At such times, if the auditorium can be flooded with light, an audience can see for themselves their proximity to danger, which usually means that calmness is immediately restored, thereby eliminating the liability of accidents.

There are many forms of illumination used in motion pictures, some good and some bad, but to secure the best results at all times an installation should be carefully designed and equipment selected in accordance with the best modern practice.

Lamps.—Of all forms of illuminants the Mazda lamp is undoubtedly one of the chief ones to be considered, it being most economical to operate, that is giving the maximum amount of light at a minimum expense. These lamps are also paramount in simplicity of operation, as well as supplying light which is cheerful and effective.

The size, construction, operation, life and reliability of Mazda lamps have previously been discussed in the columns of Motion Picture News, therefore it would seem unnecessary to repeat these qualities.



Reflectors.—The two types of fixtures which are most satisfactory for moving picture theatre lighting are the totally indirect and the semi-indirect, as with these systems the light is soft and well diffused. Any degree of even illumination can be obtained; there are no glaring light sources visible to the spectators, and by illuminating the ceiling and side walls the decorative features of the room are well shown.

A totally indirect fixture consists of an opaque reflecting surface and housing within which the lamps are located. All of the light is reflected to the ceiling, from which it is redirected to the side walls and floor area. No light sources are visible, and as a result an illumination is obtained which is particularly applicable for moving picture theatres.

Plan

Section

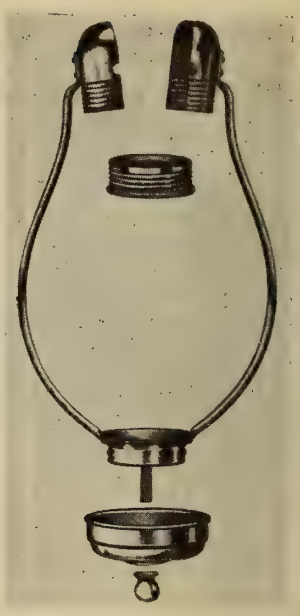
PLAN AND ELEVATION SHOWING ARRANGEMENT OF LIGHTING UNITS

A semi-indirect fixture is quite similar to the one just described except that the lamp is contained in some form of opalescent diffusing glass dish. With this type of fixture a large percentage of the light is reflected to the ceiling, while a small amount is transmitted through the glass. The resulting illumination is very soft and pleasing.

Both the totally indirect and semi-indirect fixtures are made to accommodate one or more lamps, so that with proper sizes of lamps and wiring the desirable intensities of illumination may be obtained.

If side wall brackets are used the reflectors should be of opalescent diffusing glass, either white or tinted, of sufficient density to render the light source unobjectionable.

Wiring.—It is quite desirable that provision be made so that at least two different intensities of illumination may be obtained; a low intensity for the period during which the pictures are being shown, and a higher intensity for use during interims and in case of emergency.



One quite common method is to install two or more lamps in each fixture wired on two separate circuits. In this way one circuit only need be used when a low intensity of illumination is desired, and when more light is necessary the second circuit may be turned on. The intensity for either period may easily be governed by installing the proper size of lamp on each circuit.

The Employment of Dimmers

Another method in common use is the employment of dimmers. This consists of resistance connected in the circuit by which the voltage on the lamps may be reduced, which in turn will lower the intensity of illumination.

CANDELABRA MAZDA LAMPS ON IMITATION CANDLESTICKS USED AS SIDE WALL BRACKET LIGHTS

DETAIL OF THE LIGHTING UNIT SHOWN OPPOSITE

Any degree of illumination from darkness to the maximum may be obtained by such an arrangement.

No very definite rules can be given with regard to the arrangement of lighting units, as the architectural features of the building are, to a large extent, the determining factors. Fixtures are usually symmetrically spaced with regard to ceiling beams or panels so as to present a uniform appearance. The diagram shows in plan and elevation the lighting arrangement in a moving picture theatre which may be considered typical.

Totally indirect fixtures are similar to the one shown on the preceding page. The front portion of the house will usually receive sufficient reflected light from the screen, consequently lighting fixtures near the screen need not be wired for dim lighting as they need be lighted only when bright illumination is desired.

Side wall brackets, while not absolutely necessary from the illumination standpoint, are a very desirable addition to a lighting system. They add materially to the appearance of a theatre provided they are properly placed and of good design.

White or tinted opalescent glass reflectors or silk shades, with small Mazda lamps, so placed as to not interfere with the spectator's vision, give a very pleasing effect. An example of such fixtures is shown below.

Another important feature in the lighting equipment is the exit lights. Even though these are for purely utilitarian purposes, it is by no means an indication that they need be unattractive inappearance. There are various types of lighting equipment on the market which will admirably meet the requirements for both serviceability and neat, artistic appearance.

The whole lighting equipment for the theatre should be carefully considered. With the large variety of lamps from which to choose, as well as various designs of fixtures, both indirect and semi-indirect, elaborate or simple, it is possible to secure results that will conform with any reasonable demand, no matter whether it be for the large city theatre or for that of the small town.

Escalator Is Tonic for Balcony and Gallery Patronage

THERE are three means of communication with the balcony and gallery—the stairway, the elevator and the escalator. The stairway requires that the theatre's patrons find their way to their seats by their own physical effort. The other two carry them to their seats without physical effort on their part.

A large moving picture house may provide any one or all three means of communication. It will do so in direct proportion to the management's desire to establish itself in the good graces of its patrons.

Anyone will yield to the belief the first requisite of a successful moving picture house is a selection of attractive, human-interest films, coupled with first rate projection. But with the larger houses, these things are taken for granted by the public. A big house would not long exist if it fell down woefully on the character of its pictures.

Competition among the larger moving picture theatres, then, rests not so much on the attractiveness of the show, but on the way the show is presented.

Public Will Pay for Comfort

The public is willing to pay for comfort. How true this is can be learned from the case of two rival theatres on Long Island. The fifteen cent theatre secured a comedy film featuring Charlie Chaplin and widely advertised the fact. Its neighbor, a ten cent house, planned to combat the drawing card of its rival, secured the same film to run on the same night, and advertised its seats at 10 cents each.

On the night the feature film was displayed, the 15 cent house played to its capacity, while the 10 cent house had forty people. The 15 cents house had learned the lesson of making its equipment comfortable and attractive. It had created an "atmosphere" that had pulled business.

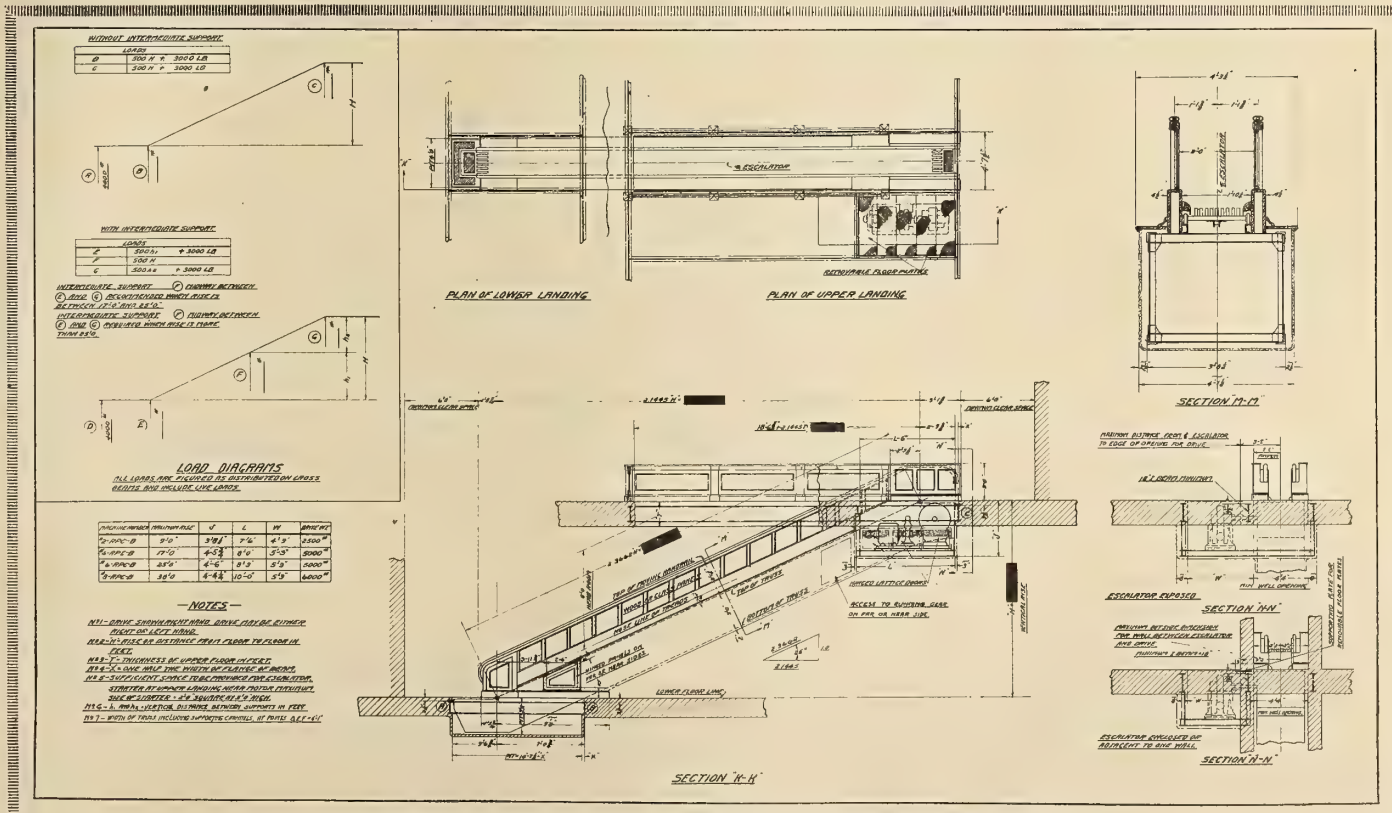
There is no more certain way to lead guests to an appreciation of the atmosphere of the house than to drive home the fact to them that the house is doing the most it can for their comfort. The escalator or moving stairway has been seized upon by many theatres to take their theatre out of the usual class, and to place it among the "unusual" or unique moving picture houses.

The elevator has not been of material help to the theatre. Its intermittent service and comparatively small capacity make it an impracticable means of carrying guests to the balcony and gallery seats. There is not time between shows to empty and refill the house with an elevator—or even two or three elevators.

But the escalator knows no limiting capacity. It moves constantly. It can be run straight from the lobby to the balcony, and people who never voluntarily climb a long flight of stairs are its most ardent admirers.

The escalator is appreciated by the theatre-going public. Of that there can be no doubt after its many successful installations.

Helps Balcony and Gallery Patronage



Where installed it has invariably acted as a tonic to balcony and gallery patronage. People as a rule like balcony seats. This is particularly true of the motion picture house. But they dislike the effort needed to reach them. The escalator removes the effort, virtually bringing the upper floor seats down to the ground floor level.

Because of the fact that the escalator popularizes the upper floor seats, higher prices can be charged and secured for them. And this difference in price, coupled with the increased patronage, offsets in no great time the installation cost of an escalator. When viewed form this standpoint, the escalator is not, as popularly considered, an expensive luxury. It is a sound investment that pays for itself and adds prestige, goodwill and atmosphere to any theatre.

Description of Escalator

The standard cleat type escalator as now built consists essentially of a moving system of treads two feet wide, mounted in a suitable truss, which is placed at an angle of 25 degrees with the horizontal. On each side of the moving treads is mounted a balustrade, at the top of which runs a moving handrail which travels at exactly the same speed as the treads, and this provides a safe and serviceable means of support for the passengers.

The moving treads each consist of three maple slats bolted to the links of a continuous chain, which passes around a sprocket wheel at each end of the escalator. Every third slat carries at each end a self-lubricating roller with a canvas tread. On each of the three slats composing a step of the tread system are secured especially shaped maple cleats so spaced as to permit their passing through the teeth of the landing combs, which are placed at each end of the incline, thus providing an absolutely safe and comfortable method of landing the passengers.

The cleats are so graduated with respect to their height as to produce an approximate step shape with a surface twelve inches long, having an angle of about 12½ degrees with the horizontal. The principle of the steps and combs is clearly shown in the illustration. The balustrades and incline truss can be so treated as to produce a very pleasing architectural effect, as it is possible to use any kind of interior finish, such as various kinds of wood and sheet metal, as a covering for the escalator.

An important point about the cleat type escalator is its silent operation. It has long been recognized that an escalator, if successful in a moving picture theatre, would have to operate with the very minimum vibration and noise, and the manufacturers of this type have succeeded after repeated experiments in perfecting a machine which is practically noiseless.

The type usually installed has a capacity of 3,600 people per hour, or sixty people every minute, and can be run in either the ascending or descending direction. It is evident that the time saving possibilities of an installation having such a carrying capacity are enormous.

Consumes Little Power

From the operating standpoint an escalator is an extremely satisfactory investment, as the power consumption is low, and for the ordinary moving picture house the cost for electricity for running the machine usually runs between five dollars and ten dollars per month. Owing to the careful design and substantial construction of all the moving parts, the cost of repairs per annum is practically negligible.

In figuring upon the installation of an escalator in an existing theatre, the owner can well afford to inspect some of the installations which have already been made. Among the most prominent of these are the following:

B. F. Keith's Bijou theatre, Boston, one escalator; Olympia Amusement Company, Lynn, Mass., two escalators; Gordon's Olympia theatre, Boston, two escalators; Gordon Brothers, Rochester, one escalator; the Broadway theatre, Springfield, Mass., one escalator; Revere Beach Amusement Co., Revere Beach, Mass., two escalators; Tremont Row theatre, Boston, Mass., two escalators; Hippodrome theatre, Peoria, Ill., one escalator; Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y., one escalator; City theatre, Lawrence, Mass., two escalators.

In most of these theatres the escalator has been arranged to run close to the wall of the entrance foyer. This is an especially desirable arrangement in case the foyer is narrow. In the Hippodrome theatre, at Peoria, Ill., the escalator is located directly on the center line of the building, and runs from just back of the ticket gates directly to a point in the center of the balcony. This arrangement has proven extremely successful from an architectural standpoint.

Where traffic conditions warrant, a very good arrangement is the use of a duplex cleat type escalator, which consist of two files similar to the machine just described. These files are arranged side by side, and run in opposite directions. Two continuous streams of people can thus be carried at the same time, one up and one down.

The cleat type escalator is manufactured by the Otis Elevator Company of New York.

Equipment for the Picture Theatre Lobby

By H. I. Edwards of the Picture Theatre Equipment Company

LITTLE or no attention is given to the theatre front by the architect and the exhibitor, owing to the fact that they are laboring under the impression that posters "do the work," but we can prove as we go along that it is not the posters that do all the work, but the fact that the theatre has the "nobby-lobby" appearance that is bringing the dimes and quarters into the live exhibitor that has prepared for the rush.

Some architects recommend that the lobby be of a small affair, and that it is a secondary consideration, and the exhibitor, thinking that the architect is far advanced in that particular subject, lets the matter drop to his sorrow, for as the days roll by he realizes that the most important part of his new theatre has been sadly neglected.

We, in our years of experience equipping theatres of various types and sizes, have always recommended that the exhibitor have all the say when it comes to the front of the theatre, and those exhibitors that have heeded our advice have reaped the golden reward, so to speak, by success.

In the following we will try and give you an idea of what we consider to be an attractive, as well as a paying, theatre front and lobby.

Use Plenty of Wall Space

Be sure that you are utilizing as much of the wall space, and as much of the front that, while it looks attractive, still will not have that crowded appearance.

For the front pillars we suggest that there be used one three sheet on each side of the theatre front, and for the centre of the theatre front a "banner" frame. These banner frames are three by sixteen feet, outside measurements, and have a stretcher for the banner. The wood or brass moulding can be made in various designs with the name of the theatre on the top of banner frame.

They are not expensive, and will last for years if properly taken care of. They also eliminate the "flapping flying" banner that is not on a stretcher, and add to the appearance of the theatre front. The three sheet frames and the banner frames are to be made of either wood or metal, and to harmonize with the theatre front.

If the theatre is of a white finish, a cream and gold finish on the frames will help the front considerably. The number of frames that you use in the front of the theatre should not be more than two, or the most four, frames on the pillars. The three sheet frames can be made to fit right onto the front pillars. Also be sure that the doors are hinged and open from the front, so that the posters can be hooked right on instead of using tacks or nails, thereby eliminating wear on the poster. We also recommend the use of a Special Feature lobby display frame.

These frames are ornamental and instructive, for the patron on entering the theatre can gaze on ten to twelve scenes of the feature; they also help portray the various stars that appear in the feature.

Easel Frames in Lobby

When entering the lobby have two easel frames of the same color, or of a color that will add to the appearance of the lobby, while in the centre of the lobby, on the ticket booth if there is one being used, a half sheet frame advising the patron that there are matinees.

The walls of the lobby should be utilized so that they will not have that crowded appearance, and we suggest that three single sheet frames, with the day's attraction or coming events announced, is sufficient, while border frames can be used to sort of even up the walls.

These can be made to have photo frames of the popular photoplayers. These photos can be obtained in the following sizes: 5x7 inches, 11x14 inches, 22x28 inches, and can be obtained in either sepia or colors. They are an attraction in itself, for the movie-fan dearly loves to gaze on the photo of his or her favorite player, and many will be the comments on these photos, so that the exhibitor, who is using this medium of making friends for his theatre, will pat himself on the back as he sees these patrons coming back.

Of course this type of display can be overdone the same as the theatre front, and we suggest that the following, while neat, will not be over-doing it:

If there are doors leading to the theatre from the lobby, these should have from five to six 5x7 inch photos on each side. These photos are cheaper than the average exhibitor realizes, the cost of these range from three to six cents each.

I have always contended that one of the biggest problems in the exhibition end of the film business is "the atmosphere" of the theatre. Of course good films are necessary, but given the same films, the preference goes to the house which is well conducted even though the price of admission is greater. As an example, which will clearly drive home this point, I will mention a case in a small town on Long Island where there were two houses, one well conducted, which received an admission of 15 cents, and the other run in slipshod manner, which received an admission of 10 cents.

Recently the 15-cent house booked a feature comedy with Charlie Chaplin in it, and after making the booking the Chaplin film was advertised in advance. The rival house heard of this booking and arranged to have the same film on the same night to be shown at 10 cents, and advertised the fact. That night the 15-cent house played to capacity and the 10-cent house played to forty people. The public want well-conducted theatres, and are willing to pay for what they want.

The 15c Theatre with S.R.O.—the 10c Theatre with 40 seats filled—WHY?

Not because of a difference in pictures for both theatres were running and advertising the same feature.

This newspaper account of the incident gives as the only explanation of the 15c. theatre's greater popularity, its possession of the "atmosphere" that theatre patrons want and are glad to pay for.

There is no more certain, no less expensive way to produce for Your Theatre or Airdrome this so-called "atmosphere" that makes people come and makes them remain loyal to Your Theatre than to install an

ESCALATOR

More than any other one equipment can, the Escalator impresses your patrons with your provisions for their comfort and with the refinement of your theatre.

It permits you to raise prices, but, because of its few cents a day operating cost, no higher prices are necessary to a profit on the investment. As theatre after theatre has found, the Escalator's influence in increasing patrons and regularly filling all balcony seats, soon returns in cash all the money the Escalator cost and from that point begins to make big money for you.

ELECTRICITY FROM PRIVATE SOURCES

A. E., Herman, Ill.—I have under consideration the following proposition and ask your advice as to the proper course to pursue.

I propose to equip a motion picture theatre in a town and obtain a current from a privately owned electric power plant in a manufacturing establishment.

The current is produced for the use of the company and its employees living in company houses only. I am told by the superintendent that at his house close by where the theatre will be located and about half a mile from the plant his lights are very dim, due, I presume, to low voltage. The curent at the generator is maintained at about 220 volts, and is D. C.

I can secure very reasonably a Power's 6-A machine which has formerly been used on 110 volt A. C. Can this same lamp and machine be used on 220 volt D. C.? What other equipment, if any, would be necessary in addition to a rheostat? The amount of current used would be no object, as it would be furnished gratis or at a nominal flat rate.

Ans.—Your proposition is an easy one. There will be no difficulty whatsoever in producing perfect results, providing the electric wires are heavy enough to allow you to draw somewhere's between 25 and 35 amperes from the 220 volt mains.

Your statement that the lights are dim near the proposed theatre, of course leads me to believe that the half mile run from the power plant introduces a considerable drop in the wires.

It may be that you will have only 190 volts at your theatre when your arc is burning, but what of it. If you have a 220 volt rheostat it simply means that by putting on a jumper on the rheostat you will have to short circuit about 10 to 15 per cent. of the rheostat so as to decrease the resistance in series with the arc to that extent to compensate for the drop in voltage below 220.

All you need is a 220 volt rheostat adjustable from 25 to a maximum of 40 amperes, and if the Power's 6-A is otherwise in good condition it will give you splendid satisfaction on the above described lighting system.

MOTOR WITH EDISON MODEL D

H. S., Woodburn, Ind.—I have a question I would like to have answered in your next issue of the "News." I have an Edison Model D machine. Can a motor be attached to this so it will work all right? I see in August 14 issue about Model B, you state "Put the pulley on the shaft that drives the rewind." On the make machine I have there is not room enough left on the shaft to do this. Would I have to get a new shaft and how or where would be the best place to drive it?

Ans.—There is no reason why you should not be able to apply motor drive to the Edison Model D machine in a similar way, which I suggested on page 120 of the August 14 issue for the Model B machine.

Please note that I did not say that you could "Put the pulley on the shaft that drives the rewind." What I did say was, "Put the pulley on the outside of the small pulley which drives the take-up belt." This is quite different from putting the pulley on the shaft. I know there is not room on the shaft because it comes flush with the pulley.

What you can do is to take the take-up pulley off the shaft, then have a cast disc or pulley as suggested fastened on to the take-up pulley. After it has been properly fastened by screws or rivets let the mechanic drill a hole through the new pulley or disc, using the old take-up pulley hole as a guide.

Then put the two pullies now fastened together on an arbor and turn down the new pulley so that it will run true with the take-up pulley. Now your job is done and all you have to do is to put the take-up pulley back on the shaft and there you are with your motor drive pulley, ready for attachment to a belt from the motor pulley if the motor can be controlled at low enough speed; otherwise, you would have to use a countershaft.

MUST HAVE SUITABLE RHEOSTAT

C. H. S., Kirkwood, N. Y.—Will 110 volts, 4 amperes D. C. run an arch light using ¼ inch or 5/16-inch carbons for a moving picture machine. If not, will 60 volts at 12 amperes run the arc for a machine with a distance of 35 feet? I am certainly stuck about this business. I thank you kindly for an early answer.

Ans.—You can use the 110 volt, 4 ampere current by having constructed for you a rheostat suitable to control this current. Four amperes will, of course, not give a good light, but for a distance of twenty-five or thirty-five feet it will give a fair light—better than you could get with calcium gas, anyway.

If you on the other hand can secure the 60 volt, 12 ampere current, then this is decidedly better because you will have double the illumination with the same amount of power expended, but you will have to have a specially constructed 60 volt rheostat for this service. You want to be careful about the rheostat for 60 volts, as it is rather difficult to get good rheostats for this service to allow the arc to be maintained steady.

FIDELITY MOTOR IS EQUIPPED WITH SPECIAL SPEED LEVER

THE motor illustrated with this article is a motor manufactured by the Fidelity Electric Company, of Lancaster, Pa., of 1/10 h. p. for alternating current. The motor is made as illustrated, and has a special speed lever on the side for controlling the speed within a range in excess of 50 per cent.

The motor comes provided with a small groove pulley for a round belt, and is very compact in construction, and made so that it can easily be mounted on all makes of motion picture machines. The bearings are of the very best grade of phosphor bronze, and the motor of a type very simple in construction, so that anyone can take care of it.

MAKING THE PROJECTION BOOTH PERFECT

By Frank S. Hough of the Kleine Optical Company

WHEN called upon to equip the booth of a newly constructed motion picture theatre the adverse conditions that always prevail, and which must be overcome in order to secure perfect projection, are many and varied. Strange to say, a motion picture theatre is seldom designed around a perfect projection system. It seems to be the custom when designing a theatre to give particular attention to the structural work, architectural beauty, comfort of the audience, interior decorations, and as an after-thought the booth and projection system. The problem of obtaining perfect projection is left to the expert, and he must get "as perfect projection as possible" under existing conditions. In nine cases out of ten it is almost impossible to get perfect projection.

Highly specialized as the motion picture art is today in all departments, it seems strange that more care is not taken in designing a theatre around a perfect projection system. If such care was taken there would be no problems to overcome, and perfect projection would be the general rule rather than the exception.

The manufacturers making projection apparatus and kindred devices are offering as perfect machines as a thorough knowledge of the known laws of mechanics, optics and electricity will allow. Therefore the fault of imperfect projection does not lie with this end, but with the designing of a theatre and the subsequent operation of the equipment.

The Size of the Booth

The booth should be placed in a theatre so that a line drawn from the center of the screen, leaving the screen at a right angle to the surface, would pass through the center of the objective lens, the center of the film aperture, the center of the condensing lens and the center of the arc.

The instances of finding a booth in its proper position are so few and far between that it is safe to assume that a booth is always found at a distance above the center of the screen. Therefore, the picture will be rejected at a pitch. In order to compensate for this condition the screen should be tilted back at the top, keeping in mind not to tilt it so far back that it will be noticeable to the audience.

In order to install a complete modern projection equipment the booth should be at least 12 feet by 20 feet. A booth this size will accommodate two modern projectors, a dissolving stereopticon and a spot light, leaving ample room for a work bench, rewind and for the operators to walk around the machines in comfort.

As the majority of the theatres are supplied with alternating current by the central station, and as it is necessary to use direct current at the projector arc in order to get the highest light efficiency, a converting apparatus will have to be installed.

Whether a mercury arc rectifier rotary converter or motor generator set is used it should be installed in a separate room at least 6 feet by 6 feet adjacent to the booth.

The power mains for the projection system should be brought directly into the converter room. The main panel board containing the switches, fuses, voltmeter and ammeter controlling the electrical system of the machines should also be placed in the converter room.

Ventilation of the Booth and Safety Appliances

The power for the arcs after it has been converted into direct current can be brought directly to the switches on the projectors in conduit laid beneath the floor. Some experienced operators consider it advisable to have the main panel board in the booth proper in order to have it accessible.

This is a matter that is controlled by personal opinion and local electrical specifications. It is at all times advisable not only from a standpoint of safety, but also of neatness in the booth to have all electrical wiring in conduit as far as it is practical.

The exhaust system of ventilation should never be used in the booth. This fact is self-evident when the nature of the exhaust system is analyzed. While the air is being exhausted from the booth by the fan the fresh air rushes in through the projector openings in the wall, making a direct draft on the operator and filling the booth with the air from the auditorium.

This system of ventilation also tends to pull in the dust through the openings, keeping the lenses constantly dirty. The proper system of ventilating the booth is by forcing fresh air from the outside into it through the openings in the wall at the floor. There should be one of these openings in each one of the four walls of the booth. An outlet pipe of sufficient diameter should be placed in the ceiling of the booth in order to allow the foul air to be forced out. It will be easily seen that by using this method of ventilation that there is no draft in the booth.

The port holes for the projectors should be protected by gravity drop doors held up by means of fusible links. These fusible links should be placed in such a position that in case of fire they would be easily attacked by the flame and the doors would drop, cutting off all possibility of the flames reaching the auditorium. The fusible links are generally placed directly over the upper film magazine of the projectors.

A galvanized iron bucket containing wet sand should be in each booth in order to receive the burnt ends of carbon. A galvanized iron container with a self closing top should also be kept in each booth in order to receive the film scrap resulting from patching and what other refuse there might be in the booth.

Fire extinguishers should be placed in convenient positions in the booth, and should of course be of approved design. The door leading into the booth should open outward with spring hinges in order that it may be kept closed at all times. A booth should be constructed of concrete or other absolutely fireproof material. Concrete of course is generally used. This being the case the floor of the booth should be covered by cork carpet or rubber matting. This is especially desirable because of the fact that it eliminates almost all the noises in the booth.

The front wall of the booth or the wall that faces the screen should be painted black or green in order that the eye strain on the operators should be eliminated as far as possible. With a perfect ventilation system in the booth it is unnecessary to use electric fans.

Wash Room Should Be Next to Converter Room

A wash room six by six for the convenience of the operator should be built next to the converter room. Hot and cold running water and drinking water for his convenience should be easily accessible. By making a booth as comfortable as possible for the operator higher efficiency is always assured, and a theatre owner or builder should always keep this fact in mind because during the actual operation of a performance the operator holds the larger part of the responsibility. Upon him rests the favorable presentation to the public of the combined efforts of the producer, artists and camera man.

The greatest care should be taken in selecting the objective lenses for the motion picture projector. The highest grade of objectives obtainable should be considered none too good, and every exhibitor should make it his duty to secure the highest grade lens that is offered to the trade. The art of making lenses is very exact, and a high class objective lens represents no small investment.

Assuming that the photography of a picture is perfect, it can be spoiled by being projected through a cheap or imperfect objective lens. Therefore the results obtained on a screen are far from satisfactory to the audience. The condenser lenses should also have serious consideration. Upon these lenses depends the proper condensing of the light. Do not think that any piece of glass shaped like a condenser lens will suffice. A great deal depends upon the proper grinding of the surface and the material from which the glass is made.

Too much care in detail cannot be given to the booth. It is the most essential part of a motion picture theatre and upon its complete equipment and intelligent operation depends a great deal towards the success of a theatre.

In drafting the original plans of a contemplated theatre, the location of the booth and screen should be first.

WAGNER CONVERTERS FOR MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION

THE advantages of the direct current arc for motion picture projection are now so generally well known that it is not necessary to dwell upon them at length. It is sufficient to say that the direct current arc is more efficient than the alternating, its maximum candle power by accurate test being nearly three times that of the alternating current arc for the same current consumption.

The direct current arc is steady, forming a crater which is stationary on the positive carbon. The alternating current arc wanders over the ends of the carbons, producing a screen illumination of varying brilliancy, which is trying to the eyes. The direct current arc is quiet, which is an important consideration for small theatres.

Outside of very limited areas in the downtown districts of our largest cities, alternating current only is available. Theatres located in the alternating current districts require some means for converting alternating current to direct. A theatre that attempts to use alternating current for projection cannot hope to show pictures, as well as one projecting with direct current.

Realizing that the existing device for converting alternating current to direct current left much to be desired, the Wagner Electric Mfg. Company, St. Louis, Mo., developed its now well known White Light Converter for motion picture projection.

The Wagner White Light Converter combines an alternating current motor and a direct generator in a single machine, and is therefore compact and economical in its operation.

Can Be Easily Installed

Any electrician can install the Wagner White Light Converter in two or three hours by following the very explicit wiring diagram that accompanies each machine.

After its installation the Wagner converter needs practically no care other than keeping a liberal supply of good grade medium machine oil in the oil wells.

The Wagner converter takes up very little space, and may be placed directly in the operating booth along with the control switches, transformer and ballast resistance. It may, however, be installed in any other clean, dry place, where it will be easily accessible for an occasional inspection and oiling.

The ballast resistance and transformer may be mounted near the converter, as may also the line switch and the starting switch. These switches, however, may be located in the projection booth and the converter controlled from there.

In any rotary converter the ratio between the alternating current voltage and the direct current voltage is fixed. By impressing a suitably low alternating current voltage upon the slip rings of the converter only a small amount of ballast resistance is required.

This is accomplished by the small transformer that is supplied with each converter, and the result is a much better overall efficiency, as less voltage and consequently less power are consumed by the ballast resistance. All ballast resistance, however, cannot be dispensed with, as the arc is very much more steady if it has a small resistance in series with it.

Ballast Resistance

This ballast resistance for single arc may be adjustable or non-adjustable, the latter consisting of a plain resistance, with one tap. Either the whole or part resistance may be inserted in the arc circuit when not in operation, but cannot be changed when the machine is operating. The adjustable resistance has several taps, allowing the arc to start with a small current, which can be varied up to the maximum capacity of the converter, while the projection machine is in operation.

This is a great convenience and enables the operator to regulate the intensity of his arc to suit the density of the film. In either case the maximum capacity of the resistance equals the rated capacity of the converter.

For parallel arcs operating at full capacity simultaneously, the capacity of the converter must be equal to the combined capacities of the resistances. A separate resistance, of either non-adjustable or adjustable type, must be used for each arc.

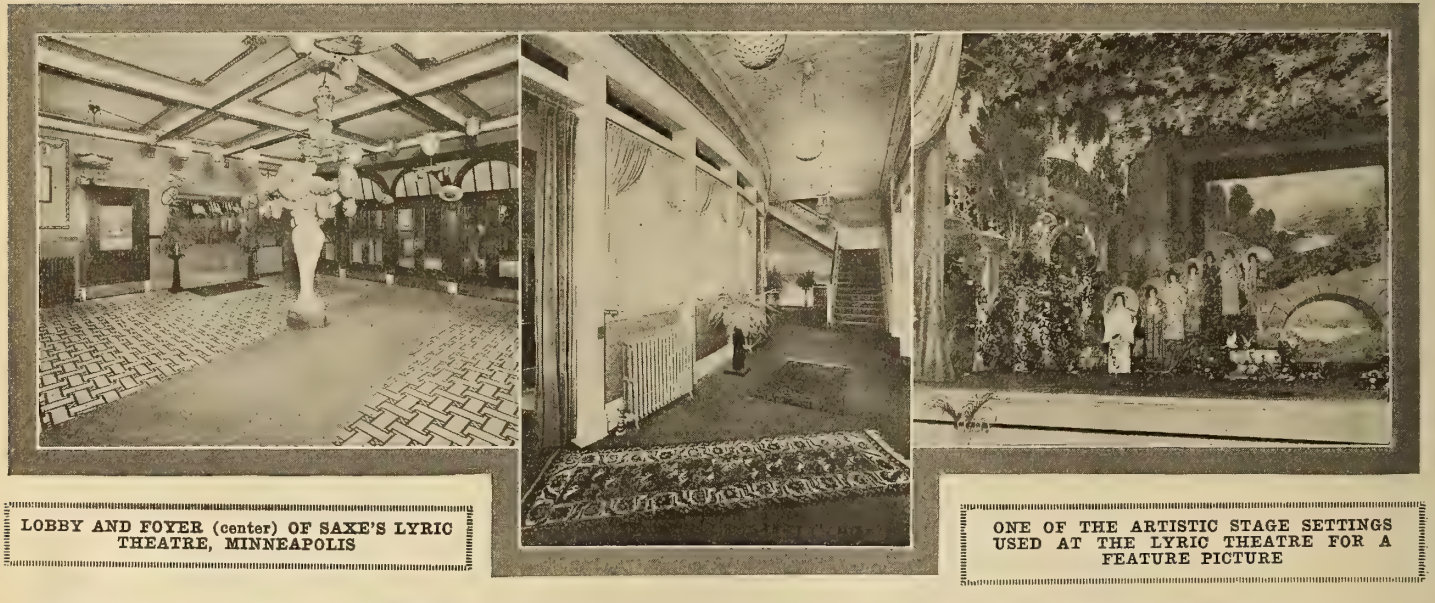
Many up-to-date theatres are equipped with two projecting machines, which may be operated from a single converter. The converter will easily stand the overload of the two arcs operating at once, for the short time that is necessary for the second machine to become "warmed up." To operate two machines from a single converter most conveniently, a "Duplex" resistance is supplied.

The "Duplex" resistance cuts out the resistance of the arc going into service, and at the same time cuts in the resistance of the arc going out of service. When only one arc is operating the "Duplex" resistance is adjustable while the machine is operating.

Non-Adjustable Resistances of Special Type

A special type of non-adjustable resistance in each arc circuit may be used to accomplish the same purpose. It is provided with a switch which is closed when the arc is operating normally, and open while the arc is "warming up."

The adustable type of resistance for this service is provided with sufficient resistance to limit current in the arc that is warming up to a fraction of its normal value. The converter will easily take care of the two arcs for the short time that one is "warming up."



The current from the Wagner White Light Converter is a steady direct current which allows no flicker of the arc. A steady unflickering light is of utmost importance in motion picture projection. A flickering light, according to oculists, is tiresome to the eyes, and, for persons who regularly attend motion picture theatres, where light is flickering, it becomes dangerous.

Wagner converters for motion picture projection are supplied for any of the standard alternating current frequencies, and for 110 and 220 volts. The direct current capacities range from 35 to 100 amperes at 65-75 volts.

This converter can be used as a motor generator set to drive vacuum cleaning outfits and other machinery, which makes it doubly valuable as an all-around installation.

Some of the most recent theatres to put in the Wagner outfit are: New Grand Central theatre, St. Louis, Mo.; Crown theatre, Everett, Mass.; Victoria theatre, Watertown, Mass.; Keystone theatre, Chicago, Ill.; Allston theatre, Allston, Mass.; Lexington theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., and the Locust Photo Play theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

EQUIPMENT JUSTIFIES RAISE IN PRICE

LOBBY AND FOYER (center) OF SAXE'S LYRIC THEATRE, MINNEAPOLIS

Will an advance in the price of admission to a motion picture theatre from a dime to ten and twenty cents meet with success?

This question was suggested to me one evening when I picked up a Minneapolis newspaper and read of a change of policy at the Lyric theatre. Manager Prosper Schwie made the announcement that beginning with a certain week there would be an advance in the evening prices to ten and twenty cents. The admission for matinees would remain, as formerly, ten cents. Local exhibitors were skeptical of the success of such a move; the motion picture public, they argued, had been educated to the ten-cent admission regime and they felt it was impossible to ask a higher sum than the customary dime.

The venture interested me. I had been a regular patron of the Lyric theatre for its four years of existence as a picture house and knew its reputation as a first-run film house.

In view of the fine class of the regular patrons of the Lyric, which comprised the best clientele of any motion picture house in Minneapolis, and the high standard of the programs, I did not see why the advance in prices was not just the right thing.

"Will the departure prove a success?" I asked myself and then I answered it by putting on my hat and setting out for the Lyric theatre. "What more was I going to get for twenty cents?"

As I swung along Hennepin avenue past Seventh street, the bright front of the Lyric atracted my eye. There outlined against the black sky in letters of light was the big electric sign spelling out Saxe's L-Y-R-I-C. Then there were the hundreds of bright bulbs twinkling about the canopy and drawing the pleased attention of the passerby. It was half past eight o'clock; the sidewalk was thronged with crowds of attractively dressed people, all seemingly bent on amusement. As I reached the front of the theatre another machine drew up beside the automobiles that were standing, two deep, before the house. The attentive footman with a neat little Lyric on the collar of his blue coat jumped forward, opened the door of the car and helped out the occupants. As they entered the lobby, they were followed by a bevy of happy young people; behind them came a family, all with expectant faces.

I stopped a moment to admire the artistic decoration of the canopy. The feature was a Japanese picture and an Oriental atmosphere was created by the dozens of gay red, yellow, blue and green paper lanterns, strung about under the bulb-studded canopy. A large Japanese umbrella was suspended from the middle of the canopy and another smaller one above the ticket window. Baskets of flowers and hanging ferns, suspended from the canopy, gave a welcome touch of nature, while four bay trees flanked the automobile entrance.

"So far," I reflected, "the Lyric theatre is certainly justifying its right to be classed as a theatre of the first rank."

The lobby was filled with people waiting for the next performance to begin. As I stood waiting with them, I began to read the advertisements of present and coming attractions. The first thing that struck me was that gaudy posters of the old melodramatic type in screaming colors were not used. In place of them were artistic hand painted signs. On either side of the entrance were two three-sheet "cut out" framed pictures with velvet backing. Then I recalled having noticed outside a display of pictures of scenes from a photoplay, framed in a brass frame with velvet backing and glass front and set on an attractive easel.

"Score two for the Lyric," I said mentally.

The Decorations of the Lobby

At once I noticed that the lobby had been redecorated in old ivory, Roman gold and brown Tiffany panels. The delicacy of coloring was delightful and restful after the garish brilliancy of the furnishings and decorations of the majority of the amusement houses. Good taste seemed the keynote everywhere. The Japanese touch was evidenced in the lobby by strings of vari-colored lanterns and by the round discs of opened parasols suspended between the entrance doors. In the center of the lobby was a tall electrolier of graceful design, against the whiteness of which lanterns and parasols made an effective contrast. The rays from the artistic inverted bowls of the indirect lights were reflected in the gleaming surface of brass jardinieres containing ferns that were placed on mahogany pedestals on either side of the room.

The crowd had been increasing and as I was unable to gain entrance, I looked up Manager Schwie or "Pros," as he is familiarly known, who at once took me past the uniformed doorman into the foyer.

Here again were changes. The floor of the foyer, the aisles and the stairways were covered with a carpet, thick and soft to the foot and pleasant to the eye in its restful green coloring. The dark green formed a good background to display the rich colors of the Oriental rugs scattered about. In the soft glow of the low-hung lights, one could see the attractive freshness of the fronds of the large ferns that stood on mahogany pedestals about the foyer.

"Score three," I said out loud and did not realize that I had voiced my thought until I became aware of a neat colored usher who was smiling as she proffered me a program. It was an attractive little affair in white and dull blue with a cover design showing the heavy folds of a stage curtain and the quaint, white-clad figure of a clown, standing in front of it, his shadow, made huge by the footlights, cast on the curtain back of him.

Japanese Atmosphere Preserved

I followed my guide to a seat and, comfortably esconced, began to look about me. Everything was fresh and new; palms and ferns were plentiful; the orchestra was fairly concealed in a bower of flowers at the right of the stage. An attractive picture of a formal garden was the background, while leafy arches of trees, so cleverly executed that the illusion of reality was remarkable, met overhead, making the entire stage a charming picture.

Nowhere in the theatre was the patron allowed to forget that he was seeing a Japanese photoplay. Outside the theatre and in the lobbies had been lanterns and parasols.

The orchestra was playing; the strains seemed reminiscent of the spirit of the Orient. I consulted my program to find that one more carefully thought out detail had been contributed to the effect of unity throughout the decorations, program and general atmosphere. For the number was Bendix's overture, "Japanese Episode," and was given with skill and spirit by the orchestra under the direction of W. E. Dirks. As I counted the men in the orchestra I found that one had been added, making ten, including Julius K. Johnson, organist. The Lyric orchestra has long held the enviable reputation of being the best "legitimate" theatre or motion picture house orchestra in the Northwest. In looking here for signs of the change I had found throughout the house so far, I knew there could be no improvement; the only change was that the organization was increased in size.

Then came the displaying of the big feature and subconsciously as I watched the unfolding of the thrilling tale, I thought how clear the projecting was. That was not a new feature, however.

The last reel of the absorbing Oriental story was over; the curtain raised and a Japanese setting was shown. Seven dainty girls in the picturesque dress of the Japanese maiden came tripping over a rustic bridge of the arched type, characteristic of the land of the almond-eyed Celestial. Each carried an open parasol over her shoulder, framing her bright face and high-piled black hair with its ornaments of tiny fans. It all seemed strangely familiar, somehow. What did it recall? Why, the entrance scene from "Madame Butterfly," of course. As if to confirm my surmise, came the strains of "One Fine Day" from the Puccini opera, and then the clear tones of a soprano voice singing the words of the famous aria. I consulted the program and found it was Madame Edith Helena, formerly of the Century Opera Company. It was a fitting close to the program.

Earlier in the evening a solo had been given by Domenico Russo, also a former grand opera singer.

Madame Helena had finished; the last notes died away and then came a wave of applause. There was a rustling into wraps and the big audience began to leave. As I went slowly out with the crowd I heard remarks on all sides on the new policy of the management and the comments were favorable.

"Why shouldn't they be?" I asked myself. I carefully went over the various points I had noted that evening. There was, first and foremost, the worth of the films shown. They were the choicest releases on the market. Then they were given a most thoughtful and individual setting in the way of an artistically decorated theatre, a high grade of advertising display a background characteristic of the featured picture—as the Japanese note carried out everywhere when an Oriental play was being shown—and a musical program that further carried out the desired atmosphere.

Truly, as Mr. Thomas Saxe said after his return from a recent trip to New York, "the passing of a ten-cent picture theatre to make way for the photoplay that will demand and get $1 admission" seems certain and near at hand. The advance in the quality of the films, the caliber of the men who are writing them, recruits coming from among the cleverest newspaper and short story writers, and the fact that numbered among producers are such names as Belasco, Frohman and Zukor, seems to predict in no uncertain terms that the film business has a future far beyond the ten-cent theatre.

The change of the motion picture business to a higher plane is coming and it seems to me as if the Lyric were simply taking the lead in a movement that is certain to be successful.

Even with the keen competition furnished by the erection of two large new theatres, with the increased cost of living and the fact that the public has been educated to a fixed general admission price of ten cents, I feel satisfied that the advance in price is going to be one of the pronounced successes of the theatrical business.

NEW THEATRES ARE BUILDING IN PHILADELPHIA

KETCHAM & McQUADE have been awarded the contract for a moving picture theatre and stores at 59th and Pine streets. Walter Sharpley is the architect, and the building will cost $37,000. It will be two stories and built of brick and terra cotta.

Albert H. Fritz and Kersey Carrigan have sold their motion picture house in Quarryville to John Groff.

The new Hamilton photoplay theatre on Hamilton street, near Second, Allentown, is now in its last stages of completion, and will be open to the public on or about September 1. The new theatre is the twelfth of its kind in the city of Allentown. H. M. Meeker is the manager. The building, a one story brick and concrete structure, with furnishings, costs approximately twenty-five thousand dollars, and is fireproof. The front is constructed of terra cotta. Entrance to the theatre is gained by means of a lobby thirty-five feet long and twenty feet wide.

J. H. Young, of Young's theatre, Greenville, has sold his theatre to Mr. Halm, of Smithton, Pa., and the new owner took possession at once.

EVERY successful business proposition which merits any consideration because of its originality, is sure to be followed by a host of imitators, grafters, fakers and other irresponsibles, whose slogan is "we've got something just as good." The Universal Movie Ticket Plan is no exception to the general rule.

A Universal Movie Ticket solicitor in a Pennsylvania town was threatened by a merchant with arrest and personal violence the other day because a "salesman" for a movie ticket concern, which existed in the "salesman's" imagination, had just succeeded in swindling him, an exhibitor, and a number of other storekeepers with his fake proposition.

THIS IS A WARNING TO BEWARE—not only of these sellers of "blue-sky," but of any solicitors who claim to represent some movie ticket concern which is absolutely unknown to you. The next time a salesman calls on you with a movie ticket plan ask him if he represents Universal Movie Tickets. If he says yes, make him show his credentials. BETTER STILL—PLAY SAFE. As there are no other big concerns in the business as yet, sign up with the Universal and PLAY SAFE.

Don't sign anything unless it is the regular form of Universal Movie Ticket Contract. Universal Movie Tickets are backed and redeemed by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, with a working capital of $5,000,000, the largest film manufacturing concern in the universe.

AGAIN REMEMBER—MR. EXHIBITOR and MR. MERCHANT—the Universal Movie Ticket Plan is backed by the mighty resources of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. Every ticket presented for admission is as good as CASH—and will be redeemed in cash by any Universal Exchange or by the Home Office of the Universal.

UNIVERSAL MOVIE TICKETS

R-K M. T. CORP., AUTHORIZED DISTRIBUTORS

18 East 41st Street New York City

You are not asked to invest a cent, Mr. Exhibitor.

You are not asked to do any work, Mr. Exhibitor.

You are not asked to take any risk, or any chance of loss.

You have only to agree to accept Universal Movie Tickets at your theatre---and to turn them in to your nearest Universal Exchange the same as cash for supplies, or in exchange for CASH.

The mighty resources of the great Universal are back of this plan.

There can never be any doubt about the prompt redemption of tickets.

Can you imagine anything easier, simpler, fairer or---BETTER BUSINESS?

The Universal Movie Ticket Plan is Rapidly Proving Itself the Greatest Business-Getter Ever Offered to Exhibitors . . .

This statement is based on facts. Facts that are piling up and multiplying daily. Universal Movie Tickets are the trading stamps of the movies, and a thousand times more popular than trading stamps ever will be BECAUSE—the fan who saves Universal Movie Tickets gets quick action, while the premium coupon saver has to save and save for months or a year to get anything of real value, or THAT HE OR SHE REALLY WANTS.

Universal Movie Tickets make an INSTANT appeal to the live merchant, because he sees in a minute that the above statement is absolutely true. He also sees that this plan keeps the premium money in his own town. It comes back to you, Mr. Exhibitor, in admission coupons which are the same as cash.

NOW THEN—Fill out, detach and mail the coupon for full particulars. Attach the coupon to your theatre letterhead and on that make a list of the merchants in your town who you think will be interested.

We will write direct to these merchants and tell them all about Universal Movie Tickets and that you will accept them at your theatre. The wonderful success of Universal Movie Tickets is due to the plan itself—not to extensive advertising or to wild claims or persistent salesmanship. Do not fail to read the warning above. Tie up with the Universal and play safe. All you have to do to start the ball rolling is to fill out and mail the coupon with the list as requested. It will prove to be the best business move you ever made. Do it now.

The Betterment of Posters and Lobby Display

IT is not so very long ago that the "still" was considered the ideal original for a moving picture poster. There is an old shibboleth that "the camera cannot lie," and therefore producers believed that the very best way to advertise their films was to take a still and reproduce it.

Fundamentally, this is farily sound, or would be if the average still was any good, but when it comes down to cases, nine-tenths of the stills do not reflect the real punch of the story.

Possibly it is because the still man seems to pick out the most uninteresting episodes in the entire reel. This is largely due to the fact that he doesn't know what is coming. Apart from which, from the director's point of view, the still man is very much of a nuisance. He is apt to get in the way, and has to snap when he can without delaying the action any more than possible. There is, of course, the other still that is taken of a situation at the director's orders, but here again the director is not infallible when it comes to picking out what he thinks ought to be the most thrilling situations.

Apart from which, a situation, however thrilling it may be when it is the culminating point of a big scene, is apt to lose its significance when isolated from its context. The real thriller loses its punch when "done over again." It is, therefore, only occasionally that the still is really good and usable from the poster maker's standpoint.

It is just about eighteen months since some producers began to realize that photographs were not everything. Some of the first sketches that were made for motion picture posters were those put out by the Mutual Film Corporation for "Our Mutual Girl." This series of "Mutual Girl" posters, which ran to fifty-two reels, made its impression upon the moving picture trade, and during its run, producer after producer, gave up using photographs and used sketches. Some of these were very good, some were very bad, and some were neither good nor bad. But the time has come now when there is a strong movement in the business for the betterment of posters.

The accompanying illustration, showing a poster from a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, shows a decided advance, although reproduced without color it loses much of its effect. It is an example of what good paper really should be, because it pleased the exhibitor and attracted the attention of the public and drew them into the theatres. The reason for this fortunate result is not difficult to discern.

The subject was carefully selected by an expert in poster making, the sketch was made by an accomplished artist, who faithfully carried out the instructions given him, and the lithographic work was technically as near perfect as could be obtained.

With all this behind it, it would have been more surprising had the paper been a failure. Art is the pictorial visualization of life, and if the picture fails in its mission it is not the fault of art, but of the practitioner.

There is a strong feeling among hard-headed business men that "Art is all right in its way, but it does not weigh much." They seem to believe that artistic work only appeals to the art lover, and that the latter is in the minority, but as a matter of fact the general public is a better critic, and has a keener appreciation of what is really good than it is given credit for.

Eccentric, Not Artistic

The misfortune is that a lot of stuff is supposed to be artistic, whereas it is only eccentric.

The great stumbling block today is the question of price. Film men are for the most part business men, and the business man has it ingrained in his being that the proper way to conduct his organization is to buy in the cheapest market, and to sell in the dearest, but he doesn't always take into consideration that what is cheap is often dear.

He will spend thousands of dollars on the production of a film, and then cut the price of his lithography down to the very last cent.

Now it stands to reason that he cannot obtain first class work for third class price, and it is no unusual thing to hear a manufacturer complain that he is overstocked with posters, and therefore he must cut down his orders.

The reason that he is overstocked with posters is because they are so bad the exhibitor won't buy them. Now, inasmuch as he expects to break even on the posters, this is a very ill advised policy.

The manufacturer of ordinary merchandise places a certain amount of money aside as an advertising appropriation, and he spends that amount of money to make his sales, but the film producer expects to sell his posters and pay for the handling of them, consequently he is not spending money on advertising, but is producing merchandise, and the man who produces the best merchandise at the price is the man who will make the greatest quantity of sales.

The lithographer should not be given carte blanche to produce the best stuff he possibly can irrespective of price, but if a concern starts out to manufacture an article which he is to sell at, say twenty-five cents, it must give an article worth twenty-five cents.

Exhibitor Willing to Pay for Paper of Merit

It has been proven that the exhibitor is, after all, a reasonable person to deal with. He knows good paper from bad paper, and he is perfectly willing to pay a little more for a better quality article, which will fill his theatre, than to pay a low price for paper which actually drives people away from his house. And it must be remembered that a house is filled to a very large extent by the posters exhibited.

Not only is there a strong opening in the business for better lithographic work, but producers are beginning to realize that it is not absolutely necessary to have horror and crime depicted on their posters.

There are many states that will not allow the exhibition of posters which depict crime and weapons of offense, but while they do not allow a gun scene, they seem to have no objection to a strangling scene or to a man being electrocuted by accident or any other horror that does not come directly under the Sing Sing category.

Now, there is a large number of people who do not care for this sort of thrill. Crime is not punch, and it is quite possible to get punch into posters without depicting crime.

It is a fact that several art schools throughout the country have asked for sets of certain good posters for exhibition purposes, and as examples on which to base lectures to students. The manufacturers to which this was told was polite enough to be interested, but at the same time he stated that art students were not the class of patrons that his exhibitors were after. The very fact that these posters were used for lecture purposes proved to the students and their parents that there was something better in the film business than they had reason to believe, and it is certain that the advertising obtained in this way was of inestimable benefit to the manufacturer of the film. What is known as "mouth to ear" advertising is the most valuable that any advertiser can have.

THREE KINDS OF FORT WAYNE COMPENSARCS

THE first Compensarc, an AC compensarc, was put in service in the year 1907. Since that time there have been but few changes in the construction of this device, which is evidence that its original form of construction was good.

The device as it is now furnished is illustrated in Fig. 1. It is a special static transforming device designed to reduce the voltage of the incoming alternating curent to the value proper for the operation of the motion picture projection arc.

The device is complete in itself and is intended for installation in the operating booth, at a position convenient to the operator, so that without moving from his place he can, by adjustment of the control switch, vary the curent flowing through ihs projection arc.

The standard device is designed to give 30, 40 and 60 amperes, but may be furnished for any other three values of current, 60 amperes and below. They are furnished for service on either 60 or 133 cycle circuits and for either 110 or 220 volts alternating current.

The mechanical and electrical construction of AC Compensarcs is of te hsame excellence that is characteristic of power and lighting transformers, the same high grade sheet steel being used in the ore and the highest grade of copper wire and insulation being present in the coil.

The popularity of the device is easily accounted for, for it eliminates the fire risk inherent in over-heated rheostats, uses but 30 per cent. of the energy required by the rheostat and gives light of excellent quality for the projection of the moving picture.

FIG. 1.
THE TRANSFORMER

These Compensarcs are especially adapted to the moving picture theatre of the smaller size which has alternating current available for the motion picture machine.

The Fort Wayne AC to DC Compensarc (Fig. 2) is a motor-generator set which, operating upon the alternating current supply of electrical energy commonly furnished motion picture theatres, delivers direct current at the proper voltage for the operation of the motion picture projection arc. This Compensarc consists of a standard alternating current induction motor direct connected to a special direct current generator, both machines being mounted on the same base in very compact manner.

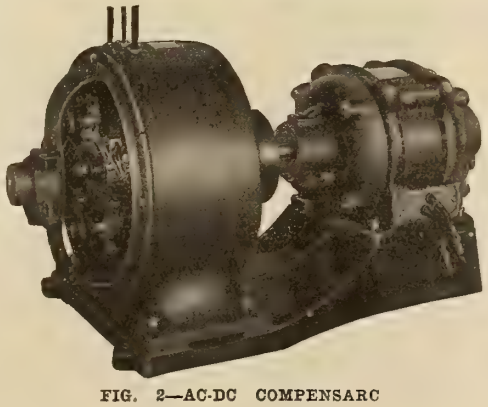
The windings of the generator end of this Compensarc are special so that the machine gives a peculiar volt-ampere characteristic curve such that when the current of the arc reduces, the voltage automatically increases in such manner that a stable arc results without using any lamp steadying resistance whatever.

Moreover, the winding prevents the blowing of fuses or other damage when the projection arc carbons are left in contact.

Compensarcs Operate a High Efficiency

The AC to DC Compensarcs are furnished for operation on single-phase, two-phase or three-phase circuits, as desired, and for the commercial voltages.

They are supplied for the operation of a single lamp and also for the operation of two lamps alternately, each of the two styles being furnished in different ampere capacities, so that there is an AC to DC Compensarc of standard construction particularly adapted to practically any projection proposition where direct current is desired for the projection machine from an alternative current supply of energy.



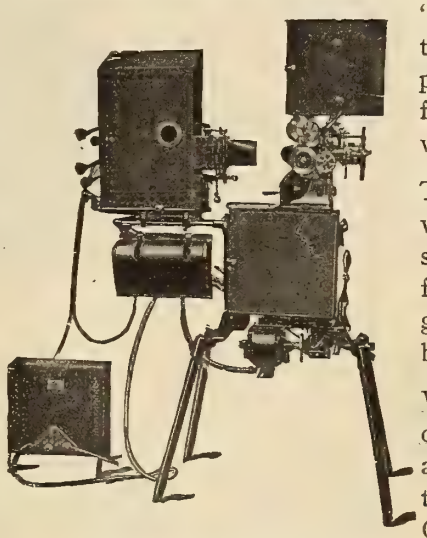


FIG. 2—AC-DC COMPENSARC

The AC to DC Compensarcs operate at a very high efficiency and need practically no attention in service except an occasional cleaning and oiling. The current delivered to the propection arc can be easily varied by means of a field rheostat so that films of varying density an be projected satisfactorily.

The two-lamp outfits enable the operator to dissolve one picture into the next, as is now practically expected of all the better class of motion picture theatres.

Equipment Includes Special Control Panel

The complete equipment embodies a special control panel on which is mounted ammeter, voltmeter, rheostat and switches, all enclosed in a fireproof cabinet. The use of this control panel simplifies the wiring and facilitates the proper handling of the Compensarc.

The DC Compensarc illustrated in Fig. 3 may also be classed as a motor-generator set and like unto the AC to DC Compensarc, differs from the ordinary motor-generator set in regard to the electrical windings. This Compensarc is especially adapted to the furnishing of current for motion picture projection machines where the theatre has a supply of direct current. These Compensarcs are furnished for service on the ordinary direct current voltages, and are furnished of standard construction for the operation of single lamps and also for the operation of two lamps alternately.

DC COMPENSARC

Different current capacities can also be supplied so that there is a DC Compensarc particularly adapted to practically any motion picture theatre which is furnished with a direct current supply.

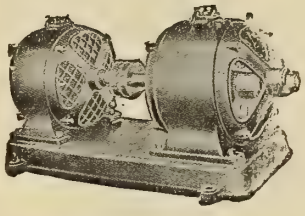
The complete equipment embodies a special panel on which is mounted ammeter, voltmeter, field rheostat and switches, all enclosed in fireproof cabinet. The DC Compensarcs operate at very high efficiency and are safe and reliable. Their use effects great saving in current consumption over the rheostat method of reducing the line voltage to that proper for the operation of the projection arc.

PHILADELPHIA THEATRES PLAN FALL RENOVATIONS

THE Garrick, one of the large Chestnut street houses, has been given over to photoplays all summer.

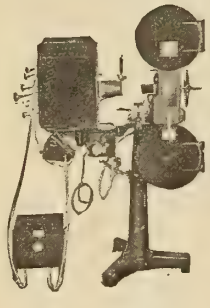
Ike Berney, who at present is the owner of The Pastime theatre at Lewistown, Pa., has taken a lease on the Opera House at that place and has started remodeling for a motion picture theatre. When he opens he will run nothing but a feature program in the house.

All of the improvements it is expected will be completed by September 1, and the theatre will be known by the name of the Temple. The Patsime Theatre will continue its regular program.



The Star theatre, at Monessen, Pa., which has been closed for remodeling and improvement, is to be opened the last of this month. The house has been conducted by T. B. Cowan for the past two years, during which time W. A. McShaffrey, the owner of the theatre, was on the road as a vaudeville performer.

Mr. McShaffrey states he will have one of the best theatres in that section of the country when all of the improvements are completed. The seating capacity is to be enlarged and the house redecorated and made more comfortable for the patrons. New projection machines will also be installed.



Many theatres and motion picture businesses in the Pittsburgh section have changed hands during the past week or will change hands during the next few weeks. The theatres and their proprietors seem to be at loggerheads in that district on account of the slowness of business during the warm weather and the selling of many of the houses, it is said, can be attributed to this cause more than any other.

This is the time to put in new modern projection equipment—HALLBERG QUALITY with his experience costs you no more than other equipments dealt in BY OTHERS WITH NO EXPERIENCE—BE WISE.

Selling Tickets by Electricity Make Efficiency

THE quick dispensing of tickets in a motion picture theatre during the rush hours is a most important matter for the consideration of the modern theatre. There is nothing which wears on the nerve of a patron more than having to stand in line, maybe half-way down the block, waiting for a ticket.

Actual experience proves that in many instances a prospective patron will pass on to the next theatre rather than stand in line waiting for a ticket. In the old days this matter was not of such importance because the business was not developed to the extent it is today, and patrons at that time would excuse lots of shortcomings, which will not be tolerated today in even the poorest conducted motion picture theatre.

The original method practiced in dispensing tickets was to purchase the tickets on a roll, which was kept at the side of the cashier, one or more tickets being torn off at a time. Later on holders were supplied to hold these rolls, and each ticket contained a number running consecutively from beginning to end of the roll.

Automatic Ticket Counters

Later on ticket machines were developed which, by pulling a lever or turning a crank, would deliver one or more tickets which would be automatically counted, and such count was registered within the machine. These hand operated ticket selling machines have been used to a great extent, and in some instances they were operated by foot power with more or less satisfaction.

The Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Company, of New York City, has been the largest and most important manufacturer and distributor of automatic ticket sellers of the foot power kind until a short time ago their new electric ticket seller was placed on the market.

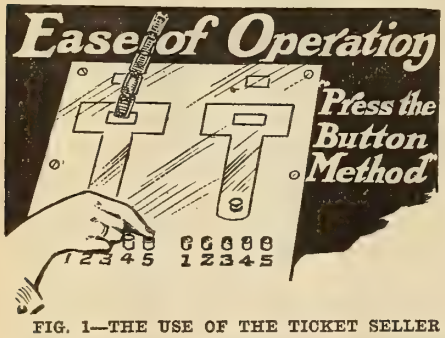

FIG. 1—THE USE OF THE TICKET SELLER

In order to better understand the operation of this machine I herewith submit a few illustrations, the first one of which represents the top of a two price machine, which will deliver anywhere from one to five tickets within the fraction of a second in either one of two prices.

An observation of illustration Fig. 1 shows two separate sets of buttons numbered from 1 to 5, also a slot through which the tickets come up, and there is also the outline of the cover which may be removed, and under which is the ticket counter, which automatically records the sale of each ticket, the same as in a cash register.

The operation of the machine requires the least effort of any ever produced. If one ticket is to be dispensed, press button No. 1 and in an instant one ticket is dispensed through the slot, but it is still held so that it will not blow away. If five tickets are wanted, press button No. 5 and in the same instant as is required to dispense one, five tickets are pushed out and held ready for the purchaser. By merely pressing one of the five buttons on the other side a ticket of a different price is similarly dispensed. If it is desired to have one ticket at a time dispensed separately, all one has to do is to press button No. 1 as many times as tickets wanted, and the machine will do this without clogging.

The ease with which this machine can be installed, and the small amount of room which it occupies is clearly illustrated in Fig. 2 and Fig. 3.

Fig. 3 gives the front view of a portable booth showing the top of the machine for two prices, and in phantom the two magazines holding the tickets with the electric motor on the side near the bottom.

Fig. 2 illustrates this same machine from the operator's side of the booth. The small amount of room required is evident from these illustrations, and there is nothing in the way to interfere with the operator's knees or feet. Illustrations further show how quickly and easily the machine may be installed, and it is flush with the top of the cash board, making it easy to take in and give out change.

The ticket magazines are made of metal which are automatically locked into place, and are large enough to hold, folded within them, 4,000 tickets in each magazine, or enough in a two price machine for one day's use. A different colored ticket is furnished for each denomination of price.

FIG. 2—MACHINE SEEN FROM INSIDE

The regular tickets can be furnished with special imprint of the name of the theatre, and the machines can also be made to issue coupon tickets for reserve seats or for rain checks at baseball parks.

The machines may be built for delivery of tickets in from one to four different prices.

The parts of the machine are made of the finest tempered steel, and the top plates are finished in polished brass.

The motor is one of the important features of this machine. It does not run except during the instant the ticket is being dispensed and cut off. Therefore, the current consumption is insignificant.

Motor Operates Mechanism

When one of the buttons is pressed the motor starts instantly, and within the machine there is a crank movement geared to the motor which operates a plunger mechanism in conjunction with the ticket supply and the ticket counter, so that with a very short movement of this plunger mechanism it is possible to, within the fraction of a second, move one or five tickets, count them, cut them off and restore the mechanism to its starting position, the instant the motor stops.

The finger pressure on any of the buttons not only starts the motor, but each button also works a lever mechanism, which acts as a stop for the main mechanical movement, so that when button No. 1 is pressed the mechanism moves only sufficient to push out one ticket, but when button No. 5 is pressed the mechanism is allowed to run the full stroke, and then five tickets are pushed out and cut off.

The machine is so simple and perfect in its construction that it is a wonder this new system has not been developed and put in use long ago.

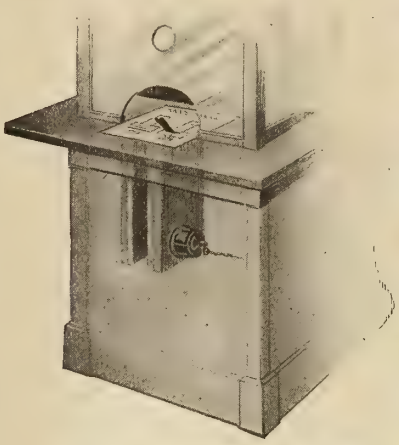

FIG. 3—FRONT VIEW OF BOOTH

The prices are within reach of everybody, and there is no chance for uncertainty or mistakes on the part of the operator. When any of the buttons is pressed you can feel sure that the number of tickets marked on the button will be dispensed—no more and no less.

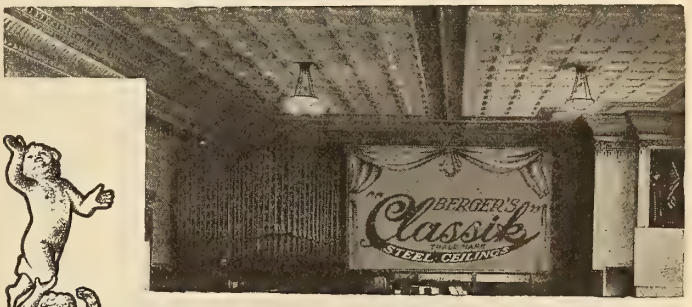
Most of the modern theatres have already been equipped with this device, and only the highest praise comes from the users of this most complete and efficient electric ticket seller.

FORM PADDED OPERA SEATS MAKE PATRONS COMFORTABLE

AS a military organization responds to its commander's order, so the peaceful army of American inventors, designers and mechanics respond to the call of the American people. Whatever the public's needs require or the public's fancy suggests is shortly forthcoming from the American factories.

The automobile is the most spectacular and obvious example of the way in which a public demand is met. The people of the country said, "Give us horseless vehicles," and in a short ten years there sprang from the nation's shops a multitude of cars, in such variety of size, shape and equipment as would meet every individual need and every personal whim.

In addition to this wide range and variety in external appearance, there has been maintained by the best factories a standard of reliability in the hidden portions, the service portions with which few drivers are familiar but upon which depend ultimately the safety and satisfaction of the user. This standard was not set to meet a direct public demand, it was not an aid to salesmen, it was an expression of the manufacturer's loyalty to his ideals and his wish to produce the best, in little things as in large.



Scarcely second to the spectacular rise of the automobile has been the enormous growth of moving pictures. A few years ago any audience sat rapt before the screen which showed, dimly and crudely, a moving train or a fire-engine in action. After a brief experimental period and in response to the public's cry of "More, more!" there came a rapid and steady growth in picture production.

Each month saw improvements in subject matter and production, each month saw elaboration of scenario and acting until today we can see a favorite novel acted in full with scarcely a printed word to the thousand feet of film and yet with a completeness and clarity which is fully as satisfactory as the book's pages.

Less obvious than the improvements in scene-laying and in acting, hidden from the attention of the theatre goer but working always for his comfort, are the thousands of mechanical improvements which hundreds of factories are effecting in all lines of picture-theatre equipment. Projecting machines, lobbies, screens, ticket-windows, all have been constantly watched and constantly improved by the country's most acute inventors.

A concrete example of the pains observed in detail, always at work for the benefit of the theatre-goer, is the production of special seats of maximum efficiency for picture houses. The occupant of an opera chair gives only slight thought to his chair; its general appearance, its comfort, the ease or difficulty with which its seat lifts or lowers register their general impression on his mind, but he gives no real thought to his chair.

Notice the deep embossing and the clear-cut, beautiful appearance of this ceiling. Alhambra Theater, Canton, O.

Surely he does not conceive that thousands of dollars are spent yearly to experiment, to reach the little unseen improvements which, while they do not bring money directly to the chair-maker or to the theatre owner, are expressions of the maker's pride in his output and the owner's pride in the completeness of his house. The special chair-seats to which we refer have been developed by a large manufacturer to supplant, in picture shows, the old time, thick-upholstered seats of the dramatic house.

As a picture theatre must give service different from that of a dramatic theatre, so must all the former's equipment differ from that of the latter. In our picture theatre, we must have comfort for the ninety minutes the show lasts; we must have easy access to chairs in the middle of rows; we must have a silent motion and ease when the seat is raised or lowered.

This factory's experts have devised a chair-seat which is built of layers of wood veneers glued fast together and shaped to the form of the chair's occupant. On this wood foundation is then spread a firm but springy padding, thin compared to the high boxed seats of theatres, but of the best quality; over and around all is stretched the leather or plush which holds the elastic pad close and maintains it to the shape of the carefully curved wood. Thus in a thickness of only an inch is obtained a comfort equal to that of a three inch boxing and the extra space between rows of chairs is an offering from the chair maker to the comfort of the chair user.

C. F. Weber & Co., San Francisco, (American Seating Company Pacific coast distributors) have made many installations of chairs with these curved padded seats and coast theatre operators are profiting greatly by their use. A general movement on the part of theatre owners to discard the plain wooden type in favor of the padded formed seat would undoubtedly raise the motion picture theatre further in the scale of refined amusement.

Small things, chair seats, but significant of the thought which the American manufacturer gives to the unseen detail of his product.

IDEAL SCREEN SURFACE ABSORBS HARSH RAYS

By J. Walter Douglas

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the third article on perfect projection surfaces appearing in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The previous articles were "The Essential Features of a Good Projection Screen," by E. R. Anderson, and "Solving the Screen Problem," by Frank T. Highfield, both published in the issue of July 17.

GREAT is the diversity of opinion among experts, as to what constitutes a good projection screen.

Too much importance cannot be attached to the screen upon which pictures are projected. A screen should show a picture brightly and clearly, but this brightness should not be capable of producing a glare or reflection, as this surely will cause eye-strain with its attendant result of either a headache or after mental fatigue.

In the production of screens for motion picture work in the past, most of the efforts have been directed to producing a screen to give a bright picture regardless of anything else.

A dull surface screen reflects true picture light; and a shiny screen reflects glare. The ideal screen is one absorbing the harsh and discordant rays and having the capacity under excitation to develop of itself a true neutral tone, color or tint to give in the passing of the picture, depth, perspective and shadings thereto, without eye-strain.

This is possible and practical by the provision of a screen having a display surface which is affected or baptised through excitation by the light of projection and through such baptism of the screen its field is maintained in a condition, whereby discordant and harsh rays of the spectrum are absorbed into the same in a neutral tint or hue for the ideal form of reflection of true picture light.

This created field will correct distortion no matter at what distance the picture is projected or what angle the picture is viewed, resulting in natural appearing human beings. Such desired condition applies equally to the settings as well as the scenario.

Effect of Shiny Surfaces

A screen lacking the ability in itself by excitation to develop such a field but only a sheen by the projected light is most trying to the eyes, aside from the lack of detail in the picture presentation. The more shiny the display surface of the screen and the more light thrown on it, the less true picture light is derived. On the other hand, the more nearly a dull display surface is provided and the more light projected on such surface, the more clearly will details of the picture be developed.

E. R. Anderson, of the Minusa Cine Products Company, who has become an authority on screens, in an article in Motion Picture News of July 17, in commenting on the necessity of avoiding eye strain states that to soften the light and throw back just the proper proportion has been one of the most difficult problems met with in the science of projection. He intimates the character of screen possessing the proper elements to cause it to present pictures free from distortion and eye strain, as one having a reflecting surface to return only the light that will give the perfect picture, without jarring or inharmonious rays.

The theories advanced by many of the experts on screens in the past have been based upon those having no inherent property to develop a field of absorption and diffusion. The screen embodying both of these conditions is ideal for projecting a picture, in true perspective, without distortion because the picture projected travels, as it were, through such field away from the ground of the screen.

Prefers Rough Surface to Smooth Screen

Mr. Highfield, known in the screen art, contends in a recent article on screens that a slightly roughened surface screen is superior to one of perfect smoothness. He asserts that the element necessary in a screen is one that gives depth, perspective and natural shadings together with the total absence of eye strain.

Others contend that a pebbled or roughened aluminum coated surface screen will give greater diffusion of light, but this is not true as such a screen will give more sheen and hence glare with its attendant eye-strain. All these belong to the class of dead surface screens with no inherent property to develop an illumined field, for without such condition, depth, perspective and detail will be lacking in the pictured presentation on the screen.

On the other hand, a screen with the inherent capacity through excitation to develop instantly a field, the picture shown is soft, its details natural and distortion absent, due to being absorbed in the field and this without regard to what the angle or projection may be or location of the screen with respect to such projection. Then this created field brings the audience closer to the picture subject on the screen without mental fatigue in viewing, while with some of the present day screens with their sheen and glare have had the reverse effect.

Some concede that a gold surface screen will blend with the ultra-violet rays from the arc. It is, however, perfectly feasible as well as entirely practicable to develop without such blending the ultra-violet rays in the screen itself through absorption of the rays of the spectrum by it and to all appearance as a dull white field.

The scientifically made "Luna-Lite" screen is just such a screen as above and it has come to be known as such on its merit or ideal conditions for such character of picture showing. By its everlasting character in performance under periodic baptisms of light derived by projection as well as being entirely free from oxidizing influence exposed to the elements and by its waterproof condition is not affected by heat or cold.

FABRIKOID IS ADVERTISED IN SCORES OF PUBLICATIONS

IT is interesting to note the amount of advertising being done for the benefit of the general public by the E. I. Du Pont Fabrikoid Company.

There are thirty-five farm publications contained in the company's list reaching 3,653,440 subscribers. There are eighteen automobile class papers reaching 583,292 subscribers; seventeen general mediums are being used which reach 9,057,110 subscribers, making a grand total of 13,293,842 subscribers to the various journals which carry the Du Pont advertising.

The above figures do not cover the motion picture trade papers, in which exactly the same product is being advertised, for the Fabrikoid product is for general upholstery use. It is not only good for automobile covers, but is the most durable product which has been called to the attention of managers for theatre chairs.

THE EQUIPMENT OF THE LOBBY

In the centre directly above the entrance to the theatre, and between the doors, three or five 11x14 inch photos.

The 11x14 inch photos range from fourteen to twenty-one cents each. They will attract the attention of the patron as he or she is entering the theatre, and will always bring forth an exclamation such "There is Anderson, ain't he grand." The larger photos, namely, 22x28 inches, can be used between the one sheet frames on the walls in the lobby.

The ticket booth is and should be the last word in neatness and attractiveness, dome top and all the frills that can be added, without giving it the appearance as if there is a sale of cutlery, linen, etc., that goes with the country store.

The ticket selling machine should be neat and kept clean, for in most cases a drop of oil on the machine might mean a soiled glove and a disgruntled patron. The admission sign in the ticket booth should be a neat glass sign. There are plenty of these on the market, and they are not expensive.

There should be a comfortable seat in the ticket booth for the cashier. The booth should be well ventilated, and in the winter kept warm, and cool in the summer. Many a dime has strayed from the theatre that does not consider the ticket booth during the hot spell. If the ticket booth is not ventilated properly and kept cool, the cashier has that warm appearance, and in most cases, as a patron is about to enter he will note that the cashier is using a fan with one hand, and selling tickets and taking change with the other hand.

TICKET VENDING MACHINE SHOWING AGITATOR

She represents a warm theatre, the patron thinks, and he winds his way to the theatre that has considered the ticket booth in the summer. In the winter, if the cashier is bundled up in furs, it also convinces the sceptical patron that he will not be comfortable inside. At all times there should be no one but the cashier in the booth, as there is nothing in the writer's estimation, so out of place as a man in the booth with the cashier, when it is needless. The ticket chopper or ticket receiver shall be of the same color as the doors leading to the theatre, and at all times kept clean. The writer only last night had the occasion to drop into one of our best theatres in New York City, and the first thing he noted was the dirty finger marks on the glass of the ticket chopper.

Is this necessary? Don't let the doorman use a wire in forcing the tickets into the chopper. This is unnecessary as there is on the market at present a chopper that has an agitator. This agitator pulls the tickets down, thereby eliminating the wire idea. We suggest that brass railings be used at the entrance to the auditorium. This not only adds to the appearance, but will eliminate crowding and pushing, should there be any.

Last, but not least, be sure that the doorman is of a neat appearance.

Directory of New Theatres

This department is designed to be a weekly guide to all sales, leases, construction and remodeling of photoplay theatres throughout the country. If you are building, selling, leasing or renovating, and this department fails to record the fact, kindly communicate it at once for publication.

CALIFORNIA

THE Queen theatre at West Jefferson street and Vermont avenue, Los Angeles, has changed hands, O. H. Mennett, owner of the house, having leased it to M. E. Brookshire and A. L. Sailor. The former was an exhibitor here some time back, and Mr. Sailor is manager of the Union Film & Supply Company exchange in Los Angeles.

The Photoplay theatre number two at Thirtieth and Vermont avenue, Los Angeles, owned by Sam McIntyre, has just installed a new nitro-silver screen made by Wm. A. Hafemann, of Los Angeles, the veteran screen maker of the coast. The new screen is fourteen by thirty-eight in size, and is giving excellent service.

The past week saw the closing of two suburban theatres in Los Angeles. The early part of the week the Kewpie quit business, and Friday evening the University on West Jefferson street was closed. Both of these theatres are in a district where there are several others, and for the past few months competition has been very keen.

The Washington Square Theatre, at Columbus avenue and Powell street, San Francisco, one of the largest houses in the city outside of the downtown section, has been taken over by Sam Gordon, and will be operated by him in conjunction with his other large theatres, the Lincoln, the Liberty and Broadway. The house just taken over is a well appointed one, with a seating capacity of about fifteen hundred.

Arrangements are being made by A. C. Papst to open a new house at Mill Valley, at an early date.

The building at San Pablo avenue and Clay street, Oakland, owned by Charles Heeseman, is to be remodeled and a theatre installed.

Plans for the new Turner & Dahnken theatre at Oakland are being rushed to completion, and actual construction work will be started shortly. This will be the largest moving picture house on the Pacific coast.

ILLINOIS

What is said will be the largest motion picture and vaudeville theatre on the west side is in course of construction at the southwest corner of Twelfth street and Avers avenue. The building, which was designed by Architect Albert A. Schwartz, and is being erected for Sol Rubin, will have a frontage of 142 feet on Twelfth street and 110 feet on Avers avenue, and will cost about $125,000, it is estimated. In addition to the theatre, which will have a seating capacity of 1,200, there will be nine stores, with offices and a billiard hall on the second floor. It will be known as the "Avers," and will be finished in terra cotta and brick. The theatre has been leased to the Foreman Amusement Company for a term of ten years at a total rental of $55,000.

INDIANA

James Alcorn, manager of the North Side, South Side and Lyric theatres at Greensburg, has announced that no more shows would be given in the airdome. Mr. Alcorn will concentrate his efforts on the three other theatres, and will continue to show pictures in all of them. The North Side has been run for years as a feature theatre.

The Alcazar at Newcastle is being redecorated by Miller & Hendricks, a decorating firm of Newcastle. The theatre also will undergo a complete renovating before it is opened under new manaement September 1.

Directors of the Goshen Amusement Company, recently incorporated, and owners of the Jefferson theatre building at Goshen, held a meeting at Goshen, Monday, August 23, when the company's plans in regard to the theatre were to be completed. The directors are C. J. Allardt, S. H. Miller and George Harrop. Mr. Miller was in Goshen recently, and took an inventory of the property. The company plans the issue of a $50,000 bond, and a refinishing and repairing of the theatre

The John Snap theatre at Oaktown is to be operated by McKee & Winning, of Vincennes.

L. E. Wheeler will open a moving picture theatre near Vincennes. Miss Edna Wheeler, his daughter, who is an accomplished musician, will assist her father.

The new Wallace H. Sawyer theatre at Bluffton will open about September 6.

The Wigton opera house at Lagrange is to be opened by J. M. Wigton and Sydney A. Beach, who will run moving picture shows every night, except when the house is leased for a road show.

The Jefferson theatre at Goshen is to be renamed the Orpheum by C. J. Allardt, as all of Mr. Allardt's string of theatres bear that name.

Frank Forrest expects to build one of the finest moving picture theatres in the state at Boonville. The theatre is being built on the site formerly occupied by a saloon.

MAINE

A. St. Ledger, who has conducted a moving picture theatre on Park street, Augusta, for some time, opened his new theatre, which he has has erected on Maine street, August 14, with two performances, giving special pictures. A large number attended, giving Mr. St. Ledger a welcome in his new home theatre, which is finely equipped and is up-to-date in all respects.

MASSACHUSETTS

George A. Whiteny, of Fitchburg, has plans under way for erecting a strictly modern theatre in the rear of Main street between Prichard and Oliver streets. It is expected that detailed plans will be ready for announcement soon, and that the building will be erected in time for opening the theatre in the late fall or early winter.

James Baker is to build a theatre and block on Maple street in Holyoke. The motion picture auditorium will be on the first floor, and there will be sixteen apartments on the upper floors. P. J. Kennedy & Co., Inc., have been awarded the contract for the mason work; David McCormick & Son will do the cut stone work, and W. J. Marshall has the contract for the steel work. Mr. Baker himself will do the carpentry. The building will be constructed of pressed brick, with limestone trimmings, and will be 65 by 22 in dimensions, and five stories in height. George P. B. Alderman & Brother are the architects.

The Strand Theatre Company, recently incorporated in Worcester, has announced its intention to start construction of a picture theatre in the rear of Commercial hotel as soon as arrangements can be completed.

A. B. Brunell, 18 Abbott street, Worcester, recently bought a theatre in Greenfield from Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Streeter. Mr. Brunell will renovate the house, and will open the theatre with first-class moving picture films.

MICHIGAN

John H. Kunsky, who now operates eight theatres in Detroit, makes the following announcement: "Workmen at the site of the new Kunsky-Strand are busily engaged in putting the finishing touches to the magnificent new photoplay theatre for the opening, September 1. Located as it is, at the junction of three of Detroit's busiest street car lines, we look forward to a very prosperous season at this new playhouse. The scale of prices will be ten, fifteen, twenty and twenty-five cents."

C. W. Masterman, formerly of the Idlehour theatre in Grand Rapids, Mich., has been appointed manager of the Empire theatre, Detroit.

The Star Theatre Company, Bay City, has planned a one-story addition, 25 by 30 feet, to be of brick.

Two modern theatres are being erected in Muskegon in the downtown section—the new Regent, costing $75,000, and the Empress theatre, whose capacity is being doubled in size.

The only moving picture theatre in Armada was opened recently. It operates but two nights a week—Wednesday and Saturday.

After extensive alterations and improvements, the Bijou theatre, Saginaw, has re-opened for business. The decorative scheme is a very novel one, being in black and white, and new seats have been installed. New machines in the operating room, and new electrical fixtures have also been added. The Bijou is one of a chain of theatres controlled in Michigan by Col. W. S. Butterfield.

Plans are under way for the organization of a stock company to finance the erection of a new moving picture theatre in Charlevoix, a summer resort city.

Architect D. Fred Charlton, of Marquette, Mich., has been engaged by E. J. Butler to prepare plans for a theatre building to be erected on Main street, Ishpeming. The theatre will be 35 by 105 feet, with a seating capacity of 800. It will be one of the largest motion picture theatres in the upper peninsula.

The International Amusement Co. has been organized at Grand Rapids with a capital stock of $7,500, to operate theatres.

Warren, of Warren & Harris, owners of the Marks theatre, of Wyandotte, was in Chicago last week selecting equipment for the new 1,000 seat motion picture theatre which they are building at Wyandotte.

MISSOURI

The Criterion theatre, 2644 Franklin avenue, St. Louis, is undergoing alterations and repairs, such as a concrete floor and other fireproof accessories, in order to be ready for the fall business. Mrs. Nellie Snawder, manager of the Criterion, is showing her program in an airdome while the theatre is in temporary darkness.

The Easton theatre, at 2822 Easton avenue, St. Louis, was opened under the management of Franklin S. Milberg, on August 18. Mr. Milberg was formerly engaged in the amusement business at Edmonton, Canada, and is an experienced showman. The Easton, which is the old People's theatre, remodeled, is a five cent house, and shows pictures, with a number of vaudeville added on certain nights.

Giesler & Polsdorfer have opened the Franklin theatre, at 1831 Franklin avenue, St. Louis. Mr. Polsdorfer has taken over the active management of the house, and reports very successful business since the opening, on August 4. The Franklin has a ventilating system of electric fans for cooling the air, and large exhaust fans to drive out the used air.

The Alps airdome, 4124 Easton avenue, St. Louis, has been remodeled and enlarged this year, to a 2,500 seating capacity. The airdome is owned by the Alps Amusement Company, the controlling interest of which is held by G. and L. Wagner, who also run the Alps theatre, two blocks away.

J. Yeager, manager of the Union theatre, McNair and Pestalozzi streets, St. Louis, has kept his house open all summer this year, and reports this one of the best years for the motion picture business since the place has been running.

The Taylor-Easton theatre, at Taylor and Easton avenues. St. Louis, is again under the command of Wm. H. Young, owner and manager, who has been away from the city for several months on account of poor health.

Gentlemen:

I am writing to express my appreciation of the excellent manner in which you finished my film of last week. In my ten years' experience I can truthfully state that I have never seen finer work from Topical negatives. My film contained four different subjects. For two of these the exposure was guess work, but I erred on the safe side, with the result that I greatly over-exposed, but you remedied this in your laboratories, and turned out every inch of my film in first-class shape. You must have lost no time either in doing this work for I received the film back sooner than expected. All round satisfaction in these days of hurry and hustle is surely something worth praising.

Trusting we shall become better acquainted, and sorry I didn't know you earlier, I am,

Very respectfully,

Work has been started on a new motion picture theatre to be built for Daniel Rentschler, at 409-413 Kearny avenue, Kearney. The new structure will be modern in every way, and will cost about $50,000. The seating capacity of the theatre will be 1,400. The playhouse will measure 67 by 122 feet. It will be of brick, with a tapestry brick and limestone front. One of the features will be a marble lobby measuring 27 by 24 feet.

TENNESSEE

The new Lillian theatre in Clarksville, Tenn., which is being rebuilt on the site of the old one burnt last December, is rapidly approaching completion, the owners expecting to have it ready for use by September 15. The new house, when completed, will be one of the prettiest theatres in Clarksville.

The Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, one of the largest amusement corporations in the state of Tennessee, has closed a deal with Jones and Church for a five-year lease, with the privilege of a three year renewal. The building is now occupied by the Dixie theatre and is one of the most popular houses in Columbia, Tenn. The building will be thoroughly overhauled. The floor will be taken out and lowered on a level with the street and the seating capacity largely increased. Work will begin at once upon the repairs.

The Colonial and the Alcazar theatres at Chattanooga, Tenn., have been closed temporarily for repairs. Some plastering and interior decoration work is being done on the Colonial which will greatly enhance its attractiveness. Extensive alterations on the stage are being made at the Alcazar and a balcony is being constructed. Both houses will be reopened in a few weeks.

VIRGINIA.

O. B. Barker, head of the Barker-Jennings Hardware Company, is in charge of the National theatre, the newest and one of the largest picture houses in Lynchburg, Va., taking over the management as the result of an order from the court restraining M. L. Hoffheimer, of Richmond, from operating the theatre further.

The house is owned by Mr. Barker, and will be operated by him personally until he can arrange to secure someone to lease it on a satisfactory basis.

The National is equipped with a massive pipe organ, and is considered one of the most attractive theatres in the South. Mutual Master-pictures are being shown.

R. W. Wilkerson, manager of the Universal theatre, has resigned to accept a position in Hot Springs, Arkansas, with the Western Amusement Company, retiring in favor of L. F. Valley, of Charlotte, N. C. While in charge of the Lynchburg house Mr. Wilkerson built up a good business by resorting to publicity methods through the columns of the daily papers. Before taking charge of the Universal theatre he was general booking agent for the Piedmont Amusement Company.

Since the Universal was opened about two years ago, the theatre has been in charge of several different managers, three of them resigning to accept positions which they regarded more remunerative.

Edited by Ernst Luz

EDITOR'S NOTE.— This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

WALTZES—THEIR USE IN PICTURE PLAYING

OF all known musical movements the waltz is the most valuable of music in picture playing. The waltz is a flexible number as to tempo, playing slower or faster being at all times possible. For proper programing it is indispensable, and is often the only means for light relief to the heavy music in the heavy dramatic features.

It has often been said: "When you don't know what to play, play a waltz," which is quite often true. No number can be more easily suited to picture action than the waltz. No music is so alike and yet so different. When properly placed and played it is possible to musically portray the most frivolous, as well as the most serious, action in pictures by different types of waltzes.

Great care should be taken in the classification of your waltzes. The one-man instrument players can do wonders with the waltz, many of them using waltz themes entirely for obtaining serious effects. This is called improvisation by many, while in reality it is a misuse and abuse of another musician's honest endeavors.

I have found the following classification of waltzes very good: No. 1 waltzes, with introductions having a serious appeal; No. 2 waltzes, with light or lively introductions; No. 3 waltzes which can be played fast, or those that lose their musical value when played slow. Most of the Strauss waltzes are such numbers. No. 4 are waltzes which are more beautiful when played slow and very legato. They are better known by their long sustained tones.

No. 5 Waltzes Are Slow Legato

This type of waltz is strictly English and French. No. 5 are the slow legato waltzes, or Waltz Lentos, wherein the minor keys predominate. Waltzes known as Oriental are also in this class, and are very good as heavy waltzes when they are legato. When not strictly legato they should be known as light Oriental waltzes. No. 6 should be Waltz Lentos of the ballet style.

The melodies should be of staccato style and at no times legato. Few modern waltzes are of this type, most of such waltzes being of foreign composition. No. 7 should contain Waltz Lentos, strictly legato predominating in themes of long sustained tones.

These numbers are often similar to those classed as No. 4. The only difference being that No. 4 numbers can be played faster or slower without marring the musical composition, while No. 7 numbers must be played slow to obtain proper musical effect. Nos. 1 and 2 waltzes should be selected as to the thematic value of their introductions.

Not in Strict Tempo

By being familiar with such introductions it is often possible to cover a serious scene then go into neutral playing with one number. These numbers are also essential when one desires to have some program color in the music.

It is seldom that any waltz introductions are in strict tempo, whatever the tempo may be, and when there is no break in tempo, the music becomes tiresome, as might well be supposed.

For this reason many composers resort to the rit., rall., accel., etc., to obtain tempo relief in their compositions.

Therefore, by a proper placing of a No. 1 and No. 2 waltz it is not only possible to cover two distinct screen situations with one number, but you are also adding color to your program. The No. 3 waltz is used as a relief number for the light intermezzos, so as to avoid playing too long in one tempo or rhythem. It is also good for the old-fashioned dancing, light exterior scenes, frivolous action, especially of children, and often can be appropriately set in comedies.

The No. 4 numbers are very good when there is an interchanging of quiet actionless scenes, with romantic action. The important point to know is that the action is quiet, and female characters predominate on the screen.

In the use of all waltzes it might be remembered that the waltz thematically suggests the female, in fact all that is beautiful and sweet, when the actual impression conveyed is not overly serious. No. 5 numbers are known very often as Oriental waltzes, and are always appropriate in pictures of oriental setting.

The fact that these numbers are in a minor key makes them characteristic of the intrigue and passion of the Oriental race.

No. 6 Suitable to Woodland Scenes

The legato numbers in this class can be used as heavy descriptive numbers when played very slow, which is often necessary when there is long continued heavy or dramatic action on the screen and a change of unlike numbers is desired without altering the musical appeal.

No. 6 waltzes are better for woodland scenes or exteriors suggesting natural beauty. Also at ballet dancing or other similar screen suggestion. No. 7 are very appropriate for serious love scenes, and all other serious or quiet romantic action.

Of all published musical compositions, waltzes are the most numerous, and with a slight study of the foregoing, there is no doubt that every player will find many other uses for them in picture playing not mentioned here.

Study your waltzes as they are very valuable, not expensive and indispensable in picture playing.

MEYER, ORGAN MANUFACTURER, ENTERS MOTION PICTURE FIELD

JEROME B. MEYER, of Milwaukee, Wis., who for the last twenty-five years has been manufacturing organ pipes for churches and residences, was induced some time ago to enter the motion picture field by the demand, which exists among the increasing number of theatres that have installed one-man instruments or pipe organs.

Mr. Meyer offers his wide experience in the equiping of theatres that have installed one-man orchestras with show pipes so that the pretentious pipe organ effect can be obtained. When pipe organs are in use with show pipes on one side of the curtain he can duplicate the show pipes on the other side, adding greatly to the attractiveness of the theatre at a very small expense.

PYLE TOURS OHIO FOR BARTOLA

CHARLES C. PYLE, general sales agent for the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, took a short trip through Ohio last week, visiting Niles, Youngstown and Cleveland, in the interests of the Bartola company. He says that the sales of the Bartola company for the month of August promise to surpass those of any other month since they have been in business.

ADVANCEMENT MADE IN PICTURE MUSIC

THE advancement in music in motion picture theatres has been as rapid as the improvement in motion picture productions. It is wonderful to look back a few years when the exhibitor had a small store show, and stood out in front and "ballyhoyed" just like a "street faker," and between his "yells" would turn on his phonograph with the horn projecting out into the street, and give the passing citizens a selection from some famous opera with a scratched record and a dull needle.

This was his entire musical program. He did not think it was necessary to furnish music to his patrons on the inside. Then some energetic manager conceived the idea that if a cheap electric piano would please the customers in the saloon next door, he surely could satisfy his patrons with the same music, so the electric piano became very popular in the already improved picture theatres.

The manager would use the same rolls all season. He had a wonderful variety of music: "Annie Laurie," "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "After the Ball." It did not make any difference what kind of pictures he had on the screen, his player-piano would play the old favorite selections just as usual.

I remember in particular seeing theatres which were the proud possessors of these electric pianos. One of them was showing the old picture, "Delhi Durbar." There was a scene in this picture where the king was surrounded by 15,000 soldiers, and the electric piano was playing a popular selection entitled "All Alone."

Another instance which impressed me was a single reel Biograph.

The sister in the film was dying with consumption which she had contracted from her mother ,and just as she drew her last breath, the "canned orchestra" started to play "Oh, You Beautiful Doll." Later I witnessed in Dayton, Ohio, the Biograph four reel production, "Judith and Bethulia."

In the scene where they were just about to behead the leading lady the famous electric piano started to play the popular song, "Get Out and Get Under." Yet the manager thought he was giving his friends a treat, and was satisfied that his music was increasing his business.

The next advancement in music was the plunging of the larger theatre managers, who purchased the mechanical orchestras. They paid as high as $5,000 for these automatic instruments.

In my next week's article I will attempt to go deeper into the musical program, and tell you of the next steps in the advancement of music for picture theatres.

CHARLES C. PYLE.

CATHEDRAL CHIMES FOR PICTURES AND FOR THE LOBBY

RECENTLY the writer had occasion to visit a splendid new film theatre, which is located in one of the very best residential districts of Chicago, and the audience, though meagre, was intelligent and discriminating.

During the course of the evening the film "Dear Old Girl" was run. In this, as all exhibitors know, college bells or chimes are shown in action.

If in this instance either drummer or manager had exercised the foresight to provide a set of the tubular cathedral chimes on the piano.

The attempt was a rank farce of course, and what otherwise would have been a very charming and impressive effect, fell flat.

In the absence of these, the pianist attempted to imitate chimes on the piano. The attempt was a rank farce of course, and what otherwise would have been a very charming and impressive effect, fell flat.

Organ Makers Know Value of Chimes

This is only another instance of the lack of appreciation of proper musical effects. No ambitious, wide-awake drummer could be thus caught napping; and that a manager would permit such a shortcoming, especially in a location where patrons are from a select district, is almost unbelievable. It shows a woeful lack of knowledge of picture requirements. That it was permitted in a house catering to a select class, no doubt, accounts for the meager attendance.

Manufacturers of pipe organs appreciate the need of chimes, for it is seldom, indeed, that a pipe organ finds its way into a motion picture house today that is not equipped with a set of chimes.

The mere fact that a theatre is not equipped with a pipe organ, however, need not be a bar to the use of chimes. They may be had for playing with mallet by either drummer or pianist, or may be played electrically by pianist from a small supplementary keyboard.

They may be all located in one place or distributed throughout theatre. Their deep, solemn, yet sweet and sympathetic tones never fail to make a profound impression on all who hear them.

Victor Herbert is a great admirer of such chimes, and in his play "Sweethearts" makes very profuse use of them.

It is seldom that a film somewhere throughout its length does not afford several opportunities to use them. The appearance of a church, college or gathering of any kind, suggestive of title or any of the many other scenes that lend themselves to the introduction of such an effect, should be the signal for their use and add a vivid touch of realism.

For effect purposes four or five notes is sufficient, while a range of 25 or 32 notes is sufficient for playing complete selections and requires but a small outlay. An old time favorite sounded on such chimes now and then very quickly shows its effect in added box office receipts and large attendance.

Chimes in Theatre Lobby

A new idea is the installation of such chimes in the lobby of theatre. Even four or five chorded or modulated chimes, which may be either sounded all at once or played from push buttons in the ticket booth within easy reach of the occupant, are an advertisement par excellence.

They may be sounded from time to time for the benefit of those in waiting, as well as for the purpose of attracting people form the street. Exhibitors who have installed them are invariably surprised by the number of casual passersby who are attracted by the chimes. The tone is irresistible and instantly arrests attention.

Among the manufacturers of these chimes is J. C. Deagan, of Chicago. This firm has designed a special electric action, which is fool proof, is inexpensive and gives unexcelled service.

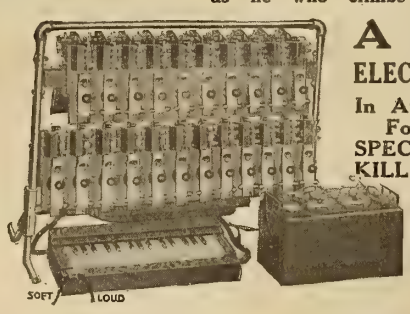
BARTOLA GRAND INSTALLED IN FARGO, N. D., THEATRE

ONE of the most recent installations of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company is that of a Bartola Grand in the New Garrick theatre, Fargo, N. Dakota, owned and controlled by the American Amusement Company, of which E. A. Chamberlain is president.

Another equipment installed is style AA in the Penn Square theatre, 55 Euclid avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. Pyle, sales manager of the company, reports that business is picking up materially, and that the factory is at the present time rushed with orders.

MENGER & RING ISSUES ATTRACTIVE CATALOGUE



AN attractive booklet catalogue of theatre lobby and display picture frames has just been issued by Menger & Ring, 304-6 West 42nd street, New York. There are artistic illustrations of a complete line of frames, including holders for one, two and three-sheet posters; frames for still pictures, swinging frames for the sidewalk, and elaborate portable, folding frames for lobby use.

The assortment shown is complete and calculated to meet every requirement of the motion picture theatre owner or manager.

CASTINE, MAINE, TO HAVE NEW THEATRE

THE Castine Amusement Company, operating the Folly theatre at Castine, Maine, has just broken ground for a new motion picture house to be named the New Folly theatre, with seating capacity of two hundred and fifty. It will have up-to-date improvements, and General Film service and feature plays will be used.

PATHE FRERES TO ISSUE MUSIC PLOTS AND SUGGESTIONS

BEGINNING with the release of "The Galloper," Pathé Freres will distribute free of charge Music Plots and Suggestions, such as appear in this department, with their Gold Rooster features, released weekly. As my readers must know, these plots are not published with the intention of advertising any music published, but to be of real help to the exhibitor forgetting the best possible theatre results with the least possible expense to him or the musician.

The playing instructions or notes at the bottom of each plot should make it clear as to what kind of musical number can be substituted when the number suggested is unknown, and the exhibitor or musician do not care to go to the expense of buying the suggested numbers.

The numbers suggested in my plots are meant to inform you of good picture music and my personal classification of these numbers.

In the plots for the Pathé Freres Gold Rooster features effects important to the picture and possible for a trap drummer or one man orchestra will be given with specific cues for their use.

Any musical effects possible to the orchestra or one man instrument will also be given with proper cues, thereby relieving the player of great responsibility and much mental exertion, and giving him opportunities for one hundred per cent. better musical results. The Pathé Freres Gold Rooster features promise to be the last word in feature pictures. Produced by directors of known ability, each picture featuring a film or stage star, together with advertising and information making it possible to show them as a perfect theatre performance, should make the exhibitor sit up and take notice.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

MUSIC FOR "CHRISTIAN" AND "ROSARY" AT EXCHANGES

M. M., St. Paul, Minn.—I am very sorry that I cannot publish the music plots of "The Christian" and "The Rosary" you ask for, as I have never seen them, and consequently have no plots in stock.

There are musical suggestions issued for both pictures, and I believe they can be obtained at the exchanges renting the film.

I set up music for the orchestra some time ago from the suggestions to "The Christian," and my musical version was not good.

You might be able to obtain better results. The musical suggestions for "The Rosary" simply give you a number of musical numbers to play without any cues for starting or stopping the numbers played. The music from the opera "Madame Butterfly" seems to have been the suggestor's hobby. I know of an incident where the one-man instrument player spent $4.50 for piano music for this picture and was then not satisfied with his results.

MUSIC FOR "MAXIM'S" ISSUED BY PRODUCERS

W. G., Nashua, N. H.—There is music for the piano arranged for the Kalem feature, "Midnight at Maxim's," which can be obtained from the Kalem Company for fifty cents. It is very good and appropriate. There have been no orchestra suggestions to my knowledge. As I have never played the picture I have no plot made up.

NO MORE TROUBLE WITH MUSIC

E. R. L., West Philadelphia, Pa.—I am glad to hear you found the plots I sent you useful. Hope that you will have no more trouble with any picture.

TRIANGLE PLANS

BETWEEN September 20 and October 1 the four model theatres of the Triangle Film Corporation will be opened in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston, respectively. The bill for the opening week will be—

DUSTIN FARNUM IN "THE IRON STRAIN"
(Ince-supervised five-reeler)

RAYMOND HITCHCOCK IN "MY VALET"
(Sennett-Keystone four-reeler)

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN "THE LAMB"
(Griffith-supervised five-reeler)

That characterizes the service which Triangle Film Corporation will offer to the leading exhibitors of the country, one in each district, beginning a short time after the dates of the presentations in the model theatres. Foremost stars of the American stage, several of them, in each entertainment; the artistic supervision of Griffith, Ince and Sennett; the elaborate orchestral music arranged by William Furst, the famous composer and director.

Contracts are now making with exhibitors for the service in all important centers. The demand to rent the Triangle service has been so extraordinary that we are obliged to ask our correspondents to exercise a certain patience.

The rental service itself will start during the latter part of October. Exactly the same plays and music as presented in the four great cities will be assured to the exhibitors. The unusual efforts of Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett and the enthusiastic cooperation of the stars promise a generous and complete output for the entire year.

THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE

THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE was written by J. Stuart Blackton and Vitagraphed under his personal supervision on a scale never before attempted in motion pictures.

Acknowledgment is made to Hudson Maxim, international authority on arms and ammunition, for facts contained in his "Defenseless America," and to a score of prominent Americans in Army, Navy and Administrative circles for co-operation and advice. Among is sponsors are the foremost names in current American history. Personages of national and international importance appear personally in the production. The drama itself is enacted by a distinguished Vitagraph cast headed by Mr. Charles Richman. In the production are 5,000 National Guardsmen, 800 members of the G. A. R., 5,000 horses and 8,000 supernumeraries.

It is in scanning Mr. Henderson's engagements since this star of the legitimate stage entered the profession, that his histrionic ability becomes apparent. Among his vehicles were "Miranda of the Balcony," "Divorcons," and "Tess of the D'Urbevilles," with Mrs. Fiske; "The Runaways," opposite Fay Templeton at the Casino; "The Girl Question," at Wallack's; "Three Twins," Herald Square; "The Candy Shop," Knickerbocker; in vaudeville with Valeska Suratt; at the Broadway Theatre, in "The Summer Widowers"; "The Pink Lady," in which this star scored so great a success that he remained in it for three years, appearing at the New Amsterdam, New York City, and at the Globe Theatre, London; opposite Raymond Hitchcock in "The Beauty Shop," and in "Papa's Darling," New Amsterdam. Mr. Henderson's work in this unusual drama will delight photoplay patrons everywhere.

WARNING!

Owing to the great popularity of the Charles Chaplin photoplays many unauthorized prints of our productions, portraying him in his different pictures, are being handled in the United States. Some of these are fake prints and some are duplicates.

This company has adopted a policy of vigorous prosecution of every violation that comes to its notice, whether it be by the person who makes the unauthorized films or the person who rents or distributes them.

In the past three weeks the company has seized two unauthorized two-act Chaplin photoplays and has instituted two suits for injunction, accounting, and confiscation of the films, charging violation of our copyright.

It is our intention to protect our property rights and also to assure the public that it will see a genuine Chaplin picture when it is advertised as an Essanay-Chaplin Comedy.

We intend to pursue this policy until there is not a fake or duplicate Chaplin picture in the country.

This announcement is made so that dealers, exhibitors and the public may be put on their guard.

We earnestly request that you assist us in this campaign for Picture Honesty by sending us notice of any fake Essanay-Chaplin picture that you may know of.

For such information we thank you.

The Exhibitor and the Newspaper

IF any exhibitor doubts the value of newspaper co-operation in behalf of pictures in general and his theatre program in particular, let him read carefully this letter:

To the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, New York City.

Gentlemen: I handle all the motion picture publicity matter for an important paper in one of the thriving cities of the great Middle West. My paper uses a great deal of motion picture theatre advertising, besides running a serial story, "The Broken Coin." But its motion picture page is of little or no consequence.

"I know and my paper knows there are many more motion picture fans than there are baseball fans. We know there are more theatres in our city than baseball parks. We know the theatres form a more lasting, uplifting and prosperous factor in our city's growth than does a baseball park or team. Still we run columns of baseball matter where we run inches about the motion picture news. Why is it?

"THIS is a question I, as one closely in touch with a number of exhibitors and exchange managers in my part of the country, believe is to the interests of every exhibitor to answer.

"There is not an exhibitor in the whole land who can conscientiously deny that advertising will help make his business a greater success. Motion picture exhibitors are of necessity a more up-to-date class than those who would deny the worth of advertising.

"The papers give columns of space to baseball, which has fewer followers and does not mean as much to them, in money or influence, as the motion picture theatres. No one will deny it. Once more I ask—Why?

"LET me tell you something. Every day I get lengthy letters of "dope" from the film companies. This stuff is all features, meant to advertise the company's pictures. It all comes with a two-cent stamp on it, is neatly prepared and, whether I can use any of it or not, it receives my closest attention.

"If, in reading it, I come upon an item that holds the remotest local connection I eagerly clip and use it. It becomes news; the kind of news I know the readers of our paper will read and appreciate.

"All this while there are scores of local theatres, with thousands of dollars invested, letting me go week in and week out, without hearing a word from them. If they try a live-wire stunt, if they have a contest, if they give a charity show, even, I never hear of it unless I dig it out.

"I BELIEVE the newspapers owe it to their large motion picture family of fans to publish more about the moving picture theatres.

"Further than that, I believe the newspapers would gladly do it if they could get the right kind of dope. A snappy local story would not only insure its own publication, but would give the incentive for a column of feature stuff.

"Every exhibitor knows that every time "motion pictures" is printed it helps, in a greater or lesser degree, his show and his business.

"EVERY daily newspaper all over the country should have more or less of a motion picture page, at least once a week. It would prove a popular idea, as it has proved in many cities. The film companies are certainly doing their part and will undoubtedly continue to do so.

"But the lone exhibitor, the man who is really and truly benefited, is actually neglecting a source open to him to make his business more prosperous.

"These are the ideas of one who has the handling of motion picture news, and whose attention was attracted by the opportunity open to motion picture exhibitors the country over.

"N. B. If enough exhibitors went to see a managing editor, there is little doubt but that he would prove enthusiastic for a motion picture page. Go see him in the right way, of course."

SOME paragraphs stand out prominently in this sincere and enlightened letter.

"There is not an exhibitor in the whole land who can conscientiously deny that advertising will help make his business a greater success."

We agree heartily; we believe that if there are any such exhibitors, they will not be exhibitors very long.

"I believe that the newspapers would gladly do it (publish news about picture theatres) if they could get the right kind of dope . . . but the lone exhibitor, the man who is really and truly benefited, is actually neglecting a source open to him to make his business more profitable."

OUR correspondent is right. This matter of newspaper co-operation is right up to the exhibitor. The opportunity of increasing his attendance is standing at his box office window.

There are two ways to get full newspaper co-operation.

First, advertise your program, taking advantage of the manufacturers, aid in the way of cuts and copy.

Secondly, send your news regularly in to the newspaper. Don't rely altogether upon the manufacturer: do it yourself, and if you haven't time or don't know what constitutes news call in a newspaper man and have him do it or make it for you.

But don't neglect your opportunity.

Vol. XII September 11, 1915 No. 10

The Animal Film Is All Right, But Why Carry It To An Extreme?

THERE are two sides, even to such a question as censorship, though one side may be considerably narrower than the other.

No excuse can be offered for censorship, but there are some things to be said in explanation of the demand for it, and they are not all, nor entirely in favor of the producers.

ONE of the things which may be cited is the unnecessary vulgarity which is too frequently perpetrated in the name of comedy.

Ninety per cent. of motion picture comedies are five years behind the rest of the business in this respect. They are still in the rough and raw burlesque stage.

What the burlesque show was twenty years ago, the average motion picture comedy is still attempting to be.

And it is succeeding a little too well for the good of the business as a whole.

AN illustration of what we mean is to be found in the letter from a New England exhibitor which we reprint in the following paragraphs.

The exhibitor does not mince words in describing the offensive portions of the pictures to which he refers. But the director was a trifle less fastidious, if anything, in his selection of comic situations.

The writer of the letter is evidently the proprietor of a neighborhood theatre. He caters to women and children—to the home element in the community. He cannot afford to run "strong" stuff, whether it is heavy or light.

And he is at a loss to see—as this paper is—why such "monkey-house" business, under the label of comedy, should be offered for indiscriminate public consumption, to any exhibitor.

WITHOUT further explanation, the letter in question is here given:

"Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
"New York City.

"Sir: Searching for lice (I may, I believe, call a spade a spade, when it is pictured as one), as an element of 'comedy' in pictures, I think might be henceforth eliminated without any serious setback to motion picture art.

"I am interested in a small theatre, not modern or all we would like to have it, but we keep it spotlessly clean and thoroughly aired as our patronage is of an unusually high grade. In trying to select the best for our people I have visited other theatres and exchanges and fortunately saw two reels, which, if I hadn't been able to review, I would have put on at my house and seriously offended my clientele.

"In each reel the principals were so-called leading film humorists. In one reel the comedian, by means of an encircling neck grip, holds the victim's head and at his leisure humorously thumps the face of the imprisoned one and then begins the search.

"IN the other film, which I have in mind, the louse hunt is a feature of a wrestling match. One wrestler with his finger flicks the insect from his opponent's head. What is evidently intended by the director to be an excruciatingly funny stunt is the action of both men, who back away in mock-terror from the unleashed vermin, presumably charging towards them on the floor.

"These are but two instances and many readers will immediately recognize the films from this meagre description, which is not intended to pick out any single offending producer.

"In all cases, these two as well as others of similar character, my attitude of mental protest caused me to watch the effect upon others. Two women near me promptly withdrew their eyes from the screen and talked casually to each other—an easily-seen-through ruse to hide their embarrassment. Women also appeared ill at ease and the effort in every case to get the laugh failed lamentably.

(Signed) "J. F. O'C.,
"Watertown, Mass."

"THE effort in every case to get the laugh failed lamentably." That is the last word. If there were no other reason for abandoning such business, that would be more than sufficient.

The true fisherman does not care for such fish as he is compelled to tempt by baiting his hook with offal.

The Suppression of the Frank Films

CERTAIN so-called producers of motion pictures have over-reached themselves in attempts to make capital out of tragic crimes. The most recent example of this sordid activity is found in the filming of the Frank lynching in Georgia.

Not only did these scavengers utterly fail to comprehend what the attitude of the authorities toward the Frank films would be, but they also misread the minds of the exhibitors. Censors and officials in several cities have refused to permit the showing of the films. Over the protest of the exhibitors? No. The exhibitors co-operated in the suppression of the noisome stuff.

All of which shows several things to be true, not the least important of them being that all exhibitors, possessed of enlightenment, are alert to keep their business free of degrading influences. And it also shows that there is no room in the motion picture field for harpies of any sort.

Politicians Block Anti-Censor Move in Ohio

Machine Under Guidance of Governor Willis and His Henchmen Opposes Every Movement of Motion Picture Referendum League—Attorney-General Comes Out with Astonishing Statement to the Effect That Censorship Would Remain No Matter What the People Voted—Signatures Useless This Year

Columbus, O., Sept. 1.

FAILURE to deposit referendum petitions at Columbus means that Ohio motion picture exhibitors have given up the attempt to force a fall election to oust the Ohio board of censorship. The reason given for the failure to file the petitions was that scores of petitions and thousands of signatures failed to reach the headquarters of the Motion Picture Referendum League in this city in time to be of service in the fight against the censorship evil.

Chairman Ben J. Sawyer, of the Motion Picture Referendum League, states that he believes he had more than the 67,000 names and petitions from more than half the counties required by the law. It is claimed that the opposition of Governor Willis and friends of the censors rendered it useless to continue the fight. Peanut politics were brought into play and every move made by the exhibitors was blocked by the political machine that is manned by Willis and his friends.

"Our defeat is due primarily to the eleventh hour statement by Attorney General Edward C. Turner that censorship would remain, no matter how the people voted," said Mr. Sawyer. "That shows the spirit animating those who opposed us. 'Let the people rule' was the pre-election slogan of Governor Willis. This is the way the Legislature lets the people rule.

"What will his friends think of the way the administration is going after all referendums, including ours? About the only time the people can rule is just before election.

"Nearly 200,000 signatures were secured for the petitions. There were 20,000 signatures in Cleveland alone, and 4,000 in Toledo, to mention only two places. Returns have come in from 57 out of the 88 counties in Ohio, but after the statement of Attorney General Turner and the disapproval of the Governor, which was made perfectly clear to his friends, more than half of them failed to reach headquarters.

Compelled to Acknowledge Defeat

"The best thing to do was to acknowledge defeat, but the censors may rest assured that future action depends largely on whether they are willing to accept our withdrawal in the chivalrous and generous spirit in which we give up the fight at this stage."

A letter addressed by Mr. Sawyer to the censors says in part:

"Yours is the victory, for after looking over petitions returned from 57 counties and observing failure in a great many to sign in two places, I deem it unwise to part with the signatures.

"Now that the battle is over, I feel that it would not show the proper spirit to take it up. Let the past bury its dead. Let us put our hands to the plow and not look back.

"In the spirit of the foregoing I would close my letter but for the fact that one or two things have a reference to the future, to which I believe that now the fight is over you will readily accept these facts:

"Your statement in the press that the National Board of Censorship and the exchange men started the referendum was an entire misstatement of fact.

"The impression you gave out that the manufacturers were spending a great deal of money in the fight was also a misstatement.

"I did not receive one penny for what service I rendered in the campaign. I wish to state that I paid my own personal expenses.

"If there had been a fund to carry on a campaign we could have secured 200,000 signatures.

"The people can make and unmake constitutions, but cannot override the state's statutes," concluded Mr. Sawyer.

It was realized early that Governor Willis was standing back of the censors who brought political influence to bear all over the state to counteract the efforts of the exhibitors to push through the referendum. The state censors did not dare to submit the case to the voters, for they realized that the vote would be overwhelmingly against them.

News that the exhibitors had given up the fight was received with considerable surprise in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus, Toledo, Dayton and other cities. The people at large knew that more than enough petitions had been filed and that the number of names would be four times more than was required under the law. Slowness in returning the petitions to the headquarters gave the censors an unexpected victory. Paul Alwyn Platz.

Stretch of 11 Acres for Vitagraph in Hollywood

On Completion of Buildings the Plant at Santa Monica Will Be Moved to New Studio—Sheltered Location Will Prevent Interference by High Winds

Los Angeles, Aug. 30.

THE Vitagraph Company has purchased an eleven-acre tract of ground in the Hollywood producing center, and active work of building a new studio will be taken up here the first of the coming week according to plans now being prepared under the direction of R. S. Sturgeon, manager of production of the coast studio of this company.

The site is one of the most picturesque in the Hollywood district, containing as it does valleys and hills, with the foothills for a background. It is understood the main stage will be located in one of the valleys where production will not be interfered with as the result of winds. Only large stages suitable for the largest sets will be built, and Studio Manager W. E. Smith is preparing plans for the laboratories that will make this one of the best-equipped studios of the west coast producing colony.

As soon as the buildings are completed the entire Vitagraph plant, now located at the Santa Monica studio, will be moved to the new studio, and rumors have it that the Vitagraph company will greatly increase its producing staff, making this one of the principal producing studios where multiple-reel productions will be made.

Superior Film Begins Production Near San Diego

Betty Harte, with Selig for Four Years and Later with Famous Players, Heads First Company—President Gordon Names Three Brands—Superior, Isis and Mirth

San Diego, Cal., Aug. 30.

THE Superior Film Company, capitalized at $100,000, with G. M. Gordon as president; Ralph E. Yarger, secretary and treasurer, and Julius Frankenberg, managing director, started operations at Kensington Park, just east of this city, last week.

Betty Harte, for four years with Selig and later with the Famous Players, is the leading lady of the first company, and Juanita Hanson the star of the second company. Miss Hanson has been with the Metro, the Famous Players and the Mutual-Reliance Company.

Others in the company are Miss Reaha, a noted dancer, and Bill Ryno, character man and heavy, recently identified with D. W. Griffith. Charles G. Rosher, formerly head cameraman of the Gaumont Company, has charge of the camera and laboratory work.

Julius Frankenberg, who directs the companies, was formerly manager of the American Film Company. The productions will be released on the Producers program, under three brands, the Superior, the Iris and the Mirth.

There is a rumor that Lasky is about to establish a plant in or near San Diego.

CALIFORNIA M. P. COMPANY MOVES OFFICES TO STUDIO

The California Motion Picture Corporation has removed its offices from San Francisco to San Rafael in order to be close to the studio work. Representatives of the firm can always be found at San Francisco in the new Call Building, but all of the office work is now attended to from the other side of the Bay.

PHILADELPHIA TO SEE TRIANGLE "TWO DOLLAR" PRODUCTIONS

The Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, which had its first successful season of motion pictures last year, after running for many years as a house of the best legitimate attractions, has been chosen by the newly formed Triangle Film Corporation as the Philadelphia home of its two-dollar productions. The Triangle has leased this theatre and will conduct the house under its own management. Last year such plays as "The Spoilers," "The Christian" and "The Avenging Conscience" had long runs at the Chestnut.

The theatre has been completely overhauled and new chairs replace the old-fashioned ones heretofore used.

Mammoth Studio of Federal for Metro Pictures

Main Building, 200 by 125, with 35,000 Feet of Glass, Located in 14-Acre Plot at Rocky Glen, Pa.—Arthur James and Merritt Crawford Behind the Project

THE Metro Pictures Corporation has secured exclusive control of what might prove to be the largest motion picture studio in the world through an affiliation entered into during the present week with the Federal Feature Films Corporation of New York. This adds another to the long list of big surprises which the Metro has treated the motion picture industry.

The new studio, within four hours of New York, is located at Rocky Glen, midway between Scranton and Wilkes Barre, Pa., in the heart of the Pocono Mountain district. The scenic advantages are unrivalled and include everything except an ocean.

The Federal Feature Films Corporation by its contract with the Metro affords the Metro organization additional facilities for tremendous production. The main studio building is 200 x 125 feet, with 20,000 square feet of floor space and 35,000 square feet of glass covering its great roof and sides. The construction is of tubular steel on concrete foundations, and the main structure has room for the simultaneous operation of twenty-one stages.

The Federal Feature Films Corporation acquired the property, consisting of fourteen acres and a frontage on a lake, from Arthur Frothingham, a constructing engineer, who built the studio with a direct plan that it would eventually be used for motion picture making. The park, consisting of fourteen acres, is in the center of a thousand acre tract of gorgeous mountain scenery, with climatic conditions exceptionally advantageous for good photography.

Arthur James, who left the Mutual Film Corporation to take charge of the advertising, publicity and scenario departments of the Metro Pictures Corporation, is president of the Federal Feature Company. Merritt Crawford, formerly managing editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS and editor of Reel Life, and now with the Metro, is its secretary, and Henry James, who as business and advertising manager of Reel Life brought that publication to financial success, and left it for the larger opportunities with the Metro, is treasurer of the Federal Feature Films Corporation.

The Federal has arranged to produce star feature pictures and has placed all of its facilities at the command of the Metro.

Pierce Attends Paramount Convention in Chicago

Special Representative of Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company Addresses Gathering of Manufacturers and Exchange Managers on "Service to Exchanges and Exhibitors"

CARL H. PIERCE, special representative of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, has left New York on the Twentieth Century Limited to attend the meeting of the Paramount manufacturers and exchange managers in Chicago which is to be held September 2.

Mr. Pierce has been requested to speak on the subject of "Service to Exchanges and Exhibitors," it having been acclaimed unanimously throughout the country that the offices of the companies which he represents have given unusually efficient service in the way of assisting the exhibitors and exchange men in the presentation and exploitation of film plays.

On conclusion of the Chicago meeting it is expected that Mr. Pierce will journey to Columbus, Ohio, to see what can be done toward getting "Hypocrites" passed in Ohio. It is reported that the Ohio censors have condemned this film without ever having looked at it, in spite of its having been passed in every other state in the Union.

In this connection, just prior to departing, Mr. Pierce said: "I do not know what truth there is in this rumor, but I do feel that where public, press and even United States courts have passed upon this photoplay and have decided that it is a fit play to show, that the Ohio exhibitors should not be deprived of the profit to be derived from it. Nor should the Ohio public, in my judgment, be deprived of the benefit to be obtained through seeing it."

Mr. Pierce's successful efforts to have "John Barleycorn" passed in Pennsylvania and Ohio and his work with "Sea Wolf" in Philadelphia are indications that if it is at all possible to do anything in the Ohio situation, this will be accomplished before his return to New York.

FOX DIRECTORS HARD AT WORK ON BIG FEATURES

The new fifty-two-a-year big feature picture policy of William Fox has caused a hum of work to result in that big organization, and there is little time for the ten directors to rest. This week, Frederick Thomson, R. A. Walsh, Oscar Apfel and Frank Kugler (the latter newly appointed to the staff of directors), cast for features upon which they immediately began work. Mr. Apfel took a large company out of town and will remain away for at least three weeks to take special scenes. Mr. Walsh expects to go either to Spain or Cuba for atmosphere for some of the scenes in his new picture. Mr. Thomson will produce a feature that will be so unique and new as to startle the picture loving world. Mr. Kugler will produce another picture.

AMERICAN FILM TO DOUBLE AREA OF SANTA BARBARA PLANT

President S. S. Hutchinson has just approved plans to practically double the present area of the American Film plant at Santa Barbara. Present details contemplate what is to be the largest stage under glass in the world, and when work under construction is completed the "Flying A" studios will cover approximately seven acres.

Year's Hard Work Brings World Film to the Front

Under Guidance of Lewis J. Selznick the Corporation Has Forged Ahead with Tremendous Strides to Its Present Position in the Field—Success Due to the Practice of Catering to the Needs of the Small Exhibitor—Plans to Have Three Producing Companies as Regular Contributors to His Program

A YEAR ago last August, to be more exact during the last week of that month, the World Film Corporation released its first picture, "The Dollar Mark," featuring Robert Warwick. This was a Brady play and owing to the immense advertising value of Mr. Brady's name coupled with the established popularity of Mr. Warwick and also with the thrilling action of the picture, the successful future of World Film was assured from that date.

But the year brought many changes in the organization which is now one of the foremost feature concerns in the field. Lewis J. Selznick, the vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, has unceasingly striven to perfect all branches of the concern. Throughout the year he was continually contracting with various producing organizations for which have been converted to motion pictures and released during the past year has been one of the most prominent mainstays of the feature program. Following "The Dollar Mark," came "Mother," "A Gentleman from Mississippi," "The Man of the Hour," "As Ye Sow," "The Pit," "What Happened to Jones," "The Man Who Found Himself," "Woman and Wine," "The Boss," "Little Miss Brown," "The Face in the Moonlight," "After Dark," "The Cub," "The Stolen Voice," "The Little Dutch Girl," "The Cotton King," "The Impostor" and "The Ivory Snuff Box." In these pictures such noted stars as Wilton Lackaye, Tom Wise, Emma Dunn, Robert Warwick, Alice Brady, Holbrook Blinn, Fred Mace and Jose Collins appeared.

The Shubert contributions to the program were "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," Colonial Motion Picture Corporation and Premo.

Giving a prospectus of the coming year, the second of World Film's existence, Mr. Selznick remarked: "With the initial release of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, which is to be "Trilby," the World Film Corporation will release two features a week. In only a short time we intend to increase our output to three a week and then—but that's getting ahead of the story.

"For the services of the exchanges of the World Film Corporation, the Equitable will tend to us thirty per cent. of the profits of each picture, they themselves receiving seventy per cent. This is unlike our policy of the year passed, in which World Film received fifty per cent. of the profits on every picture it handled. It may seem peculiar their product that he might make better and enlarge the output of World Film.

He has established the various exchanges handling World Film features on a sound and business-like basis. He has chosen his managers, in fact all of his employees, because of their progressiveness and business intelligence. As Mr. Selznick said to the writer, "I would not want a man in my office who was satisfied with the salary he was receiving. I want him to ask for more, and if I know that he has increased the business of this organization he will get it."

Brady Plays in Film Drama

This attitude of Mr. Selznick's has become contagious among the other workers in the office. They have and still are striving for the lasting success of World Film, which even though it is only slightly over a year old is soon to commence releasing two features a week, one from its contributing producers and the other from the studio of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation.

The William A. Brady quota of plays "When Broadway Was a Trail," "The Wishing Ring," "Lola," "The Marked Woman," "Wildfire," "Old Dutch," "M'Liss," "The Arrival of Perpetua," "Hearts in Exile," "The Butterfly," "The Moonstone," "The Little Dutch Girl," "Marrying Money" and "Evidence." These with such stars as Clara Kimball Young, Tom Terris, Barbara Tennant, Lillian Russell, Lew Fields, Howard Estabrook, Vivian Martin and Edwin August.

The Blaney producing company contributed, "Across the Pacific" and "The Dancer and the King." The Dyreda Art Film Corporation gave "One of Millions" and "The Daughter of the People." The Liebler features were "The Deep Purple" and "Alias Jimmy Valentine." The California Motion Picture Corporation produced several of Brete Harte's stories starring Beatriz Michelena, while Burr McIntosh's company made "Colonel Carter of Cartersville" and "My Partner." Other pictures were secured from the Frohman Amusement Corporation, United Keanograph, the Charles K. Harris Company, the that we have made this arrangement with the Equitable, but I plan that World Film will now make more money on the thirty per cent. basis than on the fifty-fifty basis.

"This, too, may seem impracticable, but due to the perfected organization of the World Film Corporation, I am positively certain that it can be done." A ten-year contract binds the two organizations together, thus assuring World Film of the complete output from the Equitable studios."

Back to One a Month Later On

Mr. Selznick when questioned as to what would be the size of World Film's output following the three-a-week policy, replied with a smile, "After that, we plan to go back to one a month. That sounds ridiculous in the face of present trade conditions and so it is. Our one-a-month policy will not commence for some time.

"Trade conditions are bound to improve and when the exhibitor awakens to the fact that by proper advertising he may keep a picture on the screen for over a week, even two weeks or a month, then we will give to the exhibitor a picture which is worthy of such a long showing, a picture that has been produced with the greatest care and not hurried, so that work may be commenced upon the next.

Proving Value of Second Runs

"Already I have started to educate the exhibitor to this way of thinking. In giving instructions to my salesmen for the coming year, I have told them to offer any of our features to World Film exhibitors who plan only to book them for one day, for two days at the price of one. Only in this way can I prove to them that on the second day of the picture's run will they make more money than on the first. Of course this implies only if the exhibitor extensively advertises his subject and that's another thing which exhibitors are only now beginning to realize as necessary.

"Referring to the subject of producing again," continued Mr. Selznick, "we plan to have three producing organizations in the future, regular contributors to the program. Already we have two, and the three a week policy will commence as soon as we have secured the third producing company. Furthermore these companies will all be more or less controlled by the distributing organization.

"So it is easy to see that in this manner we will reduce the expense of production to a considerable extent. We will be able to sign contracts with talent for one manufacturing concern and then if we feel so inclined transfer that star, director or whoever it may be to one of the other companies. We have already put this idea into practice by lending Clara Kimball Young and a director to the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation from the Peerless studio for appearance in the coming picture 'Trilby.'

Catered to Small Exhibitor

"World Film made its start," went on Mr. Selznick, "by catering to the small exhibitor, educating him to the big feature, as it were. The salesmen of the company were instructed to offer the features to the theatre owner at whatever price that man could afford. After we had secured the smaller houses we turned to the larger ones.

"I feel quite positive," said Mr. Selznick, "that conditions will improve so in time that exhibitors will agree to my plan of showing pictures for more than a month. My free offer for the second day's run is bringing many to that way of thinking, and I hope my statement that we will soon release three pictures a week will not seem contradictory to this plan. On the contrary, with this plan the house that runs only one picture a week may have the choice of all three, the exhibitor who changes his show twice a week can pick the two best, while the man who wants to change his show three times a week can do so. And the man who believes he must have a new show every day, I'm not worrying about for before long he won't be in existence."

SIEGEL TO HANDLE FEATURE FILMS

Abe Siegel, who recently resigned as manager of the Detroit office of the Fox Film Corporation, has opened an office at 805 Peter Smith building, where he will handle high-class feature films.

"Let Me Carry the Message, General," Is Girl's Cry

Anita King, Former Auto Racer, Now with Lasky, Motors from Los Angeles to New York with Despatches for Paramount President

Los Angeles, Aug. 30.

ANITA KING, of the Lasky stock company, a driver of racing autos before appearing on the screen, who is directing a high-power Kissel-Kar from the Lasky studio in Hollywood with a message to Adolph Zukor, of the Famous Players in New York, and W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Corporation, broke the record in her run from Los Angeles to San Francisco last week.

Her start across the continent will be made from the Exposition on Labor Day, which is to be known as Kissel Car and Paramount Day at the big Exposition.

She was accompanied by Kenneth McGaffey, in charge of the Lasky publicity, who originated the plan and made arrangements for all the details of the trip.

The correct itinerary of Miss King in her dash across the continent has now been perfected and arrangements are being completed so that she will be in constant communication with either the Lasky studio in Hollywood or the offices in New York. If she fails to arrive at any given point within two hours of the time her schedule provides she shall reach there, it has been arranged with garage people to go to her aid. At all the cities where she stops in the evening she will visit theatres showing Paramount pictures and make a short impromptu talk.

September 1, from San Francisco to Sacramento, 124 miles; September 2, to Lake Tahoe, 127 miles; September 3, to Fallon, 107 3/10 miles; September 4, to Austin, 118 5/10 miles; September 5, to Ely, 157 3/10 miles; September 6, to Fish Springs, 114 2/10 miles; September 7, to Salt Lake City, 147 5/10 miles; September 8, to Green River, 180 miles; September 9, to Rawlins, 125 miles; September 10, to Laramie, 120 miles; September 11, to Cheyenne, 124 miles; September 12, to North Platte, 146 miles; September 13, to Grand Island, 163 miles; September 14, to Omaha, 165 miles; September 15, to Boone, 166 miles; September 16, to Cedar Rapids, 128 miles; September 17, to Dixon, 135 miles, and September 18, to Chicago, 104 miles.

From Chicago she will go through the following towns: Valparaiso, South Bend Elkkhart, Fort Wayne, Delphos, Lima, Dayton, Springfield, London, Columbus, Zanesville, Wheeling, Pittsburgh, Greensburg, Bedford, Chambersburg, Hanover, York, Columbia, Lancaster, Coateville, Westchester, Philadelphia, Camden, Trenton, Princeton, New Brunswick, Elizabeth and New York.

Miss King carries a sealed message from the Mayors of Los Angeles and San Francisco to John Purroy Mitchel, and from Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of the Hollywood Studio of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the company in New York. She will cross the continent alone. Not even a mechanician will accompany her.

Determined to break the 18-hour record between Los Angeles and San Francisco, she was wished god-speed and good luck by Cecil B. DeMille, the entire personnel of the big Lasky Studio and the major part of the population of Hollywood.

McARTHUR IS ON ROAD FOR LAEMMLE FILM, OMAHA

J. J. McArthur, recently manager of the Lynn theatre at Norfolk, Neb., has sold his interests to Joseph Beckman and is now on the road for the Laemmle Film Service out of Omaha.

Associated's Release Inaugural Set for September 13

Program Will Consist of Twelve One and Two Reel Subjects and a Five Reel Feature Every Other Week—Brand Names are Santa Barbara, Navajo, Deer, Liberty, Federal, Banner, Romona, Alhambra and Empire—Many Studios, at Work on the Pictures for Several Months, Have Been Enlarged

WITH a weekly program of twelve one and two-reel pictures ready, and a five-reel feature provided for every alternate week, the Associated Film Sales Corporation announces that it will commence the release of its full program the week of September 13. Headquarters have been opened at 110 West Fortieth street, New York, from where the films for the initial releases are already being distributed to the various exchanges.

The releases will be known under the nine brand names of Santa Barbara, Navajo, Deer, Liberty, Federal, Banner, Ramona, Alhambra and Empire. The studios have been at work on their pictures for several months, and most of them have found it necessary to enlarge their plants, and add to their producing organizations.

General Manager Arthur Bard is extremely optimistic regarding the outlook. "The great interest shown by exhibitors throughout the country in Associated Service has been most gratifying," he said. "These men who have followed the motion picture industry through its various evolutionary stages can't help but be in sympathy with the policies of our company and have not been backward in expressing their approval of our methods.

"It has been demonstrated by every national organization distributing a regular program, which has withstood the test of time, that the only regular practical method of manufacturing and distributing a program is for the manufacturers and the exchanges to be closely allied in their efforts to efficiently supply the exhibitors with just the goods his patrons demand.

"In every instance in the past where a middleman has intruded himself between the manufacturer and exchange he has been invariably considered in a short time an expensive and unnecessary factor and has been eventually eliminated for the good of the service.

Effects of Close Producing Companies

"The more closely the producing companies and distributors have been associated the greater has been the success of all concerned and this fact has governed us in outlining the plans and policies for the distribution of Associated Film Sales. Not only are our manufacturers and exchanges working as one for the common good, but we have in contemplation a plan which will cement our exchanges and exhibitors more closely together than has been possible in the past."

David Keen has affiliated himself with the Associated Film Sales Corporation in an executive capacity and will give to the new regular service his time and undivided attention.

Mr. Keen was first identified with the moving picture business in 1906 with Siegmund Lubin in Philadelphia. He had an interest in the first moving picture house installed in that city, the Circle, or

ARTHUR BARD

Eighth near Race street, and has ever since been connected with the moving picture industry, having been associated in numerous enterprises both in the exhibiting and exchange lines. For years he has been recognized as one of the leading exchangemen of eastern Pennsylvania.

In March, 1914, feeling that the advancement of the industry had created an opening for an additional regular program, he met with other well-known exchange men in New York City, where an exchangemen's proposition on a strictly co-operative basis was thoroughly discussed. He called other meetings for Indianapolis and Chicago.

Among the exchange men interested in this movement were such men as E. T. Peters, of Dallas, Texas; Dan Markowitz, of Los Angeles; Joseph Hopp, of Chicago, and George Verbeck, of Buffalo, and many other important distributors from all over the country.

Mr. Keen's Activities

The result of these meetings was the formation of the Standard Polyscope Company and later the Kriterion. Mr. Keen signed the first contract for territorial rights with this concern securing the territory of eastern Pennsylvania and later acquired a half interest in the Manhattan Kriterion Exchange, of New York City.

Upon the failure of the Kriterion, Mr. Keen thoroughly analyzed the situation to determine the contributing causes, and came to the conclusion that the only practical way for a regular program to be introduced and profitably continued is to have the manufacturer and the exchange man deal directly with each other, eliminating entirely the middleman, as he could see that most of the difficulties encountered in firmly establishing a program on a permanent basis came from the middleman whose interest is more that of an agent than a necessary principal in the business.

Whenever Mr. Keen has been approached with reference to a program, he has always contended that strict co-operation between producer and exchangeman was most essential, and has not been willing to associate himself with any concern not in sympathy with this policy. He now has an opportunity to assist in developing plans based on this principle.

Moore a Fixed Pole in the Battery of Screen Comedy

Comedian Whose Mirth-Currents Have Electrified "Legitimate" and Vaudeville Audiences for Many Seasons Is Signed Permanently for Photo Drama by Lasky

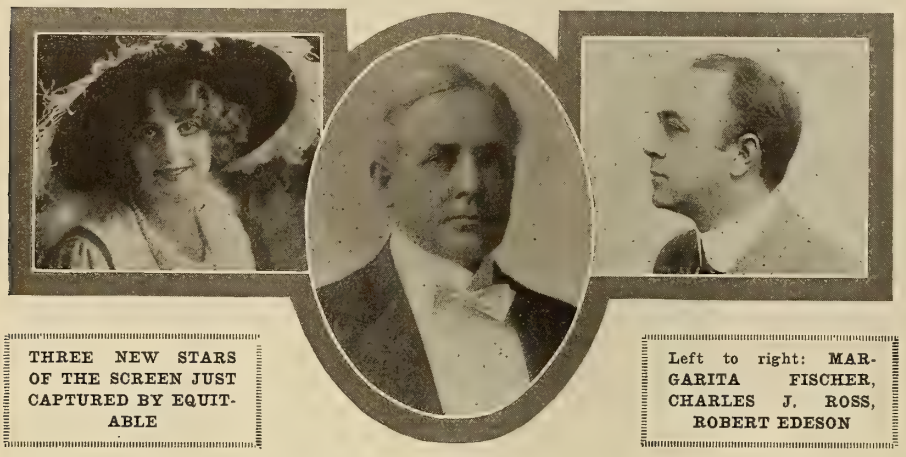
VICTOR MOORE, one of the leading comedians of the legitimate and vaudeville stage for the past ten years, was the star of several seasons in George M. Cohan's comedy, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," has decided to forsake the legitimate stage and vaudeville for a period of years.

At a large salary he has been engaged to appear exclusively in Paramount Pictures produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

In this important engagement is seen a specific instance of the trend of affairs theatrical into new channels. Many managers of the legitimate stage have held firmly against the photoplay invasion and have refused to permit their stars to appear in photoplay productions during the life of their contract.

But the advance and transition was not to be denied until with Mr. Moore's engagement the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company establishes a precedent with so important a star in holding him exclusively.

At the same time Mr. Moore's engagement is announced, plans for a series of "Chimmie Fadden" photo comedies are declared completed by the Lasky Company. Mr. Moore's first appearance on the screen was in the Paramount picture, "Snobs," produced by Lasky, followed by a picturization of E. N. Townsend's "Chimmie Fadden." By his work in this latter production Mr. Moore stamped himself at once as a comedian of exceptional talents.



His next Paramount release will be "Chimmie Fadden Out West," second of the series of "Chimmie" comedies produced under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille.

Mr. Moore's future as a screen star is unusually bright. He is leaving within a few days for the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Cal., which will be the scene of his screen activities and where he will take a permanent house and reside in the future.

Margarita Fischer, "Beauty" Star, with Equitable

Harry A. Pollard, Who Directed Actress Through Her Entire Film Career, Will Continue His Supervision of Her Subjects at Wizard Studio

MARGARITA FISCHER, known in filmdom through the popularity she achieved as star of American "Beauty" films and in Mutual Master pictures, has been engaged by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, and under the direction of Harry A. Pollard, who has been directing Miss Fischer throughout her entire film career, will begin work within a few days in a five reel production which will be released by the Equitable Program the latter part of November.

THREE NEW STARS OF THE SCREEN JUST CAPTURED BY EQUITABLE

Miss Fischer, without the shadow of a doubt, one of the most beautiful personalities on the screen, when the Mutual Master pictures first came into being, was given the honor of being the star of the first roles. Her work in "The Quest" established her as an emotional actress of no mean calibre and so well was she received in "The Quest" that her other feature productions "The Lonesome Heart" and "The Girl from his Town" were immediately sent over the Mutual Program.

Miss Fischer began her stage career in support of Grace George, and was later chosen by T. Daniel Frawley to head his important stock company in Winnipeg, Manitoba, and so well did she succeed in numerous dramatic roles with that organization, she was selected to originate the leading role in Joseph Medill Patterson's drama "By Products."

It was during the engagement of this piece at the Studebaker theatre in Chicago that Col. M. Selig was impressed with her style of acting and appearance and immediately engaged her. She starred in several of the biggest Selig productions.

From this point Miss Fischer's progress in screen work was rapid and phenomenal. Her popularity gained with every release, and when the Mutual Corporation decided to make five reel features, Miss Fischer was the first selection and appeared in the first releases.

In preparation for her work with the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, Miss Fischer and her director, Mr. Pollard, have been searching the fiction markets for the past three weeks for suitable vehicles for her appearance, and it is now found in a recent dramatic success.

Harry A. Pollard, who has been directing Miss Fischer for the past three years, and is one of the most competent and efficient directors in filmdom, will have complete charge of the company in which Miss Fischer will appear.

The Fischer productions will be made by Equitable, at their Wizard studio, at 310 West Fifty-second street, where a company is now being assembled to support the famous little ingenue star.

Another important acquisition to the Equitable roster of stars is Charles J. Ross, who will make his first appearance in an important screen production under the Equitable banner to be released late in October. The vehicle selected for Mr. Ross' appearance is an adaptation into screen form of the famous dramatic production, "The Senator," which was more than popular some years ago, both in New York and on tour.

Mr. Ross recently completed a starring engagement at the Winter Garden, is resting up on his Jersey estate, Ross Fenton Farm, and will come to New York September 5, to begin preparations for his studio work. Mr. Ross will work at the Flushing studio, either under Directors Cullison or Ince, or at the Triumph studio under Director Joseph Golden.

FLORENCE ROCKWELL RECOVERS FROM RECENT ILLNESS

Florence Rockwell has recovered from her recent illness and the production of "The Purple Night," Knickerbocker Star Features, is again under way. The illness of Miss Rockwell has caused the release date of this feature to be changed from September 1 to September 15.

"The Purple Night" will mark the debut of Miss Rockwell on the moving picture screen. Since her first appearance on the stage when but a little girl, Miss Rockwell's career has brought her to the very top of the theatrical profession. Her success in the roles of Juliet and Ophelia, playing opposite Richard Mansfield and Robert Mantell, her triumph in "The Doll's House" and "The Scarlet Letter" and the reputation she established for herself in "The Round Up," "The Barrier," and "The Mills of the Gods" proves her versatility.

Mary Pickford and Barrymore 2 September Releases

Actress Will Be Seen in Screen Version of "Esmeralda," by Mrs. Burnett, and Actor Will Be Seen in "The Incorrigible Dukane"

THE Famous Players Film Company's early September contributions to the Paramount program consist of two of its most prominent stars in unusually strong and typical characterizations—Mary Pickford in a faithful photo-production of the American stage success, "Esmeralda," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, released September 6, and John Barrymore, a king of screen comedy, in an elaborate picturization of George C. Shedd's melodramatic comedy, "The Incorrigible Dukane," released September 2.

It is a conservative prediction that "Esmeralda" will increase Miss Pickford's fame and popularity, if such a thing is remotely possible. Of all the great dramatic successes of Frances Hodgson Burnett (also the author of "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," in which Mary Pickford recently attained one of the greatest screen triumphs since "Tess of the Storm Country"). "Esmeralda" is the most tender and lovable characterization she has ever created.

The strong attachment for home, "be it ever so humble," which this appealing drama extols, the simple but great love which it unfolds, and its dominant human note, have made its success on the stage endure for two generations. As a photoplay, "Esmeralda" is a faithful presentation of the beautiful and noble sentiments of the beloved play, in which Miss Pickford delineates the title character with all the sweetness and naturalness that is illustriously hers.

Whether in Esmeralda's quiet little home on the farm, or in the whirl of society life in the great metropolis, Mary Pickford is so much the mistress of every situation with which this appealing drama confronts her, that this impersonation will probably be recorded as one of her greatest character creations.

"The Incorrigible Dukane," a unique combination of drama, comedy, and romance, by George C. Shedd, provides John Barrymore, the popular stage and film favorite, with one of the most unusual characterizations he has yet impersonated on the screen.

The comedy of the subject is derived from a series of ludicrous misfortunes of which the young and incorrigible Dukane is the constant victim; the drama emanates from the thrilling manner in which the young ne'er-do-well redeemed himself, and saves the fortune and honor of his father; and the romance develops—in the usual manner of youth.

These varying elements of photoplay composition effectively prove the versatility of John Barrymore, inimitable in his comedy scenes, impressive in the dramatic situations in which he finds himself, and truly lovable as a lover.

"Fans" in Moviegame to Get $150,000 in Prizes

Universal Plans Aid for Exhibitor Through Co-operation with Thirty-five Dailies in Contest—Newspapers in Each Locality Will Publish a Picture Expected to Suggest Name of Some Screen Drama—3,000 Names of Photoplays Will Be Issued—Many Papers Will Give Away as Much as $4,000 to Successful Contestants

MEN who are working their brains on aids to the exhibitor have evolved no more original or promising plan than that of the Universal Moviegame, by which the co-operation of newspapers and exhibitors all over the country is enlisted in the work of swelling the attendance at photo-play theatres.

Announcement will be made next week by the Universal Moviegame Company, 17 West Thirty-eighth street, New York, of three of the largest newspapers in the country, which have already signed up as factors in the game, and it is expected that thirty to thirty-five newspapers in the United States and Canada will take part, distributing more than $150,000 in prizes between now and Christmas.

Simply stated, as to its appeal to exhibitor, the Moviegame is this: One newspaper in each locality will publish every day a picture, calculated to suggest the name of some photoplay. A list of three thousand names of these photoplays will be issued, and those working out the game will find among them a title to fit every picture. At the same time, a short film will be run in several theatres in the town, the subject matter of this film having to do with the title under consideration.

This is calculated to be of great assistance to the spectator in suggesting the proper name.

These films will be of about seventy-five feet in length; they will be manufactured and distributed by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, through its various exchanges, to any exhibitor who wishes to book them, irrespective of whether he signs up for other pictures on the Universal Program.

Judges will be selected from among local citizens by each newspaper, and they will pass upon the names sent in by the "fans." The extent and number of the prizes will be at the discretion of the newspaper, and even the correct names to apply to the various pictures published will be decided by the judges. For instance: if two or more names in the list of 3,000 are considered equally applicable to any one picture, the judges will have power to decide which best fits it, and make their awards upon that basis.

In all there will be seventy-five illustrations, running for seventy-five consecutive days, and to accompany these, the Universal exchanges will issue seventy-five of the short films, at prices running even below the regular rental charges. The Moviegame Company will supply the lists of 3,000 names, and the newspapers agree to furnish the prize money, getting their reward in increased circulation, while the exhibitor's harvest comes in the throngs which will be attracted to his theatre for further aid in working out the illustrations.

On September 14, the Moviegame Company, according to B. F. Cornelius, Jr., will announce that the Philadelphia "Press," the Baltimore "News" and the Philadelphia "Evening Telegram" have signed up to carry on the game in their cities, and others are to follow immediately.

"There is nothing of the guessing contest about this," said Mr. Cornelius, "and the game has been carefully arranged to comply with all the regulations of the postal department. There is no danger of dissatisfaction, as the decisions and awards will be made in all cases by local judges, and the discretion given them in deciding between two or more names removes fear of anything except fair play. As a matter of fact, the moviegame is the Booklover's game, played so successfully in New York and other cities, applied to the movies.

"No one is obliged to go to the picture show to get his suggestions, but experience has demonstrated that everybody will, just the same. The public is easily interested in such games, and once started, a 'fan' will overlook nothing which can be of the least possible aid to him in his solutions.

"Some papers will offer rewards which total as high as $4,000 cash, and some will reach even $5,000, while in smaller localities the total will be limited to $500—this, of course, is in the hands of the newspaper, as it has to put up the money.

We are signing up newspapers and exhibitors every day, and the game will be in full swing before the end of September."

Baltimore Excited Over Beauty and Ability Contest

"Daily News" in Conjunction with Essanay Company Inaugurates Test with Permanent Position as Screen Actress for Winner—$500 Scenario Prize Is Also Offered

Baltimore, Sept. 1

THE motion picture exhibitors of Baltimore, as well as the patrons of the motion picture theatres, are greatly interested just at present in a film beauty and ability contest, which is running in this city. The film made its first appearance on the screen a week or so ago and will continue until September 30.

In the meantime, thousands of votes are being cast at the various houses showing the picture for Baltimore's favorite amateur, the winner of this contest to be given a position in a real photoplay.

The beauty and ability contest was inaugurated by the Baltimore "News," and this paper is fathering the picture throughout its career. It is the result of an agreement between the Baltimore "News" and the Essanay Company for a beauty and scenario contest.

Through this arrangement the Baltimore "News" is also conducting a scenario contest for which a cash prize of five hundred dollars will be given. The scenario contest is open to the entire country. It is to be produced by the Essanay Company in one, two, three or more reels, according to the worth of the prize-winning scenario. Many of the Essanay stars will appear in this scenario, the only provision of which is that the principal scenes be laid around the Baltimore "News" office.

To give the scenario more of a Baltimore atmosphere it was decided that at least one Baltimore girl appear in the picture. To select this girl was rather a difficult problem for a mere newspaper, so it was decided to put it up to the motion picture public of this city.

Hundreds of girls made application to enter the contest. The contestants were culled to twenty-one girls. The film for the beauty and ability contest was then made. This film is about eleven hundred feet long and opens with a comedy showing the difficulty of the judges in selecting the twenty-one girls. After they have selected the latter number, they realize that it is almost a hopeless task to select the most able or prettiest from this number and gracefully retire from the position.

Following on the reel are the poses of twenty-one girls. Each girl is given thirty seconds before the camera to perform various little stunts. With each girl in the picture is a number by which she is known to the audience, and the audience vote by number. The winner of this contest will receive one hundred dollars in cash, a trip to Chicago, all expenses paid, and will appear in the winning five hundred dollar scenario to be made by the Essanay Company. Should her work show that she has sufficient ability before the camera, she will be given a permanent position in one of the Essanay stock companies.

KANSAS LEAGUE BRANCH WILL HOLD CONVENTION SEPTEMBER 20-21

Kansas City, Sept. 1.

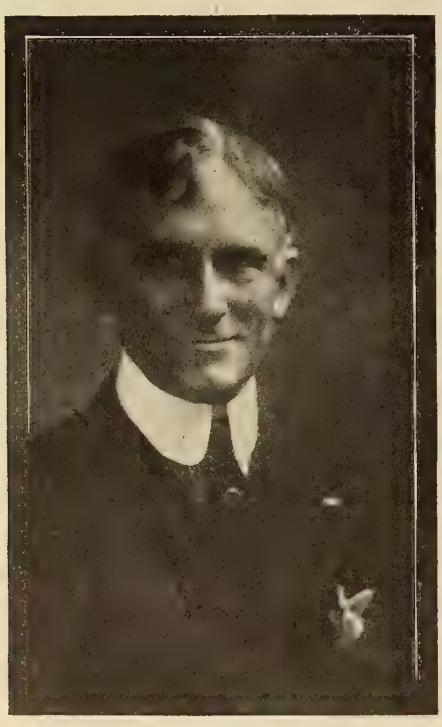
The Kansas branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will hold its annual convention in Pittsburg, Kan., September 20-21.

There are many things that will come up for consideration, the most important of which will be censorship as it is conducted in that state.

There are about five hundred exhibitors in the state and only about fifty-five of these are members of the league. A campaign is going to be started at this convention to get every exhibitor in the state to join the organization.

It is expected that the exhibitors who are already members of the league will get together and plan a campaign to combat the censorship law in its present form.

Crane Wilbur of "Perils of Pauline" with Horsley



Nephew of William H. Crane and Member of Mrs. Fiske's Company Will Be Seen in "The Protest," Directed by Hunt—Goes from NYMP to New Mutual Program

DAVID HORSLEY announces the engagement for a long period of Crane Wilbur for the leading parts in the new brand of three reel features which will be released through the Mutual program, beginning September 29.

His greatest hit was made in the Pathé serial, "The Perils of Pauline," in which he assumed the leading male role, playing opposite Pearl White. His work in this serial made his name a household word the country over, and easily established him in the front ranks of the world's greatest photoplayers.

So signal had been his success that as soon as he finished his season with Pathé he was engaged by the Lubin Company to play the leading male part in "The Road of Strife," a serial which is now running. In this, too, he scored a success, adding much to his already enviable reputation.

Mr. Wilbur was born in Athens, N. Y., and comes from a family of actors. He is a nephew of William H. Crane, and was at one time with one of his uncle's companies on a tour of the world.

He was a member of Mrs. Fiske's famous Manhattan Company, with which organization he remained for a long time.

Following his engagement with Mrs. Fiske, Mr. Wilbur played leading roles in American successes, and it was his work in these plays that brought him to the attention of motion picture producers.

Mr. Wilbur's first appearance in a David Horsley picture will be made September 29, when "The Protest," the initial release of Mr. Horsley's new brand of three reelers (the name of which will be announced later) is released. In this picture he plays the part of a young district attorney—a part in which his ability is given wide scope. Mr. Wilbur will be supported by a cast of well known players.

Jay Hunt, one of the most noted of present day motion picture directors, has been secured to direct the production of the three reel features starring Crane Wilbur. Mr. Hunt is now at work on "The Protest."

CRANE WILBUR

Mr. Hunt goes to the Horsley studios from Inceville, where for three years he was associated with Thos. Ince in the production of pictures for the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

His latest works for this company were "The Mill by the Zuyder Zee" and "His Brother's Keeper," both two reel subjects which Mr. Hunt not only directed but played the leading character parts as well.

In his early day's Mr. Hunt's dressing room associates were E. H. Sothern, Otis Skinner, Francis Wilson and John Mason, with whom he played in various productions. For a time Mr. Hunt played only with Shakespearean companies and with these enacted nearly every comedy part in the list of the Bard's plays.

He was also comedian and stage director tor E. H. Sothern during his first tour as a star, in a comedy called "Who Are They?"

Later Mr. Hunt forsook comedy roles and took up character work. After a number of seasons with different companies he became a stage manager and producer, serving among other places at the Bowdoin Square theatre and the Howard Athenaeum, Boston, Mass.

Mr. Hunt has written many dramas which have been produced, and in which companies have toured the country.

He deserted the spoken for the silent drama in June, 1910, when he became one of the staff of directors with the Vitagraph Company of America in its New York studio.

In March, 1913, he joined the New York Motion Picture Corporation, which organization he leaves to join Mr. Horsley.

FAMOUS AUSTRALIAN ACTRESS IN MOROSCO PHOTOPLAY

Lydia Yeamans-Titus, who was almost as famous for her mimicries as her musicianship, is one of the latest captures for motion pictures and is now appearing for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company in Charles Frohman's success, "Jane," in support of Charlotte Greenwood and Sydney Grant.

Mrs. Yeamans-Titus became famous with "Sally In Our Alley," and although singers for over 200 years have featured this classic of English ballads in their repertoires it remained for this diminutive Australian songstress to come along and so outdo them with her own interpretation that she made the celebrated love song practically her private property. "Sally In Our Alley" is never mentioned but it suggests the name of Lydia Yeamans-Titus. Her baby songs and imitations of Emma Eames, Adelina Patti and other famous stage folks, not to mention her London East End, Italian and French and "coon" types, comprise a gallery which has never been surpassed.

TOM MIX, SELIG, MADE DEPUTY SHERIFF IN NEW MEXICO

Tom Mix, the daring cowboy actor-producer of the Selig Polyscope Company, has become quite the rage in Las Vegas, N. M., where his company is now working. He has not only joined the Commercial, Elks and Fishing clubs, but has also been appointed deputy sheriff of San Miguel, the county in which Las Vegas is located.

Mix has told the sheriff that if, at any time, a bold bad man in real life gets away, his cowboy, actors are just as willing to form a pursuing posse as they are when the villian is only one of the picture variety.

Amusement Feast for Public is Quality's Hope

Balshofer Acquires Rights to "Rosemary," the Charles Frohman Success with John Drew—Marguerite Snow Will Be Seen Shortly in "A Corner in Cotton"—Production of "Richard Carvel," Requiring Eastern Settings, Made the Company Decide to Produce the Picture in Maryland—New York Studio Planned

THE busiest man on Broadway right now is Fred J. Balshofer, head of the Quality-Metro forces, who flitted into New York from Los Angeles via Chicago a few days ago with Francis X. Bushman to witness the initial showing here of Bushman's latest screen effort, "The Silent Voice." Since then Mr. Balshofer has been smashing records for getting things done, the results of which will be seen later in the Metro program.

Big things are doing in Metro, and Quality pictures are not last by any means in the onward march of the companies under President Rowland's direction. Which is one reason for the notable activity of Fred Balshofer since his arrival here.

Besides engaging Beverly Bayne, the former Essanay star, for a term of years, to be featured in stellar roles in future Quality pictures and concluding the purchase of the motion picture rights on a number of important stage productions and well known novels for which he had been dickering before coming East, Mr. Balshofer has also been examining the merits of some half a dozen studios in New York and vicinity with a view to lease or purchase.

It was this fact that led the interviewer to the Metro offices at 1465 Broadway to ask Mr. Balshofer about his plans for Quality.

"We are planning to open a New York studio for several reasons," admitted Mr. Balshofer, in response to a question. "One is, that we intend shortly to increase our production and the other that we find it impossible to obtain the requisite exteriors for many of the important pictures we are preparing to make. This does not mean that we shall cease operating our Los Angeles studio, which is one of the best equipped and one of the most efficiently organized on the coast, but only that we shall use it for Quality pictures requiring a California setting.

Determined on Studio in East

"It was 'Richard Carvel,' Winston Churchill's great novel on which we expect to begin production in late September," went on Mr. Balshofer, "which originally led Mr. Bushman and myself to determine on a studio in the East, as we found it would be quite out of the question to stage it on the coast. So we are going to produce it in Maryland, which is peculiarly rich in the colonial settings that the requirements of this famous story call for. Eve Unsell, who wrote the scenario of 'The Second in Command' and who collaborated with me in arranging the script of 'The Silent Voice,' is now busy on 'Richard Carvel.' This production will prove a sensation among Quality picture lovers when it is released in the Metro program.

"The story is too familiar to the public to touch upon here, but many of the book's most thrilling situations will be accentuated in the picture, and with Mr. Bushman in the title role it is certain to be a wonderful success. We have also definitely arranged for some unusual photographic effects, although it is rather early to speak of them yet.

"Besides 'Richard Carvel,' Quality Pictures Corporation has many other big features in process of production or now being put into scenario form. Since coming to New York I have concluded arrangements for the screen rights on two big plays of a popular novel, all three of which had a tremendous vogue in their original form. Also, I am considering the signing up of two other dramatic actresses of similar stellar magnitude to Miss Bayne with whom I may close before returning to the coast.

"There will be big developments in Quality-Metro affairs in the very near future, as may be judged from the character of the productions already announced. Miss Bayne, who supported Mr. Bushman in so many of his earlier successes, is bound to be a big addition to Quality Pictures' stellar staff. In 'Pennington's Choice,' which will be released in the Metro program in late October, she will find an unusual vehicle for the talents which have won her such wide popularity among photoplaygoers.

Plot of "Pennington's Choice"

"The story deals with a girl, who first puts her millionaire lover to the test and learns that he is a real, red-blooded man by sending him into the wilds of the great Northwest on a difficult mission. Later she poses as her own sister to try out his fidelity. The part gives Miss Bayne many opportunities to display her remarkable dramatic gifts and with Mr. Bushman in the character in which he has won his greatest screen successes, that of the romantic lover, the picture is sure to win wide popularity.

"Marguerite Snow will shortly be seen in another Quality-Metro release, 'A Corner in Cotton,' production on which has just begun, in which she will have the leading feminine role. Frank Bacon, whose character work on the speaking stage has long been famous and who made his screen debut in 'The Silent Voice' as old Spring, Franklyn Starr's faithful servant, will play the part of a Kentucky colonel in this production.

Coming Quality Productions

"The scenes in 'A Corner in Cotton' are divided between Wall Street and a Southern plantation of the type common in ante-bellum days. We have already staged a few simple sets in our Los Angeles studios, but the big scenes will all be put on here in New York or in the South.

"Among the plays which Quality has acquired title to for motion picture purposes within the last few days is 'Rosemary,' the Charles Frohman production in which John Drew is now starring on the road. It is a very pretty romance, which offers unusual possibilities for screen purposes. According to present plans it will be produced in New York, although just when I cannot yet say.

"These are only a few of the film feasts that Quality hopes to offer the public through the Metro program during the coming season."

Essanay's Stages, 350 by 175, to Cost $150,000

Ground Will Be Broken on What Will Probably Be the Largest Indoor Studio About the Middle of September—Up-to-Date Lighting System Will Be Installed

THE Essanay company has drawn plans for what probably will be the largest indoor photoplay studio in the world. Ground will be broken for the new studio about the middle of September, as soon as the gigantic temporary building, which was built for the taking of scenes in Essanay's six-act photoplay, "In the Palace of the King," by F. Marion Crawford, is torn down.

The studio will be three hundred and fifty feet in length and one hundred and seventy-five in width, making a total floor space of 61,250 square feet. Its estimated cost is $150,000.

The building will be a two-story brick structure and will be a gigantic addition to the two studios located on Argyle street, Chicago. The entire lower story will be used as a studio, while the upper floor will be utilized for the offices of directors and assistants and other officials of the company.

The offices on the second floor of the old building will be given over entirely to dressing rooms for the increasing number of actors Essanay now is engaging. The two studios now at Chicago will be continued in use for the productions of pictures, the company needing all the floor space available.

Since increasing the number of weekly releases to eleven reels, exclusive of the Chaplin comedies and the V-L-S-E multiple-reel features, Essanay has been considerably cramped for indoor studio space. The extra features has entailed the engagement of larger force of actors and directors, as well as officials.

In taking "In the Palace of the King," in which five thousasnd persons were engaged, it was necessary to put up four large tents on the Essanay grounds for dressing-room purposes. With all the costuming in this great spectacular production, even this was found inadequate. Consequently it was decided to rush work on the new building at once.

FIRST "SIDNEY DREW DAY" IS SET FOR SEPTEMBER 3

When the Vitagraph Company sent out the announcement it would set apart Friday of each week beginning October 1, to be known as "Sidney Drew Day," on which it would release a Drew comedy, the company was flooded with letters from exhibitors asking to advance the time to as early a date as possible.

In compliance with the many requests, the Vitagraph Company now announce the first "Sidney Drew Day" for Friday, September 3.

The four releases for the month of September will include "Their Night Out," "Unlucky Louey," "The Professional Diner" and "Back to the Primitive."

Malitz Makes Plain His Attitude in "World" Attack

He Issues Statement Controverting the Accusations Made by the New York Daily Against Him in the Exploitation of Official War Pictures Depicting Scenes at the Front

GUSTAVE MALITZ, of the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., New York City, issues a denial of his alleged activities in behalf of the German government by the exhibition of war pictures supposed to favor the cause of the Central Empires, as stated in the New York "World" last month. Mr. Malitz repudiates the accusations made against him and states with emphasis his stand in the controversy. His statement follows:

"Having been requested by several newspaper men to make a statement in regard to the article which appeared in the New York 'World' of August 15, 1915, in which my name was mentioned, I wish to say:

"I was vice-president and general manager of Pathé Freres, Jersey City, and Pathé Exchange, Inc., New York City, for some time, and was compelled to give up these positions, which were controlled by French interests, on account of my German origin, in spite of having declared my United States citizenship.

"As a matter of consequence I had to look for another means of livelihood and I accepted to conduct the business of the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., with the condition that I have full power to run this corporation in a straightforward, business-like and neutral American way.

"It is true that M. B. Claussen, the president of our corporation, has paid into the bank the sum of $22,000 as a loan to the corporation, but I personally can say that I have never seen the agreement of which the 'World' speaks. All I desired in undertaking this work was to be properly financed in order to carry on the business.

"As to the authenticity of the war pictures turned out by the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., I always have emphasized verbally and in all my correspondence and in all my advertising that these are 'official' war pictures.

"So there is certainly no mystery about it, and I do not see that the 'World' discovered anything that I had not announced broadcast long before the 'World' helped me to advertise the fact.

"If there is anybody who doubted the genuineness and the exciting interest of our pictures on account of so many fake war pictures having previously been put on the market, I'm sure he has changed his mind by this time and believes that the right stuff is now being offered and that when I said ours are genuine official war pictures, I certainly made no misrepresentation as to their particularly authentic value.

"I call attention also to the fact that the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., is not engaged in the manufacture of war pictures alone, but in addition is making pictures of general interest, the object being to conduct a film business in the proper legitimate manner and personally I feel that I have the same right to do this without interference as any other man who has declared his intention of upholding the principles of this Republic.

"(Signed) GUSTAVE MALITZ,

California's Balmy Climate Enthralls Pavlowa

Russian Dancer, Star of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," in Production at Universal West Coast Studio, Is Rapturous Over the "Italy of America"

SINCE her arrival in California a few weeks ago, Mlle. Anna Pavlowa, the famous Russian dancer and star of the Universal company's mammoth production, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," has been in most joyous mood.

While Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, the directors of the production, were in Chicago with the company, it rained practically for an entire month, and the work of production, as a consequence, was seriously hindered.

Whether it was raining or cloudy, however, the great terpsichorean artist was always on hand at a surprisingly early hour, ready to proceed. Neither the rain nor the clouds disturbed the serenity of Mlle. Pavlowa, and her cheerful optimism never departed from her.

The weather has been perfect since Mlle. Pavlowa's arrival at the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal company, and she has fairly reveled in the sunshine. She is occupying a pretty bungalow in Hollywood.

"I have always loved the California climate," she said, "and whenever I know that your Golden State, as you call it, is to be visited by our company en tour, I look forward very eagerly to the visit. Ah! such delightfully sunny days and such balmy nights. And the flowers and the fruit! Surely California is nearly like Paradise—I am certain of it. And to think that in a few weeks more I must go away again—leave it all behind me—and return to Chicago. Ah! it is too bad. How I would like to stay and live, yes, live in your Universal City, where it is all so very interesting. This picture city truly is most wonderful, and I could be happy in it for all time.

MLLE. PAVLOWA AND M. CHRISTINE, HER BALLET MASTER, AT UNIVERSAL CITY

"How do I like the picture work? I think it is splendid. I'm only sorry I have to run away from it so soon. I hope to make more pictures after a while if 'The Dumb Girl of Portici' turns out 'O. K.,' as you Americans say; and the producers—Miss Weber, a most adorable woman, and Mr. Smalley, a real artist—tell me it will create a sensation, which makes me most happy, indeed."

It is not neecssary to record anything concerning Mlle. Pavlowa's dancing in the big production—the wonderful dancing of this famous artiste is too well known, but her acting surprised even the directors.

HOFFMAN VISITS OMAHA BRANCH

M. E. Hoffman, from the head office of the World Film Corporation in New York, was visiting Manager Goldstone of the Omaha, Neb., exchange, recently.

Eastern Film Is Latest Producing Company

Elwood F. Bostwick, Associated with Shuberts and Klaw and Erlanger, and Benjamin L. Peck, Vice-President of National Exchange Bank of Providence, R. I., Join Forces for the Production of Two 5-Reel Features a Month, Four Single Reel Comedies a Week and a Two Reel Comedy Each Week.

APPROXIMATELY four months ago Frederick S. Peck, Elwood F. Bostwick and Benjamin L. Cook organized and incorporated in Providence, R. I., the Eastern Film Corporation. At the present writing the concern has already made several short subjects, is in the course of producing several five-reel features, and is negotiating for a channel of release which will be announced shortly.

The organization, comparatively young in the ranks of motion picture companies, is backed sufficiently well both by money and talent. Mr. Peck, one of the wealthiest and most influential men in the New England States, vice-president of the National Exchange Bank of Providence, chairman of the finance committee of the state of Rhode Island and director of several corporations, is president of the Eastern Film Corporation.

Mr. Bostwick, Mr. Peck's right-hand man, general director and manager of the film company, is a man of considerable theatrical experience. He has been associated with the Shuberts as well as Klaw & Erlanger, and has also had an extensive career in the film business. Mr. Cook, vice-president of the corporation, is very well known in financial circles, being the manager of the prominent stock firm of Hornblower & Weeks.

When interviewed recently while in New York City, Mr. Bostwick had much of interest to say regarding the plans of his company. "Our program," he said, "is neither to be all features or entirely one and two-reel subjects. At present our plans are to produce two five-reel features every month, four single-reel comedies a week and a two-reel comedy each week or alternating weeks."

Ban on Slapstick

"I want it to be definitely understood," Mr. Bostwick went on to say, "that no comedy even touching on the slapstick will come from our studios. They are all to be parlor comedies and none of the tiresome rough tactics will be resorted to for the creation of humor."

When asked why he was so firm in his stand against slapstick numbers. Mr. Bostwick went on to say that he believed the better class of people more thoroughly enjoyed comedies of laughable situations containing clever light acting than the much employed slapstick methods.

Even at this early date the company has over forty reels on the shelf ready for release. Mr. Bostwick is busily weeding them out and selecting those suitable for release when a medium has been obtained.

Several features are already under preparation. The first is to be "Peaceful Valley," featuring Frederick Burton, who starred in the same production on the stage. Following this will be "Next" and "The Red Petticoat," starring Helen Lowell. Joseph C. Lincoln's story "Cap'n Eri" and "The Return of Eve" are to follow.

PRODUCING PLANT OF THE EASTERN FILM CORPORATION AT PROVIDENCE, R. I. Insert: ELWOOD F. BOSTWICK, GENERAL MANAGER AND DIRECTOR

In continuation, regarding the release of the pictures of the Eastern Film Corporation, Mr. Bostwick said: "In all probability we will place our dramatic features and two-reel comedies with one distributing concern and the one-reel comedies with another. We will not release any drama under feature length. All comedies will be known under the brand name of Pelican."

Dan Mason to Direct

The personnel of the stock company now at work for the Providence organization is composed of a galaxy of prominent stage and motion picture players. Dan Mason, formerly with Edison, will direct and appear in a series of comedies. George Bunny, brother of the late John Bunny, is to be starred in a group of comedies also.

May Abbey is another player from the ranks of the Edison company who is under contract with the concern, while Tom McElvoy, Ford Sterling's old vaudeville partner, is to appear in comedies.

George Lessey, Fred Esmelton, Hamilton Crane, Charles Pitt, Lambert Hillyer and Alan Crolius constitute the major portion of the staff of directors, all of whom are known for their competence on either screen or stage.

In closing Mr. Bostwick referred to the spaciousness and excellent location of the studio. "It is in Providence," he said, "immediately adjoining Roger Williams Park, and at present contains an outdoor stage of 300,000 square feet and interior available floor space of 190,000 square feet. At present we are having an additional 450,000 square feet and more of floor space being erected, which will shortly be finished, giving us a total working floor space of over a million square feet.

"And just a word more," Mr. Bostwick continued, "in order to give you substantial proof of the merit of our comedies, I might say that only a short time ago a prominent theatrical interest conducting a chain of theatres contracted with the Eastern Film Corporation to exhibit five of our one-reel comedies throughout its circuit. That seems to me sufficient guarantee of the merit of our comedies, but all I can say is wait and see for yourself."

PERSONS ENTHUSIASTIC OVER SELIG PRODUCTIONS

Thomas Persons, superintendent of the Selig Polyscope Company's Pacific Coast studios, has returned to Los Angeles to resume his duties after a pleasantly-spent vacation in Chicago and New York City.

Mr. Persons is enthusiastic over the outlook for productions in course of preparation at the Selig Pacific Coast studios.

"Forthcoming Selig picture plays in one, two and three reels will be away above the average," said Mr. Persons.

Second Boatful of Fox Beauties Sail for West Indies

Members of the Annette Kellermann Company Are Expected to Make the Very Mermaids Uneasy with Jealousy When They Begin Swimming in Tropical Waters

THE second installment of the Annette Kellermann picture, which is to be taken in the West Indies for William Fox, sailed away on the "Santa Marta" of the United Fruit Company's line, Wednesday. The first party sailed last week, and included Miss Kellermann, Florence Deshon, Herbert Brenon, the director, all the members of the large cast, the assistants, together with many tons of baggage, cameras, chemicals and equipment.

The first installment reached Kingston, Jamaica, Monday, and a cablegram reached New York from Mr. Brenon stating that everything was all right and everyone well.

The second crowd sailed Wednesday with banners flying and a great crowd at the wharf to see them depart. There were nearly one hundred girls in the party, chosen because of their beauty, their perfect figures and their ability to dive and swim. It was a bevy of beauty such as is rarely seen, and no beauty crowd was ever got together that could hold a candle to them. Past beauty contests faded into oblivion compared with this outfit that William Fox started on its way to the tropics.

There will be a bunch of jealous mermaids plowing the depths of the tropical seas when this company reaches its destination. Already it is said that the residents of Jamaica have heard strange sounds in the sea and have concluded that the jealousy is already raging. With the fair Annette Kellermann, surrounded by such a perfectly lovely outfit as those who are to support her, what chance will an ordinary mermaid have? No more will eons of praise and poetry by reams be sung to the mermaids of the deep. New history will have been established and a new era of mermaidic beauty will have supplanted that of old.

The departing vessel looked for all the world like a kaleidoscope. There were colors of all descriptions, and gowns of the latest and most modish cut, for this was no ordinary set of young women; they were chic and up-to-date. There were blonds with sky-blue eyes and brunettes with eyes of night. There were soft and fluffy girls, and tall and stately ones, and all who looked declared in gasps that Annette Kellermann certainly was "some picker."

Then there were chubby, pink faces stained with tears. Some of the girls laughed and seemed delighted—others looked nervous and frightened and appeared as if they wished they had not been so bold as to win out in this memorable and history-making contest. For were they not going to be away from home and mamma, say for at least six months, and many believe it will be even a longer time before this greatest picture in the world's history is completed.

When one realizes that three quarters of a million dollars (and perhaps more) will be expended in the making of this great feature, one can imagine the time it will take to complete it and stage it properly. Along with the outfit, Mr. Fox sent doctors and nurses and maids. It was an expedition supreme, regal even, in its careful adherence to detail. Nothing was left undone, and many new things were done, hitherto never thought of.

This second expedition was in charge of James McKay, first assistant to Mr. Brenon. Mr. McKay is a young man. He is boyish in his appearance, boyish as to age, but a man of years as to experience.

ROBERT EDESON SIGNS CONTRACT AS EQUITABLE STAR

Robert Edeson, first seen in motion pictures in the Lasky production of "The Call of the North" and "Where the Trail Divides," is another Equitable star, having signed contracts with that concern this week calling for a number of productions.

Mr. Edeson, who is under contract to appear in an important Broadway engagement beginning about September 21, will devote four days a week to work at the Equitable studios.

General Manager Feist, of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, is endeavoring to procure a number of Stewart Edward White's books for adaptation to screen form as Mr. Edeson prefers big, out-of-door themes, is a warm friend of Mr. White's and portrays better than any other type of men the characters described by Mr. White in his virile stories of the north.

"In Back of Beyond," Mr. White's most recent fictional document, appeals strongly to Mr. Edeson, and the Equitable people are making efforts now to procure the picture rights to it.

BEATRICE VAN MAKES INITIAL BOW FOR MUTUAL

Beatrice Van, engaged by President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, as the feminine lead of the newly organized "Beauty" company No. 2, now releasing twice a week on the Mutual's new $8,000,000 program, makes her initial bow to Mutual audiences in "When His Dough Was Cake," released September 11.

This talented young blond beauty of the screen possesses exceptional ability as a film star, and enjoys the distinction of having been selected by so shrewd a judge of screen players as President Hutchinson, from a list of a score or more of well known favorites placed before him.

In following releases screened by the second Beauty company, Miss Van will continue to share honors with John Sheehan and Joseph Steppling, who appear in her support in "When His Dough Was Cake," one of the most laughable comedies ever screened. Steppling will direct the staging of the second Beauty releases as well as play in them.

The Celebrated Holland Animal Trainer,
Formerly with Pathe Freres, of Paris, France

In the mightiest Wild Animal Film Comedy ever presented on the Screen

"Joe Martin Turns 'Em Loose"

Produced at the Famous UNIVERSAL CITY ZOO

WE could no more do justice to the fascination of this picture than we could tell you how far it is from here to there. It is indescribable. It isn't like any picture ever made before. You might call it a "courageous comedy." But it isn't a comedy; it's a convulsion. This picture begins where all other animal pictures leave off.

It is a ludricous mixture of wild animals turned loose on a circus crowd, and hundreds of funny scenes where movie actors and moving wild animals join in a mad chase, scramble and general rough house before a battery of cameras.

YOU will have to have your house safety valve working when you show "Joe Martin Turns 'Em Loose," or the roars of delight and the screams of terror from the movie fans will blow your roof into the next township.

You don't know, when you see this picture, whether to be afraid you're going to see a man or a woman or a howling circus mob torn to pieces by hungry lions, tigers, jaguars, leopards, bears, and wildcats, or to forget the danger (and it's there and it's real), and holler your blamed head off at the fun.

Let your patrons ask you if it's trick photography. Then ask them if they noticed the greatest living animal trainer, Paul Bourgeois, in his ridiculous old maid make up, wrestling on the floor and getting a toe-hold on a man-eating tiger? IT IS NOT TRICK PHOTOGRAPHY!

"JOE MARTIN TURNS 'EM LOOSE" ought to be named "Joe Martin Packs 'Em In" —because—if you will advertise it—use the smashing posters we have prepared for it, you will play to standing room only at every performance. It isn't often that the Universal "turns loose" to boost a two-reeler—You can judge from this advertisement that we think mighty well of "Joe Martin."

SCENARIO WRITING IS A DIFFICULT ART

Photoplay "Building" Cannot Be Taught by Correspondence or by Lessons Under a "Master," Declares J. A. Berst, Vice-President of the Selig Polyscope Company—Originality and Technique Rarely Go Hand in Hand—The More of One the Less of the Other, and Vice Versa

YOU cannot teach the art of photoplay writing by correspondence or lessons," is the assertion of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company. Mr. Berst granted an interview the other day on the subject of photoplay writing just after he had gone through a half hundred manuscripts, all of which were not suitable for Selig production.

Colonel William H. Selig, president of the Selig Company, and his right hand man, Mr. Berst, are authorities on the art of writing photoplays. Both have had years of experience in reading and passing upon the stories of the ambitious writers, and both are justly famed for their unfailing courtesies and for high prices paid those who meet the requirements of the Selig company with unusual ideas.

"The photoplay field was never more fertile for those having originality and appreciating the peculiar requirements of the screen," said Mr. Berst. "However, we find that originality is at a premium. The worthy ideas are few and far between. The talent for plotting does not seem to be general among the so-called free lance writers. That is one reason why the number of successful writers who have the plotting instinct, is so limited.

"Another detail that I have noticed is that few having original ideas know perfect technique, and few with the perfect technique possess original ideas. That is the reason why the larger film manufacturing companies maintain staffs of writers skilled in screen technique who whip the unusual ideas submitted by others into proper form for filming purposes.

Inspiration Is Perspiration

"Inspiration is just another name for perspiration. Many writers tell the editor of their 'inspiration' when it is hard work that counts. A careful study of the character of releases put forth by the various film companies and a careful study of the motion picture as shown on the screen with an eye to the size of the cast, the methods of using sub-titles, their number, how the characters are introduced and how the plot is developed, is worth a great deal more to the would-be author than any 'lessons' on the subject. Experience may be a dear teacher, but it is the best teacher in the art of writing picture plays.

"We find that about one story in a hundred submitted to the Selig Polyscope Company is worthy of purchase. The majority of the free lance writers endeavor to show technique when many of them should submit only the idea in a clear and brief form.

"The Selig Company is willing to pay good prices for photoplays suitable for one, two and three reel productions. Good one reel animal stories are also desired. Every person who attends the motion picture theatres has enjoyed the Selig jungle-zoo wild animal comedies and dramas in one and more reels. And yet it is a fact that few writers cater to our demand for wild animal comedies and dramas, even when it is known that the Selig Company possesses the largest privately owned collection of wild beasts and birds in the world.

"The photoplaywright who combines proper technique together with original ideas of great worth are few indeed. Authors with both technique and originality can perhaps be numbered on the fingers of your two hands. These are the writers who ask for and can command the highest prices.

"It would seem that every other man or woman in the world were trying to write photoplays. Manuscripts arrived daily at all firm company offices—they arrive in bales—and when it is considered the number of markets then it can be conjectured the vast quantities of stories written.

Those who would succeed in photoplay writing must put both time, thought and care into their efforts.

Unfinished Plant Is No Stay to Lubin Picture Making

Although Considerable Is to Be Done on the Studios at Coronado, California, Company Is Going Ahead with "Crossed Wires" and "Retribution," Under Capt. Melville's Supervision

San Diego, Cal., Aug. 30.

ALTHOUGH there is still much to do in the way of putting on the finishing touches at the Lubin plant at Coronado, the company has been busy with two scenarios, the first to be filmed "Crossed Wires," and the second "Retribution." One scene in the latter was taken in the back country where two tons of dynamite were exploded in a gravel quarry. Another scene was taken in front of Grace Episcopal Church, in Coronado, while much of the remainder of the filming has been done on the spacious open stage at the plant.

Capt. Wilbert Melville is general manager, with Henry Kernan directing and D. L. Davis at the camera. Among the members of the company are Helen Eddy, born in New York City some eighteen years ago, who began her theatrical work with the Burbank and Belasco companies in Los Angeles, which city she claims as her home. She has been with the Lubin people for the past six months.

L. C. Shumway, a native of Salt Lake City, leading man, spent about twelve years in the legitimate. He comes of a line of theatrical people, and, as he says, comes by the profession naturally. He was with John Griffiths in "Faust," again with the Princess stock of Vancouver and North Brothers' stock in Oklahoma City. Among some of the well-known films in which he has appeared have been "When the Range Called," "Tap! Tap! Tap!" and "The Power of Prayer." He has been a member of the Lubin company for the past two years and more."

Jay Morley, juvenile leads, was born in Florida about twenty-five years ago, and has been with Lubin for two years. He spent some years with legitimate and vaudeville, and at one time was at the head of the Morley Amusement Company.

Vivian Caples, playing heavies, was with the Kalem Company before joining Lubin some six months ago. She is a native of Texas. Adelaide Brouth is character woman, Ada Gleason will do young leads, Georgie Routh heavies and Melvin Mayo character work.

Julian L. La Mothe and Mrs. Maud Thomas are scenario writers with the company. W. E. Milliken is office manager, and Earl MacMurtrie is stage manager.

Captain Melville's private yacht "Vergana" has arrived here after a voyage of thirty-eight days out from New York, via Charleston, Nassau, Panama Canal and Acapulco, Capt. L. E. Olson in command.

Lubin and Vitagraph to Add 2 Features to V-L-S-E

"The Great Ruby," of the Former Company, a Five Reel Adaptation of the Stage Success, Will Be Released September 10—Latter Concern Offers "Playing Dead"

THROUGH the V-L-S-E, the Lubin and Vitagraph companies announce that beginning with the month of September, they will increase their output of big features on the V-L-S-E program, to two productions each month.

In announcing this new order of release, the Lubin company states that in addition to Marie Dressler in "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," to be released September 20, they will offer the five-reel adaptation of the famous stage success, "The Great Ruby."

This stirring melodrama that enjoyed overwhelming success as a spoken play, will be released on September 10. It is reported to be one of the strongest subjects in point of dramatic quality, and one of the most elaborately-staged picture plays yet seen on the screen.

Featured in the principal roles are Octavia Handworth, Beatrice Morgan and George Soule Spencer, supported by an exceptionally strong cast of Lubin players.

The Vitagraph company, in addition to Robert Edeson in "Mortmain," scheduled for September 6, will present Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a five-part feature, "Playing Dead." This feature will be released on September 20.

"LURE OF THE MASK" PUBLISHED IN MOTION PICTURE EDITION

The four-reel Mutual Master Picture, "The Lure of the Mask," has proved such a distinct success on the screen that the Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis, have published a motion picture edition of this famous story by Harold MacGrath.

The book is illustrated throughout with stills taken from the photoplay. The demand for this book all over the country has been so great that dealers are wiring and writing orders in excess of the earlier expectations of the publishers.

"Screen Drama Equals Grand Opera"—Miss Farrar

Prima Donna, in New York from Lasky West Coast Studio After Posing for "Carmen," Is Convinced of New Art's Standing with Stage

AFTER a flying trip across the continent Geraldine Farrar reached New York from the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, at Hollywood, Cal., where she has been acting before the camera all summer in picturizations of "Carmen," "Maria Rosa" and a new plot based on her own life entitled, "The Temptation." "Carmen" will be the first of these exhibited publicly and will be shown throughout the United States on November 1, released through the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

The prima donna's appearance was in complete contradiction to her statement that she had never worked "so hard" in her life. She had been at the studios of the Lasky Company since the middle of June, and her acting in the several plays in which she appeared demanded, she said, acting as strenuous as a circus performer's. She looked very attractive as she stepped from the ferry at West Twenty-third street, wearing a white travelling costume and a white summer hat trimmed with a big green feather.

"Although I never had any misgivings as to my success as a photoplay actress," said Miss Farrar in an interview with newspaper men who went to Easton, Pa., and made the trip back to New York in her private car, "the results obtained, I am sure everyone in the country will agree with me, were more beautiful than I even had anticipated in my enthusiasm. Frankly, I am satisfied that the new art of the photoplay stands equal in importance with grand opera or the speaking stage.

"The only problem I ever faced in the new venture was in selecting the right studios in which to make the photoplays. Without reservation I wish to say that at the Lasky studios they are doing the best things in the world in photoplays. Well, if you don't believe it, see my pictures when they come out.

"It didn't take me long to learn. Cecil B. DeMille, Director General of the Lasky Company, is a man of wide experience on the legitimate stage. He told me precisely what could be done and I was practically without restrictions of any kind.

"And that is the difference," continued Miss Farrar, "between acting in grand opera and for the photoplays. I always have considered acting in grand opera to be the greater part of work in that profession—greater than singing. This was the opportunity for which I had long awaited—to act as I felt, without the limitation of a vocal role. 'Carmen' in pictures is full of incidents I longed to provide in the operatic version, but was unable to give to that work."

Miss Farrar was asked if she believed her appearance in motion picture theatres would lessen her popularity as an operatic and concert favorite.

"On the contrary," said she, "I will make thousands of new friends through my screen work. In grand opera I sing a season in New York; two weeks in Chicago; a week in Boston and a week in Atlanta. An artiste cannot bear to have her work so limited. In the photoplay I will be seen by millions of persons, whom I never could reach through grand opera, the concert or the talking machine. In addition to the great joy of the new work, I think I have accomplished something notable in art, because my medium that reaches so many hundreds of thousands of persons every week as the photoplay is a wonderful thing to be made a great agency for good work."

V-L-S-E Contracts Elastic for Unlimited Re-runs

If Picture Proves a Hit with His Patrons an Exhibitor May Arrange to Screen It Again Without Being Obliged to Pass It by for Another Feature

"THERE has never been a feature—a strong feature — exhibited long enough to give everybody interested an opportunity to see it. This means that the manufacturers of these strong features have probably lost several hundreds of thousands of dollars, all owing to the faulty methods of booking," says Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E. "The main fault with the booking arrangements, and one that has been overcome in the V-L-S-E, is the system of renting features on cast iron yearly contracts.

"To live up to his contract, an exhibitor cannot re-book and re-run those features that score big hits. He is compelled, after showing a feature that has aroused enthusiasm and engendered a large volume of 'word-of-mouth' advertising, to let it pass on, in order to make a place for the next feature released on the program.

"No feature ever leaves the manufacturer a success; it only becomes one after it has been shown to the public, and has met with an enthusiastic reception. Therefore, the exhibitor may be justly credited with creating the success, and under the yearly contract rule, he finds himself in the unenviable position of being unable to take advantage of the success he creates.

"Five months of practical experience is better than an equal number of years of theorizing on the practicability of a new plan. At the end of the first five months of the existence of the V-L-S-E, we have proved to our entire satisfaction that the system of permitting the exhibitor to book the particular feature he wants, when he wants it, for as long a time as he wants it, without tying him up in a contract that makes it obligatory to take features he does not want, therefore, limiting the run of each feature, is the only correct policy in the booking of feature films.

"Five months ago, our four manufacturers showed they possessed the courage of their convictions by founding the V-L-S-E, the keystone policy of which is the system of open bookings. That their convictions were well founded, is shown by the hearty support received from exhibitors in every section of the country.

"Through the policy of allowing exhibitors to pick and choose their features, and re-run them as long as the public demands, exhibitors may take full advantage of the 'word-of-mouth' advertising created by the exceptional merit of the production.

"Five months ago this was a theory. Today it is a fact, and the business of the V-L-S-E will continue to be conducted along these lines."

Daniel in the Lions' Den Had Nothing on Bonavita

Noted Trainer of Bostock's Animals Shows Usual Iron Nerve in Confronting a Host of Jungle Kings in Scene for Horsley's "Rajah's Sacrifice"

WHEN David Horsley engaged Capt. Jack Bonavita months ago to prepare the Bostock animals for motion picture work he instructed the trainer to use every known artifice to bring out the greatest possibilities in the animals so that the pictures would present in that respect performances that had never before been attained.

That Captain Bonavita implicitly followed out these instructions, without regard to personal danger, is shown in "The Rajah's Sacrifice," a two-reel subject featuring the Bostock animals, and the first of the Centaur Features, which is to be released on the Mutual program.

In this picture the scenario called for the actor playing the Rajah to enter a den of lions, who were to attack and kill him. Captain Bonavita was chosen to play the part, partly because of his acting ability and partly because he was best fitted to handle the lions in such an important scene.

The scene is one of the most intense ever staged. Captain Bonavita enters the lions' den. The animals first crouch into corners, eyes agleam, teeth exposed, and roaring ominously at the intruder. As he advances to the center of the den the lions stealthily surround him. Suddenly one springs forward and with a lurch heavily strikes the Rajah, felling him to the floor.

Despite his daring chances Captain Bonavita is unafraid. His intrepidity is amazing. He is the first and only man to work with as many as twenty-eight lions at one time. At Coney Island some years ago Baltimore, one of the twenty-eight, suddenly becoming ungovernable, attacked him and before he was rescued from the arena his right arm had been torn away.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. SAILOR BALLYHOOS LOCATION OF "REGENERATION" TO SIDEWALK CROWD

A very novel idea for attracting attention is reported from Adrian, Mich.

E. M. Simon of the New Family theatre in that town, secured the services of an Old Tar and placed him in the lobby of the theatre where, in the uniform of a sailor, he pretended to explain the exact location of "The Island of Regeneration."

Part of the lobby display of this Big Four feature, is a map of the mythical island, and the old sailor using the lingo of the sea, attempted to explain to the crowds, just where this wonderful island is situated, attracting wide attention, and proving a most effective ballyhoo.

PROGRAMS GOOD FOR ADMISSION

Manager Woda, of the Orpheum theatre, East Ninth street, opposite Chester avenue, Cleveland, announces that programs are worth 2½ cents apiece. If four programs, bearing different numbers, are presented they are good for one ten-cent admission. The numbers on the program are changed each week. Mr. Woda says more astonishing announcements will be made in the near future. He announces also that in addition to the special feature shown at the Orpheum each day, a drama and comedy reel will be shown. The program, which covers the entire week's bill, has this naive comment, "Coming events that cast sunshine, not shadows, before."

"FANTASIA" IS LATEST BILL

When W. Fred Bossner, manager of the Park Theatre in Boston, dressed his ushers and his orchestra in white trousers and white sport shirts as a summer novelty, his patrons congratulated him on his enterprise. But he was not through. Now he has introduced something unique in motion-picture houses, an illustrated descriptive fantasia in which the work of Charles Frank's competent orchestra and stereopticon views are cleverly combined.

A description of one of these fantasias, with which the bill at the Park is opened for one week every month, will be of interest to all those striving for better musical features in connection with the motion picture.

For instance, recently the title of the fantasia was "Through the Panama Canal." From the title it will be seen that the music is combined with news pictures and is descriptive of them. The synopsis of this fantasia was as follows:

Departure, on the Atlantic Ocean, off Colon, then in the Caribbean Sea; meeting of the battleships, introd[illegible] trumpet calls; assembly and full-dress aboard the ships; passing the eastern fort and entering the canal; the President's March is here played, while a picture of the President is shown on the screen; in the Panama Canal; passing Culebra cut and the western fortress; review of battleships of the nations, showing pictures of ships representing the United States, England, France, Germany, Italy; at Panama and in the Pacific Ocean.

Such fantasias are proving popular among the Park patrons. It is also noticeable that the Paramount Travel series has a strong hold on the ever-increasing attendance at this theatre.

KIDDIES HAVE CHANCE TO GET A "REAL LIVE PONY"

C. J. Robinson, proprietor and manager of the Home theatre at Blair, Neb., has been creating excitement among the children lately by giving away a pony. Tickets are sold, carrying a vote and a chance. The one getting the most votes and the one getting the lucky ticket win a pony.

Every kiddie in town is confidently expecting to get a pony. "I've heard of people giving away automobiles until that is tiresome," said Robinson. "Here's something that does even better with the youngsters and doesn't cost as much."

NOONDAY LUNCHES FOR HUNGRY FANS

Noonday luncheons are the latest novelty introduced by Manager Michaels of the Academy theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., which are given patrons as they pass in the door. The luncheons are included in the price of admission. Mr. Michaels has also started a fly-swatting campaign, offering free admissions to all who will bring 500 flies to the theatre. He is working in conjunction with the local health department and the Buffalo "News."

CHILDREN'S MATINEES POPULAR IN PHILADELPHIA

The children's matinees at the Stanley, Philadelphia, have proved an unqualified success. Such plays as "Cinderella," "Rip Van Winkle," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Fantasma," and others of like calibre, have formed the main attractions.

The regular performances of the Stanley have made record breaking history in photo play houses during a summer season.

SEVEN ICE CREAM FREEZERS COOL FILM FANS

The Grand theatre, Bellefontaine, Ohio, has been having a baby contest. One night seven freezers of ice cream were distributed, while twenty Bellefontaine merchants contributed a prize apiece, so that twenty holders of tickets were repaid for their attendance. Prices were not raised, and Bellefontaine film fans have been swarming into the theatre.

LOBBY IN STRAND THEATRE, ATLANTA, GA., PLAYING FOX FEATURES EXCLUSIVELY

EXCHANGES ARE DRAWN TO PLEASANT STREET SECTION IN BOSTON

WHILE the plan for a central exchange building in Boston is under official inspection, attention is now being called sharply to the fact that those motion picture interests which are now located in other sections of the city are beginning to draw nearer the Pleasant street section, where the majority of the film men have their swivel chairs and boxes of cigars for prospective contract signers.

And this tendency is noted despite the fact that the Pleasant street section is as unpleasant a place to get to as any about Boston. It's not exactly built on the cow-path style which has helped to make Boston famous, but to get to it the exhibitor must travel a circuitous route that no self-respecting cow would attempt. From nearly every section of the city a trip to this motion picture district either requires transferring on the trolleys or walking across gaps in the route on the feet.

At present there are three bits of news regarding the film mecca of the Hub and its enlargement: First of all, the Kleine-Edison people have found a nice nest next to Harry Campbell's Fox retreat on Piedmont street, which is a tributary of Pleasant. At No. 14 the new picture combination after September 1 (at least that is the date when it is hoped the offices will be ready) will transfer its headquarters from 597 Washington street, the present Kleine offices.

The Universal New England exchange is also concerned in the immigration news. Contrary to the plans they announced through the "News" some time ago, they have now decided to move into a two-story garage they have acquired on the corner of Church and Piedmont streets, just opposite the site where Balsdon of the Big Four exhibits his advertising cut-outs and pennants to the admiring visitor.

The building has glass fronts up to the roof. Alterations are now in progress and the company expects to leave its Boylston street home, where it has been located for two years, about the first of December.

The company has a lease on the present quarters which still has three years to run, but the change is imperative now, because more room is needed for the business.

The new home will give 10,000 feet of floor space; the present one gives 4,000. There will be twenty fireproof vaults. The exchange was first located in Boston at 228 Tremont street.

J. A. Eslow, manager, speaks enthusiastically of the present business conditions in regard to Universal in New England and of the outlook for the future. He is particularly pleased with the reception given to "The Diamond from the Sky." He says it is being shown in 125 houses, adding, "And I'm not kidding you; that's a fact. The serial picture has not yet burned out in New England."

R. D. Marson, of the Kleine attractions office, however, got ahead of both the Kleine-Edison and Universal interests, and is already housed in neat offices at 129 and 131 Pleasant street, under the rooms occupied by the Motion Picture Operators' Union. Here, with T. A. Fuller as his manager, Mr. Marson sells motion picture apparatus. Already the concern has disposed of several of the new 6-B Powers projection machines.

Two of these went to the Washington street Olympia in Boston, two to Haverhill and four to Webster. Mr. Fuller has been in the business for a long time. He has been in the Keith service, getting as far away from New York as New Jersey.

TWO DOLLAR HOUSE FOR CLEVELAND?

Representatives of the Triangle Film Company, who are credited with the intention of a downtown theatre for $2 motion picture plays, have visited Cleveland. It is reported that the Triangle Film Company is arranging to open an office in Cleveland for the exclusive booking of their films.

SEPTEMBER SEES IMPORTANT CHANGES IN CRESCENT CITY TERRITORY

Not only are exchanges in New Orleans healthy and active at the present writing, but September saw a number of important changes in a few of them—changes which show that this Southern territory is going right to the fore. A canvass of the principal exchanges operating in the Crescent City reveals the fact that at all of them extra forces are working; dull times and "war" talk is conspicuous by its absence.

The newest comer in the field, the Kleine-Edison Company, have opened an office here, through the recent visit of B. F. Simpson and Howard Gale. It is stated that the former will be manager, and the probable location will be the Nola building, 411 Carondelet street, in the same building with Karl Bugbee, Southern Metro Picture Corporation manager, and A. Jules Benedic, correspondent for Motion Picture News.

Mr. Bugbee only recently returned from a trip through Northern Louisiana, where he states he was successful in planting Metro features. He says the exhibitors in that territory are active in picking up anything that looks live.

N. P. Eberley, cashier for the New Orleans office of the Mutual Film Corporation, 340 Carondelet, has been appointed manager, effective late in August, succeeding J. C. Butner, who was transferred to Boston. One of Mr. Eberley's first announcements, an interesting one, is that the Mutual will move about October 1 to 816 Perdido street, where it will have two whole floors.

The General Film Company has completed the task of removing all their belongings to their new three-story building, at Baronne and Perdido streets, which has been labelled one of the largest and finest exchange headquarters South. Every inch of the new building was prepared especially with the needs of a film exchange in mind.

The Peerless Feature Film Company, recently formed by Paul L. Ford and Elmer Smith, is reporting good business on "The Escape" and "The Avenging Conscience." Mr. Ford says that these films, which are only a forerunner of a number of others to follow, are booking fast.

The United Program Film Service of Louisiana, at 834 Common street, is holding its own, its management reports.

Maurice F. Barr, manager of the World Film Corporation, says that at no time in the New Orleans' exchange history has its business been up to the notch it is at present.

Much the same kind of report was obtained at the Pathe Exchange. Here Raoul Junet, who has been only a short time with the company, is to become manager about September 1. Mr. Junet formerly was with the New York and Chicago offices of Pathe. S. B. Sampson, the present manager, will be transferred to a Northern office of Pathe.

The Pathe Exchange also has the "moving" spirit. They are moving to 836 Common street, directly above World Film offices. The advantages of this new location lie in the fact that it is in "exchange row," and nearer the center of the city.

ROTH IN BOSTON MUTUAL OFFICE

Joe Roth, formerly with the Paramount and also formerly manager of the Park theatre in Boston, is now handling Mutual Masterpieces, taking the place of George Hickey, who has left the Boston office of the Mutual to take charge of the Triangle offices in Buffalo, N. Y.

TOBIAS IS BACK WITH MUTUAL FOR WESTERN BRANCH

Fourteen bookings on "The Diamond from the Sky," the American's picturized novel, is the record for the week made by Maurice F. Tobias, who has just returned to the managership of the Mutual Film Corporation's Western film branch, formerly known as The Western Exchange.

Mr. Tobias has had a highly interesting career, and an eventful one. He was born in New York in 1876 and was reared in

MAURICE F. TOBIAS

Milwaukee, Wis. He attended the University of Wisconsin. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American war he enlisted and served until peace was declared. Returning to the states he went into the building trade and superintended the construction of several large structures.

In 1907 he entered the employ of the William Fox enterprises. Next he went to George Kleine, going thence to the Actograph branch of the General Film Company. When J. C. Graham, now assistant to the president of the Mutual, took charge of The Western Film Exchange, Mr. Tobias was engaged to cover the up-state territory, and in view of his record was given the task of opening the Boston office of the Mutual Film Corporation.

As a reward for his efforts there he was made manager of The Western Film Exchange, remaining there almost two years. Then he became district manager of Warner's Features, Inc., and W. L. Sherry, knowing Mr. Tobias as a business getter induced him to exploit Famous Players in New York state.

"MOVIE CLUB" IS FORMED IN KANSAS CITY

The employes of the different exchanges in Kansas City have formed the Movie Club.

The objects of the organization as set forth by the officers are to co-operate with the exchanges for the betterment of the business, and above all to give the exhibitors and the customers of the exchanges, for which they work, the best service that it is possible to obtain.

Two meetings have been held. Twenty-six members are in as charter members, and it is expected that before the next meeting, which will be held the early part of September, fifty members will have joined.

The following officers have been elected: L. B. Douglas, Mutual Film Corporation, president; W. C. Potter, Universal Film and Supply Company, vice-president; J. D. Thatcher, Picture Playhouse Film Company, secretary, and W. G. Parsons, World Film Corporation, treasurer.

RESIGNATIONS AND CHANGES IN ST. LOUIS OFFICES

M. J. Dunn, cashier of the Pathé exchange at 3210 Locust street, St. Louis, is acting as manager since A. S. Abeles, who was in charge of the exchange, was recalled to the home office in New York on August 21. Mr. Dunn reports good advance bookings on the Gold Rooster films throughout the territory supplied by the St. Louis office. H. P. Wolfberg has been appointed manager of the General Film Exchange at 3610 Olive street, St. Louis, upon the resignation of Frank Tabler.

I. Leon Klasky, formerly connected with the Fox Film Corporation and later with the Pathé offices in St. Louis as traveling representative, has been assigned as manager of the World Film offices in Chicago. Mr. Klasky leaves many friends in motion picture circles in St. Louis.

Alfred Buck, manager of the Picture Playhouse Corporation, 3415 Olive street, St. Louis, turned in his resignation on August 25, and was succeeded by Simon Libros, second assistant general manager, who will remain in temporary charge until a permanent head of the local office is appointed. Mr. Libros comes to St. Louis from the Kansas territory, and expresses himself emphatically on the censorship question. He says the danger is growing, and unless the manufacturers take decisive action there will eventually be censors in every state, city and county.

PROMOTIONS IN LAEMMLE OMAHA OFFICES

A. J. JACKSON, formerly bookkeeper of the Laemmle Film Service at Omaha, Neb., has been promoted to the office of auditor and general correspondent.

MILLER SUCCEEDS BANDY IN MUTUAL, INDIANAPOLIS

M. M. Miller, who has been assistant manager of the Indianapolis office of the Mutual Film Corporation for the last three years, has been appointed manager, succeeding H. A. Bandy, who has been appointed manager of the Ohio and Michigan district of the Triangle Film Corporation, with headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Bandy has been manager of the Indianapolis Mutual office for about a year and a half, coming from Baltimore to Indianapolis.

Mr. Miller announced that Norman Dixon, who had charged of "Neptune's Daughter" in Indiana, and Arthur T. Smith, formerly with the General Film Company at New York, have been appointed traveling representatives for the Mutual in Indiana and Kentucky, with headquarters at the Indianapolis office.

REMY TO MANAGE TRIANGLE OFFICE AT DALLAS

Plans were completed last week for the opening of an office at Dallas, Texas, by the Triangle Film Corporation, with L. B. Remy as local manager. Triangle films will be distributed in Dallas territory on and after September 15. Mr. Remy has just returned from New York, where the plans for the new moving picture combination were formulated.

JUDELL GOES TO CHICAGO

B. N. Judell, formerly manager of the Mutual Film Corporation Exchange in Minneapolis, has been transferred to Chicago to manage their exchange at 5 South Wabash avenue. The transfer was the result of Ralph Bradford's resignation, which he tendered in order to take charge of the Triangle Film Exchange in Minneapolis.

GOES TO BIG ATTRACTION FILMS

H. S. Mandelbaum, formerly connected with the World Film Corporation, has become manager of the Big Attraction Film Company, with offices in the Columbia building, Cleveland.

GOLDEN GATE EXCHANGE ADDS STANDARD PROGRAM

The Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., Sol L. Lesser, president, will handle the Standard program in the San Francisco territory, commencing early in September. This firm already handles the Metro productions, the Edison-Kleine releases, besides a great number of feature productions, such as "Cabiria," "The Clansman," "The Christian" and "The Spoilers," and has an efficient organization ready to place the Standard program on a good footing from the beginning.

M. Calmy, for some time Denver manager for the Golden Gate Film Exchange, and for the past year connected with the local office as booker and special representative, has taken over the Western rights to "The Mix-Up" and has already made a large number of bookings. It is probable that later on he will secure other feature films.

Morris L. Markowitz, manager of the California Film Exchange, Inc., is on a trip to Denver, Colo., where he is to meet officials of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for a business conference. He will be absent from the San Francisco office for about two weeks.

EMMICK RESIGNS AS MANAGER OF LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE

E. H. Emmick, who for the past three years has been manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Golden Gate Film Exchange and All-Star Feature Distributors, this week resigned his position. E. D. Tate, who has been affiliated with the Sol L. Lesser interest for the past four years, the greater portion of the time being spent in charge of the exchange at Seattle, Wash., has been selected to succeed Mr. Emmick, and arrived here this week. Mr. Emmick has been in the film exchange business in Los Angeles for the past seven years, and is one of the best known men in California and adjoining states. He has been very successful for the exchange and has a host of friends among the exhibitors and exchangemen and is president of the Los Angeles Film Exchange Men's Board of Trade.

TRIANGLE TO OPEN EXCHANGE AT SAN FRANCISCO

M. C. Simmons, who represents the Triangle Film Corporation, has been in San Francisco for the past week looking for suitable quarters for a film exchange and will probably select a site on Golden Gate avenue, although other locations are also under consideration. It is planned to open this exchange at an early date.

LYTLE APPOINTS TRAVELING MEN

Manager Lytle, of the Indianapolis Pathé Exchange, has announced the appointment of two traveling men who will travel out of the Indianapolis office. O. P. Fauchier, formerly with the United Film Renting Company, will cover southeastern Indiana and A. A. Plough, formerly with the Kriterion Film Exchange, will cover southwestern Indiana.

GROWTH OF TRIANGLE'S BUSINESS IN NEW ENGLAND DEMANDS OFFICE BUILDING

THAT the Pleasant street district of Boston is due to flutter more with the films than ever is true, for the Triangle is going down there to find an office. No decision has yet been made as to the site, although two at least have been considered. One of these is at the corner of Shawmut avenue and Pleasant street, the other is at 123-125 Pleasant street, the lot extending back to 91-93 Carver street. Triangle officials have also inspected one of the two new buildings to be erected at Ferdinand and Isabella streets in the same section.

The Triangle's affairs in Boston are being managed by W. H. Bradley, formerly manager of the Mutual exchange in that city. Talking with the News representative, Mr. Bradley saw nothing but glowing success ahead of the Triangle in New England. He receives constant inquiries regarding the Triangle service and expects to find no trouble whatever in planting the films of the Big Three in that section. At present Mr. Bradley has an office in the Kimball building. Because of the stringent rules for fire prevention, he is unable to carry films on hand at that office, and until the Triangle locates permanently he will make his distribution through New England from New York.

So far the Triangle has not secured a theatre in Boston. They took one look at the Boston Opera house and passed it up; the house is too much out of the way and too big. They also considered for awhile the old Cort theatre, now the Park Square, under the Selwyn management. But that house they also considered in a bad location for their purposes. What the Triangle would like to get is the Tremont, where "The Birth of a Nation" made a big place for Mr. Griffith in the minds of the Boston playgoing public by scoring the longest run of any theatrical attraction which ever was on the Boston stage. The Colonial, too, is considered as a desirable house for the Triangle. The only unengaged theatre in the city is the National on Columbus avenue, and this is not in the sort of district which would coincide with the high-class Triangle product.

Mr. Bradley is widely known in the trade in this section, having made a good name for himself with the Mutual, coming to this city two years ago last June. Previous to that time he was connected with the Mutual office in Washington, D. C. He entered the picture game in 1906 with Miles Brothers, of New York. Then he opened the first independent buying exchange in Washington.

"NEAL OF THE NAVY" ALREADY BOOKED BY HALF OF PHILADELPHIA'S LARGEST HOUSES

G. H. ATWOOD, manager of the Pathé office, Philadelphia, has just returned from a stay of three weeks at Lake Maranacook, Maine. Mr. Atwood reports a tremendous volume of business on the new Pathé serial, "Neal of the Navy." Already fifty per cent. of the largest city houses are booked on this feature. All Pathé features are showing a boom in this market, especially since the new twenty-four sheet stands have been posted all around town. Exhibitors appreciate this advertising help from the local exchange. Thirty of these large, artistic posters for "Neal of the Navy" have been placed on the billboards in close proximity to the best picture theatres, and there they will remain one month, so that he who runs may read.

The Metro office says they have really had no dull season, even through old Sol's most fervent rays. The Francis Bushman releases are immensely popular, notably "The Second in Command."

The Chadlee Supply Company having added the handling of films to its other activities has become the Chadlee Film and Supply Company, and will soon seek larger quarters. This firm, composed of L. S. Palotou and D. Starkman have three salesmen handling their releases, which comprise such photo plays as "After the Ball," "The House of Bondage" and "Time Lock Seven-Seventy-Six." The Chadlee control the territory of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, on the above features.

The Eastern Booking Offices, Eugene Marcus, president, has secured the Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern Jersey rights to the Cort production, "The Melting Pot." It is now definitely known that the new Arcadia theatre, which was recently opened will give the first showing of this production in Philadelphia.

KLEIN NEW SOUTHERN DIVISION HEAD FOR WORLD AT NEW ORLEANS

Joseph E. Klein, of the Chicago branch of World Film Corporation, is the new Southern Division manager for World. He arrived in New Orleans August 25, and at once assumed the duties of his new office. He will make his headquarters jointly with Maurice F. Barr, manager of the New Orleans branch, 834 Common street.

Mr. Klein takes the place of E. Auger, who left the service of World a few weeks ago.

METRO OPENS OFFICE IN DES MOINES

Metro opened another office this week at 920 Walnut street, Des Moines, Iowa. J. S. Skirboll, general manager for the Middle West for Metro, formally opened it for business on Thursday, August 26, with Cressnon E. Smith in charge as manager.

The new office will carry the entire list of Metro feature releases and will supply the territory included in Iowa and Nebraska.

FILM NEWS FROM FOREIGN PARTS

Paris, Aug. 23.

THAT American film manufacturers are overlooking a golden harvest in Europe is a fact made evident to me by a trip I recently took through the South of France, Italy and Switzerland. Traveling abroad just now is most difficult, I was told, but one has to go through it to believe it. Anxious to see for myself how this war has affected the film trade in Italy and Switzerland I decided to take a trip through these countries, but I soon found that traveling now was as easy as taking a trip to the moon.

Going to Italy by the south of France route I stopped at Marseilles and found that this French city looks much more Indian than French. Thousands of Indian soldiers can be seen working in the streets. As most of the Frenchmen have gone to the front, this place looks anything but French. The kinemas are doing very well, there are more than fifty, some of them very large ones, like the Palais de Crystal with a seating capacity of over 3,000.

Few American Films Shown

I have had a chat with one of the largest film renters and inquired of him why so very few English and American films are to be seen at the kinemas in big cities like Marseilles, Bordeaux, Lyons and Nice, all of them having so many kinema theatres. He explained that no English or American film producers are directly represented in the south of France and that no firm is willing to send their show copies unless they buy them before seeing them, and as this is quite impossible for them to do they get a very few of them sent from Paris. At Nice I got aboard a direct train to Genoa and was told that it would take me six hours to get there, but as one has to spend two or three hours at the French frontier before you get the permission to pass and as many again at the Italian one before you are granted a permission to go into Italy it took me more than fourteen hours to get to Genoa.

Genoa is certainly one of the liveliest cities in Italy and what is more all the town looks like one big kinema theatre. In one street—the Via XX Septembre—which is about a mile in length, there are more than thirty kinemas or real palaces. I say palaces, as indeed they are most elaborate palaces. Their anterooms are certainly nicer and more comfortable than a good many of our Parisian theatres. I have been to a good many of them and here, too, I found no others but French and Italian films. I just saw one American Kay Bee.

It is absolutely impossible to note any signs of war in Genoa. The people of Genoa don't seem to know it is in existence. They have two things to attend to—business and amusements. All the kinemas are giving shows from morning until midnight, and they are always crowded.

From there I went on to Milan, the real business capital of Italy. The film business of this city is all in the hands of Mr. Delgrosso, who also manages the Italian Eclair Company and Mr. Corti and Mr. Bravelli. The Trans-Atlantic Film Company is represented in this town by an Italian lady.

Need American Films Badly Now

Mr. Corti received me most cordially, when I again asked why there are so very few American films to be seen in Italy. He gave me the reason as follows: "It is a very great pity that the American producers, who can do such great things, seldom try to please our taste. We don't understand most of their society dramas and very seldom laugh at their comics."

He also complained of not being able to get any sample copies unless he buys them. A very unwise policy, as many hundreds of films could be sold but for this difficulty.

"Now, as we are not going to buy nor show any more German films," Mr. Corti went on, "we shall certainly want a great many more American films, but American producers ought to send over reliable people to study what we want over here. They also ought to open agencies in Italy where the film trade is enormous and a big business could be done."

They also complain of never getting any English nor American trade journals. Business in this city is most satisfactory. Milan has some of the finest kinema theaters I have seen, as, for instance, the Diana Palace with a capacity of many thousand people. It is surrounded by a beautiful garden, restaurant, cafe and even a casino where people lose their money. The Cinema Centrale and Italia are certainly the finest of their kind.

War Pictures at Lucerne

From there I went to Switzerland. At Lucerne I looked in at the Apollo and here for the first time I witnessed a big battle between the English and the great Kaiser's Fleets. Of course, most of the English men of war are sent to the bottom of the sea. This great film bears the mark of the Deutsche Bioscope Gesellschaft in Berlin. I was therefore not surprised, but another one edited by the Svensk Biographen Company shows two French towns, Nancy and Verdun, occupied by the Germans. Such films are exhibited in a neutral country like Switzerland to audiences consisting of English, French, American and German visitors. Here is another country where American films are greatly appreciated, but very seldom to be seen. Why is no agency to be found anywhere?

I am informed that two of the greatest film producing companies in Germany and Denmark have joined hands, that the German firm is sending actors and actresses to Denmark with the object of producing films in that country, and such films may be a feature of the next season in London, Paris and Rome.

The Chatelet, one of the biggest theatres in Paris, has now gone in for pictures. Three shows daily are given and the manager seems to be satisfied with the results obtained the first week.

Madame Sarah Bernhardt has made her first appearance on a public stage since the amputation of her leg. The theatre at Bordeaux was crowded from top to bottom, and our great tragedienne had a most enthusiastic reception. Despite her long experience she showed some pardonable nervousness. She is now in Paris and will soon start filming Jane Dore for the Universal in New York.

The War As It Affects Trade Feeling

The proprietor of our Italian contemporary, "Film," published in Naples, is offering one hundred francs to every operator in his country who will refuse to turn a German film should the manager intend to show any.

It was evident something happened which disturbed our renters last Monday and Tuesday at the general projection rooms of the trade. I saw many of our renters engaged in hot discussion of great interest. After some difficulty I learned that they objected to the choice an American film company in Paris has just made in appointing a new agent. "We don't want any Austro-Boche, naturalized or not," is what I heard from many of them.

I have had an opportunity to see a good film which is to be released soon. It is a very good adaptation of Montmartre, a piece which made a very big success at the Vaudeville Theatre during many months.

BANNING OF "HYPOCRITES" IN ENGLAND A SENSATION

London, Aug. 23.

THE Essanay Film Company has intimated to its British patrons that they are now devoting their energies to the production of long and important films, featuring famous players in stories by leading authors, which will make it necessary for them to change their policy. They state that it will be impossible to place these films on open market, nor will the short films which they will continue to issue be sufficient in number for open market release. In future, therefore, the whole of their films will be released for exhibitors direct. Developments are being watched with interest.

SCENES FROM "THE MONEY MASTER," FEATURING FRANK SHERIDAN, COMING KLEINE-EDISON OFFERING

PAUL McALLISTER AND FANIA MARINOFF ALSO HAVE IMPORTANT PARTS IN THIS MULTIPLE REEL PRODUCTION

Something like a sensation has been caused by banning by the British Board of Film Censors, of the Bosworth film "Hypocrites." The ground on which the censor exercised his prerogative is said to be because a nude figure was shown in course of the play. It seems a great pity that a film possessing so many qualities and matter of pictorial excellence and technique, and costing such a large sum to produce, should not see the light of day. Generally speaking, censorship in England is on a most unsatisfactory basis. Not being under official auspices, local authorities do not generally accept censors' certificates as an indication that the film is in every respect desirable.

Aggravating situations very frequently arise and the sooner that censorship receives official recognition the better.

E. T. Davis, of the Western Import Company, has just returned from America after a six weeks' absence. He has brought back with him the film "The Birth of a Nation."

Recent British Productions

Among the leading British productions of the week are: "Strategy" (B. and C., 2,330 feet).—The story deals with the exploitations of an organized band of thieves and how they achieve a big jewel robbery. The sensational tone of the story is enhanced by good mechanical effects.

"The Silence of Dean Maitland."—This three reel drama is produced by the Fraser company of Australia. Emotional in tone and strong in incident this well-known film adaptation will probably rank among the first quality dramas.

"Pimple Comedies" (Neptune Company).—Pimple's burlesque of "The Still Alarm" (700 feet)—one of Fred Evans' best. "Mademoiselle Pimple" (720 feet)—Side-splitting adventures in the achievement of success as an actor. "Pimple, the Boy Scout" (740 feet)—An irresistible comedy dealing with the vicissitudes of a vigilant and enthusiastic boy scout.

UNDER COMPENSATION LAW

In a ruling by the State Industrial Commission on August 21 it was held that the regular employees of moving picture shows, vaudeville and other theatres come within the provisions of the new workmen's compensation law, which becomes effective September 1.

Equitable to Drive Salary Buzzards from "Extras"

Company Plans Employment Agency for Relief of Supernumeraries, Victims of These Birds of Prey in Extortionate "Commissions," Ranging from 50 to 75 Per Cent

EVEN at its best the life of the average "extra" man or woman, depending for livelihood on the crumbs which fall from the studio table, cannot be said to be particularly joyous, but their life is going to be a happier one if the plans outlined by Arthur H. Speigel and Isidore Bernstein, of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, mature, as outlined at a meeting of that concern held last Monday at their offices, 126 West 46th street.

By reason of close investigation Mr. Bernstein discovered that of the three dollars paid the average extra worker at the Flushing studio, rarely, if ever, do the extras retain more than one-half, and many times they were fortunate if they got over one-third of their earnings when the irresponsible agent got through with them.

It has been definitely discovered that numerous agents supplying extra help of all kinds to the various studios in and about New York have been making it a practice to extort from the extra people from fifty to seventy-five per cent. of their earnings and to frighten the extras into paying this percentage of their earnings under threat of no more work.

At a meeting held at the Equitable offices last Monday, at which the entire directorate and staff and heads of the departments were present, it was decided to open a central employment agency under the direct control of the Equitable corporation for the engaging of all extras and supernumeraries used by the five producing companies now working under Equitable control.

The office is to be under the charge of a responsible dramatic agent on a salary basis and to pay net, without deducting any commissions, the same figures to which extras are accustomed and which are standard today throughout the industry.

Directing General Isidore Bernstein of the Equitable corporation submitted affidavits from Elizabeth Howard, Edna Mertens, Milton Stockbridge, Ethel Schmid and George Rothman, wherein they accused a well-known supplier of extra help of having extorted from them more than fifty per cent. of their daily earnings.

The New York "Times" editorialized Monday on the step of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, while the New York "Call" and the National Board of Censorship have written President Speigel signifying their intentions to work in co-operation with the Equitable's agency.

The crusade against these extortionists will be taken up from a legal standpoint, as the attorneys for the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation are now in touch with the commissioner of licenses, and such agents as exact more than the legal fee of five per cent. will be prosecuted.

Invitations have been sent out by General Manager Feist to the heads of all big concerns with studios in and about New York requesting that they be present at the next meeting, and if possible arrange a general employment agency to be contributed to by the various producing concerns for the benefit of the extra help.

Arthur H. Speigel has been elected permanent chairman. J. W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship and represenative of the new Board of Trade, will be installed as permanent secretary.

The Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation will donate the use of several offices for the enterprise.

RICHARD GARRICK JOINS GAUMONT FORCES

The Gaumont Company, now releasing exclusively through the Mutual Film Corporation, recently announced that they had secured the services of Richard Garrick, whose name has long been connected with some of the most important manufacturing companies in the country.

Mr. Garrick has been placed in charge of the second Rialto Star Feature Company organized by the Gaumont Company, and is now engaged in the producing of "The House with Nobody in It."

This is a three-reel drama with an all-star cast for release in the regular Mutual program of September 22.

Mr. Garrick comes to the Gaumont Company direct from the Humanology Company, where he was engaged in the producing of the Ella Wheeler Wilcox series of dramas. Garrick earned a flattering record while with the Balboa, Selig and Universal companies.

"The House with Nobody in It" is the first of the dramas to be produced by the second Rialto Company.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

CHARLOTTE WALKER IN DRAMA OF LOST IDENTITY, BLANCHE SWEET AS FEMININE JEKYL AND HYDE

Blanche Sweet, the idol of motion picture theatregoers, is to appear in a dual role in her next Paramount production, in the Lasky release on September 13, of the famous Edward Locke drama, "The Case of Becky," one of David Belasco's greatest dramatic productions. In this photodrama Blanche Sweet is a feminine Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde. As the sweet, pretty girl, Dorothy, she is loved by everyone and makes many friends, but when her other self appears, as Becky, she is a mean, disagreeable creature.

Dorothy, a sweet, refined, pretty girl, has been brought up to appear in public with Balzamo, a hypnotist, who claims to be her guardian and who finds in Dorothy a wonderful medium for the display of his power. By constantly subjecting her to the hypnotic influences he has weakened Dorothy's will power and the dual personality which lurks in every one has become so strong that it insists upon manifesting itself to the world as another personage in the bodily form of Dorothy. This person calls itself Becky and is fully cognizant of Dorothy, whom she hates, whereas Dorothy is not so truly aware of Becky—she does not remember all that Becky has said and done. Becky runs away from Balzamo and has many experiences earning her living. She always obtains a position through the sweetness and amiability of Dorothy and loses it through the ugliness and malice of Becky.

Becky finally visits a sanitarium and there a young doctor who has wonderful hypnotic power falls in love with her. He recognized the dual personality and finally manages to kill the malicious Becky.

Supporting Miss Sweet are the well-known stars, Carlyle Blackwell, Theodore Roberts and James Neill.

Charlotte Walker, the celebrated theatrical star, will make her second appearance in a Paramount picture before the photodramatic audiences in the thrilling drama of lost identity, "Out of Darkness," by Hector Turnbull, on September 9, produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

In "Out of Darkness" Miss Walker is seen as Helen Scott, wealthy young heiress and owner of the famous Scott Canneries. Helen, however, is so interested in society that she leaves the handling of the business affairs of the canneries' various branches to her hard-fisted uncle.

Harvey Brooks, the resident manager of the Tampa, Fla., branch of the canneries, has hundreds of girls in his employ and they are all paid the insignificant sum of thirty cents a day for thirteen hours' labor. He has pleaded in vain with Helen Scott and her uncle to do something to better the working conditions. During the height of the social season Helen goes to Palm Beach to attend the yacht races. While sailing her sloop, one foggy night it is run down and sunk by a large fruit schooner belonging to the Scott Cannery Company. She is picked out of the water with a badly cut head and is carried to Tampa by the captain of the schooner.

When Helen recovers consciousness she is unable to remember any of the past incidents of her life and the wife of the schooner captain with the assistance of the daughter secure work for Helen in the cannery. The wealthy heiress falls in love with young Brooks and he is in love with her. She breaks down his hatred of the former Helen Scott and helps him to better the labor conditions.

In the cast supporting Miss Walker are such well-known artists as Thomas Meighan, remembered for his splendid work in "Kindling" and "The Fighting Hope," clever Marjorie Daw and other members of the Lasky all-star stock company.

PATHE TO FILM NATION'S HISTORIC PLACES

Pathé is to cover the United States from coast to coast for a series to be called "Seeing America First." Miss Helen Greene, a young lady who has figured in the society columns of the metropolitan newspapers, has been engaged as "Polly Pathé," and she will be chaperoned on her long tour by Frances Fisher Byers, a newspaper woman of long experience, who will attend to local publicity while on the tour.

All places of real historic and scenic interest in each state in the union will be visited by these ladies, together with a Pathé cameraman, who will film the best of everything. It is estimated that the itinerary will cover some 40,000 miles and methods of transportation will include railroad trains, trolley cars, automobiles, muleback, carriages, sailing vessels and steamboats. The trip will require some six to eight months for completion.

Arrangements have been made in practically every state whereby the most prominent citizens, from the Governor down through Mayors and City Chambers of Commerce to local school boards, will welcome "Polly Pathé" and grant every assistance.

AUGUST TO PRODUCE "THE CITY"

"The City," the well-known drama which is to be produced as a motion picture by Edwin August for the F. Ray Comstock Photoplays Company, will be cast this week. Mr. August has made the statement that he prefers to handle motion picture stars rather than players from the legitimate stage in the pictures which he will produce for the Comstock Company, and that he will choose an all star cast of well-known screen favorites for "The City."

Mr. August will be at the Kinemacolor offices at 1600 Broadway this week, and asks that motion picture stars who would like to try for the picture see him there. "The City" will be released through the World Film.

OTIS HARLAN WILL BE SEEN IN HOYT COMEDY

The filming of Hoyt's "A Stranger in New York" has nearly been completed at the Chicago studio of the Selig company. T. N. Heffron is the producer in charge, and Otis Harlan, well-known American comedian, will make his second bow in motion pictures in this Hoyt comedy. Grace Darmond also figures largely in the fun-making. "A Milk White Flag," one of Hoyt's best plays, will soon be put in production at the Selig studios.

A QUARTET OF SCENES FROM SOME OF THE CURRENT AND COMING UNIVERSAL RELEASES

"A LITTLE BROTHER OF THE RICH" (Broadway Universal Feature, Released September 6)

"MISJUDGED" (Aug. 31)

"AGNES KEMPLER'S SACRIFICE" (Sept. 12)

GAUMONT WILL PRODUCE COMIC CARTOON SERIES

Gaumont Company's cameramen throughout the United States are busy photographing the beauty spots and interesting parts of the country for their travel series to be known as "Seeing America First." This interesting and instructive series will be released as a split reel, the other subject to be the famous newspaper comic cartoon series entitled "Keeping Up with the Joneses" by the well-known cartoonist, Arthur R. Momand, who signs his sketches under the name of "Pop." This series is now running in the New York Globe and more than 150 of the best known dailies in the United States and Canada.

These cartoons will be animated for screen production by Harry Palmer, who originated "The Babbling Bess Series" for the New York World and many other famous comic cartoons for papers throughout the United States.

This split reel series will be released every week on the Mutual regular program, beginning Monday, September 13, and thereafter on every Tuesday.

MOREY CAST FOR "MAKING OF GEOFFRY MANNING"

Harry Morey, one of the leading players in the Vitagraph Stock Company, known both to the exhibitor and public for his work in such successes as "A Million Bid," "The Wreck," "413," "Shadows of the Past," "My Official Wife," "The Price of Folly" and "The Enemies," and numerous other Vitagraph productions, is now working in a very strong dramatic picturization entitled "The Making Over of Geoffry Manning," in which he plays the title role.

The picture will be in four parts and is being produced under the direction of Harry Davenport. This feature will be known as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature.

NINTH "LONESOME LUKE" SUBJECT NEARS COMPLETION

The Rolin Film Company, producing one-reel comedies for Pathé, are now completing the ninth subject of the "Lonesome Luke" series, entitled "His New Occupation." Harold C. Lloyd plays the name part, Gene Marsh the opposite lead, and the direction is by Hal Roach.

BRADY SUCCESS PROVIDES VEHICLE FOR HOLBROOK BLINN

Director Frank H. Crane has started work on his next picture for the World Film Corporation, which will be an adaptation of "The Family Cupboard," the William A. Brady play which was one of the recent dramatic successes. Holbrook Blinn will play the part of Frank Nelson in the stage version of which was created by William Morris. The combination of Frank Crane as director and Holbrook as star, should provide the public with an intensely dramatic and artistic film.

KNICKERBOCKER CHANGES TITLE OF SEPT. 15 RELEASE

Knickerbocker Star Features have changed the title of their September 15 release. Their announcement of Florence Rockwell's appearance in "Her Secret" came simultaneous with an advertisement of George Kleine's announcing another picture with the same title. As the Kleine offering bearing the nearest release date and their posters were already in print, Knickerbocker changed the title of their feature to "The Purple Night."

TRIANGLE TO SUBSTITUTE "THE IRON STRAIN" FOR "THE COWARD" AT KNICKERBOCKER OPENING

DUSTIN FARNUM AND ENID MARKEY IN A SCENE FROM "THE IRON STRAIN" (Triangle)

At the suggestion of Thomas H. Ince, the Triangle Film Corporation has decided to substitute Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain" for Frank Keenan in "The Coward" as one of the features for the Triangle opening at the Knickerbocker theatre, New York, on September 18.

Mr. Ince gives his reasons in a letter from the Western studios:

"'The Iron Strain' is a bigger and more forceful production. It is built about a theme that is distinctive, and rarely, if ever, used before. It also has a very important woman's part. Its Alaskan settings are not to be seen on the stage every day; its primitive caveman type of leading man is unique, and the whole action is swifter and more compelling than 'The Coward.'"

William Furst, the Triangle Musical Director, who formerly directed most of the leading Frohman and Belasco productions, is now on his way back from the Pacific Coast where he personally supervised the music for the first plays of the Triangle season at the Knickerbocker theatre. For the Douglas Fairbanks play of "The Lamb" and the Dustin Farnum play of "The Iron Strain," Mr. Furst has arranged for music as elaborate in character as that which accompanies "The Birth of a Nation." Clever thematic music has been composed by Louis Gottschalk for Keystone comedies.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Los Angeles, Aug. 30.

THE first Lou Tellegen subject, "The Explorer," has been finished by the Lasky company and shipped East, the first of this week's production of "The Red Mirage" was taken up under the direction of George Melford. Dorothy Davenport will play opposite Mr. Tellegen in this production.

The filming of "The Chorus Lady" featuring Cleo Ridgeley, from an adaptation of the comedy of the same name by Margaret Turnbull was begun this week at the Lasky studio. Marjorie Daw, the protege of Geraldine Farrar, will also play a prominent part in this subject.

William C. deMille, of the Lasky scenario department, this week departed for New York for a short vaction.

A new director is to be selected for direction of the fourth Lasky company to take the place of J. P. McGowan, who went to the Universal. No announcement has been received at the Western studio as to who the new director will be.

Jesse L. Lasky is expected at the studio within the next few days, and at this time the complete announcement regarding the new studio will be made. Plans for this new plant are now being prepared by Wilford Bucklin and R. H. Paul.

Making Pictures in Tropical Zone

Making pictures in the tropical zone during the hottest weather now has no terrors for the Quality pictures company engaged in filming "A Corner in Cotton" by Francis X. Bushman, and which features Margaret Snow. The players have just returned from spending a week at Calexico in the Imperial Valley, where they found the temperature almost daily rose to one hundred and twenty-eight degrees. Exterior cotton field scenes were made while on this trip, and this week scenes in the New York Cotton Exchange are being made at the studio. A very elaborate replica of the New York Cotton Exchange has been built on the stage. This is sixty by seventy-two feet and has a practical balcony with offices off of this.

Louie Gottschalk, composer of the music for the fairy tale comic operas "Wizard of Oz," "Tik Tok Man of Oz" and others, and musical director of the original "Merry Widow" production, and Harry James, well known composer and orchestra leader now with the "So Long Letty" comedy with music, have been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to prepare incidental music for all productions. Mr. Gottschalk's first experience in motion pictures was with the Oz film company, in which he was interested financially, and for which company he prepared incidental music for their several productions.

The Essanay company is just finishing the filming of "Shanghaied," which is a comedy of the sea, the length of which has not been definitely determined. This is produced under the direction of Jesse J. Robbins with a cast headed by Charles Chaplin and Edna Purviance. Director Robbins and Cameraman Harry Ensign have worked up a lot of funny stuff in close-up scenes by the aid of a self-rocking ship built on the stage. Many of the exteriors of this production will be made at San Clement Island off the coast at Santa Monica. For the exterior scenes a big tramp steamer was leased and used several days. The scenery of this island is very picturesque and is heralded as an island around which Stevenson could write another story similar to Treasure Island.

LOUISE GLAUM ("THE IRON STRAIN")
(Triangle Film)

Charles Chaplin has received word from London of having won a popularity contest in which his nearest competitor was three hundred thousand votes behind.

Balboa to Produce New Serial

The great popularity of the recent serial produced by the Balboa company and released by Pathé entitled "Who Pays?" has caused the management to arrange for a second series, which may in all probability be called "Who Is Guilty?" It is planned that this series shall be along the line of the "Who Pays?" in that it will pertain to the vital questions of life. There will be twelve in the series, and it is a present plan to make each of three reels. The scenario and plots for these are being prepared by Will M. Ritchey, the editor at the Balboa, who wrote the plots and scenarios for the "Who Pays?" E. D. Horkheimer, secretary and treasurer at the Balboa, practically completed arrangements for the new series before his return from New York during the past week.

The Balboa company has been advised of the booking of the "Neal of the Navy" series by all of the Marcus Loew thetres in New York City for first run. This is one of the very important circuits of the Eastern metropolis, and certainly bespeaks the merit of this serial, which features Lillian Lorraine and William Courtleigh, Jr.

The film version of "The Message from Reno" is nearing completion at the Balboa studio. This is being made under the direction of Sherwood Macdonald and features Ruth Roland and Andrew Arbuckle with a big cast.

PROMINADE GALLERY AND NEW STAGE AT UNIVERSAL CITY

Fully half of the mammoth Balboa stage was required this week for a big set representing a theatre, which included the box office, foyer and auditorium, with a stage as a background. This will be used in a five-reel production now being filmed under the direction of Henry King. The elegant setting was made by Stage Manager Wyse and assistants.

"City" Built for "Neal of the Navy"

Business Manager Norman Manning has built a "city" on Signal Hill in the center of the Balboa eleven-acre plot in the foothill district back of Long Beach which will serve for many of the scenes in the closing episodes of the "Neal of the Navy" series. In the end all of the eight pretentious looking structures will be dynamited. Makato Imokuchi, a Japanese actor with considerable studio experience and late with Selig, has been engaged by General Manager H. M. Horkheimer for work in Balboa productions.

The Balboa company has just leased the quarter square vacant lot, the fourth corner of Sixth and Alamitos streets, Long Beach, to be used for their producing plant. The most recent acquisition will be used for exterior built-up sets, street scenes and the like. This gives additional facilities for larger sets and at the same time does not crowd their stages. The capacity of the plant is now fifteen thousand feet of negative film per week.

Juveniles in Reliance Drama

The Francis Powers Reliance Company is making a two-part theatrical photoplay with a cast composed of Billie West, Charles West, Frank Bennett, Harry Moody and Wilbur Higby. This is of the nature of a comedy drama wherein an unfortunate theatrical troupe on the rocks of financial destruction is brought to a semi-prosperous condition by the manufacture of a real press story that is given widespread publicity by the small town paper.

"The Doll House Mystery" is a Reliance of two reels in which the former members of the Majestic juvenile company take part. The story is of a dramatic nature and deals with the losing of bonds by children moving them, and brings about the arrest and conviction of an ex-convict. This subject is being made by C. M. and S. A. Franklin, with Carmen DeRue, George Stone and Violet Radcliffe, Margaret Marsh, Ben Lewis, Jack Hull and Charles Gorman in the principal parts.

The one-reel Komic of the week is "The Jinks of Jenx," written by W. E. Keife and produced by Edward Dillon. All of the usual Komic players, including Fay Fincher, Frank Drien and Max Davidson appear in this. In the absence of the gum-chewing stenographer, Ann Slater and Pearl Elmor are playing the humor parts.

An attempt may be made to reorganize the Photoplayers, Inc., a club composed of men engaged in the motion picture industry in Southern California. This work is in the hands of Fred Mace, who was the original organizer and the first president of the club, and who is now with the Keystone company. Mr. Mace has sent out circular letters and taking a straw vote on whether or not the majority of the people of the industry desire a revival of this organization.

Keystone Girl Gives Party

The Gus Edwards company, entour in vaudeville presenting "The Song Review of 1915," while playing an engagement at the Orpheum in Los Angeles was entertained by Miss Mabel Normand at a film party at the Keystone studio one morning, following which a luncheon was served by the Keystone girl.

Cracksmen successfully gained entrance to the film vault of the National Film Corporation in Hollywood one night during the past week by sawing off the knob and dynamiting the door, but were rewarded for their efforts with less than a dollar. The box contains a small amount of change used at the studio for petty cash transactions which is nightly deposited in this vault, together with films and records of the company, and it is believed the deposit of this caused the cracksmen to think a large amount of money was stored there.

Owing to the new Kriterion program setting back their release date from September 1 to September 15, the four companies making one, two and three-reel subjects for release on the Kriterion have been given a vacation until September 1. This will also afford the laboratory department opportunity to catch up with its work, and make it possible to enlarge and increase the capacity of the laboratory. Plans for the additions are now being made by Tom Ingman in charge.

Spedon Sees a Desert

R. S. Sturgeon, manager of production at the Vitagraph company, is home from a trip of one hundred and fifty miles on the Mojava desert, where he went in search of scenes for "The Yellow Streak," a production of two reels.. In the party accompanying him were George Holt, George Conklin, Jack Mower and Sam Spedon. The latter, who has been here from the Eastern studio, departed the early part of this week to resume his duties there. While here Mr. Spedon made many friends and became familiar with conditions on the West coast which will greatly aid him in his future efforts.

"Cal Marvin's Wife" is the title of the first picture in which Mary Anderson, who recently came to the Vitagraph studio from New York, will be featured. She is supported by William Duncan, Anne Shafer, Otto Lederer, Carleton

ETHEL TEARE (Kalem)

Weatherby and others of the stock company. The direction is in charge of Ulysses Davis. A feature of this will be a bevy of dancing soubrettes who do a turn before the camera. Special music for this is being prepared by George Conklin, of the Vitagraph stock company.

Among the new faces at the Griffith studio are Francis Macdonald and Walter Belasco, both of whom were recently with the Universal.

A QUARTETTE OF SCENES FROM AUGUST RELEASES TO BE SEEN ON THE MUTUAL PROGRAM

THE LITTLE CUPIDS

"A YANKEE FROM THE WEST"
(Majestic—Aug. 19)

"THE FATAL HOUR"
(Majestic—Aug. 22)

"THE FATAL FINGERPRINTS"
(Komic—Aug. 15)

During the past week a ship was leased by the Balboa company for scenes in the "Neal of the Navy" series, and the company was at sea for several days staging a mutiny. Two big forces of men were used in this, and the battle was a very violent one. At one time the Jackies became in earnest and dashed marlin spikes at each other. The hardest battle lasted about ten minutes, and the poor mutineer who attacked Miss Lorraine attempted to treat her gently, but was assailed with such wild-cat ferociousness that he lost his temper and it was necessary for Director Harry Harvey to separate them.

The Griffith studio is issuing a four-column publicity sheet to newspapers of all mountain and West coast states relative to Griffith fine art films. This is in charge of Bennie Ziedman, and the copy is all prepared in the boy's inimitable style.

Mary Boland at Inceville

The most recent celebrity arriving at Inceville is Mary Boland, late leading woman with John Drew, who is making her debut in the screen world in an Ince production of five parts. The part selected for Miss Boland is of a crook type. Work on this was taken up at once, following the completion of the Jane Grey and William Desmond production filmed by Scott Sidney entitled "Waifs." Bruce McRae, Broadway leading man, is also at the NYMP studio and a scenario is being prepared for his first production, in which he will play opposite Bessie Barriscale.

Monty Katterjohn, well known free lance photoplay writer, is now taking up his duties as scenario writer for Ince productions.

It is expected that Billie Burke will arrive in Los Angeles about the first of September, when she will begin her motion picture career. The first subject will have many of its scenes laid in Scotland, and Charles Giblyn, who recently affiliated with the NYMP organization as director, will be in charge of the direction. For the past week Mr. Giblyn has been busy selecting locations for this photoplay, and he has had little difficulty in finding scenes that closely resemble those to be found in Scotland. From the Ince publicity department comes the announcement that three loads of furnishing are now on the way to the coast to be used to adorn the settings of the production. Just the nature of these it is not stated.

Everything is being done to insure the comfort of Miss Burke while working at the Ince studio, and the preparation of her special dressing room and other arrangements for her comfort go speedily on. She will come to the West coast in a special car, accompanied by a retinue of servants. While in the southland, it is stated Miss Burke will make her home in a pretty bungalow on Catalina Island, and make trips to and from the studio in a mammoth launch morning and evening.

Scenes Staged in Busch Gardens

William S. Hart, House Peters, Enid Markey and a big number of NYMP players, as well as many extras, have been working in the famous Busch gardens in Pasadena for the past week making scenes for the coming Hart production, "Between Men."

Director Reginald Barker and a company including Bessie Barriscale, Frank Mills, Wedgewood Nowell and thirty others are at San Diego this week where scenes are being made at the annual Polo matches. Rights for making these pictures were secured several months ago, and it is understood the Ince company is the only one having this privilege. Bruce McRae is also a member of this company, it being his initial Ince production.

A sensational railway wreck was staged near San Bernardino under the direction of Walter Edwards for scenes in the coming Willard Mack story "The Corner." Two engines were purchased together with a number of cars, and permission was secured from the Southern Pacific Railway to stage a head-on collision. Two trains started toward each other from opposite directions, colliding at the edge of a bank overhanging a stream. The scenes taken were the most sensational ever shot by a NYMP camera.

During the week there was a noticeable change among the players, directors and workers of the NYMP studio owing to the presence of Bishop Joseph H. Johnson, of the Episcopal diocese of Los Angeles, who was present in the making of scenes showing religious services. Several hundreds of persons took part in this, and the congregation in every respect resembled that to be seen in a regular place of worship.

The interior of the lobby of the fashionable McAlpin Hotel, of New York, was reproduced at Inceville this week, featuring Orrin Johnson and being produced under the direction of Charles Swickard.

Hall Visits Producers

Trowbridge Hall, president of the National Board of Censorship, is spending several weeks in and about Los Angeles conferring with the principal producers and getting acquainted with studio conditions that they will be in a better position to act in the capacity of principal censors.

Another example of the profit to Los Angeles by the location of the film colony here, and the many efforts made by enterprising business men to get the full benefit of the presence of the film celebrities is a dinner soon to be given at the Alexandria Hotel in honor of Messrs. Mack Sennett, David W. Griffith and Thomas H. Ince, premier directors of the Triangle Film Corporation. The management of the hotel has issued invitations to an "after summer dinner and dance" to be given in honor of these gentlemen on September 4. It is billed as a social event par excellence where the motion picture celebrities will meet "our" social leaders. Players of many of the studios have been invited, together with a number of others. On the bottom of the invitation in small type is the advice regarding the cost of the elaborate dinner, all of which shows the progressiveness of the Los Angeles people to get the film people's money.

Paul Gilmore, late leading man in the A. H. Woods productions, including "The Havoc," "Capt. Alverez," "The Call of the North" and a number of other big successes, who has been with the Balboa company playing in features for Pathé release, has been engaged by D. W. Griffith for appearance in Fine Art films on the Triangle program, and began work there this week. He will appear first in "The Penitent," a five-part subject from an original story, which deals with life and conditions in a colony of religious people who sought to remain away from other sects by establishing a colony of their own. Mr. Gilmore will be under the direction of Jack Conway and supported by Sien Owen, Charles Clary, Irene Hunt, Fred A. Turner, Josephine Crowell, A. D. Sears, Harry Hann, Joseph Heneberry and Edward Warren.

Mammoth Stage Christened

The mammoth new stage at the Griffith studio, measuring seventy by one hundred and ninety feet, was christened this week in the making of a big scene representing the interior of a winter garden for the production being filmed under the direction of Paul Powell entitled "The Lily and the Rose." The audience for this numbered several hundred, and a principal feature was the dance given by Rozsika Dolly, during which she infatuates the leading man, played by Wilfred Lucas, and wins him from his sweetheart, Lillian Gish. The new stage is built a number of feet off the ground and makes it possible to photograph on this quite a little longer than on the average stage. The defusing system is perhaps forty-five feet above the stage floor, sixty-foot telephone poles being used to hold the defusing system, in all there being forty poles. This makes it possible to erect a very high setting on this stage.

THE HAND OF FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN, SHOWING THE FAMOUS AMETHYST RING

For scenes in "Jordan Is a Hard Road," adapted from the Sir Gilbert Parker's story of the same name, an entire Alaskan village is being built. This will have scores of houses and several streets. The production is in charge of Alan Dwan and Frank Campeau, the well-known heavy of the legitimate stage who plays the part of the leader of the MacMahons. Train and bank hold-ups will appear conspicuous in this subject.

"The Scarlet Band" is the title of a photoplay written by Robert M. Baker and John Emerson being filmed under the direction of John B. O'Brien. Mr. Emerson will appear in the leading part of this play, an eccentric man who delights in originating crime stories, a part similar to that taken by him in his late stage success, "The Conspiracy." Throughout this story is a pretty love interest with numerous dramatic situations. Supporting Mr. Emerson will be Bessie Love, Spottiswoode Aitken, W. E. Lawrence, Lucile Younge, Viola Barry, Fred J. Butler and Raymond Wells.

Additions to Griffith Staff

Edward Dillon, who has been filming Komic brand comedies for the Mutual program, and Jack Conway, who has been producer for Majestic and Reliance subjects for the past several months, have been added to the producing staff at the Griffith studios.

Spottiswoode Aitken, the veteran actor, who ran away from the home of his Scottish Presbyterian minister father in order that he could play Shakespeare, is the happiest man of the film colony, and with smiles bestowed upon all he announces that the new member of the Aitken family is a boy.

A mammoth tank was built at the Griffith studio for the making of two or three scenes for "The Sable Lorcha" showing a portion of the hull of a sinking boat at which action of a melodramatic nature was staged.

D. W. Griffith is still making scenes for his coming big production which has been known as "The Mother and the Law." Mr. Griffith first completed this before going East to stage his thirteen-part success, "The Birth of a Nation," but while absent from the studio thought of many changes that could be made for the betterment of the picture, and is now working on these. It is not known what size this picture will be, but is being made along the same lines as Mr. Griffith filmed "The Clansman"—just as many reels or scenes as is necessary to tell the story. Some mammoth sets have recently been used in this, and the number of people in some of the scenes reach several hundred.

Clawson Goes to Morosco

Dal Clawson, who for a number of years has been affiliated with the Weber-Smalley producing company with whatever firm they were connected, has resigned to accept the position as head of the photographic department of the Oliver Morosco Feature Play Company and Pallas Pictures, both of which work at the same studio. Mr. Clawson is considered one of the most successful cameramen of the West coast, and the many effects he has worked out for the screen have added much to the productions he has photographed. His most recent work was that of filming scenes for the Madame Anna Pavlowa subject, "The Little Dumb Girl of Portici."

H. L. (Buck) Masse, who has served in the capacity of publicity promoter aiding in the entertainment of the thousands of guests at Universal City, resigned his position this week, and will return to his first love—that of looking after advance work for a big theatrical company.

Helen Ware has arrived at the Universal studio and the actual filming of "That Lass of Lowrie's," a five-reel adaptation from a story of the same name, was taken up by Robert Z. Leonard.

DUSTIN FARNUM MAKING HAY WHILE THE SUN SHINES—HE HAS JOINED MOROSCO

"The Frame-Up" is the title given the five-part semi-political and society production in which George Fawcett will be starred. Otis Turner will be in charge of the production of this. The story deals with the charge of murder placed against a man, who, although morally guilty because he attempted to commit the murder, nevertheless was not guilty in that the party was killed by another man at the same time who shot at the same time. In one respect this may be considered a detective story, in that sleuths are employed to ferret out the real facts of the case, and in the end the elderly man is acquitted and his untrustworthy private secretary is found guilty.

Crosman at Universal City

Henrietta Crosman arrived at Universal City Saturday, and the filming of a four or five-reel Broadway feature in which she will be starred will be done under the direction of E. J. LeSaint. The scenario for this is now being prepared by L. V. Jefferson.

The Frank Keenan Broadway feature of five reels, "The Long Chance," has been completed and is now on its way to the Eastern laboratory of the Universal company.

"The Deficit" is the name given a three-part story being filmed by the Hobart Henley company, of which Leon Kent is director. This is an adaptation from a story by Peter B. Kyne dealing with the success of a proud father in causing his son to lead a worth-while life. The plan followed proved very successful and resulted in a happy culmination. Playing opposite Mr. Henley is Agnes Vernon, and the supporting cast includes Ray Hanford, Paul Machette, William Quinn and I. M. Wells.

WASHINGTON TRUTH SOCIETY, EAGER FOR CENSORSHIP, WARS ON "QUESTIONABLE" FILMS

THE latest movement in the Capital City on censorship comes from the Washington Truth Society, which, in a recent meeting, proposed the compilation of a list of motion pictures which would be known as a "white list" and which would serve as a guidance for those attending such theatres. This will include plays which will be safe for everyone to attend without any further inquiry into their plots or production.

It appears that the chief aim of the Truth Society is directed to the "mushroom" film companies or "fly-by-night" corporations, which, with their irresponsibility toward the public good, seem to throw upon the public plays that are questionable and offending to good taste, as well as productions that are far below the standard of art and photography that the motion picture has reached at present.

The society pointed to the fact that other cities maintained local boards of censorship and the hope was expressed that such a board might be established in Washington through the mediation of the Truth Society, Anti-Defamation League of America and the Young Men's Christian Association. Furthermore, it was proposed to take up the matter of motion picture censorship with Congress when that body met in the fall.

The society took occasion to take exception to a part of a recent report of the National Board of Censorship, which ran as follows:

"The national board has never denied that infidelity and sex problem plays are legitimate subjects for the motion picture, but has insisted that they be treated with seriousness and reserve. Infidelity to marriage ties must not be treated improperly or suggestively as a comedy theme. Humorous films which emphasize loose marriage relations will be condemned. Where it is necessary to show immoral advances between the sexes these should be indicated rather than exposed in detail. Immoral advances between the sexes bound by close blood relationship will be condemned. The board insists in all cases that there be a minimum of intimate and sensual detail."

It is possible that this meeting was the outcome of the announcement of Major Pullman, chief of police, that he meant to have the Sunday law of amusements strictly enforced. This is aimed chiefly at the vaudeville houses, which have become very lax in their Sunday shows, and which, it is claimed by many, are practically the same as the week day shows. According to the Sunday law these should be more of a concert order, devoid of character costuming, etc.

FEDERAL JUDGE ORDERS SEIZURE OF FAKE CHAPLIN FILMS

United States District Judge Page Morris ordered the seizure of unauthorized and fraudulent Essanay-Chaplin films at Duluth, Minn., and issued an injunction against the use of films said to violate the Essanay copyright. Several films also were seized in Chicago.

Owing to the popularity of the Charles Chaplin films there have been several cases in which fake productions have been issued. In other cases films have been rented from the General Film Company, which distributes the Chaplin films for Essanay, and the film copied and these copies sold or rented out as the original Chaplin productions.

The Essanay company charges that the copying of these films is in violation of its copyright and that it will prosecute every case brought to its notice. This action was decided upon both to protect its own rights and to insure the public of seeing a genuine Chaplin film when advertised as an Essanay-Chaplin comedy.

Many complaints have been received by Essanay that films advertised as Chaplin's were spurious. Essanay announces that in order to protect the public it will not cease in its efforts to prosecute these film pirates until all have been driven out of the country.

COURT REFUSES BAN ON "NATION"

The injunction to prohibit the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in Atlantic City, which was sought by Mayor Riddle has been refused by Chancellor Walker.

The reason for the request was that the great number of negroes in Atlantic City might be offended. Chancellor Walker said he saw nothing in the production which could lead to harm.

TACOMA ORDINANCE BARS "RACE HATRED" FILMS

Adopting the precedent set by the censors of other Pacific Coast cities with regard to the production "Birth of a Nation," Albert E. Joab, an attorney at Tacoma, representing the colored populace, made such a strong plea to the city council that under date of August 12 they passed the following ordinance:

"It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to publicly show or exhibit in any place in the City of Tacoma, any picture or series of pictures by any device known as a mutescope, kinetoscope, cinematograph, kinemacolor, penny arcade, a moving picture theatre, or any vaudeville act, drama, play, theatrical song or stage or platform performance or any advertisement or billboard display which is or tends to be immoral, obscene, lewd, lascicious or of any indecent character, or which portrays brutality, or which tends to incite race riot, or race hatred or that shall represent or purport to represent any hanging, lynching, burning or placing in a position of ignominy of any human being, the same being incited by race hatred."

Somewhat similar and stringent action has been taken in other cities where this picture was eventually shown, and undoubtedly one of the Tacoma exhibitors will get around the ordinance and run the picture.

FRANK FILMS UNDER THE BAN IN DENVER

The Denver municipal board of censorship, which is the only kind of censorship maintained in that city, has given notice to all motion picture theatres in Denver that the films showing the lynching of Leo M. Frank, near Marietta, Ga., would not be allowed to be shown in Denver. The Pathé Film Corporation, distributors of the film, was also notified not to release the pictures in Denver. All the engagements for the film in the Colorado city were cancelled upon these instructions.

The State of Colorado has no Board of Censorship, but the city of Denver has what is known as an Amusement Inspector, who acts as censor of motion pictures as well as all other amusements, and is paid by the city. Some agitation for a state censorship board has been under way, but as yet its popularity has not been strong enough to establish one.

BOUQUETS AND BRICKBATS

By UPSON DOWNES

"EVERY little while," as Elbert Hubbard used to say, it is the heaven-sent privilege of the motion picture dopester, real or near, as the case may be, to press his index finger to his throbbing brow and try to dope out "what will the answer be."

The seer's calling is admittedly and avowedly a precarious one. If he is wrong one time out of many everybody thinks he is all wrong. The best thing to do is to lay the premises on the table and let the others form their own conclusions.

What about the future? Has the standard of production increased to an amount commensurate with what is felt to be the increased demand for good pictures? Personal opinion says it has not. If this be treason, make the most of it.

Although feature pictures are being shown more extensively than ever before with only sporadic and scattering signs of a decrease in popularity, the average feature maker can not get as much money out of a feature now as he could a year ago. This may seem a strange anomaly, but the answer lies in the increased competition. It is now possible for an exhibitor to book a feature a day, if he so wishes, taking seven a week from established concerns on which he can rely, and still not play all the good pictures on the market. In other words the supply exceeds the possible demand. This holds good without reflecting on the fact that more and more exhibitors are beginning to book pictures for two and three days and to repeat bookings.

Time was when a manufacturer could make a feature with considerable degree of trust that he could get from $35,000 to $42,000 back by selling state rights. Now the manufacturer who spends more than $30,000 on a feature has to figure mighty close to get his money back when the cost of printing, posters, heralds, expressage and the thousand and two little things is added in.

In several ways pictures are improving. More attention is being paid to artistry. In fact many offerings are so artistic that the spectator sees dissolves, double exposure and pretty exteriors till he wonders what has become of the story.

The greatest stage stars are appearing in pictures. They were a year ago, as far as that goes.

But no great improvement has been made in technique since the close-up and cut-back came into general use. No great step forward has been made in pretentiousness in the past few months.

In fact the attitude of more than one feature company is that it can hold out till its competitors quit. Persons who figure that way forget that if one company quits another will take its place. The name of "motion picture" is still synonymous with "Eldorado" in many lay minds. It seems possible still to dig up outside bank rolls for new companies. The companies who figure on competition decreasing by the defection of business rivals may be mistaken.

This is all intended as a warning note on the strength of the belief that the standard of motion picture production has not kept pace with the other developments of the industry during the past year.

Also don't forget that the time is only a few months away when the line of demarkation will be sharply drawn between the stars of the screen and the stars of the stage. Many theatrical managers are stipulating that their stars cannot appear in pictures. Motion picture folk are retaliating by stipulating that their stars cannot appear on the stage, as witness the contracts recently signed by William Farnum and Victor Moore.

Tom Ince is the author of this week's best joke.

Fred Balshofer, general manager and all that, of Quality Pictures Corporation, telegraphed Raymond West, one of Ince's producing staff, from the Metro New York offices, making him an offer and asking for an immediate reply.

West must have turned the telegram over to Tom Ince for Balshofer received this reply:

"If you can not get West maybe some other of my directors will do. I have your future interests at heart. Love and kisses. Tom Ince."

And it is well known that Ince and Balshofer are not on kissing terms.

Horace G. Plimpton, for many years general manager of negative production for Thomas A. Edison, will soon be active again. He is the head of Plimpton Epic Features, Inc., with offices in the Longacre building, New York City. Directors of the company are: Percival K. Frowert, of the international company which bears his name; M. Parish-Watson, of the London firm of Gorer; Sidney Dillon Ripley, of Hempstead, L. I., and Charles A. de Lima, a playwright with a residence in Paris and Florence, Italy, where many of the pictures will be staged. The company is incorporated for $100,000.

The days of lax business management and exorbitant commissions to agents for the "extra people" of the business may soon be ended. Representatives of the Equitable, Metro, Paramount, World Film, and the National Board of Censorship met recently in the Equitable offices and rough-drafted plans for forming a co-operative agency to handle "extra people." Arthur H. Spiegel, of Equitable, is chairman and J. W. Binder, of the National Censorship Board, is secretary. Offices will be opened at 126 West Forty-sixth street.

Now that the days of re-issues are here it is only fair to call to mind the fact that William E. Wing is the author of two of the Griffith re-issues, "Death's Marathon" and "By Man's Law."

William H. West, for years a member of the Kalem Glendale stock company, died Saturday night, August 29, of heart disease. Mr. West, before he went into pictures, enjoyed great popularity on the comic opera stage. He was one of the most trusted men at the Kalem studio. Throughout his career he was respected both as an actor and a man.

Jesse J. Goldburg, formerly secretary and general manager of the Life Photo Film company, has disposed of his stock holdings to Bernard Loewenthal and severed his connections with Life Photo and the Commercial Motion Pictures company entirely.

Pearl White, Pathé star, is to vacation a bit soon. She is going back to the old home, Springfield, Mo., to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. White. The Fireman's band will turn out and everybody will be down at the station to meet her, for Pearl is regarded as Springfield's most famous daughter.

Campbell MacCullogh has been appointed national publicity manager of the Triangle Film corporation. He will make his headquarters with Henry McMahon, the general press representative, in the Longacre building, New York City. Fourteen years ago MacCullogh and McMahon worked together on New York newspapers. Since that time MacCullogh has been general press representative for the Lieblers and on the editorial staff of the Century magazine.

An addition to the orchestra of the Strand theatre, New York City, is a victrola. During the Famous Players picture, "The Heart of Jennifer," this week, a scene came on the screen with a victrola playing. Carl Edouarde, then orchestra leader, stopped the orchestra and turned on the victrola. The trick got several rounds of applause.

Frank Kugler, cameraman at the studios of the Fox Film Corporation, has been made a director and will shortly begin the production of a special Christmas subject, which he expects to make notable by the introduction of clever trick photography.

Mr. Kugler is one of the few crank-turners honored in so signal a manner and his promotion is the result of peculiar qualities befitting him for the new position.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

Carl Anderson, back from England, is now Paramount office manager.

Marjorie Ellison, who has been with Edison for two years, is on a vacation trip to the Panama-Pacific exposition.

William A. Parsons, president of the National Film corporation, is en route to New York via San Francisco and Chicago. He will spend at least a week in New York.

George Kann, private secretary to Carl Laemmle, is at Universal City.

J. Shelly Hamilton, dramatic critic for "Everybody's Magazine," and a member of the National Board of Censors, and W. A. Barrett, another censor, are in Los Angeles, studio visiting.

Sam Spedon, of the Vitagraph, has returned from an extended sojourn on the West Coast.

Winfield R. Sheepan, general manager for Fox, is on a flying Western trip.

CHANGES OF THE WEEK

C. B. (Pop) Hoadley, scenario writer for lo these many years, is with Selig.

Muriel Ostriche, leading woman and ingenue, is with Equitable, leaving Vitagraph.

Arthur MacHue, well known press agent, is now with the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation which will soon release "The Salamander," probably to be followed by "One Day."

Leona Hutton, formerly of the New York Motion Picture Corporation forces, and Margaret Gibson, formerly of Vitagraph, go to the Horsley forces.

J. P. McGowan, who made "The Hazards of Helen" for Kalem, is now directing at Universal City.

Hayward Mack, actor, late of New York, is working at Universal City under the direction of Murdock MacQuarrie.

Charles Mortimer Peck, late of Balboa, is now a free lance scenario writer.

Dorothy Bernard has just signed a three years' exclusive contract to appear only in William Fox pictures.

Charles Emerson Cook has been engaged by the Vitagraph Company to conduct an extensive publicity campaign for J. Stuart Blackton's sensational new feature film, "The Battle Cry of Peace," which will soon have a Broadway showing. Charles Richman is the featured star.

Marcel H. Morhange, who has had long experience as a picture producer, has become assistant to R. A. Walsh, of the Fox directors staff.

Thomas O'Brien, for several years assistant to R. A. Walsh, has been made co-director to Frank Kugler, of the Fox staff.

Theda Bara, who has been ill with a cold for a week past, is now able to appear at the Fox studios again.

Doubting Thomases See Universal Put on Stunt

Los Angeles Newspaper Men Invited to Witness Filming of an Installment of "Broken Coin," and Discover That "It Ain't All Trick Photography, by Heck"

FRANCIS FORD and Grace Cunard, stars in "The Broken Coin," Universal serial, recently showed the members of the National Editorial Association, doubting newspaper men, that the use of dummies and trick photography in moving pictures is not quite so prevalent as they believed it to be.

Some of the dare-devil scenes in the fifteenth installment of "The Broken Coin" were started at the time the newspaper men were holding their convention at Universal City.

THE AUTO CRASHING THROUGH THE GATES IN "BROKEN COIN" SCENE

Mr. Ford lined them up just outside the range of the camera lens to witness Grace Cunard's thrilling ride in an automobile through a heavy toll gate which her pursuers smash into splinters.

Grace Cunard, as Kitty Grey, is fleeing for her life. She dashes down the road at breakneck speed, with Eddie Polo (Roleaux) following close behind in another machine. Both pass through a toll gate. As the second machine roars through the open gateway, Polo signals to the watchman to swing the gate shut on his pursuers.

Just as the gate swings to, the cars containing the soldiers from the Balkan kingdom of Grahoffen, who are following, smash into it. Bending low to avoid the flying timbers, the occupants of the car shield their heads as the car rips through the gates.

The glass rainshield of the first car is smashed into broken bits which fly back upon the car's occupants, splinters from the gate are hurled high in the air, both front lamps on the car are twisted and smashed, the radiator is jammed together into a twisted heap, while both tires burst with a loud explosion and the car wobbles on for fifty feet beyond the range of the camera lens until it comes to a stop. There the hood is found to be ripped down the middle and both the supporting struts on each side wrecked beyond repair.

The newspaper men gave the wrecked car a wide berth as it roared past them and shouted their approval.

One of the newspaper men, a representative of a Los Angeles newspaper, was especially enthusiastic at the daring of the actors, and the following paragraph is clipped from his account of the "stunt":

"There was no hesitation. Bending low to avoid the flying timbers, the driver headed the car straight for the barricade. There was the sound of violent impact, the rending and creaking of timbers as they were torn from their places and hurled high into the air.

"Then through the wreckage sprang the car like some giant circus rider leaping through a paper hoop. Fenders were battered out of shape; the radiator leaked a stream, both lights were gone and the front wheels, broken beyond repair, wobbled away with the car in alarming fashion."

Evidently the scene made its impression upon the representatives of the press for Mr. Ford was warmly congratulated upon the thrill he had afforded them. For the benefit of the press men the scene was hurriedly developed and printed, and that evening was run off in the Universal's projection theatre.

COL. SELIG TO VISIT STUDIOS AT LOS ANGELES

Los Angeles, Aug. 30.

Col. W. H. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, is expected to arrive in Los Angeles within the next few days for a stay of several weeks at the two studios and zoo and personally supervise a number of important improvements which will greatly affect the productions.

With the announcement of the coming of Col. Selig the rumor to the effect that Thomas Persons, for seventeen years connected with the Selig company and for the past three years general manager of the West coast producing plants, has resigned to accept a position as general manager of a large Eastern plant is by persons in authority stated to be authentic.

Mr. Persons went to Chicago several days ago and during his absence James McGee, who has been manager of the Selig Edendale studio, has been in charge of all studios, and production has continued along the regular lines.

"THE GREEN CLOAK," KLEINE, IS FINISHED

Finishing touches were added last week to George Kleine's "The Green Cloak," featuring Irene Fenwick. Not since "Vendetta" has George Kleine presented a screen play so essentially dramatic in story and treatment.

"The Green Cloak" is founded on Owen Davis' stage play of that name and has given Miss Fenwick a rare opportunity to display her talents in a role which verges on the tragic. "The Green Cloak" will be released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service November 3.

LILLIAN TUCKER EXCELS IN PORTRAYING ENGLISH TYPES

When Lillian Tucker went on the stage she wanted to have an opportunity to act and sing. She was willing to take what she could to get a start, and that was how she happened to appear in "The Yankee Prince" with George Cohan.

It was when she left Broadway for a time to play with Oliver Morosco in California that she had her first English role. Her intelligence and general appearance made her exceptionally good in the part, and she was cast for that type of character often afterwards.

Miss Tucker's first screen appearance will be in "Evidence," the English play by Margaret and L. Durother McPherson, which was produced by the Shuberts at the Lyric theatre last season, New York, and has just been completed as a piccture for the F. Ray Comstock company to be released through the World Film. In it she played the beautiful and charming Lady Una. She has more recently been cast for a similar part in "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," with Charles Cherry.

CLIPPER AND MUSTANG SUBJECTS SOON TO BE RELEASED

The American Film Company at Santa Barbara is making rapid strides in the production of pictures which will be given the public under the Clipper and Mustang brands. The first Clipper release—a three-reel feature picture entitled "The Great Question," with an all-star cast, headed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison under the direction of Thomas Ricketts, will appear Saturday, September 18.

From that time on, a Clipper three-reel feature picture will be released every three weeks.

The Mustang brand of Western feature pictures will star Anna Little and Art Acord. The first picture, entitled "A Man Afraid of His Wardrobe," is now in course of production. These pictures are to be film adaptations of the famous "Buck Parvin" stories by Charles E. Van Loan. Through an arrangement made by President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, Mr. Van Loan will live in Santa Barbara to superintend the production of his well-known stories, and himself write the titles, captions and inserts for the films.

RICHARD CARLE TO GAMBOL FOR PATHE IN "MARY'S LAMB"

Richard Carle, who has been secured to star in the forthcoming Pathé Gold Rooster Play, "Mary's Lamb," produced by Donald Mackenzie, is easily one of the foremost figures on the American stage today. He was born in Somerville, Mass., making his first stage appearance with James F. Powers and Peter F. Dailey in "A Straight Tip." He made his first marked success in "The Lady Slavey." As a legitimate actor Mr. Carle won much notice as the carpenter in Zangwill's "Children of the Ghetto." He made a hit on the London stage in "The Casino Girl," and retains his popularity in England to this day. Returning to this country he starred in his own musical comedies, "The Mayor of Tokio," and "The Tenderfoot." In November, 1907, he appeared in his own comedy, "Mary's Lamb," which is now fast being put into motion pictures.

RICHARD CARLE (Pathé)

To show Mr. Carle's ability it is only necessary to say that for the last ten years he has been at the head of his own companies as star, and is the author of no fewer than ten musical comedies, all of them decided successes.

PICKFORD SELECTS YOUNGSTERS AS FUTURE SCREEN STARS

Mary Pickford, star of the Famous Players Film Company, who was last Wednesday extended the unusual distinction of being the Guest of Honor of the City of Asbury Park at a Silver Jubilee Baby Parade—the first actress in all the twenty-five years during which Asbury Park has annually celebrated a Baby Parade to receive this signal honor, a preference shared in past years by President Wilson, Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt and other national celebrities—was tendered the greatest ovation with which the famous seaside resort has ever welcomed a visitor.

MARY PICKFORD, MAYOR HETRICK AND MRS. PICKFORD AT THE BABY PARADE

A significant feature of the parade was the numerous impersonations of Miss Pickford's various creations by the children, principal among which were "Tess of the Storm Country," "Hearts Adrift," "Such a Little Queen" and "Mistress Nell." Another interesting aspect of the event was the fact that Miss Pickford has obtained the addresses of three of the youngsters who appeared in the parade, and in whom she detected screen possibilities. As the children in question passed the reviewing stand, the star pointed them out to Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, who, with Mrs. Zukor and Miss Pickford's mother, accompanied her to Asbury Park, and who later secured the names and addresses of the children from the carnival officials. It is planned by Mr. Zukor and Mary Pickford to give these children an early opportunity to appear with her on the screen. The fortunate youngsters selected for this unusual notice are Jean Linn Hart, of Brooklyn, who appeared in the parade in the float called "The Barrel of Love"; Marjorie H. Conover, of Bayonne, who appeared in a revolving frame called "The Moving Picture"; and Adele Demming, of Asbury Park.

42 DOUBLE-EXPOSURE SCENES IN "THE SECRET SIN"

The production of "The Secret Sin" by the Lasky company, in which Blanche Sweet plays the double role, and is supported by Tom Meighn and an all-star Lasky cast, is nearing completion. A remarkable feature of this subject will be the great number of double exposure scenes, there being in all forty-two in the five reels.

SELIG STUDIOS BUSY AT WORK ON NEW SUBJECTS

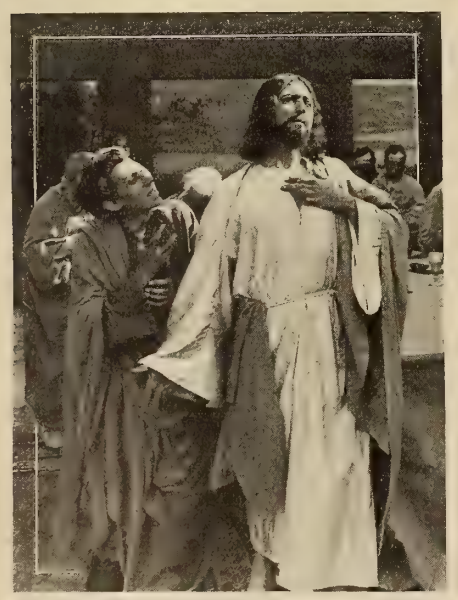
Los Angeles, Aug. 30.

"Sweet Elysium," an adaptation from a short story by Charles Major, is being filmed in five reels by Colin Campbell at the Selig Mission zoo. Edith Johnson is featured in this, playing the leading role, supported by Kathlyn Williams as her mother, Tyrone Power, Frank Clark and Wheeler Oakman.



Harry Mestayer is being featured in "The Bridge of Time," being produced by Frank Beal for Selig release, as an eccentric man who worships his ancestry, and although he falls in love with his stenographer, his pride will not permit him to marry her until, during illness, he believes himself to be one of his ancestors of the Elizabethan period, and as such marries a girl far beneath his rank. In this picture Mr. Mestayer is supported by Engene Bresser, Virginia Kirby, Guy Oliver, Harry Devere and Bertram Grasby.

A one-reel animal comedy entitled "When California Was Young" is being produced at the Selig zoo. It is a story of a young trapper and in this all California animals, including bears and mountain lions, will be used. The cast includes Fritzi Brunette, C. B. Murphy and Lillian Hayward.

NAT GOODWIN AND BOSWORTH IN FRENCH TRAGEDY

"And my own child called me Judas!"

"Business Is Business," Octave Mirbeau's famous French tragedy in which Nat C. Goodwin appears as the star for the Universal, closes with the death of Isidore Lechat (Nat Goodwin), who has attempted to bargain off his child to an impecunious nobleman. Germaine, his daughter, soon to be a mother by the man she loves and who afterward marries her, upbraids her father for bringing the morals of the mart into his household.

HOBART BOSWORTH AS CHRIST IN "BUSINESS IS BUSINESS"

Crushed by the death of his favorite son, his wife's desertion, his mistress' accidental death and his own desolation of spirit, Lechat sinks back into his chair clutching at his failing heart, as a vision of Christ and Judas at the Last Supper near the Garden of Gethsemane appears before him.

The part of Christ in this short "flash" is enacted by Hobart Bosworth, whose spiritual face ideally fits him for a humble delineation of the role of The Man of Galilee, as tradition has preserved His memory in sculpture and painting. Mr. Bosworth has appeared in several pictures in the same role and was only too delighted to contribute his remarkably fine bit of acting to the Goodwin masterpiece. In "The Scarlet Sin," another Universal Broadway feature, Mr. Bosworth is also seen as Christ.

FRANK WHITSON MAKES INITIAL APPEARANCE FOR MUTUAL

Frank Whitson, long a popular star on the speaking stage with which he was prominently connected for fourteen years and who recently joined the Gaumont studios, makes his initial appearance as a Mutual star in "The House with Nobody In It," second of the three-reel Rialto Star Features to be released in the regular Mutual program. Mr. Whitson entered screen work for the first time about eight months ago. His first work in pictures was in "The Battle of the Ballots," produced by the Star Film Company, of Columbus, Ohio. He also played the heavy lead in B. A. Rolfe's latest picture "When a Woman Loses," as well as playing in Lubin and Universal productions.

Mr. Whitson's stage career began with the Murray Hill Stock Company, in New York, followed later by a year with the Dearborn Stock Company of Chicago. Then followed two seasons with the Kelcey Shannon Company and a year with the Sporting Life Company. During the past few years Mr. Whitson has been playing and directing vaudeville sketches, among them being "The Cotton King," with Miss Fannie Hunt as the star, "The Dramatic Sketch," "The Frame Up," and many others of note. At the Gaumont studios Mr. Whitson will play under the direction of Richard Garrick, noted Gaumont director.

RIOT OF WILD ANIMALS STAGED FOR REX COMEDY

Not since the angel with the flaming sword drove Adam and Eve and all the wild animals in the Garden of Paradise out of Eden has such a wild riot among four-legged creatures occurred as that in "When Joe Martin Turns 'Em Loose," a Rex (Universal) two-reel wild animal comedy which is to be released on September 16.

PAUL BOURGEOIS AND ONE OF HIS PETS

In this comedy thriller Paul Bourgeois demonstrates beyond all cavil his ability in the handling of wild animals before the camera. In many of the scenes of "When Joe Martin Turns 'Em Loose" Mr. Bourgeois beats a tiger into a rage and then wrestles with him on the floor. Many of the stunts in the comedy thriller are positively hair raising. Lions, leopards, elephants, camels, tigers, panthers and ourang outangs run loose. Actors and actresses pelt them with bust statuettes and boxes.

Rex De Rosselli, who collaborates with Mr. Bourgeois in making the picture, deserves much credit for his work in handling the lions. Despite the fact that he was well aware of his danger, Mr. Rosselli torments them until they vent their rage by biting two by four scantlings in two and then Mr. Bourgeois calmly calls for "camera!"

Mr. Bourgeois has created a new high standard in wild animal cinematography for "When Joe Martin Turns 'Em Loose." Mr. Bourgeois has handled animals and worked in pictures with them for Pathé Freres in Paris and in New York, with the Vitagraph company, Selig company and has also released his own pictures from the Paul Bourgeois, Inc., studios.

WORLD FILM TO PRESENT WARWICK AS GENTLEMANLY VILLAIN

World Flm will shortly present Robert Warwick in a Capellani production called "The Flash of an Emerald." Robert Warwick plays a character which is officially described as a "social vulture," preying on his friends and diverting suspicion by his "gentlemanly graciousness." At the end of the play when Lucien Waldeck is revealed as the thief of the emerald, he commits suicide.

Metro Completes English Market Arrangements

Cohen Arranges with Ruffles' Exclusives, Ltd., to Handle Entire Output of Company's Program in the United Kingdom—Metro Exchanges in Operation in All Film Centers

THE British market for American films has never been in such a flourishing condition, in spite of the war, according to Harry J. Cohen, who has just returned from England, whither he went to complete Metro's selling arrangements in the United Kingdom. Through Ruffles' Exclusive, Ltd., Mr. Cohen arranged for the handling of the entire Metro program in Great Britain, and Metro exchanges are already in full operation in every important film center in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

"The fact that Ruffles Exclusives contracted for the entire list of Metro releases," said Mr. Cohen, "besides being a distinct tribute to the quality of the productions, is also a pretty fair indication of conditions in the industry in Great Britain. As a matter of fact, if you didn't see a lot of khaki-clad soldiers around the streets, it would be difficult to believe that England was engaged in a battle for her existence. Business is much as usual and there is absolutely no war scare in London, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

"In my opinion the British market for American films was never so flourishing. This is due partly to the fact that very few Continental films are being produced and partly to the warm fraternal feeling that exists between Great Britain and the United States. American films have a chance to get a foothold in Great Britain now, which nothing can ever break.

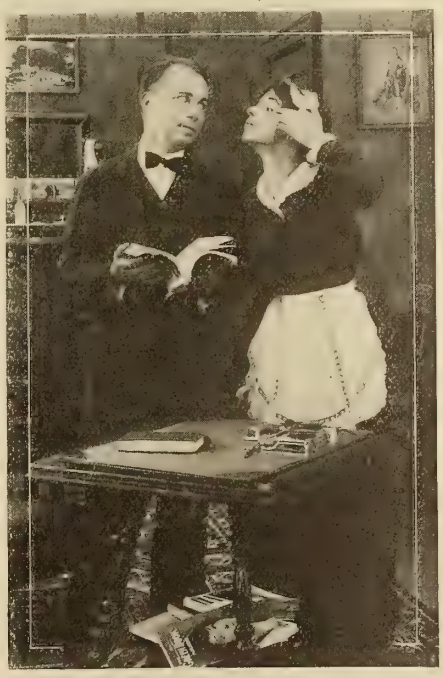
"While I was in London a rumor came into general circulation that the American film market was controlled by Germans, and had this opinion gained any ground it would have resulted in greatly decreasing the popularity of American pictures. In fact, there was talk of eliminating certain American manufacturers because it was said they had sold English firms films of German origin. Fortunately I was able to show conclusively how absolutely ridiculous was the idea that American manufacturers should buy foreign films for a foreign market, when their own productions were so well received.

"As a matter of fact American pictures are very popular with the British public, perhaps more so than British productions are here. This is due to the fact that there are so few British manufacturers, but those who do make films suitable for the American photoplaygoer find an immediate and welcome market.

"The posters used by the British picture houses were a pleasant surprise to me. While it is true that some time ago English posters were not up to the American standard, they are now as good or better, often showing much higher artistic class than the general run of American paper. In this connection I might say that the directors of Ruffles' Exclusives, Ltd., were in turn agreeably surprised at the Metro posters, which were notably superior in workmanship to the paper usually sent over with features.

"The British exhibitor does more billboard advertising than his American cousin, although he divides it differently. For instance, an exhibitor will use fifty twenty-four sheets in a week, but twenty-five of them will advertise his program for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, and twenty-five that of Thursday, Friday and Saturday, as against a change of bill one, two or three times weekly or daily here.

"The programs and prices are much the same on both sides of the water, most theatres showing from six to eight reels—a feature, a comedy and a scenic—for from threepence to a shilling. The seating facilities, however, are divided differently. What Americans regard as the best seats—those back of the first dozen rows in the orchestra—in England are the cheapest, while those nearest the screen are the most expensive.



"British motion picture men are quite as up-to-date as we are. They understand and know feature pictures and are quick to see whether there is money in a given production or not. They are our equals, also, in recognizing the value of publicity. I was distinctly surprised at the efficiency of the publicity department of the Ruffles' Exclusives, Ltd., and the wide field they covered.

George Spurin, head of this branch of the concern's activities, is said to be one of the highest paid publicity men in England, his salary in our money being over $12,000 a year.

"Altogether my trip was a revelation to me, for I could hardly believe that Great Britain was engaged in the most terrible war in history, if it hadn't been for the numerous soldiers in the streets and the fact that the lights were kept down to a minimum at night. Outside of this, one would think that business was quite 'as usual,' as the Britons are so fond of averring."

Henderson Is Well Known to Broadway Audiences; With Mrs. Fiske and Also Made Hit in Comedy

Jack Henderson, who recently deserted the legitimate stage long enough to appear in "The Manservant," one of Kalem's three-act "Broadway Favorites" productions, has had a remarkable record of successful engagements in Broadway productions. One of his friends recently asserted that the star has never been without an engagement for as long as a day since making his first appearance. Give heed, oh ye less fortunate performers!

JACK HENDERSON IN "THE MANSERVANT"

It was while studying law that the new Kalem leading man was induced to play a bit in "Miranda of the Balcony," in which Mrs. Fiske was being featured. The work appealed so strongly to him that when Mrs. Fiske subsequently played in "Divorcons" and "Tess of the D'Urbevilles," Mr. Henderson was in the regular cast.

An engagement with Fay Temple, in "The Runaways," which scored at the Casino theatre, New York, followed. From this production, Mr. Henderson went to "The Tourists," which was presented at the Majestic, now the Park theatre. "The Girl Question," at Wallack's; "Three Twins," at the Herald thetre, and "The Candy Shop," at the Knickerbocker theatre, followed. In the latter production Mr. Henderson succeeded Jack Barrymore in the leading role.

Valeska Suratt saw the young player in "The Candy Shop," and decided that he was just the leading man she wanted for her vaudeville vehicle, "The Belle of the Boulevard." After a highly successful season in "Big Time," Mr. Henderson was engaged to appear with Lew Fields in "The Summer Widowers," at the Broadway theatre.

His next engagement lasted three years, the vehicle being the musical comedy success "The Pink Lady." Mr. Henderson played in this production both in this country and abroad.

Mr. Henderson appears as a millionaire in "The Manservant," which will be released in regular service Monday, September 13.

VITAGRAPH FOLDER FOR POSTER IS ATTRACTIVE

The Vitagraph company has issued an attractive piece of publicity with its excellent feature "The Chalice of Courage." A sheet of stiff paper contains in the center descriptions of salient points in the production, while reproductions of the various sizes of posters in color add to its attractiveness.

The sheet is folded and the cover decorated with the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature emblem. It's an artistic form of publicity and should prove successful.

EULALIE JENSEN MISTRESS OF EMOTIONAL PORTRAYAL

Eulalie Jensen, who will be seen on the V-L-S-E program in the four-part tragic drama, "The Wheels of Justice," is thorough mistress of the emotional technique peculiar to motion picture character portrayals.

Miss Jensen in the various roles in which she has been seen on the screen gives a perfect presentation of the internal conflict of emotions that all artists agree is most difficult of registration on the film.

In "The Wheels of Justice" Miss Jensen plays the role of the adventuress, who, although married, entertains a violent infatuation for another man, and throughout the entire play she is called upon to depict all the varying moods of a woman in love, in trouble, and in desperate straits, and in all the various phases of love, jealousy and despair, her acting is such as to proclaim her one of the screen's most finished artists.

"BLOOM CENTER" SERIES SHOWS RURAL LIFE AS IT IS

Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice, the well-known authoress, who wrote a number of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" series of comedy photoplays released by the Selig Polyscope Company, has been happy in her conception of true rural American character. Many of the characters which disport throughout the twelve two-reel comedies were surely drawn from real life.

For example, here is the old maid, Miss Selina Tubbs, who is secretly in love with the Village Postmaster; there is Percy Pinkham, in love with Margaret Tate, editress of "The Weekly Bugle," the county-seat newspaper; there is Johnny West, the fat boy "journalist," who is also correspondent for the city newspapers; there is Constable Plum, guardian of the peace and guardian of everything else; Mrs. Plum, who continually keeps an eye upon her doughty husband, and all the rest of the characters true to the great middle western United States.

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center" will be released soon and will undoubtedly inaugurate a new era in film comedy. There isn't a "chase" in the entire series. Each picture play has a distinct plot, but the same characters and the same environment is continued throughout the entire "Chronicles of Bloom Center."

SHERIDAN, "AMERICAN COQUELIN," WITH KLEINE

One of the most important and interesting of recent screen acquisitions is Frank Sheridan, who makes his premier film appearance in George Kleine's "The Money Master."

Described by the dean of American critics, William Winter, as "The American Coquelin," Mr. Sheridan brings to "The Money Master" a rare personality, and an intuitive knowledge of the camera not always found in the upper realms of theatrical stardom.

Those who are familiar personally with Mr. Sheridan know him to be possessed of the attributes of the average physical giant.

Many of those who witnessed "The Boss," in which Holbrook Blinn starred, will remember Mr. Sheridan in the role of the rough but kindly, God-fearing archbishop. Another of the characters created by Mr. Sheridan was that of Larry McCarty in "The Unwritten Law."

FRANK SHERIDAN

Mr. Sheridan surpassed, however, the popularity of any of these characters in his portrayal of the trainer in "Wildfire," when he appeared in the support of Lillian Russell a few years ago in her Coast to Coast tour. Last season Mr. Sheridan was the suave, aesthetic John Brandt, in the all-star cast of "Fine Feathers."

"WHERE THE ROAD DIVIDED" NEW TWO-ACT LUBIN DRAMA

"Where the Road Divided," a new Lubin drama in two acts, is the story of a mountain girl who is tempted to take the wrong road, but who, through love, reclaimed herself and goes in the path which leads to happiness.

The play is an unusual one, and is acted by Louise Huff, Edgar Jones, Earl Metcalfe and George Gowan.

EDGAR LEWIS SIGNS WITH LUBIN

Lubin of Philadelphia announces the engagement of Edgar Lewis to supervise the direction of feature films. Mr. Lewis, undoubtedly is a master mind among producers, and scarcely needs an introduction to the millions familiar with photoplays.

Mr. Lewis has produced "The Plunderer," "The New Governor," "Samson," "The Thief," "The Gilded Fool," "The Littlest Rebel," "The Bondsman," among his recent activities.

Just which play Mr. Lewis will produce first has not yet been decided, but it will be a master film to be released through the V-L-S-E.

EDGAR LEWIS

Mr. Lewis's connection with Lubin's marks the engagement of the fourth new director in as many weeks, the others being Jack Pratt, who filmed "Shore Acres," "The Garden of Lies," and other plays, and who is now directing Louis Reeves Harison's war play, "The Rights of Man"; Allen Farnham, formerly artistic director for the Kalem Company, and occupying the same position with Lubin and Edward McKim, Lubin's new comedy director.

"ARMIES" SAVE UNIVERSAL CITY FROM DESTRUCTION

Los Angeles, Aug. 30.

Universal City was threatened with destruction by fire last week when the dry weeds and shrubs on the side of one of the foothills was set afire by an exploding hand grenade thrown by one of the members of the "Broken Coin" armies. At a moment's notice both armies, which at the time were engaged in a hand to hand struggle, forgot their differences and went after the enemy—the fire. All the cowboys and many of the actors and directors rushed to the scene with wet blankets and other paraphernalia and fought the blaze which crept toward the front stage and administration buildings.

MARTIN WILL DEVOTE ALL HIS TIME TO RIALTO FEATURES

John S. Martin, a man of wide experience in the motion picture industry, who recently joined forces with the Gaumont Company, will, it was recently announced, devote practically all of his time in the producing of the Rialto Star Features and the Broadway Star Comedies, two of the new Gaumont productions to be released exclusively through the Mutual program.

Mr. Martin entered the motion picture business in a rather auspicious manner about seven or eight years ago, when he packed a number of films under his arm and started out on an independent tour of the United States, booking as well as advertising the pictures. Shortly after completing this journey he became affiliated with J. C. Graham, at present assistant to John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Of late Mr. Martin had been employed as traveling exchange manager for the United Film Service, covering most of the territory lying between the two oceans.

On his return from his last Western trip, Mr. Martin was retained by the Gaumont Company and is at present busily engaged in his new work. Mr. Martin will be in constant touch with a number of prominent Broadway stars and will spare neither time nor effort in securing the best available talent for the Rialto Star features and the other Gaumont productions which are to play so conspicuous a part in the Mutual regular program.

CLOTH SIGNS BANNED BY MICHIGAN FIRE MARSHAL

After September 1 motion picture theatre owners and managers in Michigan must remove all cloth signs from in front of their houses, as these signs are barred by the recent rules and regulations by Fire Marshal John T. Winship, who has served notice on all theatre owners that cloth signs will not be tolerated after September 1. The only signs which will be permitted will be paper ones, and they must be enclosed in glass frames. "Where human lives are at stake," said Mr. Winship, "I refuse to discuss the regulations from a dollar and cents standpoint. The regulations will be enforced." This was after the commissioner had been interviewed by a number of Michigan exhibitors who endeavored to have the regulations modified.

OVEY PERFORMS DARING DEEDS IN "THE KNOCK-OUT"

Director Fahrney had George Ovey, his principal comedian, undertake a few daring deeds in "The Knock-out," a one reel Cub Comedy released Friday, September 17, on the Mutual program, which certainly required iron nerve to perform and undoubtedly caused some qualms in the comedian's mind when the scenario was read to him.

In the story of "The Knock-out" Ovey, playing the part of Jerry, a neglected swain, attempts by divers means to remove his more fortunate rival, and his most annoyed obstacle from the path that leads to the realization of his object—a pretty girl's hand. The rival, however, is on the alert and in retaliation for one of Jerry's efforts pushes the pestiferous comedian into the street. An auto whizzes by over his prone form. As he attempts to arise and the speeding machine knocks him down directly into the path of another car, which passes over without harming him. The machines pass by in a maze of whirling outlines and Jerry has the time of his life trying to escape unhurt. He eventually reaches the sidewalk, but not until after he has gone through a scene that in the finished pictures proves a capital bit of comedy.

BONNELL SECURES CALIFORNIA RIGHTS TO "FALL OF PRZEMSYL"

Harry Bonnell, director of publicity for the Western States Vaudeville Association of San Francisco, has secured the California State rights for the five-reel European war film, "The Fall of Przemsyl," a late release by the American Correspondents Film Company of New York City.

The attraction will be booked out of the offices of the W. S. V. A., the actual State right purchasers, and the public launching will be under the personal direction of Mr. Bonnell, who is negotiating for the territorial rights of other Far Western States and also for the Hawaiian Islands.

PELDER JOINS KRITERION

John Pelder, formerly sales manager for Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and sales manager for Pathé Freres, has joined the new Kriterian Sales Corporation, and will make a two weeks' tour of Eastern cities to close contracts with exchanges for handling products of the Kriterion, under the management of Newman and Sonneborn.

Mr. Pelder left Tuesday night for Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, and will possibly visit St. Louis and other points in the Middle West.

LEAGUE PRESIDENT MAKES PLEA

President Herrington of the Motion picture Exhibitors League of America has issued an appeal to managers of motion picture theatres throughout the country to refrain from showing pictures depicting lynching scenes in the Leo Frank case.

His telegram, recently sent to Motion Picture News, sounds a note in the right direction. If pictures of this character are put on the screen the friends of censorship will, as indicated in Mr. Herrington's message have a strong argument against the contention of exhibitors that film regulation by anybody except the theatregoing public is unnecessary. The telegram is as follows:

Motion Picture News,
220 West Forty-second street, N. Y.

To exhibitors of the United States and Canada: As president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America I appeal to you to refuse to show any pictures or scenes depicting the Leo Frank lynching. Let us show the people that censorship is unnecessary. Take no chances of degrading the business.

FRED. J. HERRINGTON.

V-L-S-E TRADE MARK IS DISTINCTIVE

The trade mark selected to brand V-L-S-E productions finally decided upon by the Big Four, is like the policies and features of the four affiliated companies—decidedly distinctive.

The new trade mark, which will soon be seen on the screens of the entire nation, and later when the European differences have been settled on the screens of the entire world, consists of a number of intricate parts representing the separate individualities, aims and ambitions of the four companies, yet all welded into a concrete unit, forming a perfect circle representing the V-L-S-E as a whole.

THE NEW V-L-S-E TRADE MARK

In its entirety, the new trade mark is simplicity itself, yet by the unique arrangement of alternate white and black quarter circles, it is a trade mark that at once indelibly impresses itself on the mind and for that reason it will quickly familiarize itself, and in a short space of time will be recognized as the mark that brands the big picture play productions by the Big Four.

The new trade mark was designed and drawn by Charles J. Giegerich, publicity director of the V-L-S-E.

HOSPITAL FUND FOR AID OF SCREEN PLAYERS

A MOVEMENT is on foot in the film trade to create a Motion Picture Hospital fund, the chief object of which will be to secure proper medical treatment for those connected with the industry who may be incapacitated through illness or injury.

While it is a fact that in practically all cases where a player is injured in the course of his work he is taken care of by his company, it has been pointed out that many times players, and especially employees working for small salaries, are taken ill and have insufficient means to obtain prompt hospital attention.

During the past week the subject has aroused attention in the trade centering around New York City, following a letter sent out suggesting that contributions be forwarded to representatives of the "Moving Picture World," the "Dramatic Mirror," MOTION PICTURE NEWS and the "Morning Telegraph." The responses have been sufficient in number to indicate that in the project there is a substantial interest. A meeting of the temporary committee was held on August 31 at the Screen Club.

MOSS WILL PRODUCE "ONE DAY," SEQUEL TO "THREE WEEKS"

B. S. Moss, president of the Moss Motion Picture Corporation, sponsor of "The Salamander," a picturization of Owen Johnson's novel, which in play form was produced at the Harris theatre, New York, announces he has also secured the screen rights for "One Day," a sequel to "Three Weeks," Elinor Glyn's well-known story. It is the intention of the B. S. Moss Corporation to engage a prominent legitimate star for the role of Opal. They are also negotiating with a former dramatic critic of wide literary experience to make the screen adaptation.

"The Salamander" is approaching completion under the guidance of Arthur Donaldson as director, and a definite release date will be set within the next two weeks.

Discussing the plans of the Moss Corporation, President Moss said:

"On the completion of 'The Salamander' we will place in rehearsal a gripping, thrilling photoplay of particular moment, dealing in an unusual manner with politics. A prominent legitimate star will enact the lead in this production. Last but not least, it is the intention of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation to conduct a coast to coast advertising campaign in behalf of the many features we intend giving production to within the very near future."

DUSTIN FARNUM GOES TO COAST FOR PALLAS ENGAGEMENT

Dustin Farnum, who is under a long time contract to make pictures exclusively for Pallas Pictures, left Sunday noon for the Pallas Studio at Los Angeles to be gone for several months.

His first picture for Pallas will be Booth Tarkington's "Gentleman from Indiana," which Mr. Farnum hopes to make even more successful than "Captain Courtesy," which has won such universal commendation not only from exhibitors in the United States but from foreign buyers who unanimously have agreed that this picture represents one of the greatest film triumphs. Mr. Farnum's second picture will probably be "Davy Crockett." His third, according to his present plans will be "The Call of the Cumberlands," a graphic, heart gripping story from the pen of Charles Neville Buck, published serially in Munsey's Magazine and later issued in book form by W. J. Watt & Co., who report for it an extensive sale.

When Mr. Farnum left New York he carried with him several works by prominent authors, which he intends to review, with the idea of making the coming Pallas Pictures releases a fitting accompaniment of the pictures which are to be released the coming year upon the Paramount Program.

LOS ANGELES SCREAM CLUB SOON TO BE REORGANIZED

Los Angeles, Aug. 30.

The organization jestingly named the Scream Club and composed of studio publicity men and trade paper representatives, formed early this year, is to be reorganized at a dinner and meeting to be held in the near future at one of the downtown Los Angeles cafes. The purpose of this organization is a by-weekly get-together-and-acquainted meeting for the benefit of all concerned. The prime movers in the reorganization of the joke club are Kenneth McGaffey, Lasky's; Kenneth O'Hara, NYMP studio; Bennie Ziedman, Griffith's studio; C. W. Pope, Clarke Irvine, Richard Willis, and J. C. Jessen, of Motion Picture News.

Pathé Launches 14,000-Mile "Seeing America" Tour

Polly Pathe in Real Life Grace Wheeler Green, and Mrs. Frances Fisher Byers Leave New York with Cameraman on Extended Motion Picture Trip

POLLY PATHÉ, accompanied by Mrs. Frances Fisher Byers, special correspondent for Pathé-Freres, are leaving New York this week on an extended tour of the United States, visiting all the large cities of the country, and taking pictures of historic and other places of interest. An expert camera man accompanies them, and will take about 150,000 feet of film, which will be released about December 15. The film will be called "Seeing America First." Pathé-Freres have the hearty co-operation of the chambers of commerce of all the principal cities for this tour, and have received hundreds of letters from prominent citizens, officials and heads of large organizations, extending the freedom of their cities to the two Pathé visitors. The travelers will cover 14,000 miles according to their present itinerary, taking in all important locations from coast to coast, going as far north as Canada, and down to the Mexican border, where they will have an escort from the regular army. Arrangements have been made to interview the Governors of all the States and other high officials.

Polly Pathé in private life is Miss Grace Wheeler Green, daughter of Mrs. Franklin Green and the late Franklin Green, the noted architect. Miss Green is well known in society since her debut three years ago, both in New York, as well as in Paris, London and Brussels. She was educated in Brussels where her parents maintained a residence for several seasons.

Mrs. Frances Fisher Byers is one of the best known newspaper women in the country, and is also well known in New York and New Jersey society. She comes from distinguished newspaper ancestry. Her great uncles, James and Erastus Brooks, founded the New York "Mail and Express," now the "Evening Mail." Her grandfather, Frederick Brooks, was one of the pioneer newspaper editors of California. Mrs. Byers has been on the staff of the "New York Herald" and the "Philadelphia Record." She has also been press agent for Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Ellen Terry and other notables.

She is a member of the Pen and Brush Club, of which Miss Ida Tarbell is president.

HAINES, EQUITABLE STAR, HAS LONG STAGE RECORD

Robert T. Haines, the actor, is making his debut in moving pictures in "Human Cargoes," a five-reel photodrama of political life, written by Walter McNamara, which the author is producing for the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation at their studio at Flushing, L. I. In this play he appears in the role of "Bill Madden."

Mr. Haines has been for years one of the foremost actors of America. After graduating from the University of Missouri he made his stage debut in 1891 with Robert Downing. With Thomas W. Keane in repertoire and with James O'Neill in "The Count of Monte Cristo," the young man repeated the good impression he had made. In rapid succession he achieved successes in leading roles with Walker Whiteside in "Darkest Russia," and then in "The Cherry Pickers," "In the Palace of the King" (in which he played Don Juan with Viola Allen), and in leading roles with Mrs. Fiske, with whom he was associated for two years. In "The Darling of the Gods" at first he shared the honors with Blanche Bates, but later was starred in it on the road. Next he starred in "Once Upon a Time" and "The Coward," the latter by George Broadhurst. This was followed by a long engagement as leading man for Robert Mantell.

WILSON WILL SEE "OLD GLORY"

"Guarding Old Glory," F. O. Nielsen's patriotic picture, is to be shown to President Wilson probably in the next few days, W. H. Rudolph, Mr. Nielsen's Eastern representative having received word from Secretary Tumulty to that effect. The President is the only official of importance who has not seen this picture.

A request has also been made by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Navy League, which, by the way, already numbers 15,000, to have the picture shown to them at their forthcoming meeting in Washington.

Mr. Rudolph reports that he expects to close out the entire Eastern and Southern territory within the next week.

"A LITTLE BROTHER OF THE RICH"

(Broadway Universal Feature—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE are two stories of more or less distinct courses in Joseph Medill Paterson's "A Little Brother of the Rich," both of which equally share the attention of the audience. The one relates in a pleasing style the reformation of a brilliant actor who at first is a miserable slave of drink; the other portrays in quite fearless terms the life of the "idle rich," a definition evidently synonymous with profligate, in this instance.

Although the role of Henry Leamington, the actor, in which part Hobart Bosworth appears, creates attentive sympathy in every stage of the picture, the title character of Paul Potter, rendered by Hobart Henley, is really the center of attraction. Potter, fresh from college, where he has been idolized as the greatest football player of the day, discards his old sweetheart and thoughtlessly rushes on to fulfill his ambitions. He marries a notorious woman, with a past considerably well cluttered with husbands and lovers.

Tiring of her company, Potter goes back to his former sweetheart, now a noted actress playing with Leamington, whom she has completely reformed. She accepts his attentions, believing that she still loves him, but when he suggests that they lead an existence a la Boheme, she renounces him and turns back to Leamington just in time to save him from reverting to his former existence.

As a whole the picture is effective. The contrasts are strong; on one side is the licentious life of the "idle rich," on the other the sweet life led by the actress and her commendably successful efforts directed to save Leamington from his almost unconquerable curse.

Despite a few unrealities, such as college men pictorially designated by sport shirts, glaring blazers and a considerable amount of rum, Universal exhibitors cannot afford to miss the picture, for as a dramatic number it well measures up to the standardized merits of the program.

Jane Novak as the actress and Maude George as Potter's wife give effective and contrasting performances in their respective roles. Otis Turner and Mr. Bosworth collaborated in the adaptation, while Mr. Turner directed the work.

The scene in which the express train demolishes the automobile lends a real thrill to the picture, while the midnight lawn fete is a characteristic scene from the offering's representation of the life indulged in by the "idle rich."

"A YANKEE FROM THE WEST"

(Majestic-Mutual Masterpicture—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE signal beauty of Signe Auen and the orthochromatic qualities of photographic film are responsible for the results obtained in this picture. That they are a potent combination is evident from the fact that a very acceptable picture has been made out of a hackneyed story, filled with the same old characters which our fathers and mothers loved. When it comes to that, there is no reason why we shouldn't wink at them too.

But Signe Auen—our fathers and mothers haven't seen her yet. As a Scandinavian beauty, fresh from the northland, she fills the part to perfection. As the fettered, uncomplaining slave she is demure and ingenuous, and she portrays the keen Scandinavian intelligence and ability to rise from unfavorable surroundings admirably. The raw film shows its value in the charming outdoor scenes, and the general excellence of the photography throughout, which adds greatly to the value of the picture.

Perhaps one reason why the plot is hackneyed is that it was originally written by Opie Read—and that means some years back. Gunhild (Signe Auen) idealizes young "Hell-in-the-Mud" and even holds faith in him when he is accused of a hold-up, and his partner in crime tells her the circumstances. He goes away, and later meets the girl.

The partner in the hold-up also appears and tries to force the girl to flee with him, but "Hell-in-the-Mud" trains up for a fight, and knocks him out. He then returns to the railroad the money stolen years before, and the railroad head turns it over to the girl as "a present to the wife of an honest man." Miss Auen is supported in the cast by Wallace Reid, Tom Wilson, Josephine Crowell, Chris Lynton, Bill Brown, Al. W. Filson and George Seigmann.

"THE PHANTOM HAPPINESS"

(Lubin—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY IRENE PAGE SOLOMON

A PECULIAR form of the triangle eternal this. George Terwilliger has made an unusual situation in having the wife offer money to her rival to buy back her husband's love.

In real life the situation is reversed. If any money enters into such transactions, it is the injured party who sues the guilty one for alienation of affections.

But average audiences are not so critical of inconsistencies provided the picture is interesting enough and the acting is good enough. This is both, in addition to being well directed.

ALICE'S CARD PARTY IN FULL SWING

Earl Metcalfe is the husband, Ormi Hawley and Rosetta Brice the women and William Turner the lawyer.

Joseph Kaufman did the directing. The chacacters played the attractive Ormi and the clever Rosetta are likewise reversed from the usual order of their work, for Rosetta is the injured wife, Ormi the seductive siren.

Don the husband, an author, finds himself attracted to Mary because she is the living image of his latest heroine. At this important psychological moment, Alice must needs inherit a fortune and start to splurge. The social climb irritates the author to the point of seeking solace from Mary. She fans the flame of his ardor and he and Alice are on the verge of a separation.

Alice, repentant and lonely, seeks her lawyer. He advises her to offer a large sum of money to Mary provided the latter will leave Don alone and persuade him to return to Alice. Don overhears the interview, sees his wife's grief and the reaction sets in. Telling Alice their happiness is only a phantom, he leaves her in spite of protests and returns to his "ain fireside."

"THE HEART OF JENNIFER"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture commences with the lightest conceivable sort of romance, but with each successive scene its action becomes tenser, its situations carry greater dramatic force until at the termination nothing short of tragedy has been attained. One may speak truthfully in saying that the story embraces the entire category of human emotions, from light laughter to tearful sympathy. None have been ommitted in this vivid portrait sketched by Edith Barnard Delano, so to her credit lies the success of the picture.

Miss Delano has selected her principal male character from that class of heroic personalities who believe all that they hear. Another hero than Jim Murray would have knocked his wife's deprecator down, but not so Jim. On the mere words of the villain he bases a firm conviction that his wife has erred in her younger days and his awakening comes only after heated turmoil.

But although Jim disbelieves in his wife he protects her even when he suspects her of murdering Weldon. And then it developes his sister had done the killing and had then taken her own life, and so at last Jim realizes that Weldon was the person to be doubted, for Weldon was a villain from every angle.

Hazel Dawn, carrying the role of Jennifer, who becomes the wife of Jim, is charming in every stage of the story. She is good in her playful romance with Jim, and later when she sorrowfully accepts the scorn of her husband, leaving her exoneration to time and Jim's better judgment, she is entirely capable of her part.

Irene Howley as Agnes Murray won the hearts of the Strand audience from first to last. Her capricious manners in the early phases of the picture excited much merriment, while her sad predicament in subsequent scenes drew equally on the sympathies.

James Kirkwood gives a finished performance as Jim. He is a worthy opposite to Miss Dawn and brings out the required characteristics of his part with pronounced skill. Mr. Kirkwood directed the picture and has done well in this respect also. Harry Brown as Weldon and Russell Bassett as Jennifer's father complete the named cast.

The most intense situations of the play come when Agnes contemplates the murder of Weldon. Agnes refuses to tell her brother her trouble despite his entreaties. Added to this there is the tension created by the separation of Jennifer and Jim. These truly are excellent samples of worthy construction.

"THE CALL OF THE DANCE"

(Kalem-General—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS "Broadway Favorites" film was built especially to carry Yancsi Dolly, and viewed from this standpoint it is a distinct success. The dancer has pretty much her own way throughout the story, and she is always pleasant to look at. However, her part calls for a lot of emotional work, and as an emotional actress Yancsi Dolly dances beautifully; even in the tensest scenes she is as light on her feet as any balloon, and when rescued for the third time from a band of professional abductors, she hails her freedom with a flick of the foot possible to no one except a Dolly.

And yet, those who conceived the idea of featuring Yancsi in such a film, have sown well, for overlooking the fact that a dancer cannot be made into a serious actress, it is a great thing to be able to see her dance on the screen.

Only the favored part of the country has seen her in real life, and the balance will—probably—hail the chance to see her in pictures. The story will not grip many persons who have passed out of their teens. Miss Dolly is a child of the slums, with a leaning toward dancing. She is abducted and rescued, and finally is a great success on the stage.

The young district attorney who has become interested in her, finally locates her, and at the same time discovers that his uncle is the head of the vice-trust which he has been pursuing for months. Before an understanding is reached three men have been killed in the dancer's presence and there have been numerous fights and automobile chases. Guy Coombs is excellent as the district attorney. The scenes of stage life are remarkably true to nature.

"TO CHERISH AND PROTECT"

(Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS subject which held the screen at the Vitagraph theatre during the week of August 22 comes from the pen of William Vaughan Petit. It is a strong melodrama that due to its unconventional theme and intense situations will be received agreeably.

Under the direction of William Humphrey the many dramatic possibilities of the story have been brought out with clearness and power. The scenes are effective and the appropriate light effects which are now expected from all Vitagraph productions are not lacking in this.

The story hinges on the corrupt business methods of three brokers in partnership. Finding themselves totally without funds, they borrow money on a customer's bonds, but this is also lost. As a result two of the members, Poole and Bream, decide that the three draw lots to see who shall commit suicide, thus enabling the firm to exist on the dead man's life insurance. Crane is loath to accept this proposition but the other two who plan to "fix" the game on Crane force him to accept. Crane of course is elected to kill himself.

THE APPEAL

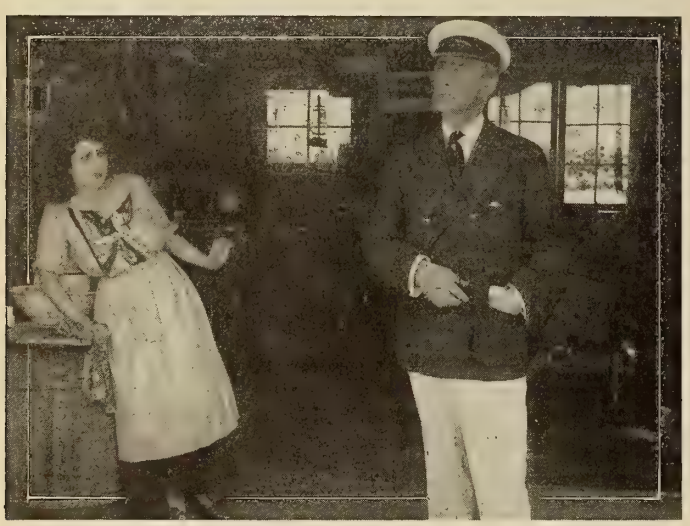
Instead he changes identities with a drowned man. Poole and Bream marries Crane's supposed widow. Then comes the return of Crane and the revealing of the two partners as villains. The death of Bream paves a way for a happy reconciliation between Crane and his wife.

Harry T. Morey as Crane gives a strong performance in this role, while Henry Northrup as Poole is a despicable villain and Gladden James a pitiable weak-willed partner in his crime. Estelle Mardo plays Mrs. Crane and Bobby Connelly gives a delightfully touching performance as the son. The scene in which Crane changes clothes with the drowned man could be made clearer by a subtitle.

"THE IMPOSTOR"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE



THIS William A. Brady feature stars no less a glittering personality than Josie Collins. The much talked about heroine of the "Passing Shows" and several other more or less well known musical comedies, effects not her entrance until the opening scene of the third reel flickers across the screen. But then there is no gainsaying the ability of the supporting cast headed by Alec Francis, and the presence of Miss Collins is beyond a doubt a box office asset hardly to be underestimated.

The story is of English source, being adapted from a play by Douglas Murray. As presented under the direction of Albert Capellani, the picture carries sufficient interest to rank it with the desirable numbers. The scene in which the old man draws his will in less than an instant is perhaps incredulous, but against this the good incidents of direction are arrayed in a mass that completely buries its insignificance.

The double exposures employed in those scenes in which Mr. Francis appears as twin brothers are so cleverly executed that the lay mind will hardly be able to fathom the fact that this part of the film has been exposed twice. Then, too, the scenes laid on the Atlantic seaboard are noticeable for their realism and faithfulness to detail. The camera work under the direction of Lucien Androit is consistent in its clarity.

Mr. Francis does exceptionally good work in his dual role. As old Sir Anthony, the harsh millionaire factory owner, he does some great bits of character work, while in exact contrast to this part, his interpretation of the carefree Blink is satisfying to see.

Josie Collins as "The Tearer," the faithful friend of Blink, is entirely capable of the part. Gouger, Blink's pal, is well played by Leslie Stowe. Summer Gard, E. M. Kimball and Dorothy Fairchild register effectively in supporting parts.

The interesting introduction employs about half of the five reels. Then Blink takes the place of his dead brother and rights all the wrongs committed by the Knight. He re-establishes the son in the family, makes things generally easy for the employees, in fact performs good deeds right and left, deeds that entirely satisfy the spectator.

"'NEATH CALVARY'S SHADOW"

(Selig Diamond Special—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS story owes a heavy debt, in fact its very life, to coincidence. Had not the various principals gone West at different times and settled in the same town, there could never have been the denouement which clears up everything, and sets everybody right before the spectatorts, if not before the world. The piece, however, is well cast and the settings and photography help to lift it a little above the commonplace.

A young clergyman finds a baby left on his doorstep soon after his sister has disappeared. As he is unable to explain the little one's origin, his fiancee breaks with him, and he is compelled to resign his parish. He goes to Nevada, where he falls in love with another girl, and her father wires East for information regarding him. Learning the situation, the marriage is forbidden.

Another man, Gordon, seeks the hand of the girl, but she loves the clergyman. About the same time a dancer, La Favorita, accuses Gordon of wronging her, and confronted with the pair, the clergyman recognizes his missing sister in the dancer. The parentage of the child is explained, and the marriage permitted.

The cast includes Virginia Kirtley, Wheeler Oakman, Fritzi Brunette, Marion Warner, Frank Mayo, and Georgia Oliver.

"THE MAJESTY OF THE LAW"

(Bosworth-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Majesty of the Law," by Julia Crawford Ivers, is a simple and direct story, yet withal it maintains a high standard of interest during the entire time it occupies the screen. It is purely narrative, which, in unfolding, develops several moments of suspense.

George Fawcett, who appears as old Judge Kent, will capture the hearts of all as soon as he is seen outside his court house patronizing three newsboys, so that none will be offended. Presiding in court Judge Kent is a stern and exacting administrator of the law, but in his private life he is captivatingly kind-hearted and generous, continually dispensing his bounty among the families dependent upon those he has sentenced to prison. Mr. Fawcett interprets this benevolent character with consummate skill.

THE MAGISTRATE PASSES JUDGMENT ON HIS OWN SON

William Desmond as the Judge's son, Charles Ruggles as the thoughtless Evans and Myrtle Stedman as Virginia Calhoun render support of meritorious calibre to Mr. Fawcett.

Twice is old Kent called upon to pass judgment on his son; once he believes him guilty of stealing, and again all things point to him as an embezzler. But in both instances the younger Kent is sacrificing his honor to shield another; first the brother of his sweetheart and afterwards to protect the young man who secured him a position.

Confessions coming from the real culprits definitely clear matters in favor of the young man and a happy reunion with his fiancee and father brings the attractive story to a close.

While "The Majesty of the Law" discloses nothing extraordinary, it is in every respect, including camera work and setting, a picture fully worthy to occupy its reserved position on the Paramount program.

KLEINE'S "THE SENTIMENTAL LADY" IN PRODUCTION

GEORGE KLEINE'S film version of Owen Davis' "The Sentimental Lady," featuring Irene Fenwick, now in course of work, will contain, as usual, a supporting cast of finished artists.

Richie Ling, Ben L. Taggart, Jack Devereaux, John Davidson, Frank Belcher, Thomas McGrath, Lila Barclay, Anna Reader and Della Connor are names long familiar to theatre-goers.

"THE IRISH IN AMERICA"

(Lubin—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY IRENE PAGE SOLOMON

THE best of the three Irish plays produced by Sidney Olcott for Lubin. The beauty of the scenery of the Emerald Isle is well brought out. The types are well portrayed and the atmosphere is well preserved. The scenes of the boats bringing the emigrants over the bounding deep are beautifully rendered. The scenes of the landing of emigrants at Ellis Island are quite interesting and instructive as well.

PEGGY FINDS DAN

But when it comes to the adventures of Dan and Peggy in America when each arrives separately, they are not so convincing. Dan gets along too wonderfully well in a short time for a greenhorn both in New York and out West.

As for Peggy she evades the immigration authorities as no one ever has or will. Then she travels not only from County Kerry in her old shawl and no hat, but goes all across the United States in the same garb. The latter seems impossible, once a girl has met other American girls as Peggy is shown to do.

Dan, loving Peggy, is too poverty stricken to marry her, so he sells his last cow and turns to America. A letter of introduction to a prosperous Irishman gets him a good job and in no time he has captured some noted burglars and gets a big reward. Westward ho! is now his watchword. Here he is welcomed with open arms by the miners and almost at once strikes pay dirt.

Peggy, losing her aunt, scrapes enough money to also seek the new land. Not being able to land under the immigration laws, she is smuggled through in a basket of laundry. Dan's address is found and Peggy finds him across the continent without trouble. He is still true, so they are married at once. Valentine Grant, Laurene Santley, Arthur Donaldson, Charles McConnell support Sidney Olcott.

"MIND OVER MOTOR"

(Essanay—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

ESSANAY has again succeeded in transfering to the screen all the spontaneous humor and human interest that abounds in Mary Roberts Rhinehart's "Tish" stories, as they appear in the "Saturday Evening Post."

The same cast that so ably enacted "The Came on Thunder Cloud," the first offering of this series, do equally good work in "Mind Over Motor," which will be released on September 11—Camille D'Arcy as Tish, Marian Skinner and Louise Crolius as Aggie and Lizzie, her maiden lady friends, and Edmund F. Cobb and Eugene Acker. A most pleasing addition to this cast is June Keith, who in the role of Bettina displays her natural vivacity and attractiveness to good advantage.

The settings, laid in the small towns and mountain regions of Tennessee, are most appropriate, particularly the grand stand and race track scene of the county fair grounds on which the amusing automobile race is staged.

Tish has pressed into service her nephew's two-passenger runabout to carry herself, accompanied by Lizzie and Aggie, to the home of Belinda. Belinda's mother has asked Tish to champerone her vivacious daughter during the family's absence and try to suppress the love affair that has grown up between Belinda and Jasper, a neighboring suitor.

At the end of the journey Tish is arrested for speeding and is rescued from the riot that follows by a suave but crooked automobile race promoter. He wins Tish's gratitude and induces her to back a bogus automobile race. In vain do Aggie and Lizzie expostulate, and equally futile are Tish's nephew's attempts to dissuade her from investing her fortune.

Finally, however, Tish is convinced that she is a victim of a conspiracy and sets out to do some double crossing herself. She puts sand into the gasoline tanks of all the cars except the one to be driven by Jasper, Belinda's sweetheart. One by one the cars drop out and Jasper is about to come out victorious when he is disabled. Tish replaces him in the driver's seat and finishes the race, although she has to push the machine across the tape at the end.

"THE WHIRLPOOL"

(Essanay—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

EXCELLENT opportunities are afforded to a capable company in this story and they take advantage of them in a gratifying manner. Supplemented with elaborate settings and the best of photography, the whole is a most satisfactory production.

Nell Craig, as Mrs. Howard, the young wife of the district attorney, is neglected through her husband's press of business, and is beset by an unscrupulous young artist who does his best to compromise her. Realizing that things have gone to far, she tells him she will not see him again, but he telephones that unless she calls at his studio he will kill himself. A friend of the district attorney hears the conversation, and realizing the trap which the artist has set, hurries to the studio.

As he arrives he hears a shot, and finds Mrs. Howard trembling in an ante-room. She flees, and in order to shield her, he refuses to explain, and is arrested. He is saved at the last moment by a woman who appears and confesses the murder, explaining that the artist had wronged her. Assisting Nell Craig in the cast are John Cossar, Warda Howard, Herbert Heyes and John Thorn.

"THE WILD CAT"

(Lubin—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY IRENE PAGE SOLOMON

THE wild cat here is a poor little girl on whom her parents have imposed a silly name and a still more silly form of dress. When the father's plans to inherit his uncle's money are proved futile in spite of the child's name of "Vanity" at uncle's sarcastic request, the father goes crazy and Vanity has to keep up her exaggerated frills and furbelows for his sake.

"VANITY" IN ALL HER FINERY

Three men come into her life. John teases her, causing her to act like a little wild cat. Dick soothes her and gives her good advice. Carr tempts her and tries to lead her astray. In despair the poor girl knows not what to do. She desperately proposes to Dick, but he is too startled to respond in kind. When John starts again to tease, Vanity as a last resort turns to Carr. Dick rescues her before it is too late, finding that he loves her after all.

The plot while rather unusual, has elements of interest, especially in the contrasting character studies.

P. M. Powell produced the scenario of Mac E. Jones, and the leads are taken by Lucille Younge, George Routh, Leola McLean, Gordon Murray, Robert Gray, W. E. Parsons and H. Wells.

"A CONTINENTAL GIRL"

(Continental Photo Play Corporation—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY IRENE PAGE SOLOMON

WITH a clean full story of love, romance and patriotism, capable actors, fine direction, clear photography, and many thrills for the spectator—this first picture of the Continental should win much popularity. Outside of a few minor defects which only the hypercritical would cavil at, the picture deserves much praise.

As Joseph Adelman not only wrote the original play, but also adapted it for the screen, and then directed his own work, he naturally put the right spirit into the production.

Great attention has been paid to detail; all the historical characters are correctly visualized. All the sets are good replicas of colonial interiors; all the furnishings are real antiques, and not gingerbread imitations. Even the exteriors are of houses one hundred or more years old. Hence the true atmosphere of the time of the play—those stirring days when America gained her independence—is well preserved.

May Ward, although new to the screen, has already won fame on the vaudeville stage. With her blonde curls, pleasant smile, petite figure, she makes an attractive Flossie Burgett, the heroine of the story.

Although the part does not require any great depth of emotion, Miss Ward fully meets the demands of her character. Incidentally she is called upon to do many strenuous stunts, the climax of which is the climb to the top of a forty foot pole with a flag in her hand, and right gallantly does she perform her task.

Elys Lotus as Aunt Dorothy, Misses Scott, Davis, Baresford as the friends do capable work.

William Sorell as Flossie's lover lacks ardor in his love making, but perhaps in those days dignity was more in keeping with the time. He is good in his soldierly parts.

The part of Deerfoot, the Indian, is well portrayed by Jack Murray, who although not of Indian blood, makes a specialty of character studies of the noble red man.

William H. Cone, well known on the stage, gives a good character study of Jasper, the old trapper.

Olaf Skavlan as the Tory, Captain Staunton, is creditable. The same may be said of George Harcourt and George Brugger in their respective parts of Mr. Burgett and Major Cameron.

The story tells how Flossie Burgett loved by two soldiers naturally plights her troth to the American. Thereupon the Tory becomes the enemy not only of her sweetheart, but of her family. A duel fought between the two men only fans to deeper flame the animostity of Staunton, who was worsted.

The villain tries to persecute the girl, he meets his just deserts at the hand of Deerfoot, who kills him with a rifle after receiving his own death wound. The leap of the captain from a high cliff and his death in the water are filled with excitement.

After the war is over and the United States born, all ends happily on Christmas Day with several pairs of lovers made happy.

The armies at the Battle of Saratoga is a scene deserving mention, particularly when the soldiers are scaling the cliffs. The Declaration of Independence is shown with its original setting and the signers true to life. The whole film is filled with beautiful views of water and woodland.

"THE MAN TRAIL"

(Essanay—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE MAN TRAIL" as adapted from the novel by Henry Oyen and produced by E. H. Calvert is essentially a picturized novel. The love element is present, as is to be expected, but in this case romance has been placed as secondary to the novel proper which pictures two men, one fighting in the cause of right and the other in the cause of wrong. In this story Mr. Oyen laid this fierce struggle in a lumber camp, a setting ideally suited to successfully carry this sort of action.

Mr. Calvert has managed to convincingly convey the atmosphere of the lumber camp to the witness. The extras are brawny and grizzled, the various houses in the lumber camp are realistic and the habits of the men seem true to life, but Mr. Calvert's pictured forests look peculiarly thin and weak. But after all, this is only one consideration and the stirring action combined with the remaining realistic effects do away with its importance.

Punctuating the progress of the action at various intervals throughout the six reels fist fights of the most virile quality appear. Richard Travers as John, the young man who fights on the side of Right is usually to be found in the midst of them. For a final fight a bar-room is totally wrecked by two factions of lumberjacks and subsequently it is burned. The fire scenes in all probability were taken at night and are very good.

John after all his troubles, comes out on top, and "Bull" Bart (Thomas McLarnie) meets his death in a street gun fight, of such a sort that is associated with "The Virginian." And John wins the heart of his uncle's adopted daughter (June Keith). It is a very simple story considered as a whole, but its counterplots and thrilling situations make it exceedingly interesting most all of the time.

Some scenes lying in the first two reels and a few in the others would undoubtedly benefit by a carefully swung pair of shears. Padding is not necessary in this story, and in five reels "The Man Trail" would receive a hearty reception. However, it is good in its present state, but the improvements might easily be made.

John's uncle, "Wolf" is played well by Ernest Maupain and Old Nels, a sympathetic character, is equally as well interpreted by Arthur W. Bates. Others are John Lorenz, Betty Scott, Jack Meredith, Hugh Thompson, Sam Cramer and John Cossar.

"IN TRUST"

(American—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

THIS picture is artistically produced in the wild mountain regions of the West, and portrays a red-blooded story containing plenty of hard riding and hard fighting. The cast, which contains Vivian Rich and Charles Bartlett as the principals, assisted by Jack Richardson as the "heavy," does excellent work.

A young Western girl is captured by a band of cattle rustlers and carried off to their shack in the mountains. Here the outlaws draw cards to see who shall own the girl. A young stranger wins in the draw, but is forced to whip the entire crowd single-handed before he can depart with his prize.

When he has the helpless girl in his power his manhood conquers the baser instincts and he gives her a loaded pistol with which to protect herself from him. That night while the outlaw is supposedly asleep, the girl steals to his side with the intention of shooting him. She thinks better of it and returns to her bed of boughs.

The next day they escape from a posse which is out in search of them and become lost in the wilderness. Entirely exhausted, they arrive at the girl's house and she protects the outlaw from the sheriff while he escapes.

"THE UNSUSPECTED ISLES"

(Rialto-Mutual—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

A RATHER intense drama, built along conventional lines, is this vehicle for the exploitation of Fania Marinoff, and a more or less capable supporting company. Considerable ingenuity and care has been used in the selection of the locations, and an acceptable whole is the result.

An American tourist entices a native princess from her people on a South Sea Island, and brings her to New York, where she dances in cafes and becomes the pet of Ned Astor and his gilded companions.

She is rescued from this life by an old sea captain, aboard whose ship she left the island, and is hidden in a New England village. Later she returns to her old home, to find that a rival has attempted to win the affections of her native lover. The rival repents, and the two girls plot revenge on the American who betrayed the princess. The ending is especially dramatic and the situations are well handled.

The cast in detail is: The Princess Castelene, Fania Marinoff; Lisa, her native lover, T. Morse Koupal; Claud Dixon, a New York clubman, John Reinhard; Lores, Castelene's rival, Flavia Arcaro; Ned Astor, a young millionaire, Sydney Mason; Grace Dunning, Helen Ronan; Uncle Ezra, keeper of the light, James Levering; Captain Gilroy, Phin W. Nares.

Miss Marinoff's dancing is an entertaining interlude in the dramatic action. John Reinhard lends able support as the dissolute clubman. The other members of the company are worthy of proportionate mention in their various roles.

Most of the settings are good in atmospheric quality.

"NEAL OF THE NAVY"

(Panama-Pathé—Third Episode)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE manner in which the interest is sustained thus far in this serial is promising. This chapter is entitled "The Failure," and is concerned with Neal's attempt to gain appointment to Annapolis. Much of the detail of the examination is slurred over in careless fashion, but this is necessary because there is so much else to be told. No trouble is spared in making the thrilling incidents as thrilling as possible, and the director is impressed with the fact that in such a serial none of the qualities of the action must be lost.

Neal takes the examination for the appointment, and his paper is the best among a large number submitted. Joe Welcher, his foster brother, however, is also a candidate, and in order to discredit Neal he slips a stolen set of the examination questions into his rival's pocket. They are found, and Neal is barred. Undismayed, the boy determines to join the navy anyhow, and enlists as an ordinary seaman, with the hope of working up to a "mustang" commission.

Lillian Lorraine, as Annette, is pleasant to look at, but thrown upon her own resources, as one is before the camera, she shows a surprising lack of histrionic ability. This is more than recompensed by the work of William Courtleigh, Jr., as Neal.

HELEN RELYEA NOT APPALLED BY FRIDAY THE THIRTEENTH

HELEN RELYEA, who formerly was prominent on the legitimate stage, was elected a member of the Vitagraph Stock Company on Friday, August 13. Miss Relyea considers it the luckiest day of her life, and is looking forward to making as big a success in motion pictures as she is on the speaking stage.

PRUDENTIAL FILM BEGINS CONSTRUCTION OF EXTENSIVE PLANT AT WORCESTER

Boston, Sept. 1.

The Prudential Film Corporation has begun construction of its plant at the corner of Main and Stearns streets, in Worcester, Mass. There are 37,000 square feet of land in the plot, and on this site the company will build an administration building, open air stage, glass winter studio, scene docks and dressing rooms.

Edward B. Kinsila, photoplay studios architect, who is working on the plans for the proposed film city at College Point, L. I., visited Worcester this week and pronounced the site ideal for the company's purposes. The administration building, facing Main street, will be of Tudor style architecture and will be fronted by an ornamental fountain; the walls will be brick.

The main studio will be constructed entirely of glass, with a skeleton steel framework. In the rear of the studio facing an open court will be two glass doors, constructed so that their removal will necessitate but a few minutes' work. One side of the studio thus thrown open will give natural backgrounds to pictures calling for outdoor effects. Room will be left in the outer court for an artificial pond. The open air stage, will be 110 by 100 feet. The dressing rooms, scene docks and laboratories will be of brick with steel framework.

NORMA TALMADGE STAR IN NATIONAL FEATURE, "THE LEPER"

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, August 30.

At the National Film Corporation studio this week the production of the third feature was taken up under the direction of Bruce Mitchell. This will consist of six reels, and is entitled "The Leper." The story and scenario were written by Mr. Mitchell and Norma Talmadge, who will be featured in the production. It pertains to an eminent surgeon who contracted leprosy while working in the New York slums, who when forced to go to the leper colony is abandoned by his wife, who becomes infatuated for a time with another man of the "parlor snake" variety played by Alan Forrest. The story is to be published in book form and will soon be on the market. Scenes for this production were made in New York and Chicago. At the former city many were taken in the ghetto.

FILM PRODUCERS WILL BE READY TO RELEASE IN OCTOBER

Los Angeles, Aug. 30.

OFFICERS of the Film Producers, Inc., are rapidly completing their arrangements and getting everything in readiness for their first release, which will be made some time in October, the organization of the company having been delayed because of matters pertaining to the character of the organization and peculiar conditions of the incorporation franchise.

The contract with Duehem Brothers, of San Francisco, for the making of all prints has been signed, and work of building the laboratory will be taken up immediately.

James A. White, with offices in the Longacre Building, New York City, who for ten years was associated with the Edison Company, and is now New York representative of the British Film Company, has been appointed Eastern representative for the Film Producers, and will take care of details in that territory

ALLEN TAKES "OLD GLORY" FOR SOUTHERN SEABOARD

J. B. ALLEN, vice-president of the Southern Film Corporation of Jacksonville, Florida, made a hurried trip from Jacksonville, and closed with W. H. Rudolph for F. O. Nielsen's Peace and Preparedness picture, "Guarding Old Glory," for North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky and Tennessee. The picture will receive its premier in the South Jacksonville, Florida, on Labor Day, under the auspices of the leading newspapers and prominent citizens of the town and the Navy League, after which it will be seen in the larger cities of the South.

The Southern Film Corporation is also handling "The German Side of the War" and "Little Sunset." Mr. Allen reports that he opened "The German Side of the War" pictures at the Victoria theatre in Charleston, South Carolina, last week, and played in one day to more than 4,000 people.

ONE-REEL FEATURES BY OCTOBER 22 IS KALEM PLAN

ACTING upon the result of its canvass of exhibitors, in which they expressed a preference for short pictures, rather than long features, the Kalem company will inaugurate a new policy and bring out a new series of films next month. William Wright, of Kalem, in making the announcement this week, said that beginning October 22 the two-reel picture released on alternate Fridays will be discontinued, and on every Friday an episode of "The Ventures of Marguerite" will be released.

"'The Ventures of Marguerite' will really be a one-reel feature," said Mr. Wright. "There will be a series of episodes, but all will be detached, and each will be a complete picture in itself. The picture will feature Marguerite Courtot, who has been selected, not alone for her beauty and ability, but because, to our minds, she typifies the young American girl who is to be the heroine of these pictures.

"Marguerite is to be the orphaned daughter of an extremely wealthy man, who gives her time and money to righting the wrongs she finds on every hand. Her various ventures lead her into unique adventures, but she maintains the character of the fresh, full-blooded, athletic American girl all the way through. Each venture will be a complete story in itself, and it will be our aim to make these single-reelers as snappy, entertaining and compact as a story can be made. We expect to tell as much in 1,000 feet of film in the way of a story as is contained in the average three- and even four-reel feature."

FAMOUS MODISTE SHOP IS BACKGROUND FOR KLEINE SUBJECT

FERLE HELLER'S internationally known modiste shop in Fifth avenue was last week used for a series of unique scenes in a forthcoming Kleine-Grandin subject, entitled "The Fashion Shop." All of madame's pretty manikins and many of her most beautiful sample gowns acted as a fitting background for the work of dainty Ethel Grandin.

Madame gave more than her consent. She personally assisted in the selection of gowns and permitted electricians to string a row of Allison-Hathaway lamps throughout the establishment.

"The Fashion Shop" will be released by George Kleine through the General Film Company in October.

FROHMAN AMUSEMENT WILL RELEASE THROUGH PATHE EXCHANGES

PATHÉ announces that the Frohman Amusement Corporation will, in the future, release its pictures through Pathé. This new alliance will be of great interest to the trade, and give even greater strength to the Pathé program.

The great resources of the Frohman Amusement Corporation in the way of valuable plays is too well known to require comment, and Gold Rooster play releases from them may be expected in the near future.

WARREN COMPLETES "DIVORCED," WITH HILDA SPONG, FOR EQUITABLE

EDWARD WARREN has completed for the Equitable company at the Crystal studios a five reel subject entitled "Divorced," featuring Hilda Spong, supported by a strong cast.

Mr. Warren recently produced several comedies featuring Margot Williams, whose hit in "Experience" is still remembered. He was for two years general director for Blache, now producing for the Metro program.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR THE BUSY EXHIBITOR

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"Among Those Killed." (Biograph. Mon., Sept. 6.)—This is one of those little gems which frequently find their way into the legion of one-reelers. It is a clever story, cleverly presented. A man who has succeeded in wrecking the life of a rival by sending him to prison on a false charge, receives letters saying that his own life will be forfeited as soon as his victim is released.

As the fatal day draws near, he takes up his abode in a secluded cabin, but the letters find their way there, and his terror grows. Finally he receives a letter saying the prisoner is at liberty and is on his way to the cabin. In a panic the doomed man poisons himself; and after the poison has commenced to work, he picks up a paper and reads that his pursuer has just been killed in a railway accident. Hector V. Sarno and Alan Hale carry off the honors in the cast.

"A Difference of Opinion." (Biograph. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 7.)—A good comedy. Two doctors, summoned to attend to a "sick" baby in a mining camp, disagree oer its ailment, which is only natural, as one is a dentist and the other a veterinary, but each finds his followers, and finally the camp is divided into two opposing factions.

When the friction is at its height, the child's father returns, and recognizing the two "doctors," both are driven out of camp. Then it appears that the baby was not sick at all. Mary Malatesta, Joseph McDermott, William Ehfe, Frank Bates, Jack Drumeir and Herbert Barrington compose the cast.

"The Soul of Pierre." (Biograph. Three reels. Wed., Sept. 8.)—This story is adapted from Georges Ohnet's novel, and presented by a cast which includes Louise Vail, Franklin Ritchie, Charles H. Mailes, Gretchen Hartman, Vola Smith, Hector V. Sarno and Kate Bruce. A magnificent production has been given to the piece, and the striking story of a man who bequeathed his soul to another is elaborately worked out. The photography is of a high order, and the whole an attractive feature.

"The Broken Wrist." (Biograph. Thurs., Sept. 9.)—This is an unusual story and one of absorbing interest. It revolves around two doctors, one of whom discovers a new serum and wants to test it on a nurse. The other loves the girl and will not permit the experiment. The discoverer resigns, and the nurse goes with him to his new work.

Some time later the girl's lover calls on the other doctor, and in his absence sees the skeleton of a woman with a broken wrist. As the nurse had broken her wrist some time before, he is convinced she is dead, and he grapples with the doctor on his return. The nurse, however, proves to be alive, and all is explained.

"Oil and Water." (Biograph. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 10.)—This is one of the notable Biograph reissues, in which such actors as Henry Walthall, Lionel Barrymore and Blanche Sweet made their earlier screen appearances. The direction is by D. W. Griffith. The story is that of a young idealist who marries a successful actress. She is happy at home for a time, but the call of the stage is too strong, and she goes back, giving up her husband and child, with the statement that "oil and water cannot mix."

"At the Road's End." (Biograph. Sat., Sept. 11.)—In this story, the girl's dog gives warning of the character of a young contractor who seeks her hand. But her mother refuses to heed the warning, and gives the dog away. The contractor tries to abduct the girl in his motor car, but her sweetheart sees him, and pursues the auto on a trolley ear, leaping from the running board into the machine and overpowering the kidnapper. Isabel Rea, Jack Mulhall, Hector V. Sarno and Mrs. La Varnie are in the cast.

"A Quiet Little Game." (Essanay. Thurs., Sept. 9.)—Here is a swift piece of comedy growing out of a poker game. Two young men send fake telegrams to their wives, saying they have been called out of town. They then sit into the game, which is raided, and then flee to a nearby undertaker's shop, and hide in the bed.

In the meantime the wies hear their husbands have been killed in an accident, and hurrying to the undertaker they see the bodies in the bed. They pay the undertaker for funerals, and when the poker-players sneak home they find crape on their doors.

"Caught." (Essanay. Three reels. Mon., Sept. 6.)—This film is three reels of absorbing drama woven about love and politics, in which the probabilities are stretched to an extent which places it in the realm of melodrama. In an attempt to ruin the governor-elect, a newspaper makes use of the fiance of the governor's daughter to get hold of a document which it hopes will start a scandal.

The safe combination is stolen, the mails rifled, and the daughter's real sweetheart involved, but a maid who has been wronged by one of the conspirators straightens the whole thing out. Bryant Washburn, Edna Mayo, Richard Taber, Frederick Wood, Robert Russell, Thomas Comerford, F. A. Wade, Peggy Sweeney and Hugh F. Thompson compose the cast.

"His Crucible." (Essanay. Three reels. Tues., Sept. 7.)—Breaking his promise to his son Marsden, a wealthy widower, weds a young woman, and the lad leaves home with an adventuress. Later he is arrested with his companion for smuggling, and his father's young wife, who is a settlement worker, obtains his release.

The young man also becomes a settlement worker, and the adventuress attempts to win him back, but his step-mother again saves him, and proves to his father that he is reformed. The cast includes Nell Craig, John Cossar, Edmund V. Cobb, Betty Scott and Grant Foreman.

"The Fable of Hazel's Two Husbands, and What Becomes of Them." (Essanay. Wed., Sept. 8.)—Another of George Ade's fables, staged in the delightful Essanay manner. The young debutante first married an aged business man, who was a good provider, but no hand to trail after the bright lights. When he died she married a young man of good family who took three days to go out and buy a pack of cigarettes. As a happy medium she decided to buy a dog.

"Nearly a Bride." (Kalem. Tues., Sept. 7.)—Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare lead the fun-making in this picture. Bud is a young farmer, in love with the girl, whose parents have decided she shall wed Hercules. So Bud and the girl fix up a plot to make it appear the latter has been murdered. Hercules is so frightened he starts out on a long, swift "hike," but the plot is discovered, and Amos also is banished.

"When Thieves Fall Out." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 8.)—This is another of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," staged with the same faithful attention to detail which has marked the other releases in the series. A gang plans to rob the display at the jewelers' convention, and introduces one of its members into the room in a trunk. The plot fails when the lieutenant turns on the chief and knocks him unconscious, giving a detective time to summon the police. There is an exciting water chase, in which the gang is foiled when the propeller of their launch is fouled.

"The Little Singer." (Kalem. Fri., Sept. 10.)—Alice Joyce is seen in this reissue as a street singer who is rescued from the slums by a musician and becomes a noted artist. Years later her benefactor tries to see her, but his note is intercepted by his mother. She finally reaches him, however, when she recognizes a strain from his violin, and all is understood. Earle Foxe and Mayme Kelso are also in the cast.

"Nerves of Steel." (Kalem. Sat., Sept. 11.)—Helen Holmes, the telegraph operator, in this "Hazard" helps foil a plan to liberate convicts being taken to prison. The gang cuts the engine loose from the train, and start it runing wild down the track. Helen induces the foreman of the wrecking crew to run his derrick along a parallel track, and when abreast of the engine she drops fom the derrick onto the tender, rushes into the cab and shuts off the steam.

"Teasing a Tornado." (Lubin. Mon., Sept. 6.)—This picture is not up to the usual standard of Romaine Fielding's work, either as regards plot or acting of the principals. The story is of the tormenting of an awkward cowboy called Tornado Jack. Some Easterners, especially Laura, niece of the ranch owner, invite him to a party and then make fun of him.

For revenge he holds them up in mock fashion with a pipe as a weapon. Their fright satisfies his wounded vanity. When a real bandit actually does hold them up, he rushes to the rescue, thus heaping coals of fire on their heads.

Jack Lawton is the Tornado; Vinnie Burns, Laura.

"Finn and Haddie." (Lubin. Tues., Sept. 7.)—Written by Frank Moulan and Denman Maley, well known comedians, the scenario is an excellent vehicle for their talents. The directing is well done by Percy Winter.

The situations are ludicrous, and while slap stick is not altogether eliminated, it does not reign supreme.

Briefly the story is: Fergus Finn and Herman Haddie, getting the "hook" as actors, apply and obtain places as cooks in a fashionable home. Their laughable mishaps are many, ending in a grand climax when the pearls of the "missus" are inadvertently placed by them in the ice box, while the eggs repose in the safe. As this mistake, however, saves the jewels from burglars, the near cooks hold down their job. The comedians are supported by Walter Law, Ada Charles, Frank Smiley, Frances Samson and Mary Rowan.

"Jealousy." (Lubin. Fri., Sept. 10.)—Here is a good example of an interesting story, with the climax worked out in an unsuspected manner, and yet told in the limits of a one reeler. Will Bradley is so jealous of his friend, Bob Walker, that even when Nellie Birch chooses him in preference to Bob and they have a happy home and a little son, he still cherishes the green eyed monster.

When Bob is to visit them, Will sees all sorts of things happen, ending in his wife's elopement and desertion of her child. Her downfall, Will's pursuit and murder of Bob follow.

As the unhappy man is arrested by the police he awakens to find it all a dream, and Bob enters with a surprise in the shape of a bride. Robert Gray, George Routh, Dorothy Barrett and Helen Eddy are the creditable cast.

"Queenie of the Nile." (Lubin. Sat., Sept. 11.)—The best thing that Epes Sargent has written and Arthur Hotaling produced for Billie Reeves in a long time. The Egyptian atmosphere in which the scenes are cast gives a chance for some elaborate sets which heighten the absurdities of the action by their very contrast.

Mae Hotely is at her best in the part of the crazy patient who imagines herself Cleopatra. George Clark as the physician has a good "bit" and looks well in his Egyptian togs. Patsy DeForest also has a good chance as Charmian. Billie Reeves stumbles around in his usual fashion as the mock Anthony until Cleopatra regains her reason, then he loses his job.

"Romance as a Remedy." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 9.)—An utter impossible plot, yet its development and the comedy element which events bring out will make it popular with some, especially among very young girls.

Ann is so crazy about romance that her fiance, Jack, wants to teach her a lesson before marrying her. Nora, secretly in love with him, advises him to have Ann abducted at the church. Dick, a friend of Nora, impersonates the highwayman. Ann is carried to a safe place, but instead of being cured of her romantic notions, proceeds to fall in love with and marry her bold abductor.

Nora's scheme works her way, as she finally captures Jack. Two hayseeds furnish the comedy element. Shannon Fife wrote the scenario and it was produced by Joseph Smiley with Lilie Leslie, William Cohill, Clarence Elmer and Ann Carmichael taking the leads.

"The Mystic Bell." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 6.)—An absorbing story of a young lawyer about to be married, who is tempted to invest all his savings, the money laid aside for a home, and finally money entrusted to him, in stock speculations, which fail. He is about to commit suicide when he discovers that the whole experience is a vision of things as they might have been, shown to him in a crystal ball by Huri, an East Indian.

"Never Again." (Selig. Tues., Sept. 7.)—Tom promises his sweetheart to stop drinking, but he slips, and in a bar-room brawl shoots a friend. He flees, not knowing the man was only slightly wounded, but the sheriff, plotting with Tom's sweetheart, pursues and arrests him for murder. Tom is in the depths of despair, when his supposed victim appears. The young man is cured of drinking. Tom Mix is featured in this picture.

"Into the Dark." (Selig. Sat., Sept. 11.)—F. McGrew Willis wrote this story. Ruth flees to the city with Clark. Her brother pursues the pair. Clark becomes conscience striken on reaching the city, but before Ruth learns the manner of man he is, she is shot by a burglar.

Her brother finds her in a critical state, and is told by the physicians that only blood transfusion will save her life. Believing her life not worth saving he refuses, but Clark volunteers, and gives up the blood at the cost of his own life.

"'Neath Calvary's Shadow." (Selig. Three reels. Thurs., Sept. 9.)—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

"Mr. Jarr and the Visiting Firemen." (Vitagraph. Mon., Aug. 30.)—In the seventeenth of his family troubles, Jarr poses before the Small-town Fire Company as a real fireman from the city. His popularity is remarkable, and Mrs. Jarr is anything but pleased when she sees her hero husband parading down the street, surrounded by the village beauties. He has to fake a fire and rescue in order to square himself. Besides Harry Davenport, the producer, and Rose Tapley, the cast includes Paul Kelly and Audrey Berry.

"The Kidnapped Stockbroker." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 7.)—A reporter figures prominently in the search for the broker, who disappears after threatening his partner for misuse of the firm's money. With the aid of a clever girl, the reporter locates the man in a haunted house, but is himself seized by a band of thieves, who set fire to the building. The broker is rescued with great difficulty and the reporter "makes good" on his search.

"Mrs. Jarr and the Society Circus." (Vitagraph. Mon., Sept. 6.)—More than usually delightful is this chapter in the troubles of the Jarrs. Mrs. Jarr and Mrs. Smith are snubbed at a fashionable summer hotel, and in revenge they send for Gertrude, the Jarr servant, who is introduced as a countess. The society circus is too much for Gertrude, and she joins the performers, breaking up the plot and the circus. Rose Tapley, Eulalie Jensen and Harry Davenport have the principal roles.

"The Siren." (Vitagraph. Wed., Sept. 8.)—This is a comedy in which Margaret Gibson is a country girl, in love with a city chap. After he has led her out of a dansant she realizes that he considers her merely a child, so adopts real siren ways in order to attract attention. She gets into a lot of trouble, but is successful. Alfred Vosburgh, Anne Schaefer and Gretchen Lederer are also in the cast.

"The Romance of a Handerchief." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Sept. 9.)—Through a handkerchief, used to bandage the hand of a girl injured in a railway car, John Harmon gets into trouble with his wife. There are a number of exciting situations and absorbing scenes which make an attractive picture. In the cast are Maurice Costello, Leah Baird and Van Dyke Brooke.

"Unlucky Louie." (Vitagraph. Fri., Sept. 10.)—In this picture Sidney Drew is featured without Mrs. Drew. As Louie he regrets giving up the comforts of jail life, and tried to get back. Theft, arson, assault—all fail, and he is rewarded instead of arrested. Finally he is elected an official of the village, and accepts the fact that he is through with jail life forever. Francis Le Roy and L. Case wrote the scenario.

"One Performance Only." (Vitagraph. Three reels. Sat., Sept. 11.)—In this Broadway Star Feature an actor's make-up and a "poison needle" are two novel factors. Orme, a clever thief, induces a great impersonator to help him in a robbery. The impersonator makes up as a noted jeweler, after the real man has been rendered unconscious by an injection of drugs, and the jeweler's wife robbed.

Detectives placed on the trial finally discover how the thing was done, and one of them makes up also as the jeweler. In this guise he so frightened the impersonator that he confesses the plot, and soon he and the thief are serving time at Sing-Sing. Thomas R. Mills, Lionel Adams, Garry McGarry, Templer Saxe, Eulalie Jensen, Stanley Dark and Charles Eldredge compose the cast.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"Only a Messenger Boy." (Keystone. Two reels. Aug. 23.)—Excitement rules throughout this film, and there are extravagances which will call forth howls of delight. The messenger boy, caught between such millstones as the mayor's office and the delegation of visiting women, gets into all kinds of trouble, culminating when he is locked into a safe, the safe thrown from a lofty window, loaded onto an automobile, and finally blown unto the clouds, where it sails around until it drops into a river. There are chases by land, air and sea, and disaster when the handcar runs off an open drawbridge.

"A Leap for Life." (Rodeo. Thurs., Sept. 1.)—This is a melodrama of the wild Western type, full of action and thrills. Williams, a wealthy miner, takes his daughter, Lillian, for a trip to the Western mines, where he made his fortune twenty years before. There he is recognized by a man and a girl, both of whom accuse him of having wronged them in the old days.

They resolve to revenge themselves through Lillian. The first attempt fails, but the second attempt consists in tying Lillian to an empty stage coach and sending it dashing toward the brink of a precipice. She is rescued by a dashing young man in an automobile. The revengeful girl, who has fainted on the railroad track, is also rescued by a cowpuncher with a lariat, and the arch conspirator topples off a cliff to his death.

"Man and the Laws." (Gaumont. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 2.)—The strong scene of this picture is laid in a jury room as the jury is debating the verdict in the case of a man accused of murdering his sister's betrayer. Finally one of the jurors, who has been holding out for acquittal, tells a story of how his own sister was led astray, and in seeking to punish the man responsible he was saved from a crime by the young man falling under the wheels of a railway train. The jury votes for acquittal.

"A Bully Affair." (Beauty. Sat., Sept. 4.)—A very amusing comedy showing how a stranded vaudeville actor stages a bull-fight in a country town. The village belle falls in love with him and everything goes fine until the two country bumpkins, who had been playing the part of the "bull," get their hands on a bottle of whiskey. The "bull" acts very peculiarly in his encore appearance, and eventually falls apart, disclosing to the irate audience that they have been fooled by the flashily dressed toreador. John Steppling and Beatrice Van appear in this picture.

"A Question of Honor." (American. Sat., Sept. 4.)—A Western drama featuring Vivian Rich, Walter Spencer and Jack Richardson, which shows how a miner father saves his daughter's husband from being sent to prison and at the same time keeps his word about selling the mining claim.

"The Father." (Reliance. Two reels. Sat., Sept. 4.)—Sent to prison for seven years by a wealthy manufacturer, Bill Kenare vows vengeance, and, escaping from his cell, plots with others to kidnap the manufacturer's little son. He is about to carry out the plot when he sees his wife in the garden of the millionaire's home and from her learns that the manufacturer has been taking care of Mrs. Kenare and her boy while the husband was in prison; the boy he was about to steal is really his own. Overcome, Kenare returns to prison to serve out his term.

"From the River's Depths." (Tanhouser. Sun., Sept. 5.)—Several unusual features are introduced in this drama, and the action is cleverly arranged. The story is that of an escaped convict, who finds the clothes and credentials of a titled Englishman by the river's bank and impersonates their owner, opening a bank account and paying his attentions to the banker's daughter.

Through a portrait in a paper she discovers he is an impostor, and to avoid exposure he attempts the banker's life. Discovered and pursued he leaps to death in the river, his body settling on the bottom beside the skeleton (presumably) of the man he has been impersonating.

"The Unsuspected Isles." (Rialto. Three reels. Wed., Sept. 8.)—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

"Her Oath of Vengeance." (Majestic. Two reels. Sun., Sept. 5.)—This is an exciting story of a plot among the Russian workers in a California cannery. Sergius, a fugitive, is employed at the cannery, with his daughter Sophia; and Ivan, the overseer, who knows the Russian's political record, buys the girl for $500.

The owner's wife protects Sophia, and Ivan forces Sergius to incite a strike, preparing a bomb to blow up the works if the men are unsuccessful. Nicholas, the girl's sweetheart, finds the bomb and saves the cannery, but Ivan is killed.

"Over and Back." (Komic. Sun., Sept. 5.)—Another vehicle for Fay Tincher in her amusing exploits. Ed, barred from Fay, finds a way to reach her by a clothesline and pulley, by which he can pull himself across the area to her room. His rival sees the scheme worked and changes the terminus of the line, so that on the second trip Ed rides into papa's room. Ed retaliates by getting both papa and his rival dangling on the line, while he and May run off to the minister.

"The Indian Trapper's Vindication." (Reliance. Mon., Sept. 6.)—Dark Cloud is falsely accused of robbing the trader's store and ordered to leave the country. As he wanders through the woods he hears cries for help, and rushes to the river in time to save the trapper's two small children from going over the falls in their canoe.

While starting them back to camp, a shot reveals a quarrel between the real thieves, and Dark Cloud is instrumental in running them down and recovering the stolen money. Dark Cloud, Bert Hadley, Alice Pettus, Paul Willis, Mildred Harris, Art Ortego and Charles Gorman compose the cast.

"Pansy's Prison Pies." (Falstaff. Mon., Sept. 6.)—This is an unusual comedy, built around Pansy's village restaurant, and her perfect pies and doughnuts. A drummer, who wins her affections, is arrested by the local policeman, a rival, and locked up. Pansy showers pies on him in jail, and he takes the shape of a balloon.

She finally smuggles in a saw, and he severs the bars, stuns the policeman with a loaf of prison bread, and start the escape. The other convicts see the bars sawed off, and all break into the drummer's cell to escape, but the drummer is so full of pies that he sticks in the opening and prevents the escape of the others. For this he is rewarded with the shield of the policeman.

"For Love of Mary Ellen." (Majestic. Tues., Sept. 7.)—A charming little story of a wealthy boy who shuns the companions of his own set and chooses to play with Mary Ellen Rafferty, whose mother keeps the little newsstand and tobacco shop on the corner. Mrs. Rafferty falls ill and the little family is in despair when the boy gets an idea from a street beggar. He gets a tomato can and a sign: "Pity a blind widow with six children," and waits on the corner for aid. Chief Justice Jones happens along, and on investigating the strange sign, learns of Mrs. Rafferty's plight, and all is made well.

"The Family Doctor." (Reliance. Wed., Sept. 8.)—Osborne Peters opposes the marriage of his daughter Alice to young Dr. Montrose, and the latter is compelled to visit her secretly. The family physician, the unscrupulous Dr. McGrew, knowing of the trouble, hypnotizes the old man and induces him to will his fortune to a nurse with whom McGrew has an understanding that the money is to be shared up.

"Jerry and the Gunman." (Cub. Thurs., Sept. 9.)—George Ovey has unusual opportunities for being funny in this burlesque on Western "bad men," and he takes advantage of them. The gunman is a rival of Jerry's, and seeing the impossibility of competing with a portable arsenal, the little comedian finds there is a price on his rival's head, and so turns him over to the police. He gets the reward, but also gets locked up and thrown into the same cell with the man he has betrayed. It is a serious situation for Jerry, but he gets out of it in his own unique style.

"Brand Blotters." (Eclair. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 9.)—This is an exciting story of plot and counter plot among cowboys and outlaws over Melissy, a girl of the plains. One of the outlaws, jealous of the sheriff, makes up to resemble him, and when he is sure the girl can see him, reburns the brand on a cow. Accused by the girl, the sheriff denies the charge, but she casts him off.

Later the girl is captured by the outlaws, and at the point of a pistol compelled to marry their leader. The bridegroom is about to carry her away when the sheriff appears to the rescue; there is a fight and the outlaw is hurled off a cliff.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"A Game of Love." (L.-Ko. Wed., Sept. 1.)—The rivals in love again; this time they are Reggie Morris and Fatty Voss. It's only a fair picture with few real laughs, save for the titters provoked by the ridiculous physique of Fatty.

"Animated Weekly, No. 182." (Wed., Sept. 1.)—Scenes depicting the disaster caused by the storm in Galveston, Texas; the recent Baby Parade at Asbury Park, N. J.; thirty-two governors of states throughout the country witness parade in Boston, Mass.; testing twelve-inch mortars at Fort Totten, N. Y.; two interesting scenes from the war zone, and a patriotic cartoon by Hy Mayer, are the prominent events in this number.

"A Little Brother of the Rich." (Broadway Universal Feature. Five reels. Mon., Sept. 6.) —Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Their Happy Honeymoon." (Nestor. Mon., Sept. 6.)—The Nestor comedy company has pictured scores of honeymoons during its existence, all of which have been productive of a great amount of laughter. This one containing a rather hackneyed story smattered with some original situations is a fitting example of what the company can do. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are the leads.

"Sh—Don't Wake the Baby." (Rex. Tues., Sept. 7.)—A fair comedy revolving about the pains taken by the Newparents to keep their child asleep. Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips are featured.

"Silk Hose and High Pressure." (L-Ko. Three reels. Wed., Sept. 8.)—This is one of the best low comedies that the L-Ko organization has turned out. Billie Ritchie, Louise Orth and Henry Bergman are featured. Ritchie's foolish adventures with a burlesque queen make the plot. An amusing incident is the scene in which Ritchie, pointing a hose straight in the air, balances a man on the summit of the stream. There is much trick work in the three reels.

"Both Sides of Life." (Laemmle. Three reels. Thurs., Sept. 9.)—The scenario for this picture was prepared by L. V. Jefferson. It is a very good story, but Director Bob Leonard has not developed it with an eye to all its possibilities. The main idea is reached when a minister, who has been allowing himself to be enamored by a notorious married woman, thinks of the purity of a poor little girl he has seen in church, and mends his ways in the nick of time.

As a whole the picture will interest. The development of the several plots is entertaining, while the leads are competent. They are Ella Hall, Maude George and Wyndam Standing.

"The Finest Gold." (Big U. Thurs., Sept. 9.) —This drama featuring Murdock MacQuarrie and Hazel Buckam will be reviewed next week.

"Crime's Triangle." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 10.)—This is essentially a King Baggot picture, and as such it is very good. His employer and his brother, both being more or less lacking in morals, commit crimes and then lay the blame to him. The death of the employer, who is the real villain, gives King a chance to lift his brother from out the depths. This is interesting at all times and should be warmly received by the followers of King Baggot.

"The Country Circus." (Victor. Fri., Sept. 10.)—An enjoyable comedy of interest to children in particular, but a welcome change to grown-ups from the ordinary run of dramas and comedies. Violet McMillan is featured.

"At the Beach Incognito." (Joker. Fri., Sept. 10.)—One of those hurly-burly Joker farces staged at the beach and containing many mirth-provoking scenes. Max Asher, Gale Henry and the usual supporting cast appear and do their customary appropriate work.

"In the Sunset Country." (Bison. Three reels. Sat., Sept. 11.)—An old-time Western drama, with all the accouterments of such a picture. There is a demand for such pictures, so this one, with Sherman Bainbridge and Luella Maxim playing the leads with customary gusto, should be well received. The scenes are most realistic, while the photography is good. The story, which verges on the melodramatic in several places, holds the interest all the time.

"Agnes Kempler's Sacrifice." (Gold Seal. Two reels. Sun., Sept. 12.)—This was the first feature made at the West Coast studios, featuring Hobart Henley. Cleo Madison divides the honors with the male star. Others who appear in the cast are Agnes Vernon, Jean Hathaway, Ray Hanford and Hilda Sloman—a distinguished aggregation. It is too bad that the very good efforts of this collection of Universal stars should be wasted on a story of such mediocre qualities.

Its ending is unsatisfactory and the plot is illogically developed. The center of attraction is a young man who marries on the quiet. Later he is forced to marry another girl by her father. At last all comes out, and the first wife leaves. Later the other dies, and then the mother brings the other woman out of the underworld to live again with her son.

"His Last Word." (Laemmle. Sun., Sept. 12.) —A subject featuring old Daddy Manley is sure to be welcome among every variety of audience. Its sympathetic qualities are great and the story incorporated in this picture contains a lasting appeal. Daddy is a real fixture on the Universal program as his work is always appreciated.

"The Broken Coin." (Universal Special. Eleventh chapter. Two reels.)—This number called "The Clash of Arms," unlike the preceding chapter which was practically entirely chase, is almost totally one long and lasting fight. Kitty, Count Frederick and Rolleaux have united forces against the soldiers of the kingdom of Grahaffen.

A large band of soldiers pursues the three all over the mountaintops, but are unsuccessful in their endeavors to capture the fugitives. At last they are completely routed by the men of Gretzhoffen. Back in Gretzhoffen once more, Kitty resolves to explore the torture chambers of the royal palace. The instalment stops at a most exciting moment when Kitty has fainted from some sight that is invisible to the eyes of the audience.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC.

"The Romance of Elaine, No. 12." (Pathé. Two reels.)—With "The Triumph of Elaine," this record of trouble ends. Elaine is captured by the "gang," but the capture is costly, as it reveals the secret submarine harbor, an aeroplane is requisitioned and a new-fangled torpedo is sent after the enemy submarine, which is blown into small toothpicks. The mysterious Professor Arnold reeals himself as the missing Craig Kennedy, and everybody is happy.

"Matrimonial Bliss." (Starlight.)—Heinie and Louie get into considerable trouble on account of the fact that the latter wins the beautiful young lady. Heinie, in a jealous rage, annoys the guests at the wedding by such innocent tricks as pushing the bride into a bathtub, rolling a barrel downstairs onto Louie, pouring water on the preacher and bridal party, and blowing up the house by means of powder in the wedding cake. In the end both Heinie and Louie are hurled from a window.

THE POSTERS AND OTHER Advertising Material for "The Island of Regeneration" and other important features, were designed and produced by

CHELTENHAM

These posters and advertising material have created an entirely new standard. Exhibitors who have used them — who have seen the effect that they have had in attracting attention and increasing patronage to their theatres—are demanding that posters and advertising material of other features be as distinctive and original.

Cheltenham posters help the producer to sell pictures to the exhibitor; but of far greater importance—they are the big sure-fire means of interesting the public in the pictures; of attracting the public to the theatre to see them.

If you are the Exhibitor you can have Cheltenham posters by asking the producer to provide them.

If you are the Producer you cannot afford to neglect this important way to make your productions more salable.

Cheltenham posters cost more, yes; just as good film costs more than poor film, but if you are using good film and putting good pictures on it—you are making a mistake not to give it a fair chance; not to have the posters as good as the production itself.

The First American "Clipper" Feature
A Romantic Drama In Three Parts

Here is a wonderful attraction—the very first of its kind—a brilliant story of New York society and life on the western plains. The course of true love runs its way in thrilling, romantic fashion.

The Cast That Breaks All Records!

Harold Lockwood May Allison
Harry Von Meter Eugenie Forde
William Stowell

Directed by Thomas Ricketts

Look at these names—Lockwood—Allison—Von Meter—Forde—Stowell. Every one is a star—a headliner. These names will weave a golden magic spell over your box-office strong-box.

Date of Release
September 18th

Get in at the start of these new three real "Clipper" features. Many more are to follow. Each will be a distinct feature—a striking, crowd-getting feature—the kind that will make your patrons talk, talk, talk about what they see at your theatre.

Distributed throughout the Mutual Film

No Wonder Everybody Goes To See

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY

A Picturized Romantic Novel

By Roy L. McCardell Directed by W. D. Taylor

Intense, Dramatic Action—
Breath-taking Thrills—
Adventure and Romance—

These are the elements that appeal to the crowds — that bring the crowds to your theatre. These are the elements that dominate "The Diamond From The Sky," the $800,000.00 continued photoplay in chapters.

A Proven Success!

"The Diamond From The Sky" goes big! Nineteen chapters are appearing now—a new two-act chapter is released each week. Not one dull moment in nineteen chapters! Unbelievable thrills are yet to come!

You exhibitors who haven't booked "The Diamond From The Sky"—you're losing money. You're missing the biggest dollar-getter in the business.

For booking information wire, write or see at once, the North American Film Corporation representative at your nearest Mutual Exchange, or write or wire us.

"The Rajah Entered the Den of the Lions and Was Attacked"

No scene more intense, more thrilling, more powerful than this has ever been staged before a motion picture camera. It is the climax of a remarkable two-reel animal production — the first of David Horsley's new

"The Rajah's Sacrifice"

CENTAUR FEATURES

—a brand that introduces animal pictures in an advanced form. In this and all the Centaur Features are presented the incomparable together with casts of superlative excellence, headed by the famous trainer,

BOSTOCK ANIMALS,

CAPT. JACK BONAVITA.

A two-reel Centaur Feature is released every Thursday in the regular service of the

"RANSON'S FOLLY"

IN 4 SPLENDID ACTS

SCENARIO BY "RICH-ART" (RICHARD) RIDGLEY

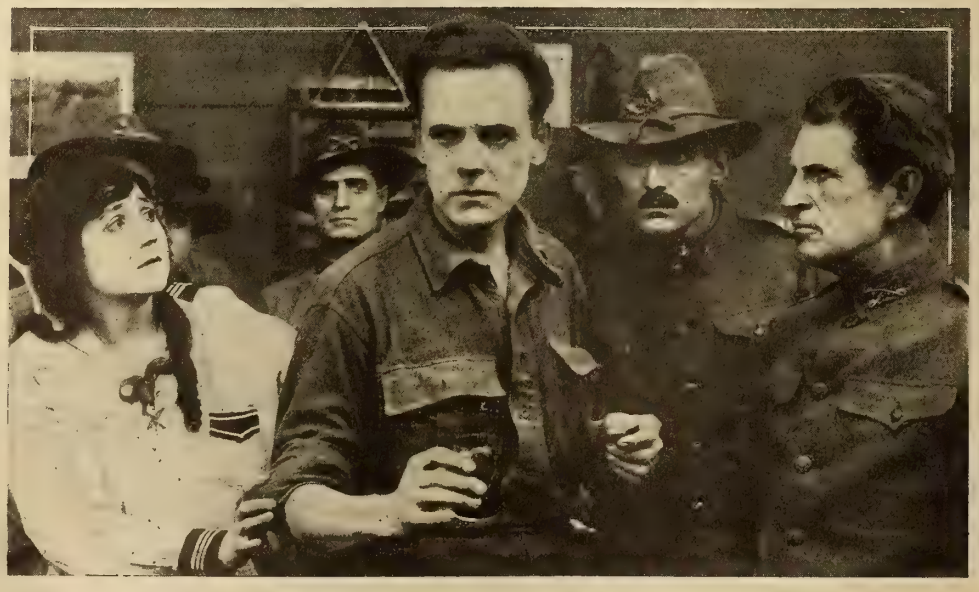
Edward Earle, Mabel Trunnelle and Marc MacDermott



In vivid story action—action that rips along with the abandon of clean, red-blooded men—Richard Harding Davis has never been surpassed. In the "best seller," "Ranson's Folly," he is at his best. Never, it seems, were three stars better suited to their roles than this triumphant trio—Edward Earle, Mabel Trunnelle, and Marc MacDermott, with the picture master, "Rich-art" Ridgley to heighten their genius—three who have earned their heights by sheer dramatic picturing ability; three favorites in a favorite book story. Edward Earle is an admirable Ranson; Marc MacDermott, the devoted father with a concealed crooked life—worthy of such an artist; while Mabel Trunnelle is a sympathetic daughter. This is enough for the Exhibitor who really knows. Friday, September 17th. About 4000 feet.

Motion Picture Projection Simplified

20 D—Suppose your system was direct current at a normal voltage of 110 and you were using the regular rheostat which comes with the machine and you had taken all precautions to secure as constant voltage as possible from the electric lighting company, but you were still bothered with poor light, what would you do?

Ans.—Most rheostats furnished with motion picture machines are made with several steps or buttons and movable lever contact, controlled by a handle in such a manner that it is possible to cut in or out and to get only a portion of the resistance connected in series with the arc. If the line voltage should be so low that on the highest contact of the rheostat, which of course includes the least amount of resistance in series with the arc, I should not be able to get the desired current at the arc, I would cut out or shunt a part of the fixed resistance in the rheostat, so as to reduce the voltage drop within the rheostat to compensate for the voltage drop, below normal, on the line.

20 E—Is there any danger connected with the shunting of part of the rheostat in case of an emergency as referred to above? Does the rheostat suffer, or does any part of the equipment have to work at a disadvantage due to such shunting of a portion of the resistance?

Ans.—The only trouble which one would meet in shunting a portion of the resistance within the rheostat would be in case of an unexpected or sudden increase in the line voltage, which would call for the normal amount of resistance in series with the arc. Suppose, for instance, the voltage had dropped to 95 and I had cut out the equivalent of ten per cent. of the fixed resistance.

Under that condition I would secure proper illumination. Now without warning, the voltage jumps to 110, then if additional resistance is not cut in series with the arc the amperes will increase above normal, which will of course overheat the resistance, which may be injured therefrom. Another serious consequence might be the blowing of the line fuses, which would put out the light and stop the show.

20 F—Considering the foregoing answer, it would seem risky to shunt part of the resistance in a rheostat. To what extent would you consider it practical? Please explain exactly what you would do in order to be on the safe side.

Ans.—If you have a 110 rheostat which on the low notch delivers about 25 amperes to the arc and on the high notch delivers about 50 amperes with 110 V on line, and it is desired to shunt a portion of the resistance for low line voltage, then I would move the controlling lever so the rheostat will deliver the lowest amount of amperes. Then by means of a No. 6 or larger copper wire, or copper strip of equal capacity, about 10 to 15 per cent. of the fixed section of the resistance may be short circuited or shunted or "jumped across," as it sometimes is called.

The rheostat will then on the low notch give about 40 to 50 amperes with 110 volts, and if the voltage drops down to 95 or 100 volts, then the amperes would drop maybe to 25, but under this condition you could move the contact arm to the highest position and draw 40 to 50 amperes even at the low voltage. With this arrangement there is less danger because you can always protect yourself the moment the voltage comes up by quickly moving the lever on the rheostat to the lowest ampere position.

20 G—Where the supply circuit is 220 volts, what method of procedure should be followed concerning the shunting of part of the resistance within the rheostat?

Ans.—With 220 volts the danger of overloading a rheostat within which, maybe 10 per cent. of the fixed resistance has been short circuited, is much less than with 110 volts should the voltage suddenly increase to normal, because the arc maintained between the carbon points offers the same potential drop varying from 45 to 55 volts and you realize that 55 volts on 110 volts is 50 per cent., whereas 55 volts on 220 volts is only 25 per cent., consequently if we short circuit the arc on a 110-volt resistance, the current rise will be more than double, compared with the same arc mainted on a 220-volt circuit.

In other words, the elasticity of the resistance on a 220-volt circuit is about three times greater than for 110-volt. This explains why there is less danger in shunting part of the resistance on a 220-volt rheostat. But with proper judgment and observation an operator should not fear, in case of an emergency, to cut out or shunt part of the resistance in series with the arc, but in no case must the fuses put on the line be larger than the rating called for in the underwriters' tables for the size of wire used between the fuses and arc.

Hanging a Flexible Screen for the Traveling Exhibitor

AFTER an operator has found a suitable source for the electric power, the erection of the screen is the most anxious piece of work in getting things in order for the evening's exhibition. When his screen is up he feels at ease.

He never knows in a new place what conveniences he may find, or what awkward arrangements he may have to get over. If the place is often used for such exhibitions, his first thought is to look aloft as he is pretty certain to find a couple of eyes or hooks some distance apart, left by some one or other of his predecessors, for it is an understood courtesy amongst operators that any such hooks or eyes, once placed in awkward positions, are left to smooth the path of other operators.

If he finds two hooks that are at a height and distance apart which fairly suits his screen, he has only to find a ladder to aid him in placing pulleys on these. If he has a steady hand, and can find a long pole, he may be able to get along without the ladder by placing the pulleys, with the cords put in, on the end of the pole. These pulleys may be tied to the pole with small cord, and, as soon as the pulley is caught on the hook above, a strong jerk will break the pole free from the pulley.

The next step is to screw a pair of hooks into the floor, a foot or two wider than the bottom corners of the screen, and just under where these will be when the screen is in position. If the projecting equipment will have to be in a gallery, then the hooks in the floor will want to be brought out a short distance to make the surface of the screen at a right angle to the light to overcome any distortion in the picture.

Hanging a Flexible Screen

This method of hanging a flexible screen has the merit of its being adapted readily to most any place the operator will come to. And, further, it will enable him to stretch the screen as tight as a drum-head. Also, there is nothing to be carried about that is bulky beyond the screeen itself. Some ¼-inch sash-cord, or its equivalent, two iron pulleys and a dozen hooks or screw-eyes, are all that will be necessary.

Flexible screens should have the seams run horizontally, and never have a seam passing through the middle. Better results are had by making, say a fifteen-foot screen, with a middle section of ten feet, and have two strips sewed to this, top and bottom, of two and one-half feet each.

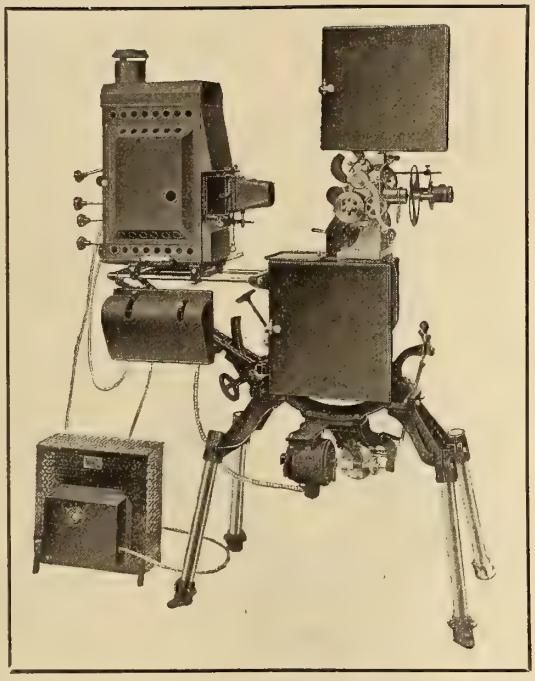
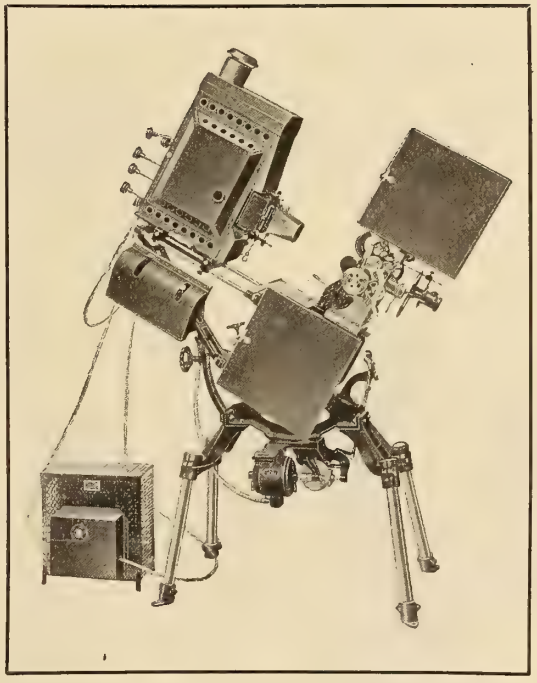
When folding up a flexible screen it should always be folded up first into long folds all across it, and only then folded over short, so that when these short folds are undone, it lies on the floor its full width. The two sash-cords are then hooked into the eyelets, or grummet rings, at the top corners, the screen raised by pulling up with these cords passing through the pulleys overhead until it is at the proper height, and then the free ends of the two cords tied into the screw-hooks in the floor.



If it is found to be necessary additional hooks may be put in the floor and the bottom edge of the screen tied to these.

SHEA HOLDINGS REORGANIZE IN BUFFALO



PAPERS filed recently indicate a financial reorganization of the Shea amusement properties in Buffalo, N. Y. These new companies have been incorporated: The Shea Theatre Company, to construct and manage theatres and moving picture houses. The capital stock is $10,000. The incorporators are Pliny B. McNaugton, Joseph F. Wadsworth and Lester F. Gilbert. The Shea Hippodrome Company, to manage theatres and moving picture houses and to construct the same. Capital stock, $10,000. Incorporators, Pliny B. McNaughton, Joseph F. Wadsworth and Lester F. Gilbert.

The papers indicate that these two companies are holding companies, apparently designed to hold the Court street property where Shea's vaudeville is shown and the Hippodrome building, which since its completion has been showing motion picture features. Papers also have been filed with the secretary of state showing an increase of capital stock from $200,000 to $700,000 of the Shea Amusement Company.

This is the operating company, of which Michael Shea is the active managing head. The certificate of increase is signed by Mr. McNaughton as chairman and Mr. Wadsworth as secretary. Mr. McNaughton is one of the large investors in the Shea enterprises. Mr. Wadsworth is associated with Mr. Shea in the management of the amusement company. Mr. Gilbert is a member of the law firm of Hoyt & Spratt.

OURS is the privilege to announce the arrival of the latest and best in motion picture projection machines, Power's Cameragraph No. 6B. A worthy and far advanced addition to our present successful model.

YOURS, Mr. Exhibitor, is the opportunity to become acquainted with and avail yourself of the wonderful results and operating qualities it affords in accomplishing the best in projection. Consider us at your service.

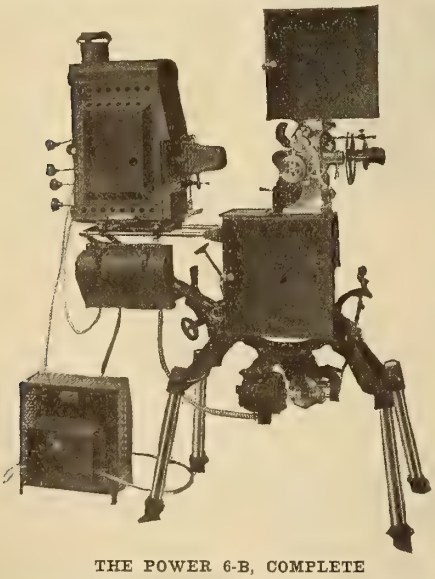
Here Mr. Hallberg will answer all the questions you send in—no matter how simple or difficult.



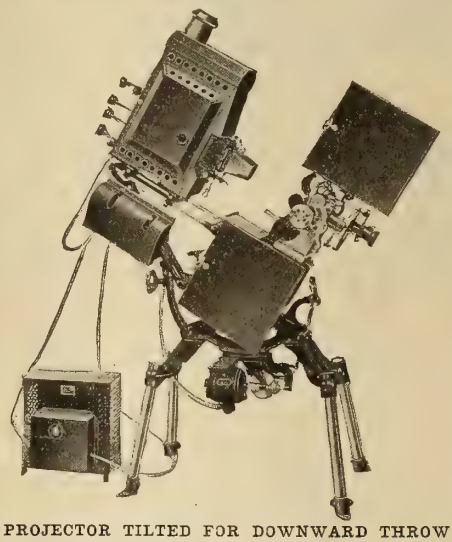
THE POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6B.

THE name Nicholas Power has been synonymous with the projection of motion pictures practically since the inception of the motion picture industry. A pioneer in the business, he has won deserved recognition and to his wonderful inventive genius we owe a great deal of the present success of the art.

Ever alert to the future possibilities of this enormous and what is now regarded as the fifth largest industry in this country, he has devoted the best years of his life to perfecting the mechanism of the motion picture projecting machine, with the result that today we view with wondering eyes the picture as it is thrown on the screen without flicker and with the eye strain eliminated.

To those who recall the early days of the motion picture, it is indeed a wonderful accomplishment to be able to present the pictures today with such perfect definition and clearness. Mr. Power in the many years of his connection with the industry has invented many projecting machines and continually added improvements until the model Power's Cameragraph No. 6-A seemed to fulfill every expectation of both himself and the entire trade.

Not contented to rest on the success of this machine, Mr. Power studied, experimented and with the inventive ability and great genius along mechanical lines which he possesses, he evolved the latest and what he consideres the last word in projecting machines Power's Cameragraph No. 6-B. Many mechanics and engineers of international repute who have seen this new model have pronounced it a marvel of the age and a fitting tribute to Mr. Power.

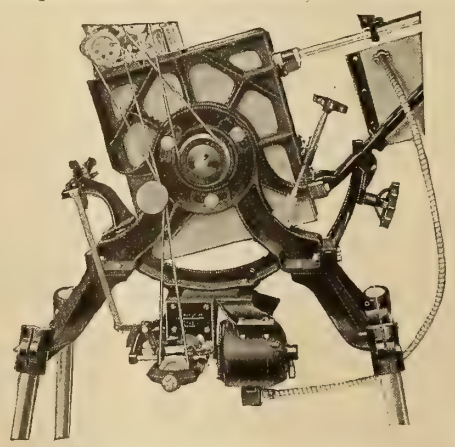


THE POWER 6-B, COMPLETE

This machine constitutes all the most necessary and desirable features in modern up-to-date projection that years of study, experiment and experience have adduced and is designed to give perfect satisfaction under any and all conditions. The mechanism has reached the point of ultimate refinement through the use of the finest material with best of workmanship for each part giving proper study to its particular functions.

Perfection of New Model

Alterations, changes and additions, suggested by field experience, have been made, which brings this mechanism to a point where it stands universally accepted as among the foremost in the qualities of perfect projection and serviceability. The stand entirely new in design, is exceptionally rigid and substantial in construction.

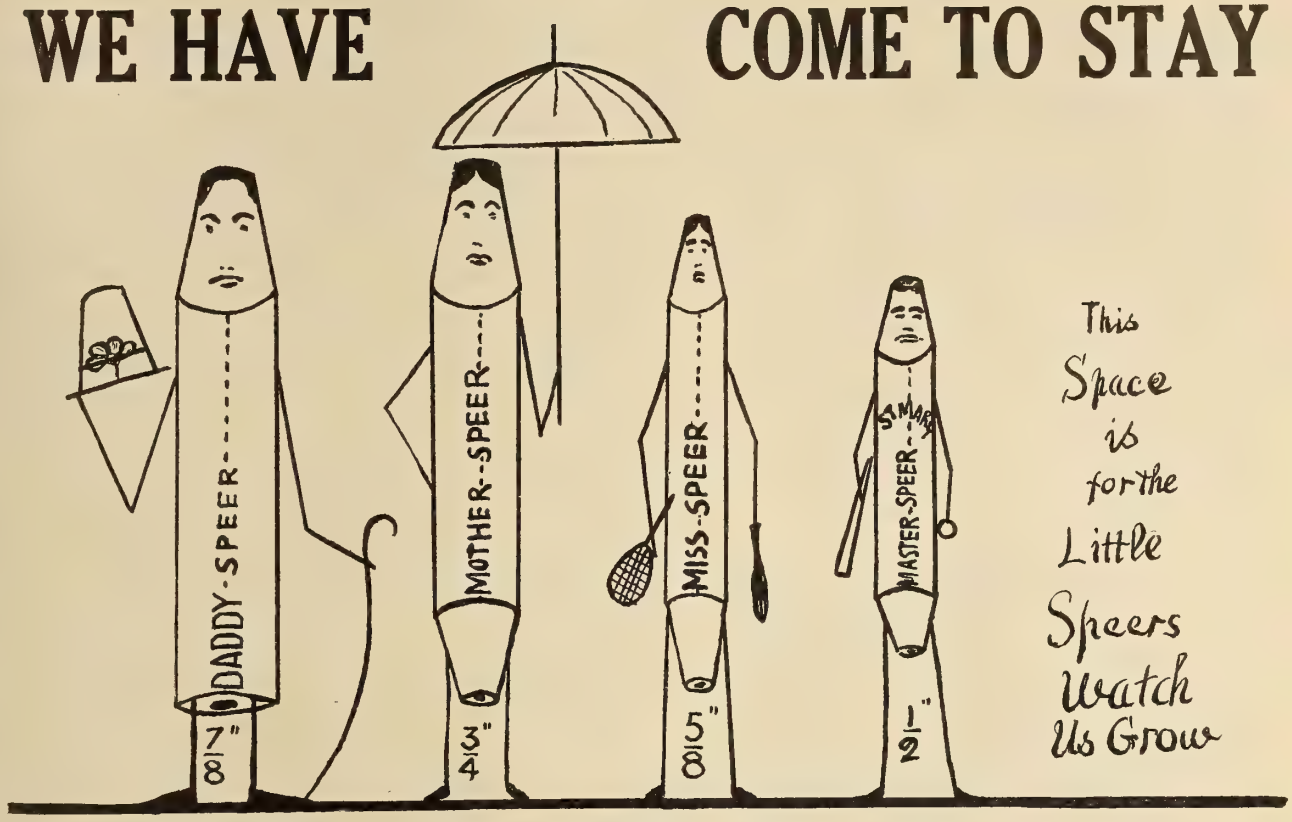


It consists of two sections; the lower which is fixed, being fitted with a central hub on which the upper section rocks; both are securely fastened together by heavy bolts, permitting a tilting of the upper section which carries the mechanism and lamphouse.

PROJECTOR TILTED FOR DOWNWARD THROW

The motor drive and lower construction remain horizontal. The finest adjustment is obtainable by means of a worm, the control of which is easily accessible, permitting the centering of the picture on the screen even during operation at all times. A simple hand wheel locking device gives additional rigidity to the entire equipment.

The take-up is simplicity itself, consisting of two metal disks, one fiber faced, revolving one against the other and running on ball-bearings. The extent of friction surface has been carefully computed, permitting an even and continuous but slightly intermittent tension, causing the film to be wound to the proper tightness on the take-up reel. Once adjustment is made by a simple collar and set screw, no further attention is necessary. In test this device has taken up 3,000 feet of film, maintaining an even tension throughout.



DETAIL OF THE MOTOR DRIVE

The new lamphouse deserves special attention; it is of very substantial construction, permitting easy access. It has been specially designed with a view of allowing the best possible ventilation. The doors are of double metal with air space between; cooling chutes are provided both above and below the condenser mount, securing a very desirable arrangement.

The cooling of the interior of the lamphouse is procured by an ingenious duct construction in the top leading to a vent and efficiently drawing off the heat.

Radiation is reduced to a minimum.

The solidity of the Power's 6-B Cameragraph can really not be appreciated without an examination of the machine itself, but the accompanying illustrations show the massive construction of this machine.

Motor Drive Is Noteworthy Feature.

A noteworthy feature is the arrangement of the motor drive, which remains horizontal at all times, thereby doing away with consequent wear and noise when operating at an angle.

The editor has made a particularly close examination of the lamphouse. The intake for air is controlled by a novel arrangement of baffle plates. The air circulation throughout the lamphouse is the most perfect ever conceived and put into practice.

Another feature is the application of a Gundlach projection lense, in place of the ordinary lense regularly furnished with other equipments. The prices are for the 6-B with hand drive and 110 volt rheostat $290, and for the 6-B with motor drive complete with 110 volt D. C. or 110 volt, 60 cycle A. C. motor and rheostat, $337.50. These improvements are all conducive to higher efficiency, better projection and convenience to the operator, and last but not least lower maintenance expense.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

HARD TO KEEP ARC CONTROL

B. F. V.—Morrisonville, Ill.—Would like to have answer to my troubles in next issue of Motion Picture News.

I have 250 volt D. C. cut down with a Power's rheostat and I have a hard time keeping my arc controlled. It gets away and sputters. What would be the best thing to do? I use Bio soft cored carbons.

Ans. It is necessary before I can give you an intelligent answer to your question, that you report the following:

First.—Give make, style and serial number of your machine.

Second.—Give distance from lense to screen and size picture.

Third.—Make a rough sketch showing the floor line in the booth and the angle at which the lamp house sits. Also have the sketch show how the carbons are set relative to each other and to the lamp house.

Fourth.—State if the line voltage is maintained steady.

Fifth.—I understand you are using Bio carbons, but please state the diameter.

Sixth.—Specify what it says on the name plate of your rheostat, that is voltage and amperes.

Upon receipt of this information I will give you complete advice.

CURE FOR CRACKING CONDENSERS

Clarksville, Ark.—We have been troubled with our condensers cracking, kindly notify through the "News" what is the trouble.

Ans. It is almost impossible to give information which will absolutely prevent cracking of condensing lenses, but by following the suggestions enumerated below, you may reduce the condenser breakage to a minimum.

First.—Use only highest grade annealed condensers.

Second.—In placing the condenser in the holder make sure it is loose, that is, the mount or holder must not pinch or cramp any part of the glass. There must be perfect freedom for quick expansion and contraction of the glass.

Third.—The condenser usually breaks immediately after the arc is struck or just after it is cut off. The proper use of a shield, which may be made of metal or asbestos to be put between the arc and the condenser just before the arc is struck and to be removed after the arc has settled down and to be put back in front of the condenser in the lamphouse just before the arc is extinguished, will in many instances prevent cracking of condensers. The scheme is well worth trying.

FEASTER MACHINE SAVES WAGES OF REWIND BOY

THE Amsterdam theatre, 229 Eighth avenue, New York City, report perfect satisfaction with the Feaster non-rewind system which they are using on two Power's projecting machines.

The manager reports that he not only saves the wages of a rewind boy, but that the elimination of the noise of rewinding is appreciated by that portion of his audience sitting near the booth. The use of the Feaster machine means time, labor and fire risk saved, and better projection. The above theatre has run over 3,500 reels of film with the Feaster machine, without a break.

EXTRA OPERATORS IN CHATTANOOGA WANT INCREASE

IT is understood that a petition is being circulated by Chattanooga, Tenn., apprentice motion picture operators in which an increase of from $7 to $10 a week in their wages is asked. That the wage of $7 is unfair as compared to the salary of regular union operators is the contention of the apprentice men, whose petition will be submitted to the Chattanooga operators' union.

A strike of the relief operators is threatened, according to the holder of a petition. Prior to the last motion picture operators' strike here a salary of $12 a week was received by the relief operators. At that time, when an agreement was reached, their salaries were cut $5 a week.

In connection with the matter in question a statement has been issued by members of the Picture Operators' Union, No. 259, which charges that the agitation of apprentice operators has been brought about by outside influences in order to cause dissension amongst the ranks of the union operators. The statement states that the apprentices declare they did not approve of any such action.

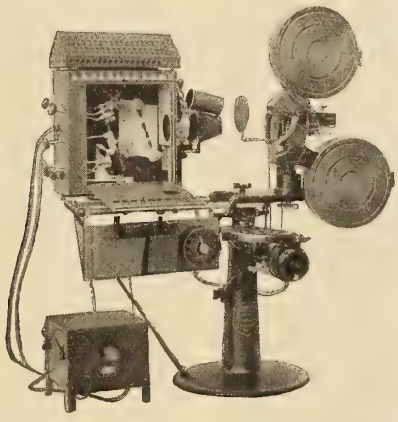
It is further set forth that the relief men are receiving $7 a week, and only one year's apprenticeship is required before their eligibility entitles them to hold full card membership in the union of operators, providing they pass a satisfactory examination. The claim that the $12 man of two years ago was made to suffer a cut of $5 in order to benefit the chief and first assistant operators, is, according to the statement of the union in question, "absolutely ridiculous."

Taylor W. Williams, a relief motion picture operator, in a communication, says that at the proper time an appeal will be made to the union operators for higher wages. He denies that he has had any connection with the agitation, and explains that upon proper investigation it will be found that the relief operators, or apprentices, are in most cases just as competent as their fellow union operators, "which shows that the third man is due some consideration, whatever that might be."

THREATENED OPERATORS' STRIKE IN HARRISBURG, PA., AVERTED

A STRIKE of union operators of motion picture machines, which was threatened in Harrisburg, Pa., early in the week, failed to materialize. Two operators walked out in one of the downtown theatres, and declared they would cause a general sympathetic strike throughout the city unless shorter hours and more pay were granted.

Their places were promptly filled in the theatre from which they walked out.



FIRE INSPECTION IN MICHIGAN NOW UNDER WAY

THE next inspection of Michigan motion pictures, as under the law, commenced September 1. The deputy inspectors have been instructed by the state fire marshal's office to be very rigid and strict and to require absolutely that every owner and manager comply with the law governing motion picture theatres.

Theatres are now required, under a recent ruling of the fire marshal, to discontinue entirely the use of cloth signs, banners and streamers in front of their theatres.

Building and Furnishings

NATHAN MYERS TAKES CHARGE OF BUILDING AND FURNISHING DEPARTMENT

NATHAN MYERS, the well-known architect, who has made a reputation in motion picture theatre construction, will assume charge of the Building and Furnishing Department of Motion Picture News.

Mr. Myers will also prepare feature articles for the News on the various salient features of theatre construction, taking up details and treating them in such a way that they will be of value to prospective theatre builders and those who wish to renovate their houses.

NATHAN MYERS

It is our hope that the Building and Furnishing Department will become a department of questions and answers where subscribers wishing information may write in and have Mr. Myers give them the desired information. No matter how trivial, whether it be in connection with new plans or remodeling, we want to be of all the assistance possible to our subscribers who want information.

Mr. Myers also intends to describe houses in all parts of the country. In this connection we wish that our subscribers would send in descriptions of their houses, accompanied with photographs of the interior and the exterior. These Mr. Myers intends to use in compiling articles from an architectural standpoint, allowing all the space necessary to a complete writeup of each house. The unique advertising methods and other "live wire" suggestions will all be brought out, for they will all help exhibitors in other parts of the country. It is this feeling of inter-communication between theatre owners which the "News" has been trying to encourage in every way. Here is another opportunity and we trust that you will all respond.

Suggestions to exhibitors in the form of other articles from contributing architects will appear from time to time showing details and definitions of various forms of architecture and the way in which they are applied in other parts of the country.

Various forms of building material and other equipment will also be taken up in detail and described by Mr. Myers, with illustrations showing their application and actual use. Co-operation in this will be sought from the various manufacturers. Each article will be from the theatre man's standpoint, which will mean that each will be a definite and concrete lesson which may be applied at some future time.

We hope that this new undertaking on the part of the "News" will prove popular among our subscribers and that they will co-operate with us in making it one of the livest and most beneficial parts of each week's issue.

EXTENSIVE BUILDING OPERATIONS GOING ON THROUGHOUT PENNSYLVANIA

LOUIS KROUSE, manager of the Strand Theatre, Twelfth street and Girard avenue, Philadelphia, and business agent of Local 307, has just been appointed special organizer for the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators.

The Rittenhouse, at Fifty-third street and Haverford avenue, Philadelphia, after being entirely redecorated, has reopened under the management of M. Mellor and Charles Goldstone, also proprietors of the Garden Theatre, at Fifty-third street and Lansdowne avenue.

The Sherwood, at Fifty-fourth street and Baltimore avenue, Philadelphia, will celebrate its second anniversary by an entire week devoted to Paramount program.

The Germantown Theatre, Philadelphia, one of the oldest in the city, has changed hands. Its present owner and manager, Walter Stumpfig, was one of the first to see the great possibilities of motion pictures and opened this theatre in a small store. Later this was pulled down, more ground purchased and a large structure erected, fitted up with the latest improvements in the picture line.

The house was bought by W. J. Burbank. The purchase price is reported to be $175,000.

H. J. Berman, who is owner of the Great Southern Theatre, at 2029 South Third street, Philadelphia, and other motion picture houses in the city, has just opened a new theatre at 1426 South Fourth street, of which he will be manager. This theatre, which has been named the Penn, is of fireproof construction and with all modern improvements in its particular line. It is considered one of the most beautiful theatres down town. The artistic decorations, especially the frescoeing wrought in gold, add much to the attractiveness of the place.

The control of the Amber Theatre, Frankford and Amber streets, Philadelphia, and of the West Allegheny Theatre, at Twenty-fifth street, has passed to S. Amsterdam, manager of the United Film Service offices in Philadelphia. Both theatres have been remodeled during the summer and are now open.

September 1 marked the opening of Allentown's moving picture theatre, The Hamilton, whose erection is just completed on Hamilton street, near Second street. The new theatre is the twelfth in this city. H. M. Meeker is the manager.

The Colonial theatre, Harrisburg, opened as a moving picture theatre August 23. The management says the theatrical season promises to be busy for the Wilmer and Vincent people operating the Orpheum, Majestic and Colonial, the "big three" of the Harrisburg theatrical world. The Colonial has been completely refurnished and renovated.

The Strand moving picture theatre in State street, Erie, between Ninth and Tenth streets, will be completed within six weeks.

Erie will soon have another addition to the moving picture houses. The new theatre in State street, between Eleventh and Twelfth streets, in course of erection by the Ackerman Contracting Company, is nearly completed.

William Fairgraves, proprietor of the Grand theatre, 1111 State street, will occupy the new place, which will be known as the New Grand.

FEASTER MACHINE INSTALLED IN BROOKLYN THEATRE

BYRON CHANDLER, INC., 1482 Broadway, New York, distributors of the Feaster non-rewind machine, report that they have installed the Feaster system in the Decatur theatre, 1676 Broadway, Brooklyn, and the Hamilton theatre, 146th street and Broadway, with satisfactory results.

FOUR HUNDRED MILWAUKEE OPERATORS HOLD PICNIC

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 1.

FOUR hundred operators, their wives, families and friends enjoyed a picnic at Keipper's park, north of Milwaukee, a few days ago. Two games of baseball, one between the married operators and the single men and the other between the visitors and the operators, were played. A big program of contests and games had been arranged by the committee in charge and all were hotly contested.

The single men won, six to nine. The married men retaliated soon afterwards, however, by defeating the single men in the bowling contest. C. Trempo won the one-hundred-yard dash, while Fred Stock was first in the sack race. The standing broad jump was won by Eddie Trinz and the running broad jump by Leo Guinan. The three-legged race, which furnished the spectators no end of laughs, was won by Fred Stock and George Hawn.

The backward race for men was another interesting event, this was won by Fred Sonnenberg.

Two teams were entered in the hurdle leap frog race. The team captained by Jack Rotter won this event. Those on the winning team were George Hawn, Fred Stock, Walter Behr, Walter Balge.

The running high jump was won by Arthur Gaulke. One of the events for the women was the bowling match between the married and single women, which was won by the married women. One of the most interesting events of the whole picnic was the crabbing contest held on the banks of the Milwaukee River.

The prize went to the individual finding the largest crab. George Arnowitz won this event.

The picnic was brought to a close by a baseball game between the operators and their visitors, the operators winning 4 to 3.

Max Krauseschneider, attired in typical rube make-up and wearing a huge tin star on which was emblazoned the word "Sheriff."

He caused considerable merriment by his attempts to enforce his own speeding laws and to keep order.

ACTIVITIES OF EXHIBITORS IN THE EMPIRE STATE

THE Strand theatre, Albany, formerly the Colonial, opened for the season on Monday, September 6. Morris Kantrowitz, owner of the theatre, has had extensive betterments made, and the Strand is in fine condition. It will continue the policy of a change of program daily.

Work on the new Pine Hills picture house, Albany, which F. R. Billman is to have charge of is progressing finely, and the new structure will be opened in the early fall. It will be a thoroughly modern house in every particular, with a seating capacity of 1,500. It is located in the most aristocratic residential section of the city.

Manager Leon Schlesinger, of the Palace theatre, Buffalo, opens the fall season with Fox features. The change to features for the Palace was predicted in the News some weeks ago. This theatre has been running a regular program, but has found that features are demanded by patrons.

The cornerstone for the new Bay Ridge Theatre, Brooklyn, was laid August 24 by Borough President Lewis H. Pounds. He was assisted by Robert T. Rasmussen, secretary and treasurer of the company, and architect of the theatre.

A large vaudeville and moving picture theatre, to cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $150,000, will probably be erected at the corner of Ashland place and Fulton street, Brooklyn.

The new McKinley Square Theatre, at Boston road and 169th street, New York City, opened August 27, under the control of the Damorba Amusement Company.

Messrs. Floyd Lenneker and Wilson Foster opened a moving picture theatre in Young's new hall at Salisbury Center, August 21.

Oswego is to have a new motion picture theatre, according to an announcement made by Horace D. Pierce. Mr. Pierce is having a new concrete building built in West Second street, between Bridge and Oneida streets. The theatre will be 66 x 100 and will comfortably seat 1,200.

POSSIBLE REVIVAL OF "POSTER CRAZE"

THERE is a strong movement to revive what was twenty years ago known as the poster craze. That is to say, private individuals interested in art, collected posters and held exhibitions of them and took a real interest in this branch of advertising.

There is one such collection in this city which comprises over 20,000 examples of the best poster art in the world. Posters, too, have their own literature. Over a hundred volumes have been written on this branch of advertising art, and the greatest artists of modern times have not considered it beneath their dignity to contribute to what is known as the poor man's picture gallery.

It must always be remembered that the sketch is the thing. A good poster cannot be made without a good sketch, and a good sketch costs money. How can a good sketch be reproduced well and faithfully unless the lithographer be paid a reasonable price for his work?

This movement for the betterment of publicity is not limited to posters; lobby display has its share also. Until comparatively recently, lobby display consisted of a few one sheets and a few gelatine enlargements of stills and portraits, but now, with some of the big features, the manufacturers are turning out complete sets of lobby display, which can be hired at so much per week.

Saving to Exhibitors

These comprise bromide enlargements, cut outs, transparencies, painted signs, banners, half sheet cards, gelatines; in fact, every conceivable thing that could possibly be used in advertising a film—a display, which if the exhibitor started in to make it himself, would cost $60 or $70, whereas he can rent this for a few dollars for exhibition before showing the film and during its run.

This is capable of much development, and it is up to the manufacturer, in these days of competition, to do all in his power to help his exhibitor make as much money as he possibly can.

There are many exhibitors who have gone into the business without any real knowledge of it, and with very limited capital. The great thing is to help these exhibitors, and show them how they can get the best publicity for the smallest outlay.

There is no reason why films should not be handled in exactly the same way as any other advertised merchandise. The most successful manufacturer is he who sells the most goods through the retail stores. This is only possible through using the best methods of publicity, and advertising applies to the motion picture industry, which is fifth largest in the world, as much as to any other.

PREDDEY REPORTS GOOD BUSINESS FOR FEASTER

This department is designed to be a weekly guide to all sales, leases, construction and remodeling of photoplay theatres throughout the country. If you are building, selling, leasing or renovating, and this department fails to record the fact, kindly communicate it at once for publication.

CALIFORNIA

T. L. THOMAS, who recently purchased the theatre at Twenty-fourth and Hoover streets, Los Angeles, formerly known as the Lily, and after numerous improvements, including the installation of a new Power's Six-A machine, and handsome new furnishings, renamed it Fairyland, is now arranging to improve the theatre by adding thirty feet to the rear of the building which will permit the adding of two hundred more seats, making a total of six hundred.

The Butterfly theatre, near the corner of Sixteenth and Burlington, Los Angeles, has been sold by S. U. Burns to J. H. Baker. This is one of the pretty small theatres in the down town residence districts.

The owners of the Bear theatre at 625 West third and Jewell, Los Angeles, have sold their interests to H. E. Payne.

The Star, a one hundred and ninety-nine seat house, at the corner of Sixth street and Figueroa, Los Angeles, which has been dark for the past six months, has been opened by J. B. Shaw, a former legitimate stage actor, who is conducting the house with a policy of all feature pictures.

Rueben Brothers have purchased the Brooklyn theatre, at 2285 Brooklyn avenue, Los Angeles, and after a few repairs have opened it. This house has been dark for some time.

D. S. Mitchell has disposed of the North Broadway theatre, of three hundred seats near Twenty-fourth avenue and North Broadway, Los Angeles, to H. E. Sheppard.

The Mitchell Creation on Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, has sold, and the new owners have taken charge, and W. O. Edmonds, former manager of the Kleine exchange here, has disposed of the Appolo theatre, Forty-eighth street and Vermont, Los Angeles, to F. B. Croxall.

The Navarre theatre, at 738 Pico street, Los Angeles, which has been undergoing a number of repairs, has been reopened by Manager F. A. Lydy.

B. L. Blaine has terminated his lease of the University theatre at 96 West Jefferson street, Los Angeles. The house has now been leased to Sidney Miller, who will open it in the future.

The Kahn & Greenfield Circuit has made arrangements to remodel and renovate the Progress theatre on Fillmore street, San Francisco, at a cost of several thousand dollars, this work to be completed before the rush of winter business commences. A new organ will be installed, the place redecorated and one of the finest electric signs in the city placed in front of the building. This firm is also planned to engage in business on a large scale in the Mission district.

A. Hamilton has taken over the Parnassus theatre in the Sunset district, San Francisco.

The Poppy theatre, at Sixteenth and Mission streets, San Francisco, is now being conducted by A. Johnson.

The Pippin theatre has been re-opened at Watsonville, after having been closed for some time.

The Atascadero theatre, at Atascadero, has closed for the summer, but will reopen in a couple of months.

Rapid progress is being made on the decorating of the New Chutes theatre on Fillmore street, San Francisco, and this big house will be opened at an early date under the direction of Charles Cole. This theatre was erected years ago on the site of the Chutes, but has not been used since the destruction of the latter by fire. Recently the big reinforced concrete building was moved to a new location and contracts were awarded for placing it in shape again.

T. T. Overton has made the arrangements necessary to the reconstruction of the building at 307 Fourth street, Santa Rosa, and work started on the preparation of the interior of the theatre. Occupation of the building by the picture show is expected to be in about one week. The new theatre will be known as the De Luxe.

IDAHO

The Boz theatre, Boise, is to be known in the future as the Stand. This announcement was made last night by the Idaho Amusement Company management, which succeeds the Boz Theatre Company. The directors of the new company are: E. Noble, D. Farquhar, V. P. Coffin and Theo. Johnson. Mr. Johnson is manager of the company.

Mitchell and Samuels, who have been operating the Columbia picture theatre in Malden, near Spokane, Washington, have acquired a theatre at Priest River, Idaho. Mr. Samuels will have charge of the Idaho house, and his partner will handle the Columbia.

INDIANA

Charles C. Rhodes expects to open the new Strand theatre in West Lafayette about September 1.

The Park theatre, East Tenth street and Olney avenue, Indianapolis, has been closed. George Bryant is the manager.

The Amuzu theatre, of Oakland City, has been incorporated for $5,000. The directors are A. G. Troutman, Carl Spillman and Eunice Troutman.

The Majestic theatre at Seymour, will reopen in September, after having been remodeled. The stairways to the balcony are to be removed from the lobby and built outside, and the elevated part of the lobby lowered to the street level.

Smith and Tengeman, owners of the Grand at Bluffton, Ind., have announced that Harry E. Troutman will manage the theatre.

Pleak and Howard are building a new motion picture theatre at St. Paul, to seat five hundred people. The house will be electrically equipped throughout and a Victrola and a player piano will furnish the music.

Heller and Jean, owners of the Belmont theatre, in West Washington street, Indianapolis, are building a new theatre at South East and Prospects streets.

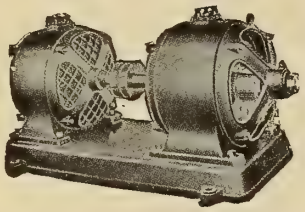
ILLINOIS

Dominick Fricina has charge of a new motion picture theatre at Bullpit. It will be known as the Majestic and will seat about 450.

J. W. Foutch has opened the Happy Hour motion picture theatre at New Berlin, showing three nights a week and Saturday matinee.

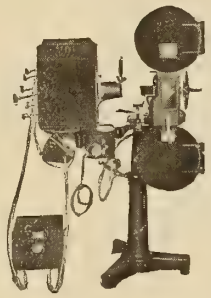
Frank Roloff plans shortly to open a motion picture theatre at Bath.

George D. Gould, of Mattoon, is planning to open a motion picture theatre in that city.



Mrs. C. H. Duerr will shortly open a new motion picture theatre at Meredosia.

The Chatterton opera house at Springfield, opened September 1, and will show motion pictures during the season on dates when there are no theatrical attractions.



J. B. Reilly has reopened the Princess motion picture theatre at Kankakee. The building has been redecorated.

M. Switow, of Louisville, president of the Phoenix Amusement Company, which is remodeling the Strand theatre on Main street, was in Lexington recently with Oscar Joseph, of the architectural firm of Joseph & Joseph, inspecting the building, and announced that the theatre will be ready to open for patronage the first week in October.

Negotiations are underway at the present time for the purchase of the Pastime theatre at Maysville, by Mr. Miles, which has been closed for several months because of financial difficulties. It is probable that the theatre will be reopened within a short time with motion pictures.

M. Y. Opie and F. B. Evins have rented the Princess theatre at Eddyville, Ky., and have already opened with a picture program.

The work of repairing the Capital Theatre, Frankfort, is progressing rapidly and the building will be in condition by the latter part of October.

MINNESOTA

Elmer Larson, owner of the Cecile theatre, Cokato, opened his new theatre recently. The new house is built of tile blocks and stucco. The seating capacity is three hundred. The stage has been so constructed that either motion pictures or vaudeville may be shown.

Another beautiful photoplay theatre was added to the Minneapolis rialto August 21, when the doors of the New Garden theatre, 622 Hennepin avenue, were thrown open to the public. The new amusement enterprise is the project of C. C. Taft, Abe Frankel of Des Moines, and others. These men are also interested in photoplay theatres in the Iowa capital.

MICHIGAN

With the arrival of September comes unusual interest in the motion picture industry in Detroit. While several large theatres are still in course of erection and others announced to be built later, three are sure to open, the new Strand, Grand River and Fourteenth, owned by John H. Kunsky, the Stratford theatre at Dix and Ferdinand avenues, and the Lakewood, at Jefferson and Oneida streets.

Mr. Kunsky's house opened Labor Day; it takes care of 1,500 people, and is one of the most beautiful playhouses in Detroit. Arthur Hoganson is manager. The Stratford will not open until the latter part of the month; it will also seat about 1,300 and will be a beautiful playhouse. The Lakewood opened the week of September 7, and has a seating capacity of 1,200.

William F. Klatt took out a permit this week for the new Regent theatre, Woodward and Horton avenues, that will cost $100,000 with furnishings, and seat 3,000 people. It will make Mr. Klatt's fifth theatre in Detroit.

The new grand Boulevard or Duplex theatre, located on the East Grand Boulevard, near Woodward avenue, will open in September. It will be one of the most unique theatres in the country, there being two theatres adjoining each other, with a seating capacity of 750 each.

Improvements are being made to the interior of the Lyric theatre, St. Joseph. The walls are being redecorated and a new Simplex motion picture machine is being installed.

A deal has been closed whereby Manistee is to have another high-class motion picture theatre. Fitzpatrick and McElroy, of Chicago, who operate a chain of theatres along the lake front, have been conferring with property owners here, and it is understood that they have completed the necessary plans. The building will be one-story high, seating 600. Fitzpatrick & McElroy control theatres in Ludington, Cadillac and Traverse City, Mich.

E. M. Hennessy, manager of the Fine Arts theatre, Detroit, was in Chicago recently making arrangements for features and for new equipment for the theatre. When A. A. Kaille purchased the theatre a few months ago he enlarged it from a six hundred seat to a one thousand seat house, and increased the admission price to ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents.

The Star picture theatre, Calumet, which has been leased by Carl Schwartz, opened under the name of "The Eagle," on August 14. The theatre has been repaired and redecorated.

The Mikado theatre, St. Louis, at 5951 Easton avenue, has been leased for six years by Henry and W. J. Sherer at a total rental of $33,000.

The Mikado Theatre Company, of which O. T. Crawford is president, erected the building, which seats 1,900 persons.

Feaster No-Rewind Machine

Bulletin No. 4

On July 19, 1915, the Ocean Grove Auditorium, Ocean Grove, New Jersey, which is the largest theatre in the United States, installed the FEASTER no-rewind system.

Over one-half million feet of film have now been run through these machines at this theatre, without a break or delay of any kind, and the operator's verdict is, 'The FEASTER machines are absolutely perfect."

The use of the FEASTER machine means less breaking of film and better projection. Do these facts mean anything to YOU? Demonstration upon request.

The FEASTER is easily and quickly attached to Power's or Simplex projectors.

6th & Olive ST. LOUIS

Saturday afternoon, August 28, the Majestic gardens, Grand Rapids, formerly the Majestic theatre, opened for the first time under the lesseeship and management of the Gilligham & Smith Enterprises.

Over $25,000 has been expended in making this most beautiful photo playhouse. Extensive remodeling has taken place.

Improvements at the Bijou, Saginaw, are completed and the house reopened August 22. The improvements include the black and white decorative scheme and changes in the seating accommodation.

Fire which tsarted Friday morning, August 20, in the Princess theatre, Sandwich street east, Windsor, caused $2,000 damage before the firemen had it under control.

MISSOURI

The Columbia theatre, Sixth and St. Charles streets, St. Louis, opened under the management of Harry D. Buckley on August 30, with the regular program of high class vaudeville, and motion pictures in colors.

Thomas James, owner and manager of the Movie theatre, 2351 Market street, St. Louis, has purchased the Pathé Airdome on Franklin avenue and Eleventh street from G. K. Dubis. Mr. James is having the Movie remodeled and the seating capacity increased to 400 seats. The ceiling of the house is to be heightened, which will allow for better ventilation.

Manager Haley, of the Aubert Garden, 4937 Easton avenue, St. Louis, gave a benefit for St. Timothy's Episcopal Church on August 23. A minstrel show was added to the regular program of five reels of film for the occasion.

The O'Fallon Park theatre and airdome, 5353 Florissant avenue, St. Louis, has again put on the regular Saturday and Sunday afternoon matinees, beginning on August 21 and 22, that plays to big houses all during the cool weather.

The De Soto airdome, at De Soto, under the management of Beisbarth & Dickerson, has been moved to the K. of P. Hall, on account of uncertain weather conditions. De Soto has another motion picture show in the Jefferson Opera House, under the management of J. D. Walther.

The Oklahoma City Amusement Company has obtained a lease on the property at 1119 Grand avenue, Kansas City, for five years, at a total rental of $24,000. Extensive improvements are to be made and the building will then be opened as a motion picture show.

NEBRASKA

A syndicate has secured a ninety-nine year lease on the property at 1410-12-14 Farnam street, Omaha, near the center of the city, and will build a motion picture theatre there. The syndicate, whose names have not been divulged, states that it will erect the largest motion picture theatre in Omaha, and one of the finest in the West, on this site. The construction, they said, will be wholly new, the present buildings, now occupied by the World-Herald, being razed. The real estate deal involved about $250,000.

A syndicate of Chicago motion picture capitalists, including T. A. Van Leich, W. W. Weertser and F. A. Secrest, have decided to erect a $65,000 motion picture theatre in Fairbury, and work will be started just as soon as the building material can be delivered. These parties own theatres in a number of big cities throughout the Middle West. C. W. Bartlett, manager of the Majestic theatre at Fairbury, has been tendered the management of the new concern. The building will have a seating capacity of 610 on the lower floor and 280 in the balcony. It will be constructed of concrete, brick and steel and will be absolutely fireproof.

NEW JERSEY

For the first time since its erection, three years ago, the Orpheum theatre, at Washington and Court streets, Newark, opened its season without a stock company holding the boards. The new policy, adopted at the opening of the playhouse, consisted of first run pictures, selections by the Victor Florantine Military Band and a quartet. Morris B. Schlesinger will continue as director of the playhouse, while M. S. Schlesinger is resident manager.

Peter Adams, joint owner with his brother of the Paterson Show, at 136 Market street, has leased the Opera House property and will erect a motion picture house, to be known as the United States theatre, on the site. The theatre will cost about $100,000, and will open before January 1.

VIRGINIA.

The contract has been let by Manager Guy Barrett, of the Belvedere theatre, Lynchburg, for the enlargement of this house, which is located in the heart of the business district. In addition to providing extra seating arrangements the interior of the theatre is to be decorated anew and other alterations are being considered.

WISCONSIN

John E. Williams, manager of the Opera House at Oshkosh, has decided to run pictures exclusively in the Opera House this coming season. He was led to this decision by the scarcity of good combination road shows that are open for booking.

The new motion picture house which is being erected at 409 National avenue, Milwaukee, will open to the public about October 1. Among those interested in the project are Casper Kroeger and Charles Stumpf. The theatre will seat 800 people.

Milwaukee's newest photoplay house, the Jackson, at Jackson street and Ogden avenue, opened August 21. Bernard Rosenow, for twenty years with the Pabst theatre, is manager.

PAULAS ANNOUNCES NEW TRIPOD

GENERAL MANAGER H. PAULAS, of the Los Angeles Motion Picture Company, manufacturers of the Angelus camera and studio equipment, sent out announcements last week of the new tripod which has four distinct advantages, including an automatic camera screw, quick panorama release, rapid tilting device, rigged leg construction and steel points on the bottom of the legs.

The amateur Angelus camera, which was especially designed for use of exhibitors and inexperienced operators, is another new product of the factory. It has a number of decided advantages which make it of exceptional merit, especially to the exhibitor. The camera is very compact, almost automatic in every detail of operation, and is proving successful wherever used.

Edited by Ernst Luz

EDITOR'S NOTE.— This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

ALL MUSIC METHODS MUST BE PRACTICAL

I AM often asked for my opinion regarding many different musical suggestions as given with feature releases.

Desiring to refrain from any possible unfair criticism, and as picture music is in its infancy, I do not feel that I should in any way retard any person's earnest efforts. I have always contended that any method which suggests musical numbers without any short and concise method of describing the numbers suggested is of little if any value to the picture player.

Any method which does not give the player an opportunity for originality is not practical, and entails the unnecessary expenditure of money. My personal experiences have conclusively proved to me that it is detrimental to good music to positively dictate certain numbers when the ability of the players is not known. I have in my library of nearly 20,000 numbers many hundred numbers that I can send to only a few of the orchestras under my personal supervision.

Picture Music Is New Study

I have many more that cannot be used by all orchestras on account of improper orchestration. There is no difference with the pianist or one-man instrument player, for when we try to dictate the player's ability by taxing it with positively stated numbers we not only make picture playing more difficult, but in many instances impossible. There seems to be an idea afloat that any competent musician could with a very little study select proper picture music. This is not so.

Picture music is a new study, and anyone who thinks it can be mastered without extraordinary effort and application to the work is simply postponing his or her complete failure. The work needs actual experience as well as study.

I have been asked why there are no playing instructions to plots given to certain manufacturers.

The answer is simple. The one who suggests that music has had very little, if any, picture experience. I doubt if he has ever played a picture in his life, and the plots or suggestions convince me that they are not the work of a picture student.

Other suggestions I have seen, with no cues given whatsoever, seem to be the work of some one who desires to show the public on paper what wonderfully classical music he or she can play.

To say the least such work can be of little assistance to picture music. It is, therefore, no wonder that the exhibitor is told by his musician that he can select better music without even seeing the picture.

I am positive that the player can do so, for he will at least select music that he or she can play. I have personally been more or less successful in picture playing, and I must frankly admit that were I compelled to follow many of these nonsensical and irrelevant suggestions, I would feel quite anxious about my future.

It might be well to mention to the producers of photo-plays that if picture music is to become a success in the picture theatre, they must cater to the musician as well as his ability. Because the manufacturer may be able to get suggestions for nothing does not mean that they cost him nothing, for adverse criticism will cheapen his product and create a loss which cannot be estimated or fixed.

This is no time for the manufacturer to allow picture music to be exploited by anyone for mercenary reasons. That picture music will be a factor in the picture theatre is assured, regardless of the desires of some unscrupulous interests in the film industry to have it otherwise.

Why then should not a musician entering the field of picture music suggestion not be asked to show satisfactory credentials as to his qualifications?

Mr. Producer, be serious in this matter, for in the future you will find features judged by their musical possibilities, as well as critical comparison with other feature films.

MUSIC HALL, LARGEST BUILDING OF ITS KIND IN CINCINNATI, FOR PICTURES

AMBITIOUS plans are being laid in Cincinnati by Milton Gosdorfer, former newspaperman of the East, representing New York capitalists, for the largest motion picture proposition ever attempted in that city. According to the announcement made recently the Music Hall, the mammoth auditorium in which the May festivals are held, will be used as a motion picture theatre of the best type. Music Hall has a seating capacity of nearly 4,000 and will be probably the largest motion picture theatre in the world when the doors are thrown open early in September to the motion picture loving public.

The plan is regarded as a step forward by motion picture exhibitors of Cincinnati who have been waging an up-hill fight for higher admission prices. Owing to the immense seating capacity of the great hall, a graduated scale of prices will be maintained. The best seats will sell for twenty-five or fifty cents. Popular prices will be asked in other parts of the house. A feature of the big theatre will be an orchestra of at least twenty-five players and the use of the great organ on the Music Hall stage. This organ has been used in all of the past May festivals and some of the greatest artists in the world have performed upon it. The orchestra will be directed by Walter Esberger, a Cincinnati leader of considerable note.

The company which has made these arrangements is located in New York and will operate other large picture houses in various cities.

"We plan to make our show distinctive," said Mr. Gosdorfer, "and will exhibit pictures that cannot be seen elsewhere. We will make our theatre so attractive that it is bound to be successful. The musical programme will be regarded as just as important as the pictures. The doors entering the great lobby will be thrown open to the public, and at intermissions the orchestra will be moved to a balcony overlooking the lobby. Music will be played at intervals while our patrons promenade."

QUARTETTE AN ADDED ATTRACTION IN BUFFALO, N. Y., THEATRE

THE Elmwood theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., presented as a specially added attraction last week the Elks' Quartette, which sang at the theatre two evenings. A line was at the box office at 6:50 o'clock, a most unusual sight.

So successful was the engagement that the Premier and Central Park theatres immediately booked the quartette for an engagement. The Elks' lodge there was well represented at all performances. Manager E. S. Davis had a film taken of the front of the Elmwood and "pasted into" a special film carried by the Elks showing the crowd arriving at the theatre. This novelty was a decided hit. As the film ended the quartette stepped from behind a curtain.

Music Plot for Pathé Feature "The Galloper"

This plot is adapted so as to make it possible for the pianist, organist or orchestra leader to make some prior preparation for playing the picture. The numbers suggested need not be used; similar numbers or numbers suggested by "notes" affixed will do as well. It is intended that no unnecessary expense be added for the exhibitor or musician.

25.	Waltz (Leg.)	"Cecile" (Ricordi & Co.)	To end.

NOTES.—During No. 1 at the sub-title, "But as a social lion, he is a roar," a lion roar by drummer can be used. On title only. No. 3 is a repetition of the same suggestion. During 15, 23 and 24 imitation shots are appropriate. During No. 13 an imitation of the tearing of cloth when woman's skirt is ripped off will be a laugh getter.

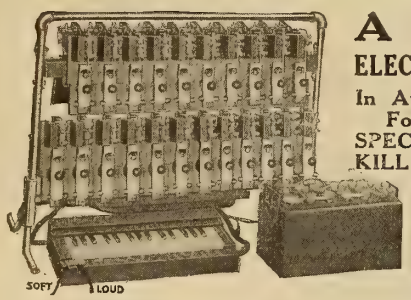
MUSIC NOTES.—1, 2, 8, 12 and 18 are self explanatory. Nos. 3 and 9 are comedy effect suggestions. In No. 9 when orchestra is used have one instrument tune after other at Leader's suggestion. No. 4 is a short number, must have the African suggestion. No. 5 can be a selection of a light comic opera. Plays about 9 minutes. Nos. 6, 10, 14 should be light melodious caprices or similar numbers. Nos. 7, 11 and 13 should suggest the foreign in music. Grecian preferred. Dare not be Oriental or decidedly characteristic. Nos. 16 and 25 should be slow waltzes played legato or slurred. Nos. 17 and 24 should be galops. No. 17 slow, No. 24 fast and heavy. No. 19 can be a slow 6/8 number. Nos. 20, 22 and 23 are melo-dramatic numbers as published by the Photo Play Music Company, 1520 Broadway, New York City. These numbers materially help to burlesque the comedy action on screen. No. 21 is a comedy suggestion. I know of no beter number than the one suggested. Can be bought from any music dealer.

Organ Must Be Used in Conjunction With Orchestra

By Charles C. Pyle, Bartola Musical Instrument Company

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the second article by Mr. Pyle appearing in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Mr. Pyle's views will be of interest to musicians playing for the pictures and managers of new theatres not yet decided upon the character of the music for installation in their houses. He is an authority on the subject he treats and his opinions will therefore be read with interest.

IT has been almost as hard to convince the owner of a motion picture theatre that first-class music is a necessity and that his future success depends upon it, as it was to convince the public that automobiles would take the place of horses.



In my last week's article I traveled as far as the large Orchestrians in Motion Picture Theatres. During the time that orchestrians were popular, motion pictures were a novelty. Music was not needed to draw the public inside. Everyone was curious to know how pictures were made, and so the music was merely to attract the attention of the people on the street. It never entered the head of the manager that he would ever have to entertain his audience with music. His entire thought was how to empty his theatre quickly.

By this time the shrewd business man started to investigate the motion picture business and became interested, so better class theatres were built and with better theatres we have better pictures; but a very small improvement in music.

The improvement, however, consists of a piano and a piano player. I must admit that it was a wonderful relief to the automatic music and a pleasure to hear a real human being play the piano in a picture theatre. Then the drummer was added to the piano, and oh! how he used to pound the drums.

He would purchase twenty dollars' worth of traps and effects and work every one of them every show. He certainly earned his money. What seemed to be so bad was the manner in which he would work his effects. After the steamboat had whistled he would also whistle. If they threw a man out of the window he would probably shake his box of broken glass after the man had gotten up, but he was always busy.

Orchestra Must Stick to Music

Some of the better class theatres would employ a larger orchestra, anywhere from four to six pieces. This was the greatest improvement in music up to date and greatly helped to place the picture business on a higher plane, but the orchestra did not solve the music problem. Their overtures were very fine, but the greatest drawback to the human orchestra was the fact that they were compelled to play every selection from their music, and therefore it was impossible for them to play the pictures correctly.

In order to properly play the pictures it is necessary for any musician to memorize, improvise and fake music, and it is impossible for any number of minds to do this successfully, so the theatre orchestra must stick to their music.

One of the greatest objections to the orchestra is the fact that they will play an overture and right in the middle of a big picture, and while the biggest scene is being shown, they will finish their overture, and the interest in the picture always seems to drop at the same time. After they finish their selection they usually tune up their different instruments, which all helps to draw your attention from the picture.

The orchestra, not being quite satisfactory, has helped to place the pipe organ in the theatre. The music of the pipe organ is wonderful. Its music has saved a great many bad pictures. It has been a great step towards improving the musical program in a picture theatre.

But the results are not yet satisfactory. The expense must be considered. If a theatre has an orchestra, the pipe organ and organist are idle while the orchestra is playing an overture. Then when the organ is playing the orchestra is idle. It would not do to dismiss the orchestra, because the audience would quickly tire of the organ all the time.

I do not think there is any picture made that an organ should play the entire picture, but there are certain parts of every picture that an organ should be used. With a straight pipe organ you also have trouble.

It is almost impossible to follow pictures with it. You cannot make your changes quick enough. Some theatres have a pipe organ and allow their piano players to play it. The player will be either a good organ player or a good piano player, but you seldom find one that can play both organ and piano well. The player will jump from the piano to the organ and back again. First he will give an organ selection, then a little rag-time on the piano, but this music has absolutely no drawing power.

In my next and last article, I am going to explain to you what I consider the proper music for a picture theatre.

Attention of Mr. A.E.Smith:

Gentlemen:

On Saturday, the 21st inst., I ran the 15th chapter of the "Goddess". The doors were open at 12.00 noon, and from 2.00 P.M. intil closing time it played to standing room only.

I am sincerely sorry, and feel sure that I am voicing the sentiment of thousands of other exhibitors, when I say that I wish there was more of it. It is a remarkably good drawing serial and a remarkable cast of clever photo players, and in all sincerity it far surpassed my expectations as a money getter.

Wishing your continued success, I remain

Very cordially yours, am "the be all and end all" of all three-reel pictures.

I have a purpose in life.

I am of the elite,
the high-brow, as it were,
and am looked upon with wonder whenever I am shown.

People the world over know my reputation is stainless, and I have never disappointed.
In fact I have more than pleased those with whom I have been associated.

My family name is Broadway Star Feature;
my paternal ancestor, the Vitagraph.

You will like me;
in fact, I feel that were we better acquainted
a common bond would be established between us.

YANCSI DOLLY

OF THE

FAMOUS DOLLY SISTERS

In the Four-Act BROADWAY FAVORITES Feature Production

The Call of the Dance

His desire to have Yancsi Dolly and her sister dance for his guests at his Newport home caused Cornelius Vanderbilt to pay $15,000 for a special presentation of "The Merry Countess," in which they were the headliners, and which had just opened at the Casino Theatre. Miss Dolly is undoubtedly the most popular danseuse in the East and among her Broadway appearances were such successes as "The Honeymoon Express," Winter Garden; the "Follies," New York Roof, etc. Said Lynde Denig in last week's MOVING PICTURE WORLD: "'The Call of the Dance' is delightfully free from padding and among the pictures that can be highly recommended!"

GEORGE KLEINE'S

THE MONEY MASTER

With

Frank Sheridan

In the role of the Money King!

That's CALVIN THOMAS on the floor, juvenile lead with Irene Fenwick in "The Song of Songs"—and bending over him, FRANK SHERIDAN, described by William Winter and Ashton Stevens as "The American Coquelin"—and ANNE MEREDITH, one of the best known leading women on Broadway! There's FANIA MARINOFF, too, in the background, stage and screen star of international reputation—with PAUL McALLISTER, gun in hand, off to the left! And SAM REED—MALCOLM DUNCAN!

MORE REAL STARS THAN YOU EVER SAW BEFORE IN A SINGLE FEATURE!

AMPLE GUARANTEE,* SURELY, OF THE SUPER-EXCELLENCE OF *"THE MONEY MASTER"

It's a story of New York's East Side—of its misery and squalor and filth—of Wall Street and its guiding genius—a tale of sharp contrasts with an underlying heart appeal as powerful as it is dramatic.

Paramount Convention

There has just been held in Chicago a great get-together convention of the managers and salesmen from Paramount offices throughout the United States, the eastern contingent of which occupied two special cars attached to the 20th Century.

The purpose of this meeting was two-fold:

1st—To become better acquainted with each other and strengthen the bond of Paramount unity.

2d—To adopt ways and means and inaugurate a campaign to help exhibitors secure the fullest benefit from the unparalleled Paramount National Advertising Campaign just launched—a campaign that will surely bring many thousands of new patrons into the theatres of Paramount Exhibitors everywhere. That means increased box office receipts.

If you are an exhibitor not using Paramount Service you should write our nearest exchange for particulars.

METRO PICTURES

TO the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the world the Metro Pictures Corporation presents its compliments and its sincere wishes for a successful season.

The Metro Pictures Corporation is leaving to others the giving of advice, the activity in behalf of high finance and the time wasting pursuit of looking into the past. All our energies, all our experience, all our showmanship as practical men with red blooded ideals, are concentrated on the making of good pictures. If we are to believe the critics, the exhibitors and the public, we are making good pictures and better pictures all the time.

The Metro Pictures Corporation with this one ambition calls your attention to its stars and to its plays and invites critical comparison with all the others in the field. We still insist that good pictures cover all the manufacturer need give the exhibitor.

WARNING!

Owing to the great popularity of the Charles Chaplin photoplays many unauthorized prints of our productions, portraying him in his different pictures, are being handled in the United States. Some of these are fake prints and some are duplicates.

This company has adopted a policy of vigorous prosecution of every violation that comes to its notice, whether it be by the person who makes the unauthorized films or the person who rents or distributes them.

In the past three weeks the company has seized two unauthorized two-act Chaplin photoplays and has instituted two suits for injunction, accounting, and confiscation of the films, charging violation of our copyright.

It is our intention to protect our property rights and also to assure the public that it will see a genuine Chaplin picture when it is advertised as an Essanay-Chaplin Comedy.

We intend to pursue this policy until there is not a fake or duplicate Chaplin picture in the country.

This announcement is made so that dealers, exhibitors and the public may be put on their guard.

We earnestly request that you assist us in this campaign for Picture Honesty by sending us notice of any fake Essanay-Chaplin picture that you may know of.

For such information we thank you.

MEN BULK BIG AND LIFE LOOMS LARGE IN 'THE MAN TRAIL'

Follow "The Man Trail."

It leads back to the wilds of the great North Woods where men bulk big and life looms large.

There, untrammeled by convention, the primitive passions hold sway.

Men laugh and drink together, or battle hand to hand for life and love.

Boisterously they play, or grimly fight to the death.

Life is a gamble and risked on the throw of a die.

This great six act photoplay, adapted from the recently published novel by Henry Oyen, throbs with life and action. It holds the spectator with gripping intensity.

Richard C. Travers, with Ernest Maupain, Thomas McLarnie, June Keith and John Lorenz are featured in an all star cast.

The Producer and the Press

RECENT editorials, upon this page, defining the prime necessity of greater co-operation between the pictures and the press, and suggesting ways and means to this end are bringing in many interesting letters.

Two, which are given herewith, put the matter right up to the producing companies and their press representatives.

"Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 4, 1915.

"MR. WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON,
"220 West Forty-second street,
"New York City.

"My Dear Mr. Johnston:—Have just finished reading with a great deal of interest your editorial in the issue of September 11, entitled, "The Exhibitor and the Newspaper." You are right to a certain extent in calling attention to the opportunity the exhibitor is passing by to secure newspaper publicity, but you are only touching one side of the subject.

"What about the producer who spends all his time and money on national advertising campaigns and forgets to co-operate with the individual exhibitor in anyway outside of sending him a lot of stereotype press matter that is of little value from a news standpoint?

"I was the first press agent in Milwaukee to handle a photoplay theatre, and I have done a great deal of publicity work for the various down town exhibitors, yet up-to-date I have received absolutely no co-operation from the producers of even the biggest productions. I have written letter after letter to the various publicity departments and as a rule have received no reply or merely a mass of stuff that was of little use to me.

"TO cite an instance. The other day one of the houses ran a production that contained in its cast of principals a Milwaukee actor who was very popular, yet it was only by chance that I discovered that he was in the cast. At another time a company made a portion of its production in this vicinity and yet nothing was contained in the press matter or advance notices on this fact.

"In addition to handling a number of photoplay houses I handle some legitimate stuff as well, and while the photoplays contain one hundred per cent. greater opportunities for publicity, the legitimate shows are walking away with the free advertising simply because their producers realize the value of this sort of advertising and make an effort to get it.

"ANOTHER thing, the legitimate productions have special photographs taken for newspaper work; the photoplay producers send out a lot of prints made from the motion picture itself, and with a lot of lettering plastered all over and almost wholely unsuited for newspaper work.

"What is needed in the motion picture business more than anything else at this writing is greater co-operation between the producer and the exhibitor and the adaptation by the producer of some of the methods used by his legitimate brethren to press agent his productions.

"Yours truly,

"J. W. MARTIN."

"'THE ADVANCE' (AFTERNOON).
"Lynchburg, Va., Sept. 5, 1915.

"William A. Johnston.

"My Dear Sir:—Your leading editorial in the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS I have just received was peculiarly interesting.

"Newspaper men, generally speaking, haven't time to sit down and pick out such material as may interest them in the publicity 'stuff' that most of the producers are now sending out. There is, I am sure, more interest in the 'moving' among the masses than in baseball, and for this reason I think every daily paper should devote some of its space to news concerning the motion picture industry. Certainly half as much space as the national game gets.

"NOWADAYS, but few companies are preparing publicity copy that an editor cares to look over. It is generally made up in mimeograph fashion and deals with big productions at such length as to result in relegation to the waste basket. Newspapers, particularly those of 'small time' calibre, do not want to devote a half-column to the ravings of a publicity agent over 'Maggie's Muddy Mittens.' But the 'movie' editor would not mind boosting the game to the extent of giving the same space to breezy, interesting items about favorite players, their occupations and fads, and also short paragraphs regarding new releases.

"In the department that I am conducting I publish each day about thirty different short stories, each not longer than three inches, and I try to give every producer who sends me material as much space as the competitor. I also use a photo of some player or scene in this column, and I am advised by the exhibitors that patrons of the theatres are greatly interested in this feature of the paper.

"I RECALL writing an article several months ago for another trade paper on 'Efficient Publicity Methods,' and I soon afterward observed that several producing companies indicated in their press matter that they had paid some heed to what I pointed out in the story.

"American, Universal, Kalem and one or two others are sending out material such as the editor likes to use in a motion picture department. Essanay is preparing copy in good shape but goes to the trouble of writing heads for the items, thus necessitating extra time on the part of the editor to clip off the monackers which are always of no use in a daily paper.

"WHAT the papers now want is a sheet on which items of interest are printed ready to be clipped and pasted on paper for early copy. I want to say in this connection that I am not getting as much motion picture news as I desire, and would be glad to have the producers forward to me all the items of interest that they care to prepare for publication.

"Very truly,

"JULIAN T. BABER."

THESE letters are from experienced newspaper and publicity men.

They are to the point and give practical suggestions. It is to be hoped that they will be carefully read, and stimulate discussion of this important matter.

Vol. XII September 18, 1915 No. 11

An Editor's Impatience With Present-Day Photoplays

IT is not often that an attack upon motion pictures is illuminating or helpful. In most of them, their stupidity is only equalled by their malignity.

A striking exception to this rule, however, is the invective printed by William Marion Reedy, in his capacity as editor of the St. Louis "Mirror."

Mr. Reedy is a writer of breadth of knowledge and depth of feeling, and full sincerity. Being so, Mr. Reedy speaks from an overflowing mind straight and sharply at the object of his criticism.

"WHAT are the movies doing to the drama, aside from taking its patrons?" he demands. And his answer is:

"They are butchering it."

"Movie dramas are too often an insult to any intelligence beyond the dime novel stage. Real drama is burlesqued in the movies, but unintentionally so. . . . All of drama is eliminated but the sensation, and scenes are shown without ordered relation to each other.

"The better the spoken play, the worse the movies make it."

"SCENARIOS made for the films," Mr. Reedy concedes, "are more coherent, less paranoiac."

"But," he resumes, "every movie version of a well-known drama proper that I have seen is, artistically speaking, an atrocity."

Someone is to blame for this, of course, and Mr. Reedy indicts the newspapers as accessories after the fact.

"No newspaper critic says a word," he declares, "about the glaring sins of the movies against truth—not mere photographic truth to the scene, but truth to human nature and to the simplest canons of art—or about the crimes against taste."

THEN comes the constructive note.

"What the film needs," says Mr. Reedy, "is an aesthetic censorship. It is a bad thing that the press should say of bad presentation of life in the films, 'It doesn't matter; it's only in the movies.' The movies are of immense importance. They are making the taste of the millions. They are making it bad, execrable taste, because it is based solely on sensation, and is to that extent wholly animalistic."

MR. REEDY is right to just the degree that makes it necessary for some one to indicate to him wherein he is wrong.

Melodrama has, until recently, monopolized the motion picture screen. That there is good melodrama and bad melodrama Mr. Reedy would be the last to deny. The screen has offered both.

Action and sensation, the chief ingredients of melodrama, have characterized the greatest part of the pictures of past seasons, and the motion picture offers such facilities for portraying both that directors have almost universally succumbed to the temptation.

BUT this is a phase that is passing. The limits to new action and new sensation on the screen are definite and are already in sight. Something must be found to take their place. That something is psychological action, the expression of thoughts and ideas, which consists in using physical action merely as a vehicle for the revelation of the stronger, subtler drama of thought and feeling going on behind and within it.

The numerous examples of this higher type of photoplay which have already been produced are ample evidence that the motion picture, as a whole, is moving up and out of the violent, sensational atmosphere into a wider and more varied field of art.

OF course, the first attempts are not perfect,—some of them are far from being so. To the great novelist, to the master-dramatist, or to the lover of their works who is accustomed to the acme of artistic finish and a syllabic accuracy of expression, these photoplays will seem shockingly crude.

Judged from such fastidious standards, perhaps they are. But it must be remembered that generations of playwrights and novelists have been exploiting for hundreds of years the utmost resources of their arts, while the creators in motion pictures have had but a few years to so much as suspect the primary possibilities of theirs.

MR. REEDY is, if anything, a trifle impatient. That his knowledge of the motion picture business is limited he makes no attempt to conceal.

But he has allowed disgust to overtake him too easily and too soon, before he had acquired enough knowledge of films as they are to feel a sympathetic understanding of aims and endeavors of their producers.

An Actors' Hospital Fund

AS noted in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, a well-sustained movement is on foot, within the trade, to start and maintain a hospital fund for the proper medical treatment of players incapacitated by illness or injury.

The idea is an excellent one from all standpoints, and the evidences of support already had point to its successful development.

A temporary committee has been appointed to receive subscriptions and plans are under way to benefit performances to swell the fund. The plan will, of course, be applicable to Los Angeles, New York and all studio centres.

OHIO PUBLIC INCENSED AT CENSORS

Patrons of Motion Pictures Express Wholesome Contempt of the Unreasonable Actions of the Board—Undercurrent of Sentiment Among Screen Fans to the Effect That New Members Would Solve the Situation—Exhibitors Plan to Hold State Convention for Purpose of Fighting Censor Law

Cleveland, September 8.

WHILE the Ohio Board of Censorship has scored a temporary victory over the motion picture exhibitors of Ohio, war still continues against the censors. In defiance of the board, Sam Bullock, one of the pioneers in the censorship fight, continues to exhibit pictures of the picnic of the West End Business Club at the Boulevard theatre, West Ninety-ninth street and Lorain avenue. They are in the original form.

The Ohio censors ordered Mr. Bullock to cut out an extract from an address made by Fred. J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, reading:

"Censorship was conceived in iniquity, born in sin and is dying in disgrace."

"Cleveland police know of the order of the censors and that I am running the film in its original form, but they have declined to arrest me," Mr. Bullock told members of the Cleveland Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in a meeting held in the Moose Club.

The Cleveland police never have agreed with the views of the Ohio censors. They were astonished, after seeing the private exhibition of "The Devil's Daughter," to learn that the state censors had chopped it. All policemen who saw the picture voted that there were no objectionable features in the film. The Cleveland police have used such good judgment in criticizing films that the local exhibitors would prefer to have them pass judgment on films, rather than trust them to the state censors.

Bullock Defies Censor Chief

Mr. Bullock has addressed this letter to Charles G. Williams, chairman of the Ohio Board of Censorship, on the order to cut out Mr. Herrington's statement:

"I question your authority to issue this said order. I shall continue to exhibit the picture at the Boulevard theatre and await your further pleasure in the matter."

"We have been bamboozled for two years. The big film exchange cannot make such a stand for fear of getting future films mutilated, but now we have called their bluff, the censors are afraid to take the matter into the courts," Mr. Bullock declared to his fellow exhibitors. "I want to be arrested so that we can fight the matter out in the courts and clear the atmosphere."

The state board did not reply to Mr. Bullock's letter, but tried to drag Mayor Baker into the controversy, asking him to order the arrest of Mr. Bullock. Mayor Baker refused to take action, saying:

"Free speech is the right of every American citizen. I think that the exhibitor was entirely within his constitutional rights. This censorship was intended to eliminate scenes that would be dangerous to public morals. The censors have no authority to bar criticisms of the law."

As soon as Mr. Bullock learned that the censors had written to Mayor Baker, asking him to order the police to take action, he wired Mr. Williams:

"Why drag Mayor Baker into this affair? I am anxious for a court test. The dignity of your board is at stake. I am waiting for you to act."

So far no reply has been made to either the letter or the telegram sent by Mr. Bullock. Likewise, the Cleveland police have not put Mr. Bullock in durance vile for defying the censors. Vigorous applause always follows the display of Mr. Herrington's remarks on the screen.

Sawyer Questions Authority of Censors

President Ben. J. Sawyer, of the Cleveland local, says that it is a nice point whether under the existing law the censors have the right to cut films. "My reading of the statute is that they must either approve or reject the whole film. The censors see the handwriting on the wall," remarked Mr. Sawyer.

The Ohio censors have not replied to the letter of Mr. Sawyer, in which he told them that their published statements that the National Board of Censorship and the exchange men started the referendum petitions was a misstatement. They have not replied to the question of their veracity on the statement that the film manufacturers were spending money in the fight. Governor Willis a few weeks ago said that he did not approve of any state department issuing statements that were not correct in every detail, but no retraction of the statements credited to the censors have been seen around Cleveland.

There is an undercurrent of sentiment that if the present board was sent back to private life and an entirely new board named, there would be little ground for complaint. Patrons of the motion picture theatres seem to hold the Ohio censors in contempt. They keep close tab on censorship and express opinions that are not favorable to the present board.

Ohio exhibitors will hold a state convention in Cleveland in the near future, and it is expected that censorship will be the principal business that will be discussed. National President Herrington, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will be present, as he is evincing great interest in the various phases of the censorship evil. His attitude toward the Ohio board does not need any comment, for he makes vigorous statements regarding the inefficiency of the censorship board as it operates in Ohio. He believes that it is up to Ohio exhibitors to settle the censorship question, as other states are looking to this state for a precedent. Cleveland exhibitors have taken an active part in the movement to fight censorship as it operates in Ohio.

The object of the meeting is to reorganize the Ohio association and to take a definite stand on censorship. The conclave will last two days and it is expected that 1,000 delegates will be on hand when the roll is called. Ohio exhibitors realize that they will have to take concerted action to save the motion picture theatre business from the handicap under which they have been operating.

Film Producers Plan Weekly Program in October

Los Angeles Company, Under Guidance of Frank C. Hill, Is Getting Ready to Issue from 6 Studios 12 Brands, Consisting of 1, 2, 3 and 5 Reel Subjects

Los Angeles, Sept. 6.

THE first formal announcement of the Film Producers Corporation, incorporated under the laws of Colorado, which authorize a capitalization of $50,000 in common stock and $950,000 in preferred, was made this week in an artistically printed booklet mailed to exchange men and exhibitors throughout the country.

The announcement sets forth that a complete program will be released each week, this consisting of one, two, three and five reel subjects, made by six companies, and consisting of twelve brands as follows:

Masterpiece Film Company, Masterpiece dramas and Pickwick comedies; Crown City Film Manufacturing Company, Crown and Crescent dramas; America-Europa Film Company, Ameropa and Eurica dramas; Eclat Film Manufacturing Company, Elite three-reel dramas and Eclat one-reel dramas; Superior Film Corporation, Mirth comedies and Superior dramas, both one-reel; and the Albuquerque Film Manufacturing Company, Luna and Cactus one-reel comedies.

The five-reel subject will be known as Producers' Star Feature and these will be produced by five feature companies of the first five named companies.

The complete official family of this new releasing company is announced as follows:

Frank C. Hill, Los Angeles attorney, president; R. E. E. Nathansohn, vice-president; Harold A. Parker, treasurer; Robert Levy, secretary, and G. J. Smeby, George C. Watson and W. D. Mahoney, directors.

While no announcement has been made regarding the first release of this company, it is understood that arrangements are now being made looking to the issuance of the first program about the third week in October.

MARLEYS TAKE A VACATION

Charles Marley, manager of the Los Angeles Film Exchangemen's board of trade, and Mrs. Marley, are on a vacation.

Week of 13th Set for Release of 28 Mutual Reels

End of the Month Will Usher in the Operation of Entire New Schedule for the Company's $8,000,000 Program, Showing Stars at No Increased Price

TWENTY-EIGHT reels of all-star, all feature quality will be released on the Mutual's new $8,000,000 program in the week beginning September 13.

These releases find the Mutual Film Corporation's new schedule now shaping into fully rounded form. By the end of September the entire new schedule will be in full swing.

The last ten days have brought a most significant series of announcements from the office of John R. Freuler, the Mutual's president. A whole flock of new stars have been announced for the regular program—making good on the promise of the Mutual's administration to give the exhibitor a program of all star quality, filled with Broadway star casts and featuring famous screen stars—a departure giving the exhibitor the highest feature quality on his regular program at no increase in the rental charges.

Big new names appear now in coming releases on the program: Crane Wilbur, of the Horsley company, famous star of the speaking stage and the screen; W. C. Fields, of the 1915 Ziegfeld Follies, appearing in Gaumont comedy Films through the courtesy of Florenz Ziegfeld; Anna Little and Arthur Acord, stars for the "Buck Parvin in the Movies," the first of the Mustang Film Company's productions, a three-reeler. And there is an array of new companies to augment the production of regular program releases under brand names already familiar to Mutual patrons, as for instance "Beauty" and Falstaff.

With the release on September 8, of "The Unsuspected Isles," first of the three-reel Rialto Star Features produced by the Gaumont company, it can be said that the Mutual's new program really begins its new career. Fania Marinoff, celebrated for her many successful portrayals in notable Broadway productions, is the featured player, supported by a company of exceptionally talented screen players.

The next three-reel feature is included in the regular program of the week of the 13th, entitled "Shorty's Ranch," in which "Shorty" Hamilton, who has been starred in numerous "Shorty" productions filmed at the Broncho studios, has the title role. This is released Wednesday, September 15. It is an unusually interesting Western comedy-drama, and marks the appearance of the first Broncho three-reeler ever screened for release in a regular program.

For September 16, two of the new releases which are to play such an important cog in the Mutual's new program make their initial appearance. First comes the initial Centaur release, "The Rajah's Sacrifice," a two-part drama of the Orient, featuring the world-famous collection of Bostock jungle animal performers and presenting Captain Jack Bonavita, whose reputation as a trainer of beasts of the African wilds is international.

On the same day, the first of the comedies produced by the second Falstaff company, organized by Edwin Thanhouser, of the Thanhouser studios, in New Rochelle, will be released on the regular program. Arthur Cunningham and Claude Cooper, two of the cleverest and most original comedians in motion picture work, direct from Broadway—are the featured players in the first of the releases of the second Falstaff company, entitled "Bessie's Bachelor Boobs."

The regular program of the 17th marks the first appearance of the two-reel subjects produced at the Gaumont studios, which are to be a feature of the regular Mutual program. For the introductory release of these two-reelers, which are to be listed under the brand name of Gaumont, the producers chose "The Vivisectionist," a vitally interesting story, in which Marion Swayne and Joseph Levering, appear as co-stars.

The same day's program contains two one-reel subjects, a stirring heart drama in one reel, produced by the American studios and featuring Vivian Rich, entitled "The Little Lady Next Door," and is rounded out by a slide-splitting Cub Comedy, featuring George Ovey, entitled "The Knockout."

Saturday, September 18, presents Harold Lockwood as the star of "The Great Question," a three-reel drama produced at the American studios.

Lockwood is beyond doubt one of the most famous screen stars now before the public, and in subsequent productions his work has been confined entirely to feature productions.

The program of September 18, inaugurates the second of the comedy-dramas screened by the second "Beauty" company, organized by S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company. "A Friend in Need" is the title and it presents the popular Beatrice Van.

First of the Gaumont all star releases, a one-reel comedy, heads the Mutual's regular program of September 19, in which W. C. Fields, star of the Ziegfeld 1915 "Follies" is presented as the featured player. The Fairbanks Twins, Marion and Madeline, whose work in Thanhouser releases has won them international fame, are the stars of "The Twins of the G. L. Ranch," a Western drama in one reel, which, in addition to a two-reel Reliance drama, completes the program for that day.

Twenty-eight reels in all comprise the program of the new Mutual program for this week.

Expert Knowledge for Essanay's Crawford Play

Old Dr. Perfection, Learned in History of Manners and Costumes, Will Operate on Mr. Anachronism and Make It Impossible for Him to Harm "Palace of the King"

NO pains are being spared by Essanay to make "In the Palace of the King," the six-act feature photoplay from the famous novel by F. Marion Crawford, perfect in every respect. Experts in costuming effects and in the styles and manners of the time of the action of the play have been engaged to drill the thousands of "extra" players who have been employed for the picturization of the novel. The film will be Essanay's October release on the V-L-S-E program.

Among the experts who have been engaged by Essanay to bring "In the Palace of the King" to the highest degree of perfection, is Mrs. Arend Van Vlissingen, who "discovered" and brought out Isidora Duncan, the world-famous classic danseuse. Mrs. Van Vlissingen is past master in the terpsichorean art, and was obtained especially to train the several hundred professional dancers who appear in the beautiful court dance of "In the Palace of the King."

Mrs. Van Vlissingen has had a wide experience in her line and is known from coast to coast for her success with classic dances. Another important factor was taken into consideration in the engagement of Mrs. Van Vlissingen, besides her recognized ability as an instructor. This was the fact that she was a close personal friend of F. Marion Crawford, who wrote "In the Palace of the King," and that all of his works are therefore thoroughly familiar to her.

With "In the Palace of the King" she is particularly familiar, having read and re-read it many times because of the description of the court dances of the time of King Phillip II of Spain, which the novel contains.

"In the Palace of the King" features Richard C. Travers, Essanay's leading player, who takes the role of Don Juan, of Austria, half-brother of King Phillip II. Arline Hackett, of the legitimate stage, was engaged especially for the part of Dolores de Mendoza, leading feminine character, and E. J. Radcliffe, as King Phillip, and Lewis Edgar, as the court jester, also were employed.

CLEO MADISON, NOW A DIRECTOR, HEADS HER OWN COMPANY

Los Angeles, Sept. 6.

Cleo Madison, for more than two years leading woman for the Universal, has been made director and given her own company. She is now engaged in producing her first subject which is of a Wetsern character and entitled "The Cowboy Girl." In this, as with future productions, Miss Madison will also appear as leading woman, as well as directing the subject. Since this change in the producing companies at Universal, Marcia Moore, late with the Joker company, has been placed under the direction of Joseph de Grasse, Rex producer.

BILLIE BURKE AT INCEVILLE

Billie Burke arrived at Santa Monica, Cal., from New York, September 5, and was personally received by Thomas H. Ince, under whose direction the former Frohman star will act before the camera in Triangle plays, and later boarded the private yacht which has been engaged for her and sailed to Catalina Island. Here she will live during her stay on the coast, traveling back and forth to Inceville every day on the yacht. She made her first trip September 6.

Efficiency of Paramount Units Molded by Meeting

At First Convention of the Corporation, Held in Chicago, and Attended by Employees from Maine to California, "Get Together" Sentiment Makes Itself Felt—President Hodkinson Presides—Advertising, Publicity and Sales Departments Exchange Ideas for Betterment of Company's Future Policy.

Chicago, Sept. 7.

SELDOM in the history of the motion picture business has there been manifested a better spirit of co-operation than at the first annual convention of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, held at the La Salle hotel here Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week. "Get together" was the watchword of the conference, to which came officers and directors of the company, representatives of the four producers of Paramount Pictures, the men who handle them throughout the United States, and department heads of the home office.

President W. W. Hodkinson presided, and while he delivered a brief address of welcome on Thursday morning, he held the most important of his announcements till his summary on Saturday morning, in which he made known for the first time the fact that, beginning about October 16, his big distributing organization will materially add to the value of its program by releasing two one-reel comedies a week with well known stars in the leading roles, and that shortly thereafter a topical weekly, different from anything yet attempted, will become part of the Paramount service.

The purpose of the convention was to further weld together the elements of the organization, to take full advantage of the spirit of co-operation already clearly manifest, to present to all there the extent of the advertising, publicity and sales campaign now beginning and to demonstrate to each man the size and power of the organization of which he is a part.

The result, it is expected, will be a crusade for better pictures, for the new art in the photoplay as illustrated by "Carmen" and other Paramount pictures already made, and the placing of Paramount Pictures in every town, village and hamlet of the United States, with no cognizance of competition but with regard for local conditions.

The New York delegation, leaving on the Twentieth Century Limited Wednesday afternoon, were met in Albany by those from the Famous Players Exchange of New England; and the Eastern contingent joined the Western, Southern and Northern at the La Salle here Thursday morning.

Zukor Sends Telegram to Hodkinson

At 11 o'clock Mr. Hodkinson called the meeting to order. Before proceeding with his own address he read the following telegram (quoted here in part) from Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, prevented from being present by press of business:

"Paramount Convention, La Salle Hotel, Chicago, Ill.: I am very sorry indeed that unforeseen conditions prevent me from attending the Paramount Convention, but I wish to take this means of communicating to you and all others present my congratulations upon the splendid results you have obtained during the first Paramount year, my great admiration for the effective manner in which you have overcome the numerous obstacles that beset you in the distributing branch of the industry, and my sincere hope that your future activities in this direction will secure even greater and more complete success.

"I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to publicly commend the untiring and ceaseless personal endeavors of W. W. Hodkinson and Raymond Pawley toward the constant advancement of the Paramount program, their devoted labors, combined with the efforts of Hiram Abrams, William L. Sherry and James A. Steele, aided by the unusually efficient and loyal membership of the Paramount organization, have given the industry an example of achievement in national film distribution unsurpassed in all the annals of the screen and have created a distribution system that may not only never be excelled but that may never be equaled.

"ADOLPH ZUKOR."

Mr. Hodkinson, after outlining the purpose of the meeting, said: "I think that we will accomplish a great deal by coming in contact with each other during the three days that we will be here, so that I will not take up your time or the time alloted to the producers any further than to ask that, beginning on my right, the first gentleman will stand up and give his name and the exchange he is connected with. In this way you will all learn each other's identity quicker than in any other way that I can think of. It will serve as a general introduction."

Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky Company, introduced as the first speaker, congratulated the members of the Paramount organization on the work they had done the first year. Among other things he said:

"Now, we have been receiving statements from the Paramount organization every single week for fifty-two weeks. Price, Waterhouse have been going over your books all over the United States. We have not found one mistake or one complaint. We have not found any case where any distributor or any exchange of the Paramount organization ever tried to take advantage of a single penny. Now, that is an organization for you.

"Don't you really think that when the producers see these things there is an incentive to go ahead and do things?

"If any of our pictures is not right, you will never see it. We have got negatives today for which you can name your price and you will never see them."

Lasky Addresses Meeting

Mr. Lasky was then presented to the convention.

"We think that we are the greatest producers in the world, because thinking that makes us work all the harder," said Mr. Lasky. "One thing we lack, however, is individual, honest criticism.

"We don't want praise. We will get plenty of praise, but what we want are suggestions or criticisms, and if every one of you will make some suggestion, make notes of your suggestions now and then and let us have them, it will be invaluable.

"You gentlemen have come from California, Portland, and the far corners of various states, and from Canada, and if you will only make one suggestion, and the suggestion comes to us and we can carry it out, just see what you gentlemen will be doing. We want your help. My own view is that they want modern drama with as much action and vim and punch as can be put into it, and we are producing our plays accordingly.

"Now every one of you gentlemen, as Mr. Goldfish has said, seems to be a fighter, and after having met you, when we go back to the studio, to the grind, I think we will go back with new vigor. We have met you and know you, and you know us, and now we will try and show you what we can do."

Carl H. Pierce, special representative of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, made a clever speech in which he expressed the firm intention of producing the best pictures money and brains can make—worthy to rank with those of the other Paramount companies.

"An example of what you may expect from us," said Mr. Pierce, "is 'Peer Gynt' which, I think you will agree, is a truly beautiful picture. Mr. Morosco said to me just the other day: 'Mr. Pierce, I have made a measure of success with the stage and I pledge my word that my every effort and every dollar at my command will be devoted to making pictures as good as can be made."

Speaking from the standpoint of the art director, Cecil B. DeMille asked those present to give the producers' criticism, "criticism on the drama." According to Mr. DeMille, "people are through seeing, and being thrilled by seeing somebody do somebody on the screen. What they are interested in is the drama or the comedy. The 'play's the thing,' and that's what we are trying to supply.

"We have tried to get the same effects of beauty that Rembrandt got. It is different. It has got to be different, and you have got to call attention to it. We are working to get a series of great paintings on the screen, and we can go Mr. Rembrandt one better because Mr. Rembrandt could not get drama beyond one flash of it."

Praise for "News" Editorials

Howard E. Spaulding, advertising counsel, took his listeners on a celever advertiseologue of Paramount Pictures. Tarleton Winchester, publicity director of Paramount, announced his opposition to circus methods of advertising.

"We pay more attention to the kind of publicity we get than to the amount," said Mr. Winchester. "We would rather have a man such as William A. Johnston, for instance, over his signature, say something congratulatory about Paramount than we would to see the story appear in Motion Picture News with everybody else's story, and with no difference between them. I suppose everybody here read Mr. Johnston's editorial a week or two ago on our advertising campaign. That is the kind of thing that pays. That is what we want."

Mr. Winchester also gave his hearers this advice: "Know your mediums. Be familiar with every photoplay department in your territory. Give every man what he wants. Put human interest in your stuff."

Branch managers and salesmen also listened to a discussion on "Our Duty to Paramount Pictures and Picture Progress," led by H. I. Day, and "The Travel Series," led by Jack Eaton.

Friday was occupied with a meeting of branch managers in the morning followed by a general meeting at 1:30 o'clock, at which Frank D. Sniffen, general sales manager for Paramount, and George R. Meeker, re-booking manager, delivered addresses.

Mr. Sniffen, taking up the topic, "Our Sales Problems and How to Meet Them," was greeted with enthusiasm.

"We have got to listen to the public, and we are listening to the public by the criticisms that our exhibitors are making to us. We are trying to give the exhibitors what the public wants. We are listening to the same thing, for the exhibitor has to listen at the same time. If not, he won't get the results out of his program, nor will we get the results out of our program."

Re-Bookings and Verbal Publicity

Mr. Meeker, in the course of an interesting talk on re-booking, said:

"A daily change naturally offers the largest field for re-bookings, and the benefit of getting this class of exhibitors to re-book will be doubled as it will serve as a convincing argument for the longer run of pictures.

"The argument that applies to longer runs also is applicable to re-bookings, for if an exhibitor makes a daily change and does not re-book, he is losing the benefit of accumulative advertising, the word-to-advertising which after all is the most important form of publicity there is.

"If Mrs. Jones sees a picture which particularly pleases her and tells Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Smith that they should see it, it is far more valuable publicity than any advertising space the exhibitor can buy, but this is lost unless the picture is there for Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Smith to see."

An informal banquet at the La Salle closed the Friday sessions.

Saturday was devoted to general discussions on policy, price maintenance, sales and advertising plans, led by President Hodkinson. Mr. Hodkinson here made his announcement of the comedies and topical pictures soon to appear on the Paramount Program. Using concrete examples, he also pointed out to members of the sales force why "exhibitors must show Paramount Pictures.

At the Saturday afternoon meeting suggestions were read from the "Suggestion Box" maintained during the convention. The convention adjourned at 3 o'clock.

PUBLISHER PRAISES SELIG PLAY

Mr. and Mrs. Bobbs, of the Bobbs-Merrill Company, were recently guests of the Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago. The head of the publishing company and his wife came from Indianapolis, Ind., to Chicago to view the Selig Red Seal play, "The House of a Thousand Candles," written by Meredith Nicholson. They expressed their delight over this production.

"It's a wonderful film," said Mr. Bobbs.

Nielsen Secures Rights to "Just Out of College"

He Obtains Control of George Ade Subject for Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin and Gives Manager Hamburger First Run Privilege for Chicago

F. O. NIELSEN, who secured the State rights for Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin, to "Just Out of College," the five-reel comedy of George Ade, produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, announces that he has given Manager Hamburger, of the Fine Arts theatre, the exclusive first-run rights to the picture in Chicago.

The picture will shortly begin an indefinite run at the Fine Arts, one of Chicago's most pretentious motion picture houses, at twenty-five, fifty and one dollar admission. From the Fine Arts it will go to the other principal theatres controlled by Mr. Hamburger in Chicago.

Mr. Nielsen intends to handle the picture in the same manner in which he handled "The Spoilers," the Selig feature which made such a hit upon its presentation.

The quality of "Just Out of College," indicated in a review of the feature in MOTION PICTURE NEWS in the issue of July 17, is in full accord with the character of the subjects previously handled by Mr. Nielsen, who has never attempted to sell anything but the very best pictures.

The cast in "Just Out of College" is headed by Eugene O'Brien, who just closed his engagement with the all-star cast in "The Celebrated Case," produced by the late Charles Frohman. Mr. O'Brien has played many successful engagements.

His chum, Slivers Mason, is played by Jack Sherrill, a boy, who, although new to screen dramas, has scored heavily. He made his first appearance in "The Fairy and the Waif" and gave a splendid performance. He followed this with the part of Arnold Faringay in "The Builder of Bridges."

Although it was the hardest acting part in the piece Jack Sherrill covered himself with glory. His clever handling of a comedy part in "Just Out of College" proves him to be a versatile and clever actor.

Septimus Pickering, the Pickle King, is played by Ben Hendricks, known the world over as the star of "Yon Yonson" and "A Yenuine Yentleman."

Prof. Bliss was handled by Wright Kramer, who has been a leading man in many Broadway productions.

Caroline Pickering, the daughter, was played by Marie Edith Wells. Added to Miss Well's beauty she has the charm of naturalness and is surely a delight to the eye.

Mrs. Pickering was played by Charlotte Lambert, who will be well remembered as the Aunt in "Officer 666," "Stop Thief," and several other Cohan and Harris productions.

"Jonesey" is played by Amelia Summerville, too well known to require special mention. Her delightful characterization of the college boarding housekeeper adds many laughs.

Kansas Board Shields Censor Law From Criticism

Film Containing a Declaration to the Public of the Unjust Tax of Two Dollars Now Levied on Each Reel Is Ordered Cut By One of the Censors—Exhibitors Consider the Action in Excess of the Power Conferred on the Censoring Body By the Measure

This theatre pays its share of an unjust two dollars per reel tax, to the State of Kansas, because our august legislature thought you didn't know any better than to pay us your money to see something that would injure you.

Next thing you know, they will be appointing an inspector to charge you two dollars each morning for an inspection of your person to see that you are properly clothed and that you have no concealed weapons.

Special to Motion Picture News

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 8.

THE above was made into a film, placed in a news weekly and submitted to the Kansas censors. Result, cut out, by Carrie Simpson, one of the censors who inspected the film.

Deciding to campaign against the law the film was prepared. The censors are of the opinion that no criticism of the law should be flashed on the screens of the State so that the citizens may know how unjust this law is. The charge of the film men is that this strikes at the very roots of free speech and a free press.

The censors have jurisdiction over all motion picture films. They have no jurisdiction over slides and these will be used in the crusade against the censorship law.

No question of unfitness from a moral standpoint was involved. There could be no objection to the language, save that it presented an objection to a law. The moving picture men have the same right to voice their opinions in this manner as have the editors of the newspapers and magazines or a public speaker.

When censors are allowed, without protest, to use arbitrary methods of suppression of criticism, they assert powers which have no place among a free people. If anyone has been slandered there is a legal remedy.

Next Step, Press Censorship

Governor Capper, as a newspaper publisher, should be more than interested in this action of his censors. How soon will some board pass upon the matter that goes into his papers? How long will he be immune from supervision by arbitrary critics who may object to his methods and his opinions?

That this latest "cut out" by the censors is not going to stop the fight against this unjust law, but rather give it an impetus, is evidenced by the following letter that is being sent out by P. J. Concannon, secretary of the Kansas branch of the Exhibitors' League of America.

"Dear Sir:—

"In regard to the censorship laws now in force in the State of Kansas.

"This law was enacted by the Legislature of 1913-14, held up by an injunction, and finally decided by the U. S. Supreme Court as constitutional.

"The law on the face of it is supposed to be for the public welfare and morality, but in fact is a revenue measure pure and simple. In the first four months that this law has been in force, the State has collected about $4,400 with a paid out expense of $700, thus leaving $3,700 net to the State.

"To this $4,400 will have to be added another $4,400, as expense for having film censored. I have talked with most of the film exchange managers of Kansas City and the lowest estimate I got from any of them was $1.75 per reel. Most of them placed it at $2, thus making the censorship cost $4 per reel.

"Now, who pays this? Some of the exchanges are charging exhibitors 10 cents per reel. Others are not. I want to say this to all exhibitors: You are paying the bill. No exchange can afford to pay such amounts out of their treasuries and give it to the exhibitor. One of the natural laws of modern business is, 'the ultimate consumer pays all costs and profits.' In this case it will not work. The exhibitor cannot make the patron of his house shoulder this extra burden. He cannot increase his admission price. Under the circumstances, he will have to dig it up out of his profits.

"At the present time, we are taxed on the value of our investment by State, county and city, licensed by United States and city and now this added burden of censorship.

"If we bear this burden without resenting it in any manner, we will find when the Legislature is in session the next time, that this was only an entering wedge. The picture shows will be considered legitimate prey. Every 2 x 4 legislator that goes to Topeka will have a pet bill before the house, presumably to guard the morals of the youth of the State, but in fact to get an easy position for some of their friends and produce revenue for the State.

Screen, Powerful Weapon

"The remedy for all this trouble lies in the exhibitor's hands. He has the greatest and most powerful weapon in the State, right at his command—the screen.

"Ninety per cent. of the exhibitors are prone to let things be as they are, or let some one else look after it. They expect the exchange or the league officers to look out for their interests.

"The film exchanges cannot do a thing in the way of having the law repealed. The exhibitors of the state will have to organize and make this fight themselves. The exchanges will do everything in their power and help the exhibitors in every possible manner.

"Organize and be in a position before the next election to fight every candidate for a State office that is not with us, and work tooth and nail for the man that is with us. Work the screen in the interest of your business.

"Yours to win out,
(Signed) P. J. Concannon,
Secretary."

If the exhibitors in the State of Kansas will get busy and organize, as suggested by Mr. Concannon, they can accomplish wonders in the way of an amendment to this law.

"Nation" to Continue Remarkable Run in Boston

After Closing at Tremont Theatre on Saturday, Griffith Spectacle Is Shown Again Almost Immediately at Majestic—Two Hundred and Fiftieth Mark Already Passed

Boston, Sept. 8.

AFTER being shown in Boston more than 250 times, which breaks all records for lengthy runs in this city, both of pictures and spoken dramas, the "Birth of a Nation" closed its run at the Tremont theatre September 4. At the same time the announcement was made that Boston would get another chance to see the Griffith spectacle without delay, since the interests which recently purchased the New England rights for $75,000 put the film on at the Majestic theatre Monday for an indefinite run.

Keeping the film in Boston is fully warranted, even after its wonderful run with the original Griffith company at the Tremont. Tom Kane, manager for Mr. Griffith, told the News representative that some persons had been known to come back to see the film again more than half a dozen times. This could easily be believed since at the time Mr. Kane made the statement, which was about noon, there was a line extending from the ticket window to the street, which is an unusually long distance at the Tremont.

Louis B. Meyer, head of the American Feature Film Company in Boston and one of the purchasers of the New England rights to the film, had nothing to say as regards prices to be charged at the Majestic; but it can be stated on good authority that the two dollar scale, at least for a few seats, will be adhered to, since this is a part of the agreement accompanying the sale of those rights.

Mr. Kane has left for Asbury Park, where he will remain a week with the film being shown there. He will then take charge of the film and company which will tour the Southeastern cities, opening in Norfolk at one of the Wells houses on September 29 and then playing forty weeks all the way to New Orleans and back.

Fred W. Zweifel, formerly in Boston with the film and until recently in Asbury Park, has left for St. Louis to take out the Southwestern Film Company through Tennessee and Texas.

Many Plays on the Vitagraph Stocks in East and West

Heads of Company Exercise Personal Supervision Over Big Releases—Small Reelers for Fall and Winter Programs Will Be From Pens of Best Short Story Writers

THE Vitagraph Company at its Flatbush studios and the Western company at Santa Monica, California, have begun active preparations for a program of fall and winter releases that will surpass anything heretofore turned out by this company.

The program will include one and two-part comedies and dramas from the pens of the best short story writers, three-part Broadway Star Features and Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Features bearing the V-L-S-E trade mark. The big Vitagraph releases are being produced under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, heads of the Vitagraph Company.

Taking the directors in alphabetical order, the pictures now in course of production include "On the Trail," a two-part drama being directed by George D. Baker, with a cast including Edith Storey, Evart Overton, Ned Finley and Arthur Cozine. "The Gods Redeem," in two parts, on which Van Dyke Brooke is at work with Maurice Costello, Leah Baird and Mary Maurice.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are producing "A Case of Eugenics," a typical Drew comedy, which will be one of the regular Friday (Drew Day) releases. "The Woman in the Box," which Harry Davenport is directing, will introduce Harry Morey, L. Rogers Lytton, George Cooper and Peggy Blake in the principal characters.

"The Conquest of Constantia," a one-part comedy, is now nearing completion under the direction of Courtlandt J. Van Deusen, employing the services of Flora Finch, Kate Price, Rose Tapley and Florence Natol. Ralph W. Ince has just started work on a four-part Cyrus Townsend Brady story, "My Lady's Slipper," in which Anita Stewart and Earle Williams, supported by an all-star Vitagraph cast, will be seen.

Tefft Johnson is producing one of the famous "Sonny Jim" series, "One Plus One Equals One," in which Bobby Connelly is featured. Director Theodore Marston has a five-part picturization of Archibald Clavering Gunter's "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel" well under way and has in his cast the distinguished actor Charles Richman, supported by Arline Pretty.

Wilfrid North is directing a production of A. E. W. Mason's delightful comedy "Green Stockings," a five-part picturization of Margaret Anglin's successful starring vehicle, in which Stanley Dark, Lillian Walker, Louise Beaudet, Charles Brown, John T. Kelly and Charles Wellesley will portray the principal characters.

S. Rankin Drew is producing "Thou Art the Man," picturized in five parts from the original manuscript by George Cameron, with a cast including Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgour and George Cooper.

The latest addition to the Vitagraph directing forces, Paul Scardon, is at work on another Brady story, "The Island of Surprise," with William Courtenay, Eleanor Woodruff, Zena Keefe, Charles Kent, Anders Randolf and Julia Swayne Gordon. Wally Van is directing the production of a two-part comedy, featuring Hughie Mack, Dorothy Kelly and Donald MacBride and C. Jay Williams, with a cast including Jewel Hunt and James Morrison, is working on a one-part comedy, "The Little Trespasser."

These are the most important productions now under way in the East, while at Santa Monica, Director Rollin S. Sturgeon is at work on still another Brady feature picture, "Sir Henry Morgan, Buccaneer." Ulysses Davis is finishing a Broadway Star Feature, "Cal Marvin's Wife," in which Mary Anderson is playing the lead.

ANITA KING MAKES RECORD ON TRANSCONTINENTAL DRIVE

Los Angeles, Sept. 6.

All members of the Lasky producing staff are highly elated over the success of Miss Anita King, the Lasky-Paramount girl, driving across the continent, in her first run on the trip. She left the Lasky studio at 5:50 p. m., arriving at the Paramount office in the Bay City at 11:45 the following day, making the run of about five hundred miles in seventeen hours and fifty-five minutes, the fastest time ever made between the two cities by an unaccompanied driver. The fastest train between the two cities is thirteen hours.

The trip was disappointing to Miss King in that she expected to make much better time, but unfortunately it was necessary for her to keep down speed because of a heavy fog which hung over the road the greater portion of the trip.

VALLI VALLI TO STAR IN EARLY AUTUMN ROLFE RELEASE

Valli Valli, who became a Metro star when she appeared in John W. Noble's very successful picture, "The High Road," one of the earlier Rolfe offerings, has been placed under contract with B. A. Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., for a new production for early autumn release. The feature picture will be in five acts, and Edgar Jones, whose picture, "An Enemy to Society," the George Bronson Howard play, is soon to be seen publicly, will direct it. Mr. Jones has begun casting and has assembled an exceptional supporting company.

Negotiations were conducted over the long distance wire between New York and Chicago, and the details were arranged by Max Karger for B. A. Rolfe and for Valli Valli on her own behalf. The contract was outlined and completed in twenty minutes and when it was confirmed by post the ground had been so well covered that no changes were found necessary.

The vehicle selected for Valli Valli is a novelty of exceptional strength, providing an emotional role for the star and giving her exceptional opportunities for the display of her unusual talents. The script has been done by Harry Chandlee, of the Metro scenario division, from the play by Florence Gerald, "The Woman Pays."

MANY NEW FACES AT BOSTOCK PLANT

Los Angeles, Sept. 6.

There are many new faces on the stages at the Bostock Arena and Film Company plant, this week, including Carl M. LeViness, former director for Ideal Features and Universal, who is in charge of a company producing a two-reel subject, "The Bogie Man." Donald Bowles, for many months a member of the stock company at the Oliver Morosco Burbank theatre in Los Angeles, is leading man, supported by Grace Gibson, late of the vaudeville stage, Marvill Spencer, Louise Hamilton, and others. The play is founded on the divorce question, and scenes are laid in a big city.

D. P. Lea, camera man who has been in charge of securing scenes for Universal Animated Weekly, and recently photographed the night flights of Art Smith, the aviator, at the San Diego Exposition, has been engaged by David Horsley and will be in charge of the camera of the Jay Hunt company.

BURR McINTOSH IN BARTLEY CAMPBELL'S FAMOUS OLD PLAY, "MY PARTNER"

For the past few weeks Burr McIntosh and his cast, including Marie Edith Wells, have been hard at work, in a secluded part of New York State, on a picturization of Bartley Campbell's old time drama "My Partner," which is scheduled for release on the World Film program.

Burr McIntosh himself plays the part of Joe Saunders in the film which was directed by Eugene Sanger.

Mr. McIntosh and the company have now returned to New York with the negative, a fine collection of stills and bronzed skins.

Exhibitor Profits Are Steadily Multiplying

Al Litchman, a Keen Observer of Conditions Who, During the Last Five Years Has Visited Every Important Film Center in the United States Many Times, Declares That Motion Picture Theatre Owners Are Enjoying Era of Prosperity Though Producers Feel Effects of Overproduction and Illegitimate Competition

AL LITCHMAN, formerly of Alco and now associated with the Standard program, one of the most acute observers of film conditions in the United States, who during the past five years has visited all the principal film distributing centers at least once a year, and some oftener, thus being able to keep in touch with the industry at all times, recently returned from another extensive trip of the country.

"In traveling throughout the States the most forcible thing I observed," declared Mr. Litchman, "is the whole-hearted interest the people have in pictures. That interest is far greater than any other amusement.

"Just stop to think what that means, you men who can remember when the motion picture was looked upon as a catch-penny device and disdainfully considered by the wise showman as well as the ignorant. Just think, today it leads all forms of amusement—not only drama, vaudeville, circus, but baseball and other forms of sport. Talk about the show business—there is only one permanent kind of show business—motion pictures.

"Outside of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston and a few other large cities the outlook of the drama is about as remote as the ending of the European war.

"But we must not allow ourselves to be carried away with an overweening pride. While we have done well in obtaining the interest of the public we must remember that the public is as fickle in its amusement as the Sultan of Turkey must necessarily be in his love affairs.

Public Taste Only Guide

"The taste of the public is the only guide to success in the amusement field, and inasmuch as the motion picture today is the greatest amusement factor it is discouraging to see that a greater effort is not made by producers and distributors to learn what the public wants.

"Producers are too quick to follow the other fellow. They get in ruts, and do not display initiative. They are too slow to originate. This lax attitude cannot last, and the change will and must come.

"Our business is too large to have only one or two leaders and the rest imitators. We are bound to stagnate if this keeps up, and stagnation in the industry necessarily means death.

"In my opinion, the business was never better from an exhibitor's standpoint. But there is still room for improvement in his angle of the business. Most exhibitors in the larger cities are making money, but the producers are not getting their share. The reason for it is that there are too many pictures—not too many good pictures, too many poor pictures.

"As a concrete example of what present day overproduction means, there are now about 214 releases each week. Of this number about fifty reels are features. In other words, there are approximately ten so-called feature productions released each week. Averaging five reels to a production this means that about fifteen of the features are shown in the largest cities in which there are on the average of three first-class theatres that are in a position to give a feature production proper presentation and run a feature a week.

First Runs for 3 Out of 10

"Only three out of the ten pictures can obtain first runs at the highest price. What becomes of the other seven? Does the producer give this a thought? If he does then no doubt the production suffers, for he will try to save fifteen first run incomes. If he doesn't he will find that at the end of the year his estimate of profit has dwindled so that he will be ashamed to take a lead pencil in his hand for the purpose of estimating the profits.

"What is this leading to? Who can tell? But I will tell you what it should lead to. Before doing so, however, I must go back and try to explain what I saw happen to the other 164 reels released each week—these reels released on the regular programs.

"In the large theatres where the features are shown a certain number is generally exhibited—a comedy a week, a short educational, a travel picture. These, of course, are essential and the company which learns to specialize in subjects of this character instead of trying to turn out so many more reels than a competitor will have a prosperous business.

"I also find that most of the progressive companies have quite a number of suburban or neighborhood houses in the large cities that use about fourteen reels a week, these houses changing about three times weekly and having features as their main attractions. Their small town business is averaging from eighteen to twenty-eight reels a week. Of course, conditions vary somewhat in certain territories but not sufficiently to warrant any change in the whole country.

Overproduction the Danger

"Overproduction is the bane of the business. The day is here when we must get down to quality and forget quantity. Quantity will take care of itself, or rather the public will take care of it.

"The greatest detriment has grown out of price cutting—not legitimate price cutting, but the utter disregard for values. Of course, there is no doubt but that the right thinking men of the industry who have developed the business to its present great status as an amusement factor will see that this ruinous competition will soon be eliminated. They will not want to furnish a theatre with all the pictures it uses regardless of other important matters.

"One thing deemed advisable is a board of trade that will in a manner regulate such conditions as are now so detrimental to the welfare of the industry.

"Another thing. There should be experienced men to obtain information at first hand from the exhibitor as well as the people. These men should be able to devise novelties to keep the interest of the public on edge.

"I believe that the screen must develop its own stars. No other field can develop them for us satisfactorily. Do not let us forget that we are the show business."

ALMA HANLON A MEMBER OF KLEINE FORCES

Alma Hanlon, youngest daughter of George Hanlon of Hanlon Brothers, internationally famous as acrobats, pantomimists and comedians, is a present member of the Kleine forces and one who will be very much in evidence in the forthcoming Kleine comedy, "The Fixer," featuring Bickel and Watson.

Miss Hanlon is a remarkably pretty blonde who screens perfectly. She was formerly leading woman for Pathé, which experience marked her entrance into picture work and which, incidentally, set a novel precedent for the Hanlon family. She is the tenth generation of Hanlons to be connected with the theatre and the first to appear in motion pictures.

ALMA HANLON

The Hanlons are as old as the modern English stage. For nine generations every Hanlon has devoted his or her life to the theatre. Of the elder Hanlons, George, William and Edward are still alive and active, although each has some seventy years on the stage to his credit. They came to this country on one of their dozen round-the-world tours fifty years ago, and made an ever memorable hit at Niblo's Garden as acrobats, clowns and pantomimists. Later they produced such delightful spectacles as "Voyage en Suisse," "Fantasma" and "Superba," whose popularity continues to this day.

David Horsley makes the announcement that he has engaged Irving Cummings, now playing lead in the American production, "The Diamond from the Sky" serial, and this leading man will begin work at the Bayonne studio of the Centaur company as soon as his work is finished for the American, which will be within the next four or five weeks.

NORMA TALMADGE FILM IS READY

The five-reel feature entitled "Captivating Mary Carstairs" has been completed by Director General Bruce Mitchell, of the National, and will be given preliminary showing at one of the Coast theatres. This is the first subject in which Norma Talmadge appears, and the National people are giving it their best efforts to make it a big success.

"Battle Cry of Peace" a National Defense Awakener

Commodore Blackton's Powerful Plea for Preparedness Against War Is Seen at Vitagraph Theatre, New York—Picture Staged by S. L. Rothapfel

AMONG the important "dramatic" events of the week was "The Battle Cry of Peace," shown at the Vitagraph theatre, New York, Thursday evening, September 9.

J. Stuart Blackton wrote "The Battle Cry of Peace," basing the work on facts disclosed by Hudson Maxim in his surprising book, "Defenseless America." This valuable material, however, provides merely the basis and background of Commodore Blackton's remarkable photo-drama.

He realized, like any other good dramatist, that his points had to be driven home and driven hard. He has elaborated a strong human story, full of romance and heart interest, and with this as his motif discloses great truths, lays bare many astounding facts concerning the unpreparedness of this country in the event of war.

The value of such a film play, at once entertaining and educational, cannot be estimated. If it shall serve to arouse the people to the realization of the truth—that within one week this city and country could be attacked and overwhelmed by an invading force—then it will have performed a service of the highest patriotism and will have demonstrated the universal power of the motion picture as an influence for good.

That not one detail might be overlooked, Commodore Blackton and Albert E. Smith, who present this dramatic war film, engaged S. L. Rothapfel to supervise its effective staging. Mr. Rothapfel is known to picture lovers as a genius of rare artistry. He engaged a symphony orchestra of twenty-five pieces, arranged a complete musical setting for the entire picture, and contrived many novel and original stage effects descriptive of the several incidents and situations. This has made "The Battle Cry of Peace" one of the most graphic, realistic and impressive offerings ever made upon the screen. Some idea may be gained from the fact that, in support of its all-star Vitagraph cast, Commodore Blackton has introduced and personally directed 16,000 national guardsmen, 800 G. A. R. members, 5,000 horses, 17 aeroplanes, seaplanes and Zeppelins, together with submarines, dreadnaughts, battleships, torpedo boats and armored motor cars.

A spectacular incident is the irresistible sweep into New York of the invading army, numbering nearly 30,000 in the picture. Among other startling effects will be the bombardment of New York, Wall Street in flames, the dynamiting of public buildings, not to mention hundreds of other sensational climaxes in illustrating the destruction of the city.

Of the many factors destined to carry "The Battle Cry of Peace" on the highway of popularity, none will prove more potent than the personality of its chief actor, Charles Richman. The name of Charles Richman has spelled success for many a play.

In Mr. Richman's support will be seen an all-star Vitagraph cast, including Joseph Kilgour, Thais Lawton, Lionel Braham, L. Roger Lytton, Tefft Johnson, James Morrison, Harold Hurbert, Louise Beaudet, Mary Maurice, Belle Brice, Lucille Hammill and others.

There will be two performances daily.

"Spoilers'" Original Length Is Selig Release Plan

Rex Beach's Strong Interpretation of Life in the Snowy Wastes of Alaska, Remodeled and Expanded from Its Abridged Form by Lanier Bartlett, Will Be Shown in 12 Reels

ONE of the big enterprises under way at the Selig studios on the Pacific coast is the preparation of Rex Beach's vigorous Alaskan play, "The Spoilers," for release in its original length of twelve reels.

Lanier Bartlett has been remodeling and expanding the screen play from the abridged form in which it was shown and it is promised that the new production will out-do the original in many respects. It is as popular today as when it was first presented to the public several years ago. "The Spoilers" has played to as many as a half dozen return dates in many of the principal theatres. The cast includes Kathlyn Williams, William Farnum, Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Wheeler Oakman, Jack McDonald and others. It was produced by Colin Campbell, dean of the Selig corps of directors, who was also responsible for "The Carpet from Bagdad," "The Rosary," and other Selig successes.

"The Spoilers," both as to plot and scenes has been imitated many times. Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery but none of the adapters has been able to reproduce the realism shown in the original Selig play.

The fight that occurs in "The Spoilers" has also been imitated many times, but with ill success, for audiences have invariably compared the combat with that of "The Spoilers," with no flattery to the imitation.

Exhibitors and the public will await with pleasurable anticipation the release of "The Spoilers" in its unabridged form. It is as standard as is "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and "Way Down East." At least three thousand feet of the original film will be replaced in the production.

OTTO LEAVES AMERICAN FILM FOR UNIVERSAL

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Sept. 6.

Henry Otto has been signed by Managing Director Henry McRae to produce for the Universal Company, and he will take up work at once, leaving the American Film Manufacturing Company, of Santa Barbara, to accept this position.

For the past year Mr. Otto has been making Beauty Brand subjects for the Mutual Program, following a long experience in the motion picture producing end with the Nestor, Selig and Balboa companies, taken up after a long experience on the legitimate stage. He is considered a very capable director who has the knack of getting the best results from his players. The many friends of Mr. Otto will welcome him back to the Los Angeles colony. His first subject for the Universal will be "The Measure of Leon Debrey."

YOUTH LEARNS OF ITS OWN CHARMS: MARY MILES MINTER IN "THE STORK'S NEST" (Metro)

Burr McIntosh Is Signed for Wallingford by Pathé

Versatile Actor, Whom the Author Declared to Be the Only Man Capable of a Successful Interpretation of the Character, Is Selected by the Whartons for the Part

ACTOR, author, photographer, publisher, lecturer, and coal mine magnate, here is a list of activities, any one of which is sufficient to engage an ordinary man his whole life, but Burr McIntosh is no ordinary man. That's why he has been signed for the Wharton production of Pathé's "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." George Randolph Chester said Mr. McIntosh was the one man to play Wallingford, and his advice has been followed.

Mr. McIntosh was a classmate at Princeton University with the Hon. Job Hedges, Senator Pomerene of Ohio, Hon. John Harlan of Chicago, William Stewart Tod, the philanthropic millionaire, the late "Alec" Moffat, and others, and he is by no means the least famous of that famous group. Look at the height and width of him and you will readily believe that back in his college days he held the 100-yard intercollegiate championship and played on the varsity baseball and football teams.

On leaving college he went back to his home in Pittsburgh where his father was president of the largest bituminous mining company in the country. Our college athlete at once jumped into both business and politics, forming the "Six Foot Republican Marching Club" of 150 men, each of whom was six feet or over in his stocking feet. Pittsburgh still speaks with pride of that remarkable organization.

Tiring of the coal business, Mr. McIntosh left to become a journalist in Philadelphia, and got a job at ten dollars a week on the Philadelphia "News."

Having sufficiently proven his versatility in business and reporting, Mr. McIntosh went on the stage, making his debut in

BURR McINTOSH

Bartley Campbell's play "Paquita" at the Fourteenth street theatre. Some of the parts which he made famous are Colonel Moberley in "Alabama," Jo Vernon in "In Mizzoura," Joe the cowboy in "The Cowboy and the Lady," and other southern character parts. His best work, perhaps, was as Pudd'nhead Wilson, as Senator Langdon in "The Gentleman from Mississippi," Colonel Watterson Blossom in "Cordelia Blossom," and Taffy in "Trilby."

The "Burr McIntosh Monthly" is everywhere admitted to have been the most perfect pictorial publication of its time, and it was Mr. McIntosh's own product. As a photographer he won the Grand Prize (1,000 francs) in the Paris "Figaro" contest of art and beauty with a portrait of Maude Fealy. In 1905 he was the official photographer of the Taft trip to the Philippines. He also secured some wonderful photographs in the Spanish-American war. His experience in these two trips he made into the lectures "With Secretary Taft in the Orient," and "The United States and Its Menaces," which he has given before hundreds of thousands of people.

One Feature a Month for Plimpton Epic Pictures

Former Manager of Negative Production, Opposed to Adaptations from Novels and Dramas, Organizes Company for Release of Detective Subjects Founded on Original Scenarios

A NEW and interesting policy in feature production is announced by Horace G. Plimpton, for many years manager of negative production for Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and now head of the recently incorporated Plimpton Epic Pictures, with offices in the Longacre Building, New York City.

"We have incorporated," said Mr. Plimpton, "and have ample financial resources. The matter of a studio will be settled on next Tuesday. We have in hand two notable plots and will begin production at once along the following lines:

"First, we will only produce from stories written specifically for the screen. In this connection I believe that there is altogether too little originality in production today and that it constitutes a menace to pictures. Producers are following too blindly the productions of the stage. I consider the motion picture a great medium of expression, much greater than any other medium, the stage included.

"Secondly, we will make no effort whatever to get names known to Broadway, except where a star is so closely identified with a part that he is inseparable from it. Thirdly, certain affiliations we have through our board of directors with unusual supplies of costly furniture and rare tapestries, will permit us to put into our productions an atmosphere heretofore unknown either to the stage or the screen.

"We intend to specialize strictly. Our output will consist of one feature a month. Each of these will be founded upon detective stories only. Through close cooperation with the official and private detective bureaus of New York, we will make these productions technically correct. Two plots are ready for immediate production.

"Each was written especially for us and in line with our policy in production. The first is by Mary Imlay Taylor and the second by Reginald Wright Kauffman. The latter plot, 'By Post Register,' deals with the celebrated pearl necklace robbery which occurred in Paris several years ago and which was widely published in the press."

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS" PROVES QUOTATION MINE TO STUDIO PUBLICITY CLIPPERS

Los Angeles, Sept. 6.

Girls who wield the scissors in clipping stories from various newspapers for the publicity departments of Los Angeles studios have made the complaint that MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been receiving entirely too much space in recent issues of Coast publications, and the tone hints a bit of jealousy.

The cause of the newspaper stories was the editorial by William A. Johnston, entitled "The Exhibitor and National Advertising," which appeared in the issue of August 28. This editorial, consisting of more than a page, was copied in full in the photoplay department of the Seattle "Times," conducted by George H. Bellman, and many other Western papers used portions in connection with editorials. In all the many instances the editorial received very favorable comment.

ANITA STEWART IN COSTUME COMEDY FOR VITAGRAPH

Anita Stewart, the best known leading lady of the Vitagraph Stock Company, has been selected to create the character of Countess de Villars, in a picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's costume comedy, "My Lady's Slipper." This will be the first costume piece in which Miss Stewart has ever appeared. It will be produced under the direction of Ralph W. Ince. Earle Williams will be Miss Stewart's leading man.

The balance of the cast will include Julia Swayne Gordon, Albert Roccardi, Harry Northrup, George Stevens, Donald Hall and George O'Donnell.

Week Runs Is Prediction of Bushman, Metro Star

Public and Manufacturer Benefit by This Plan—Actor Is Impressed with Attention to Musical Program Observed by Majority of Managers

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN, who is starring in Quality Pictures for the Metro program, has certain definite ideas regarding picture making that may prove everything to the manufacturers of motion pictures as well as to the general public. Mr. Bushman stopped long enough in his busy hours in New York to discuss the present trend of the industry.

"Motion picture development," said Mr. Bushman, "is now beginning to proceed along normal and natural lines. I see in the very near future the week run instead of the one night showing and this is made possible by the class of feature pictures which are now being made. The plan to have pictures continue for an entire week at a given theatre is the best for everybody.

"It gives the manufacturer and the selling organization a justifiable reason for the large expenditures necessary to the making of good pictures under present conditions. It is also much better for the public. The longer run makes it possible for everybody to see the picture.

"Another element that is very encouraging to those who are really interested in the higher development of motion pictures is the manner in which the theatres are presenting the pictures. The stages are being dressed in harmony with the character of the picture and managers of the larger theatres are going to great trouble and expense in order to provide a proper setting for the good feature pictures.

"Another important element is the attention that is being given to the music. A musical program properly selected can do much for any picture, but it is tremendously important to the picture of the higher class. The stage setting and the music provide the atmosphere and although this has been for many years regarded as vital on the speaking stage, it is only recently that theatre managers generally have given thought to this necessary combination.

"I confess that my own ambition in pictures is coming nearer to its realization under my present surroundings than ever before. I have desired to present pictures not merely for the purpose of entertainment, but pictures that would cause the great masses of the public to go away with something to think about.

"I feel sure I will not be accused of preaching when I point out that pictures carry with them a tremendous responsibility and an unusual opportunity.

"It was my desire, in my latest picture, 'The Silent Voice,' to give to the public something that will make them think and at the same time not go so far as to neglect the dramatic and entertaining elements of the production. If I have succeeded in doing this, and the critics have been kind enough to say that I have, I have gone nearer to the goal of my ambition than in any other pictures in which I have appeared."

Mr. Bushman will, after a trip to the Pacific coast, come East again to appear in the forthcoming production of "Richard Carvel," which is to be one of the most pretentious pictures ever attempted.

Thanhouser Studios Get Eugene Nowland and Parke

First Director Man of Wide Experience, Including Career in Music Before Accident Compelled Its Abandonment for Stage—Parke Put on "Peer Gynt" for Mansfield

JUST when Edwin Thanhouser will feel satisfied that his organization has reached satisfactory proportions is a question to which the trade at large is giving thought. A recent announcement shows that the New Rochelle studios rank as one of the largest aggregations in the world, but this week sees the addition of two more companies under directors of established rank in both the film and other fields of art.

In engaging Eugene Nowland, Mr. Thanhouser selects an artist of unusual versatility. He is an actor, stage director and musician, having been concert master for Ysaye and violinist with Joachim. It was only when he broke his hand that he abandoned music for the stage and in a short while was shining brilliantly as Regisseur at Sarah Bernhardt's theatre in Paris; he also took companies to Brussels, Berlin and London.

He then returned to the United States, where he was engaged for several years in stock company activities on the Pacific Coast, after which he joined the Edison company in the east, as director. He directed Mrs. Fiske in "Vanity Fair" and some of his work has been the best successes of the Edison company, such as "McQuade of the Traffic Squad," "The Boston Tea Party," and "According to the Light." He comes to the Thanhouser company fully equipped with that rare appreciation of stage values so essential to the man who makes good under the supervision of Mr. Thanhouser.

William Parke is a new name to filmdom, but the stage knows him well for many noteworthy accomplishments. He is the man who staged "Peer Gynt," in which Richard Mansfield appeared at the New Amsterdam theatre in New York. This production won him the applause of the theatrical world, but long before that he triumphed in Philadelphia with the old Holland Stock Company, where he became stage director after one year's work as an actor. His experience there was extensive and qualified him for greater work later.

This came soon, when E. H. Sothern engaged him as his stage director, a position which he held with distinguished honor for six years. Mr. Parke also has the distinction of having directed the Castle Square company in Boston for four years, and Arnold Daly for one year. His latest work, before joining the Thanhouser company was with Al. Woods, for whom he rehearsed seven "Potash and Perlmutter" companies, but Mr. Parke takes most pride in his labor with his own stock company in Pittsfield, Mass., a few years ago.

It was here that he became the first American exponent of the European stock system; that is, he gathered about him a company of players of merit and then proceeded to put on productions, distributing the parts according to play standards instead of players'. There was no leading man or leading woman; each one played what he was called upon to do according to his type and the experiment attracted the attention of the theatrical press to such an extent that some of the most wealthy patrons of the art formed a society to extend the work.

His success in this direction certainly stamps him as a competent judge of material, which is one of the most potent requisites of the present day moving picture director.

H. Cooper Cliffe, who played with Sir Henry Irving for many years, will soon be seen on the screen in "An Enemy to Society," a coming Columbia-Metro feature, and also in the coming Rolfe-Metro feature, as yet unnamed, which will star Ethel Barrymore.

Mr. Cliffe was considered for many years the best straight actor on the London stage. He played the male roles opposite Sir Henry Irving for many years, being Richmond to Irving's Richard, and appeared in many other parts of equal importance.

CHICAGO CONCERN TO PURCHASE DESERTED VILLAGE?

It is reported at Grand Rapids, Mich., that a Chicago motion picture concern will purchase the deserted village of Marlborough, near Baldwin, and convert it into a studio for motion pictures. The village contains an inn of 50 rooms, a theatre, factory buildings, stores, and a number of residences.

Fox Directors Ordered to March Toward Quality Goal

General Commanding Plans Strategic Move on Secret of Perfect Picture Making and Issues Orders to Army of Studio Managers to Capture Position at All Costs

THE first production of William Fox under his new one-a-week policy, namely, a mammoth presentation of "The Two Orphans," visualized and directed by Herbert Brenon, has broken all records for attendance at the Academy of Music, the Audubon theatre and other houses in New York where it has been exhibited during the week of September 6.

At the Audubon, which is one of the largest motion picture theatres in the world, it was necessary to call out the police reserves on the opening night in order to keep the crowds in order. At the Academy of Music hundreds were turned away.

Indications are that the forthcoming release under the new policy, which is a photo-dramatization of Owen Kildare's "My Mamie Rose," entitled "The Regeneration," will more than equal the record set by "The Two Orphans." "The Regeneration," which is released in September, promises to be an even greater record-breaker than the famous "Two Orphans."

The third release is "The Song of Hate," to be followed by "The Wonderful Adventure," starring William Farnum.

The Annette Kellermann companies, directed by Herbert Brenon, have arrived in Kingston, Jamaica, and are proceeding with the screening of the million dollar picture in which William Fox will feature the most perfectly formed woman in the world. The bevy of diving girls, which left New York last week, are now disporting themselves in the submarine groves of the ten-acre underwater city, which was built for this production in one of the most beautiful bays of Jamaica.

At the conclusion of the work in Jamaica a steam yacht will be chartered for the companies and they will go cruising through the West Indies and Central America, and possibly the Bahamas, in search of other desirable locations.

William Farnum is the star in a new William Fox production, which is now in active preparation, under the direction of Oscar Apfel. W. S. Davis also has in preparation a new and ambitious photo-drama, and the same is true of Frank Powell, Frederick Thomson and R. A. Walsh.

Mr. Walsh is directing Theda Bara and a notable company of artists in a spectacular production, the name of which has not yet been announced.

Frank Kugler, the latest addition to the ranks of the William Fox directors, and Tom O'Brien, his assistant, are engaged in screening the scenes of a production in which William Farnum is the star. The stars now assembled under the William Fox banner number such notable names as Annette Kellermann, Robert B. Mantell, Genevieve Hamper, Frederick Perry, Theda Bara, William E. Shay, Rockliffe Fellowes, Dorothy Bernard, Dorothy Green, Nance O'Neil and Florence Deshon.

Glamour of History Hallows Quaker City for Films

Noted Landmarks from Colonial Times, and Beautiful Scenery in Easy Reach from Studios, Attract Companies to Philadelphia and Its Environs for Picture Making

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Philadelphia, September 8.

AS the months roll by the Quaker City is looked upon with more and more favor by producing companies. Many reasons contribute to this selection. Rents are as reasonable as in any large city of the East and nowhere can be found scenes of greater historical interest nor more beautiful scenery within easy access of the studios.

The Continental Photo Play Corporation is the latest producing company to take advantage of these attractions, by establishing headquarters at 6114 Germantown avenue. This building is one of the quaint old homes of the oldest part of the city, and traces its history back to colonial times. The office is furnished in antique fashion, in harmony with its surroundings and an old-fashioned garden at the rear of this mansion gives the whole place an attractive air different from anything heretofore seen in film circles. The Continental uses the large and well equipped studios of the Liberty Motion Picture Company, situated a stone's throw from its offices, for its indoor scenes.

The Continental is financed by New York business men who have capitalized it at a large sum. John J. Breslin is general manager of the company and Kate Fowler, well known in musical circles as an accomplished organist, is secretary and treasurer.

HORSLEY SIGNS LONG CONTRACTS WITH STARS AND DIRECTORS

David Horsley announces that he has signed long-term contracts with all of his featured players and directors, along with many others in his companies. Among them are George Ovey, Crane Wilbur, Milton H. Fahrney, Jay Hunt and Captain Jack Bonavita. In some of the cases the contracts were renewals of old agreements and called for big increases in salaries.

This announcement will set at rest a rumor that some of the stars were to leave for other fields.

Additions to Mr. Horsley's staff of directors and players are being planned and announcement of the names will be made in due course.

Sepia Prints for 600 Dailies Signed with Equitable

Company Will Issue Rotogravure Supplement, Similar in Art Work to the Pictorial Section of New York "Times," with Portraits of Eighteen Stars, Some with World Film

BY an arrangement made by Harry Reichenbach, of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, that concern will, on October 2, be represented in six hundred daily papers throughout the United States through the medium of a magnificent sepia rotogravure supplement, now in preparation and similar to that issued by the New York "Times," Boston "Herald" and other great city papers.

The supplement will be on fine stock, contain the photographs of eighteen Equitable and World Film stars and will be free from advertising in all forms and will be issued as a special art section of the papers in their Sunday issue October 2.

Among the hundreds of newspapers which have contracted to distribute the supplement are the Allentown, Pa., "Democrat;" Marietta, O., "Leader;" Lorain, O., "Democrat;" Kalamazoo, Mich., "Gazette;" Nashua, N. H., "Telegraph;" Cumberland, Md., "Times;" Portland, Me., "Argus;" Paterson, N. J., "News;" Chambersburg, Pa., "Repository;" New Bedford, Mass., "Times;" Muskogee, Okla., "Democrat;" Newburgh, N. Y., "News;" Lafayette, Ind., "Journal;" Warren, Pa., "Times;" Hamilton, Ohio, "Journal;" DuBois, Pa., "Journal;" Superior, Wis., "Telegram;" Janesville, Wis., "Gazette;" Quincy, Ill., "Whig;" Wilkesbarre, Pa., "Times-Leader;" Fort Wayne, Ind., "Gazette;" Harrisburg, Pa., "Patriot;" Shamokin, Pa., "Dispatch;" Burlington, Vt., "Daily News;" Springfield, O., "Register;" Grand Rapids, Mich., "Herald;" South Bend, Ind., "News-Tribune;" Sharon, Pa., "Telegraph;" Bradford, Pa., "Herald;" Meriden, Miss., "Dispatch;" Knoxville, Tenn., "Sentinel;" Logansport, Ind., "Journal;" Belville, Ill., "News-Democrat;" Zanesville, O., "Sunday News;" Hartford, Conn., "Journal;" New Orleans, La., "Daily States;" Shreveport, La., "Times;" Tampa, Fla., "Times;" Reading, Pa., "Herald;" Montgomery, Ala., "Advertiser;" Dallas, Tex., "Times-Herald;" Fort Worth, Tex., "Times;" Middletown, N. Y., "Argus;" Easton, Pa., "Argus;" Beaver, Pa., "Times;" Frankfort, Ind., Times;" Atchison, Kan., "Globe," and hundreds of other papers in all parts of the country.

The supplement is being made by Sackett Wilhelm Company, originators of the rotogravure process and over three million are being printed to supply the papers already under contract with Equitable.

Exhibitors in cities to be covered by the supplement have been notified and are working in co-operation with the newspapers.

It is thought that before the supplement actually goes onto the presses Equitable will have contracts calling for five million of them, which, counting four readers to each supplement, gives the new concern a distribution and introduction to twenty million readers.

The supplement will contain photographs of Clara Kimball Young, Muriel Ostriche, Florence Reed, Molly McIntyre, William Courtenay, Katharine Kalered, Robert Edeson, Robert Warwick, Clara Whipple, Alice Brady, Holbrook Blinn, Katharine Osterman and others of note.

Next 10 Days May See "Old Glory" Sold for All States

Nielsen's Preparedness Subject Appeals to State Rights Men, Who Realize It Is Destined for Wide Popularity at Time Public Is Agitated Over Defense Movement

TERRITORY for F. O. Nielsen's Peace and Preparedness picture "Guarding Old Glory" is being disposed of very rapidly, according to reports from both Mr. Nielsen and W. H. Rudolph, his Eastern representative. Sales last week were as follows: Greater New York, Greene Photo Plays, Inc., New York City; California, Nevada and Arizona, Sol Lesser for the Golden Gate Film Exchange, San Francisco, Cal.; Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho, William Cutts, Butte, Montana; Ohio, Paul E. Henry, Crestline, Ohio; Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and District of Columbia, Reese and Samios, Westminster, Maryland.

It is confidently expected that every state will be closed out within the next ten days.

Mr. Nielsen, who is one of the biggest state right men in the West, never buying less than five prints for Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan, and who is also a well known exhibitor in Chicago, found himself in rather a peculiar position when it came to marketing "Guarding Old Glory."

At first it was his intention to book this picture in his five states, with his other numerous features, but on account of the patriotic nature of the picture, together with the importance attached to it after its numerous enthusiastic endorsements by the press and various heads of the government, Mr. Nielsen decided to place the picture upon the open market on the state right plan, but promised himself one of his own states on a fair competitive basis.

What state to keep and what price he was to pay himself was to be decided by the first offer that reached Mr. Nielsen's Chicago office. This came from Michigan, so Mr. Nielsen tilted the offer one hundred dollars and closed with himself, so that "Guarding Old Glory" will head "The Spoilers," "Just Out of College," "Little Sunset" and the other Nielsen features in that state.

Sybaritic Ease for Knock-About Comedians in West

Mack Sennett Moves a Bungalow Half a Mile to Studio Lot for Dressing Rooms of Weber and Fields While Famous Funmakers Stay in Los Angeles

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 6.

MACK SENNETT, not to be outdone by the heads of other West Coast studios in the matter of making arrangements for the entertainment and comfort of stars who come here to appear in subjects, has purchased a bungalow and moved it to the studio lot, where it will be occupied by Joe Weber and Lew Fields, of the well-known team of Weber and Fields, who arrived here Friday for an indefinite engagement.

Mr. Sennett took this action when he received a wire from Mr. Weber advising that he would like to have a Hollywood bungalow during his stay here where he could live and use the building for a dressing room in the morning, going to the studio made-up for the day's work. The telegraphic suggestion did not meet with the approval of Mr. Sennett, in that Mr. Weber had failed to consider that photoplayers frequently change make-up several times a day; so he did the next best thing.

One morning the bungalow was located a half-mile from the studio, but housemovers had it in the lot on a new foundation within twenty-four hours, and when the distinguished comedians arrived their cozy little home was ready. In addition to this Mr. Sennett has leased two Hollywood bungalows, where the famous pair will make their home during their stay in Los Angeles.

The nature of the subjects in which Weber and Fields will appear has not been decided upon at the Keystone studio, Scenario Editor Hempton Del Ruth having prepared several subjects for them. The first of the releases is also to be decided upon, and it may be a two-reel or a multiple reel feature.

The Foys, Eddie, Friend Wife, and the fifty-seven varieties, have completed their first two-reel subject.

CARLOTTA DE FELICE TO PLAY OPPOSITE FAVERSHAM

Carlotta De Felice, featured by Vitagraph for several years, whose brunette beauty formed an excellent foil for Emmy Whelen's blonde pulchritude in "When a Woman Loves," the Rolfe-Metro feature, will be seen again on the Metro program playing opposite William Faversham in "One Million Dollars," also a Rolfe production.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. THE RIGHT WAY AND THE WRONG WAY TO MAKE UP A HOUSE ORGAN

Exhibitors the country over know that the house organ is their own personal message to the public. As much as any other form of advertising it reveals the character of the theatre. Patrons judge the theatre chiefly, of course, by the quality of pictures it offers; but they are also guided by the amount of information the house organ contains, its general make-up—its attractiveness.

On this page you will find reproductions of the first pages of two house organs which illustrate in a striking fashion the right way and the wrong way to make up theatre programs. One is "The Village Movie," published weekly by the Village Theatre Company, Wilmette, Ill. The other, "Movies," is issued by the Royal theatre and airdome, Malvern, Ark.

"The Village Movie" makes an instant appeal to the reader. "Movies" does not. And why?

First of all because care was taken in the selection of clear, modern type for one, while the other is printed in type too large for the width of the column, and the result is a crude jumble that repels the eye. "The Village Movie" uses a good quality of white paper, so that its type-matter stands out clearly, is easily read, gives the appearance of strength and refinement. This is the secret of good typography—a secret that the publisher of "Movies" has not learned. He has made use of dull paper and ink of neutral color, which, combined with type of a poor style, make his organ look cheap and ineffective.

Notice also the waste of space in "Movies," contrasted with full use of the page in "The Village Movie." One presents twice as much information as the other, and in several times as effective a manner. This result, again, is achieved by the right use of type.

Not only does the exhibitor need to make his house organ pleasing to the reader's eye, but he also must give the reader a variety of information—something more than a list of mere names and dates of productions. Here again "The Village Movie" scores immensely over "Movies." The material in the former is carefully laid out, first, with introductory appeals to the patron, capturing his interest immediately. The patron is asked to designate his choice of "request" features, and the exhibitor helps him make his choice by setting down for him short comments on a few excellent pictures shown by the theatre in the recent past. In other words, the exhibitor who publishes "The Village Movie" knows that the direct word to the patron wins every time, while the "Movies" exhibitor is unacquainted with this vital point in advertising. He wastes space in assuring his patrons that he will give them their money back without question if they are not satisfied. His clever brother-exhibitor, instead, reminds them that they have already been satisfied—not by announcing this fact in those words, but by recalling to their minds productions that have won their approval.

Suppose a picture goer should enter a theatre, and be given a copy of each of these organs. What would he naturally do with them? One he would glance at hurriedly, then let it gently flutter down to the floor. The other he would read through, taking it home with him for future reference. Is there any doubt as to which one he would discard, and which he would keep? And isn't it just as much to the exhibitor's advantage to issue a house organ that is attractive, that carries a message with a "punch," that will go into the home of his patrons and stay there, as it is for him to have attractive lobby displays, attractive heralds, attractive newspaper advertisements?

GOOD FILMS, LONGER RUNS, PRICES THAT GUARANTEE CLASS

Proof that if a town is started right in the motion picture business it will stay right is furnished by A. A. Ashley, proprietor of a motion picture theatre at Crosby, N. D., and of two others at Fortuna and Akabo, N. D. Good films and longer runs with a charge that will guarantee class are Ashley's motto.

Ashley has a flat rate of twenty cents admission for the regular program, and when he runs features he gets good ones and charges and packs his house at Which do You Want?

From the requests already received, Mary Pickford is undoubtedly the reigning favorite among our movie fans, and we are very glad to repeat her picture, "Behind the Scenes", as the first "request" feature, in view of the fact that this production received the greatest number of requests last week.

And what shall it be next? Which of the Paramount Pictures that has already been shown do you wish to see? Which did you miss? Which do you wish to see a second time?

Looking back over the available material it does seem hard to choose, for they were all so good, but the following list may be of some help to those who do not remember just what pictures have been shown.

One of the most delightful comedies yet seen on the screen at the Village was "Mrs. Black is Back" in which May Irwin made her debut in motion pictures. It was a screamingly funny farce, and so clean, so well photographed, and so pleasing throughout that we have already received numerous requests to repeat the picture. Unfortunately, when it was shown here before the weather was so bad that many were unable to see it.

George Beban and Clara Williams rendered unusually strong characterizations in "The Italian". Possibly there is no other actor who has such ability in the interpretation of foreign roles as has Mr. Beban, and his work in "The Italian" was a revelation to many. The scenes in the early part of the picture, while the story was laid in Italy, were especially beautiful—some very fine effects being obtained by the camera.

Then everyone enjoyed Maclyn Arbuckle in the comedy-drama triumph, "The County Chairman", and in connection with this picture we wish to commend Prof. Monnet's excellent interpretation of the picture. His organ photo-dramatization was especially fine, and the result of some hard work on the part of the Professor, as he confided to us later that it was one of the most difficult pictures he had played.

Dainty Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower" presented one of the sweetest, most bewitching characterizations ever seen on the screen, and Harold Lockwood probably made his greatest hit in this picture.

H. B. Warner in "The Ghost Breaker" was the source of much enjoyment to many of our patrons, and his splendid interpretation of the leading role was only further proof of his great dramatic ability. Rita Stanwood was also charming in this picture.

TWO BIG FEATURE NIGHTS THIS WEEK

To-night (Monday) we have a six reel program, "The Goddess," and four other reels and to-morrow matinee and night we will present for your approval the greatest six reel production ever shown in this city, "The Island of Regeneration," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature released under the V. L. S. E. label—which means the very best in the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies. Prices Monday 5c and 15c, and Tuesday matinee and night 10c and 20c. Your money back without question if you are not satisfied. We give you your money's worth at the Airdome.

WHAT THE OTHER PLAYERS THINK

"Antonio Moreno and Edith Story are receiving congratulations from even their enemies, if they have any, down at the Vitagraph. Their work in "The Island of Regeneration" is the cause."—Motion Picture Magazine, March 1915.

thirty-five cents. The town of Crosby has but 800 persons, yet it supports a theatre which with its equipment represents an outlay of $10,000.

"The people of Crosby started out with the idea that the motion picture drama was the modern drama, the most powerful method of presenting the drama, and it has kept that idea," said Ashley. "The patrons had paid about the same prices for poor road shows. They did not believe that they could see a motion picture drama, played by high-priced stars, scenically wonderful and inspiring for less money than they could see a poor road show.

"They will not see them cheaper if I can help it. I give them the best show I can get for them. I entertain them in a well-ventilated, clean house, in comfortable seats, and I take the pains to learn what pleases them and give it to them. I treat them as their grocers treat them and expect a fair return, as the grocer does. I get it and they are apparently glad to pay it."

BUILDS HIS HOUSE ORGAN ALONG LINES "NEWS" ADVOCATES

Buffalo, August 12.

Editor Motion Picture News.

Sir:—Your more than illuminating editorial captioned "The Growth of the Theatre House Organ," has crept into the very business vitals of Mr. Gus Schlesinger, manager of the new theatre Victoria, and myself as publicity director. Without any intention of hurling bouquets at Mr. Schlesinger, I pointed out that the Victoria house organ corresponded to the one so aptly created in the News editorial, especially as to detail arrangement. Particular effort is made by Mr. Schlesinger in "laying out" the book each week to inculcate both refinement and dignity without losing the appeal that must be made to bring the reader within the portals. Hours are spent by Mr. Schlesinger in drafting the make-up, having the cuts made and reading proof. I strive to write a short, peppery description of the attraction in a brief synopsis. In the eventual, a booklet is produced that is kept by the reader, and it is not unusual for men and women to ask for them when through neglect a patron is not given his or her house organ.

Mr. Schlesinger first built his miniature house organ while manager of the Regent theatre here. When he transferred his attention to the Victoria the idea came with him, and has been taken to the bosom of hundreds of picture lovers. Perhaps it has been popular because it has been created along the lines your magazine advocates.

Yours in the Game,

Ray C. Meyers.

WHAT LIVE EXHIBITORS EVERYWHERE ARE DOING

Exhibitors in several small Louisiana and Mississippi towns, taking advantage of the dancing craze, show two reels, and then turn over the stage to young couples for dancing. The idea is said to be growing.

Several hundred newsboys as guests of Manager Klapheke of the Baxter theatre, Louisville, Ky., witnessed a special program of three and a half hours, with plenty of "wild west" scenes thrown on the screen.

Manager F. J. Croxall of the Apollo theatre, Los Angeles, is issuing an attractive house organ weekly giving the week's program. The entire theatre is being brightened up, and additional display will be made on the front.

The Tennessee State Reformatory for Boys has been provided with a complete motion picture outfit through the generosity of Manager Tony Sudekum, of the Crescent Amusement Company of Nashville. Authorities of the school believe motion pictures will furnish clean and wholesome amusement for the boys.

The Queen theatre, Dallas, believes in direct appeal to patrons. Recently it sent out a neat invitation card addressed to traveling men at their hotels after 11 P. M. The cards, received in the next morning's mail, asked "lonesome strangers" to test the merits of the Queen.

High school boys as ushers in the Halstead theatre, East Orange, N. J., is a recent successful plan adopted by Manager Thomas J. Hicks.

Harry Crandall, manager of Crandall's theatre, Washington, found his night performances congested, and his afternoon performances slimly attended. Here is the way he remedied this situation: "I began to advertise in the daily papers, on the screen and on all publicity matter sent out by this theatre my matinee shows, directing this especially to the ladies and the shoppers. The result has been an evening up of matters somewhat and big houses during what is usually considered slim hours."

Advertising by means of electrical signs offers peculiar scope for original ideas, as a device erected by a Harrisburg, Pa., exhibitor shows. This sign, thirty-two feet high, consists of a diving woman who, by an arrangement of moving lights, climbs to the top of an electrical ladder, plunges into electrical water, swims out and mounts the ladder again. Every movement of the diver is depicted by flashing lights.

EXHIBITOR USES MINIATURE ISLAND AS NOVEL WINDOW DISPLAY OF "REGENERATION"

A CLEVER SCHEME USED BY THE ROYAL THEATRE, MALVERN, ARK.

The accompanying cut shows an ingenious and very effective window display used by the Royal theatre, Malvern, Ark., to attract crowds to its showing of "The Island of Regeneration."

Manager James T. Alderson built a replica of "The Island" in a tank made to fit the window of the Royal. The picture shows how it looked from the street, with the exception of the "ocean," which looked much larger. The sand, rocks and foliage are all real, as are the water and the waves. An electric light combined with a piece of orange celluloid made a sunset effect across the sky, and an electric fan furnished the "sea breeze." The sky is a piece of blue paper pasted to hoops to represent the dome of heaven and the stars were made to shine through by placing a light back of the dome. The two figures, cut from a photograph sent by the manufacturer, are mounted in the scene.

A capacity house rewarded Manager Alderson's clever advertising scheme.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

FALL'S ADVENT BRINGS INCREASED BOOKINGS TO PHILADELPHIA EXCHANGES

THINGS are rather quiet around the Philadelphia exchanges this week, but the various and sundry managers seen say conditions are favorable for an early and increased business. Already with the advent of the first Fall month, bookings are getting more lively.

Harry Schwalbe, manager of the Electric Theatre Supply Company, is one to already feel this increase. To meet the big demand for his output, from twenty-five to forty features a week are being released by Mr. Schwalbe. Joseph Spero, for the past six months manager of the Greater New York Film Rental Company, of 1339 Vine street, has been transferred to the Boston offices of the same company. Until his successor is appointed, the office will be under the capable care of Jack Levy, who at the same time will continue his duties as manager of the Fox Film Corporation, at 1333 Vine street.

William E. Smith, district manager, and Herbert Given, office manager, of the Famous Players Exchange, spent the week in Chicago at the La Salle Hotel. Both these gentlemen attended the convention of Paramount producers and managers, representing the Quaker City at that gathering.

Joel A. Levy has taken the territory of eastern Pennsylvania for the World Film Corporation as road man. Mr. Levy, although still young in years, is a veteran at the film game, having at various times been office manager of the World in Philadelphia, manager of the Box Office Attractions in the same city, and special feature manager of the World Film in Pittsburg. Ben Harris, shipping clerk at the World Film's Philadelphia office, has received a substantial advance in salary, owing to his excellent work in that department.

George Bennethum, manager of the Fairmount, took a short business trip last week. Miss Lena Bakerman, formerly with the Mutual offices, is now with the Fairmount Exchange. Harry Tyson, one of the oldest employes of Fairmount, is still holding his post with that organization. Edward Armstrong, traveling representative of the Universal Film Company, from New York, was in Philadelphia last week in the interest of the "Battle of Przemysl." Mr. Armstrong has just returned from a successful trip to the coast, handling Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter" and the "Submarine" picture.

G. W. Bradenburg, of the Independent Film Company, 802 Vine street, is a Republican candidate for Common Council in the Fifteenth Ward. As chairman of his ward committee for the past four years, Mr. Bradenburg has attained great popularity in his neighborhood and his election is predicted by the largest majority ever given a councilmanic candidate in the "fifteenth."

So much adverse legislation, both state and municipal, against the film industry of recent years, is the motive that prompted Mr. Bradenburg to enter the political field.

Naturally he will fight tooth and nail against the enemies of motion pictures.

NEW MANAGER AND NEW QUARTERS FOR PATHE EXCHANGE

The Pathé Exchange in Detroit has moved from the Peter Smith building to 40-42-44 East Larned street, where it occupies the entire second floor of the building. It is more than ten times their former space. The Detroit office will hereafter be operated as an exchange, two copies of everything being kept in stock. The company also announces a new Detroit manager, L. E. Franconi, who comes direct from the New York office.

VISITS BY MANY FILM MEN LEND COLOR TO ACTIVITY OF BUSY DALLAS EXCHANGES

During the last two weeks Dallas exchanges have been visited by many film men. Andrew J. Cobe, of the Alliance, at New York, had a day's consultation with Messrs. Hill and Lowe of the local Alliance releasing concern; the Box Office Attraction Company, the firm under which the Fox productions are handled in Texas territory, was visited by A. S. Carlos, of New York, and Sam Dembow, special representative of the company; The Western Automatic Music Company, local distributors of Wurlitzer instruments, was visited by A. G. Clancey, of the Wurlitzer factories at Cincinnati, Ohio; and the World Film exchange was visited by the new Southern district manager, J. Klein.

C. C. Ezell, former manager of the local General Film office, and recently in charge of the Paramount exchange in Dallas, is said to have resigned from the Paramount. Nothing definite could be learned, but Charles D. Touchon, head of the Southwestern Pictures Company, in the same building, is handling Paramount affairs in its Dallas exchange now.

The new Triangle Film Corporation's quarters, 1814 Commerce street, is rapidly being remodeled for the opening of the exchange, September 15. The Triangle's location is right in the "Film Row," being next door to the V-L-S-E and the downstairs entrance to the Consolidated. In this same block are found about twelve exchanges. L. B. Remy, the local manager of the Triangle, was formerly an exhibitor in Fort Worth, was president of the MPEL of A in Texas, and has for the past year or so been connected with the Mutual, handling the "Million Dollar Mystery," Mutual Master Pictures, etc. He put over these pictures with great success and is well liked by the exhibitors he is acquainted with in the Southwest—and incidentally, he knows about ninety-nine out of every hundred.

R. B. Morris, for several years head of the Supply Department of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, at Dallas, has resigned and it is reported that he will become general sales manager for a Southern screen manufacturing concern. E. T. Peter, of the Dallas United exchange, has a very important question that he has been propounding to brother exchangemen without a satisfactory answer, as yet. The question was asked him in a letter from a would-be scenario writer, and he has been trying hard to secure the information to answer the question. The lady wanted to know "about how many words it takes to make a good five-reel feature." Any one having the technical knowledge desired will please communicate with Mr. Peter.

LATEST HAPPENINGS IN DETROIT EXCHANGE CIRCLES

Following are the very latest happenings in the Detroit exchange world:

C. W. Spnugh has opened an office in the Peter Smith building as representative for the Central Film company of Chicago; the Bell Film Exchange, J. Rosen, manager, has moved to 412 Peter Smith building; the Pathé Exchange has moved from the Peter Smith building to 40-42-44 East Larned street; the Metro Corporation has moved from the Campau building to 159 West Jefferson avenue; and most important of all, the Paramount Film Corporation has opened elaborate offices at 278 East Jefferson avenue, with D. Leo Dennison in charge.

"THE WOMAN NEXT DOOR" ATTRACTS ATTENTION AT 'FRISCO

The first Kleine-Edison release, "The Woman Next Door," has attracted much attention at the Golden Gate Film Exchange, San Francisco, and many exhibitors have inquired as to when it could be reviewed.

SELZNICK RETURNS FROM EXCHANGE TRIP

Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, has returned to the New York office after a trip to Cleveland and Pittsburgh, made for the purpose of leasing larger quarters for the World Film Corporation offices in those cities.

In Cleveland Mr. Selznick leased an entire floor in a new office building just completed in Prospect avenue near Ninth street, a location in the heart of the best business section.

In Pittsburgh the new World Film offices have been established on the ground floor of a modern building in Liberty avenue, near the Union station. This location will prove exceptionally convenient for those who go into Pittsburgh from the surrounding territory, by way of the Union Station.

Both of these new offices were made necessary because of the increase in business in the respective cities and Mr. Selznick reports an exceptionally bright outlook for business in both of these film centers.

BUSINESS GROWS APACE AT BOSTON BIG FOUR OFFICE

Increase of business continues at the Big Four office in Boston. There is no sign of a let up. Manager Balsdon has just promoted one of his road men, F. A. Grady, to be his assistant.

Mr. Grady carries somewhat of a novelty in the shape of a business card. It is a small cardboard folder of the regulation business card size and shape. The two inside pages are filled with a printed list of the Big Four features now booking, giving the name of the manufacturer, the title of the film and the number of parts. On the back of the card is printed in prominent type:

"Opportunity comes to every man. This is yours. Book now."

Boston is soon to have its first view of "The Battle Cry of Peace." Manager Balsdon of the Big Four is planning to secure a theatre for the private view of the spectacle. He will invite various city and state, militia and U. S. army and navy officials who may be stationed at Boston when the film is shown.

FOX FEATURES POPULAR IN NEW ENGLAND

This has been a big week for the Fox New England Exchange in Boston. Manager Harry F. Campbell has signed up the new Fenway theatre, now being completed, on Massachusetts avenue, in the Boston Back Bay district. The theatre is now expected to open Labor Day or September 13 and it will show Fox features for the first three days of the week, thirty days after the first run at the Modern theatre on Washington street.

In addition to this, Mr. Campbell placed the Fox features with the new Keith theatre, the Empire, in Providence, R. I.; at a house in Pawtucket; with the new Harvard theatre which will open September 1 in North Cambridge under the direction of Manager Catoof of 6 Beacon street, Boston; and in E. J. Caron's Star theatre in Manchester, N. H., and the new house Mr. Caron is building to open in Concord, N. H., in October.

Mr. Campbell has installed in his exhibition room one of the new 6B Power's projection machines. Mitchell Grandby, one of the Fox road men, is traveling this week in Rhode Island and Connecticut. Charles Phillips, another of the road force, is doing local work in Boston.

EDWARDS IS ENTHUSIASTIC SHOUTER FOR GOLD ROOSTER IN KANSAS CITY

C. S. Edwards, Jr., though young in years, can point to a record of eight or nine years in the film business, starting in that long ago with the Yale Film Exchange, of Kansas City, Mo., which at that time was the pioneer film distributor in that part of the country.

With the formation of the General Film Company the Yale Company was sold out to them. Mr. Edwards remained with the General until the first of June, 1914, when he went with the Eclectic Film Company, later absorbed by the Pathé Exchange. Mr. Edwards likes his position and shouts for the gold rooster at all times, and his shouting brings home the bacon in the way of good business for Pathé. His father is also one of the oldest of the Pathé distributing force in length of service.

C. S. EDWARDS, JR., MANAGER, PATHÉ EXCHANGE, KANSAS CITY

MANDELBAUM IS NEW MANAGER OF BIG ATTRACTIONS

H. S. Mandelbaum, formerly of the World Film Corporation, later road man for the Blinkhorn Photoplays Company, has assumed management of the Big Attraction Film Company, Cleveland, Ohio.

Alex Bartow, formerly of the Mutual Film Corporation, is assisting him.

HICKS NEW DISTRICT MANAGER FOR GENERAL ON COAST, SAYS REPORT

H. H. Hicks, manager of the Los Angeles exchange of the General Film company, has returned to Los Angeles from a trip to New York City, and in film circles it is stated he has been named district manager of the Pacific coast and mountain states, which duties he will take up in the very near future, according to the report. Mr. Hicks stated he did not have an announcement to make on the subject.

E. H. Emmick, former manager of the Los Angeles office of the Golden Gate Film Exchange and All Star Feature Distributors, is in San Francisco on a business and pleasure trip, and it is very probable he will engage in business there, purchasing state right subjects and booking independent releases. He has been in the film exchange business for the past seven years and is familiar with all details.

NEW ENGLAND PROVES FERTILE FIELD FOR MUTUAL

J. C. Butner, formerly of Boston and more recently of New Orleans, has returned to Boston as manager of the Mutual exchange, Boylston street, in place of W. H. Bradley, who has resigned to take over the Triangle office there.

Mr. Butner says New England exhibitors are showing remarkable interest in the new Mutual program. In Boston in particular the Mutual pictures are very popular. The new manager is a firm believer in advertising the film. The advertising done by the Mutual recently, he says, produced countless telephone inquiries at his office from people who wished to know where the advertised films were being shown. The Mutual office in Boston is on upper Boylston street, hand in hand with the Universal Exchange. Mr. Butner's place as head of the Mutual in New Orleans was taken by Neal P. Eberley, formerly a cashier of the exchange in that city.

WORLD FILM PROMOTES RENNIE TO SALT LAKE MANAGERSHIP

Hugh Rennie, who for six months has been connected with the Los Angeles office of the World Firm Corporation in the capacity of salesman and assistant to Office Manager C. L. Theuerkauf, has been promoted to the position of manager of the Salt Lake World Film office, and left for that place this week. Mr. Rennie leaves a host of friends in Los Angeles, where he was very popular with exhibitors and exchangemen.

D. E. Knotts, West Coast manager for the World Film corporation, arrived here this week from a trip to New York, having stopped off on his return at Denver, Salt Lake and other points, and is now en route on a trip over the territory.

HAINS GOES TO CINCINNATI FOR MUTUAL

R. H. Hains, manager of the Mutual Film Company's office in Louisville, Ky., has been transferred to the Cincinnati office. Norman M. Dixon, traveling representative of the Indianapolis office, has been appointed as successor to Mr. Hains.

NEW ORLEANS FEATURE EXCHANGE DOUBLES OFFICE FORCE

The Peerless Feature Film Company, the new independent exchange formed in New Orleans by Paul L. Ford and Elmer B. Smith, has doubled its office force after the first month of its existence. Mr. Ford says this speaks well for the real demand there is from Louisiana and Mississippi exhibitors for features.

Al. Durning, secretary of the United Program Film Service of Louisiana, with offices at 834 Common street, New Orleans, is all puffed up over the fact that he has lately joined the taxpayers' class. Mr. Durning has purchased a handsome bungalow out in Gentilly Terrace. Now that he has a bungalow, his friends are asking Mr. Durning whether he's got somebody to install in said bungalow.

CHANGES IN PITTSBURGH FAMOUS PLAYERS PERSONNEL

Manager Bachmeyer of the Pittsburgh office of the Famous Players Film Service has announced the following changes and promotions in the personnel of his force, which went into effect September 1.

Russell Smith, heretofore in charge of the old Famous Players productions, has been promoted to assistant manager of the office and will also have charge of the special features. He has entire charge of the office during the absence of Mr. Bachmeyer. Mr. Langdon has been placed in charge of the department formerly managed by Mr. Smith. Miss Hilda Lissman, who has been taking care of the scheduling of the Paramount pictures, has been placed in charge of the detail work.

HERBERT J. DAISS, SALESMAN FOR PATHE, DEAD

Herbert J. Daiss, formerly of the General Film Company, and more recently of the Cleveland Pathé Exchange, Inc., selling organization, died September 1 at his home in Indiana Township, Pa., and was buried at Dorseyville, Saturday, September 4.

Mr. Daiss had many friends in the moving picture business throughout the Ohio territory and while connected with Pathé Exchange, Cleveland, established a reputation for himself as being a Class A salesman.

SAM A. ADLER MAKES FLYING TRIP TO NEW YORK

Sam A. Adler, of the Exclusive Feature Film Company, the Bromley building, Omaha, Neb., has just returned to that city from a flying trip to New York. His prime purpose was to negotiate the Iowa and Nebraska rights to "Just Out of College," produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

While here, Mr. Adler not only acquired that picture, but the rights for the same states to the "Minerva Courtney Impersonations of Chaplin" and "A Mother's Confession," the latest production of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc.

"If we only had more independent producers, we states-rights buyers would be in clover," remarked Mr. Adler. "The demand is there, on the part of exhibitors, for independent features, but there are really not enough pictures to meet it, of the kind we need."

On his way back to Omaha, Mr. Adler stopped in Chicago to make arrangements for handling "Sarah Bernhardt at Home," released by the Photoplay Productions Company, for Iowa and Nebraska.

LEWIS SUCCEEDS C. C. HITE IN CINCINNATI

C. C. Hite is retiring from the management of the Mutual Exchange in Cincinnati to take up the affairs of the new $5,000,000 Triangle Film Corporation in that territory.

Mr. Hite has proven one of the most successful and popular managers Cincinnati has known for some time. He has had a wide experience in the business, having opened seven different branches for the Mutual Film Corporation in various parts of the country, and his leaving the Mutual there is a matter of deep regret to the exhibitors using that program.

Lease has been secured on spacious offices at 215 East Fifth street.

Floyd Lewis, Hite's successor, took up his work Monday, August 23. Mr. Lewis is a film man of wide experience, having been identified closely with the business for the past twelve years in the capacity of theatre manager, special feature representative and exchange manager, and went to Cincinnati from Oklahoma City, where he was manager of the Mutual offices for nearly a year.

PRAISES ATTRACTIVENESS OF ST. LOUIS AIRDOMES

J. D. Baker, manager of the Fox Film exchange at 3632 Olive street, St. Louis, has taken advantage of the two weeks' visit of the special representative of the corporation, William Alexander, to make a trip in the territory supplied by the St. Louis office. Mr. Alexander is eulogistic in his admiration and praise of the many beautiful theatres and airdomes in St. Louis. The airdomes are especially attractive, he says, in comfort, equipment and artistic arrangement, and rival the outdoor theatres in the large cities of the East.

DENNISON MANAGES NEW DETROIT EXCHANGE FOR PARAMOUNT

The opening of a Detroit exchange by the Paramount Film Corporation at 278 East Jefferson avenue means that hereafter Michigan exhibitors will be supplied with Paramount pictures directly from the company instead of through the Casino Feature Film. In the current issue of the "Weekly Film News," John H. Kunsky, proprietor of the Casino Feature Film Company, announces that he has relinquished the state rights on Paramount pictures. D. Leo Dennison, who is in charge of the new Detroit exchange, was formerly located in Pittsburgh and New York, and has had a thorough experience in the film business.

The Detroit quarters occupy the entire second floor and one-half of the first floor of the two-story building at 278 Jefferson avenue, which has just been completed. It is of brick with a white tile front, and there are four large skylights on the second floor, thus affording plenty of daylight to work by.

GREATER NEW YORK FILM RENTAL OPENS PITTSBURGH BRANCH

The Greater New York Film Rental Company, William Fox, president, has opened its Pittsburgh branch office at 121 Fourth avenue, in offices adjoining the Fox Film Company's present suite. The offices are modern in every respect, and Ellis Cohen, of the New York office, is in Pittsburgh operating the branch at this time, but it is said will only be in charge until a competent man is found to operate the place.

The company is making a specialty of a rental service daily.

CLEVELAND FOX MANAGER VISITS PACIFIC COAST

Paul C. Mooney, manager of the Cleveland branch of the Fox Film Corporation, is in California. Cards received from him say that he is enjoying his vacation trip to the expositions. He will visit the film centers on the Pacific Coast.

FOX GENERAL MANAGER, VISITING DETROIT, TALKS OF MILLION-DOLLAR KELLERMANN PICTURE

W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, spent one day in Detroit last week. He talked for some time with a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS who caught him at the Fox branch in the Peter Smith building just as he was getting ready to leave for New York.

"How are things? They're fine," said Mr. Sheehan. "Our business is greatly increasing and getting bigger all the time. Of course, it should; we are doing bigger and greater things than a year ago and are spending a great deal more money to make our pictures better. All of our pictures are going well and doing a lot of business for exhibitors. In fact, our pitcures are more than mere pictures to fill an engagement; they actually get money. This we have proved and are proving every day to exhibitors, large and small, in all sections of the country. We are now working on a picture to cost a million dollars. It is being made in Central America, with Annette Kellermann in the stellar role. When completed we will have a film that will startle the world. It will be the greatest ever produced. Its first showing will be about Christmas time. Wiliam Fox will be the first man to have actually spent a million dollars in the production of a feature picture.

"And understand me, I mean a million and not a couple of hundred thousand dollars."

Paul Mooney, manager of the Fox office in Cleveland, came to Detroit to meet Mr. Sheehan, and together they went over matters pertaining to Ohio territory.

Mr. Sheehan announced that William Burnstein would continue in charge of the Detroit office.

FILM NEWS FROM FOREIGN PARTS

NEW THEATRES OPEN EVERY WEEK IN ENGLAND; TRENCH WARFARE SUBJECTS BANNED BY MAGISTRATE

Special to Motion Picture News

London, August 30.

THE news just received here of the sinking of the White Star liner "Arabic," has caused quite a shudder. I have not yet heard what arrangements have been made by film producing firms for the photographing of a topical of incidents appertaining to the disaster, but American renters may take it for granted that Pathé and Gaumont will, as on the occasion of the "Lusitania" catastrophe, vindicate traditions.

Both firms have camera men in close proximity to Queenstown, where the survivors were landed.

Pathé is releasing a number of films showing scenes of actual trench warfare. Despite the excellence of the numerous war films I have seen, over and over again, cinema managers have said, "I don't believe in featuring too strongly war films. People come to picture houses for amusement, and it is for us to give them a good wholesome entertainment, without recapitulating the horrors of the battlefield."

For the benefit of American manufacturers, I give a summary of an official document issued by the Liverpool magistrates on the subject. They say that no pictures should be shown which emphasize the sadness and suffering of the war, but on the other hand pictures which act as an incentive to recruiting, and stimulate loyalty, are pictures which are acceptable and desirable. Thus cinemas will assist "to preserve a healthy public tone at a time of great national crisis."

Trade is in a flourishing condition. New cinemas are opening every week, without affecting to any serious degree the business of the older established houses. Comedies treated in a novel way, and featuring a striking personality are in demand. A number of British firms are now specializing in this direction, particularly H. A. Browne & Company, who are handling the "Pimple" productions, which have had an extremely good run.

Although "Pimple" has enlisted, Messrs. Browne hold a large number of negatives featuring him, and a new film will be released every week for the next twelve months.

Forthcoming British productions are:

"By the Shortest of Heads" (Barker film). A wholesome drama dealing with a sporting theme, depicting a good horse race scene. The tense plot shows how an attempt to obtain a legacy of 10,000 pounds, which depends on the result of the race, was thwarted.

"The Bulldogs of the Trail" (Barker film). A melodrama teeming with incident. There is an element of the Far East in the play, and one scene shows how the heroine is saved from the fate of being thrown into a pit infested with venomous snakes.

"Married for Money" (Neptune film). A modern drama, dealing with a situation which frequently occurs at the present time. Showing how a woman blighted her career by preferring wealth and position before happiness.

"Pimple Has One" (H. A. Browne and Company). A 554-foot comedy of the inimitable Pimple. His adventures in quest of liquid refreshment is irresistible.

"Pimple's good turn." 825 feet. Pimple helps a would-be hero, with the usual disastrous results.

"Inspection of Canadian Troops by Sir Robert Borden at Shorncliffe." (Kineto. 390 feet.) This inspection was a great success and some very fine views of the Canadian troops are shown.

"What a Picnic" (Yorkshire Cine Co., 522 feet). A comedy demonstrating amusing antics of ants.

"A Bachelor's Babies" (Yorkshire Cine Co., 797 feet). A good original comedy, showing a gay young bachelor who masquerades as a female and a nurse to attain an heirship. His scheme is discovered and he is left with a sixpenny postal order.

"Have Some More Meat" (Yorkshire Cine Co., 512 feet). A supper table diversion and showing how a shortage of meat upset, in an amusing manner, the equanimity of a happy home.

"Codfish and Aloes" (Yorkshire Cine Co., 775 feet). Com. How a loving couple cured a father of tippling.

Fred Gronback.

Wright Sees Public Taste Pivoted on 4 Reels and Less

Kalem Official Receives Two Thousand Letters Approving His Views Expressed in Recent Interview—Changes Going Into Effect Will Raise Standard of Company's Weekly Program

"IT is the opinion of the average exhibitor that the program which consists of one, two, three and four reel subjects is the ideal service," declared William Wright, of Kalem, in a recent interview. "It has been my experience that he does not care for productions longer than four reels. Features running to five reels and over have invariably failed to justify the extra cost they entail."

"The surprising unanimity of sentiment expressed in the mass of letters with which the Kalem company has been recently deluged as a result of the publication of the interview is a revelation," comments Mr. Wright. "Almost two thousand letters have been received by the company, and in practically every instance the writer agrees with my views."

Thomas D. Goldberg, proprietor of the Goldberg theatre, one of the best houses in Baltimore, Md., wrote a letter to the Kalem company, which is typical of the others. Mr. Goldberg said:

"I read the remarks of your William Wright with great pleasure. As the proprietor of one of the best theatres in Baltimore, I wish to say that it seems to me as though Mr. Wright certainly knows and appreciates conditions.

"I feel confident from conversations with the leading exhibitors of this city that he is absolutely right when he tells you to put your efforts into the one, two, three and four reel subjects. Mr. Manufacturer, I, as one exhibitor, believe in the short program and am booked up with the General Film Company, which distibutes your products.

"Speaking for my patrons, I know from what they tell me that they are always pleased when a Kalem production is shown at my theatre."

Another of the letter writers was J. M. Lenney, who owns both the Grand and the Lenney Photoplay, representative of the best in motion picture theatres at Harrisburg, Pa. His letter, which follows, is of particular interest:

"I heartily agree with your Mr. Wright on the subject of long reels of so-called features. I study my audiences and know pretty well what they want. Few of them care for the many-reel subjects and, had I shown releases of this nature continually, I would have gone out of business long ago.

"I own both large houses in the best residential section and have used the whole output of the General Film Company since I opened them several years ago. As a whole, I find that the people prefer one and two-reel subjects. They want variety, and if I put on a long subject and only one or two single reels I invariably receive complaints on the score that I have shown but two or three pictures as the case may be.

"It may be very well for exhibitors located in the heart of the business sections to pay the unreasonable prices demanded for big features, but we who rely upon our night trade cannot—and I, for one, would not even think of trying it."

Changes about to go into effect will raise the Kalem weekly program of releases to what is undoubtedly the highest quality point ever achieved by that organization. One of the most important of these changes will be the release of "The Ventures of Marguerite," a series of one-reel dramas featuring Marguerite Courtot. This series will be issued on Fridays, commencing October 22, in place of the Alice Joyce re-issues and the alternating two-act dramas.

Another of the changes will be the issuance on Wednesdays of "Stingaree," a series of twelve two-act productions based upon the book of the same name, written by E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles," while still another will be the appearance of Helen Gibson in the stellar role of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series.

Equitable on Voyage Under Favorable Auspices

Headed by Feist and Spiegel, Who Interested the Banking House of Ladenberg, Thalman in the Company, Presents First Release, "Trilby," with Success

THE newest firm in the industry is the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, which came into actual being this week, with the presentation of their first release, "Trilby," at the Forty-Fourth Street theatre, New York City.

Considerable has been heard of Equitable—and much has been said of its proposed work, releases, stars and plays—but as yet the dominating figures in this concern have held themselves in the background.

Associated with Lewis J. Selznick, World Film head, in the actual charge of Equitable are Arthur S. Spiegel and Felix F. Feist.

Felix F. Feist, just thirty-two years of age, began public life as a lyric writer for his brother, Leo Feist. Several years ago he became interested in picture work, through a connection with Henry Brock in the Kinemacolor Company.

FELIX F. FEIST

Mr. Brock sent Feist to Chicago for two weeks to straighten out the office, which was in a demoralized condition, and he made good to such an extent that he was kept there two years. Some time ago, Feist took charge of affairs at the Celebrated Players office—to become affiliated in the production end of the film business. Then Feist cast his lot with Equitable.

Arthur S. Spiegel, president of Equitable, is likewise president and guiding genius of the Spiegel-May-Stern Company. The Spiegel-May-Stern Company, of Chicago, is the largest mail order concern in the world—doing an annual business exceeding ten millions of dollars and controlled at all times by this same Arthur Spiegel. Mr. Spiegel is two years younger than Feist and succeeded his father as president of the great chain of industries in the West that bear his name.

Mr. Spiegel induced Feist to join Equitable. Spiegel interested the Ladenberg, Thalman Company, the second largest banking house in America, to finance Equitable to the extent of five million dollars and it is Spiegel and Feist who, each day, interview stars and minor artists. Spiegel and Feist read books and plays. Spiegel and Feist go into the projection room and overlook the finished productions.

"We have signed William Courtleigh, Jr., Helen Ware, Robert Edeson, Muriel Ostriche, Florence Reed, William Courtenay, Francine Larrimore, Charles J. Ross, Thomas Wise, Katherine Osterman, Clara Whipple, Wilton Lackaye, Robert T. Haines, Clara Kimball Young (one picture only), and several others," said Mr. Spiegel.

Feist interposed: "And we have purchased outright the entire rights to the productions of one of the most prolific producers in New York, the picture rights to the works of five famous authors, two of the biggest novels of the past year and have options on the services of a great number of famous players, as yet unseen in motion pictures."

The staff equipment at Equitable is maintained at a minimum. There will be no great overhead expenses. Nothing costly that must of necessity be charged against the negative.

ALL THE BALBOAS JUST BUYING AUTOMOBILES

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, September 6.

E. D. Horkheimer, secretary and treasurer of the Balboa Company, arrived home recently after spending six weeks in New York and other points in the interest of the company.

The large new garage at the Balboa studio will soon need enlarging, if the present epidemic of car buying among the officers and players continues. The most recent additions are those of a Stutz for H. M. Horkheimer, and a big seven passenger Olds for Will M. Ritchey, scenario writer.

Now that all the buildings are practically completed at the Balboa studio, manager Horkheimer has engaged a landscape gardener to see that the studio grounds are made attractive.

ONE OF THE ATTRACTIVE PHOTOPLAYER GROUPS WHICH PATHE IS ISSUING IN CONNECTION WITH ITS GOLD ROOSTER PRODUCTIONS

Looking Ahead With The Producers

JACK RICHARDSON TO PLAY HEAVY LEADS FOR SECOND MUSTANG COMPANY, NEWLY FORMED

DISPATCHES from the Western studios of the Mustang Company announce the forming of a second company for the making of the two-reel releases of this brand for the Mutual's new $8,000,000 program.

The first of these releases will feature Helene Rosson, William Stowell and Jack Richardson. Richardson has been lined up with the Mustang for a long series of snappy Western plays. He will be cast for "the heavy," a role which eminently fits his handsome and impressive bearing and personality. The title and release date of this first of the Mustang Banner Features for the regular program are not yet to be announced. The next of the two-reelers of the Mustang brand will feature Anna Little and E. Forrest Taylor as leads and Mr. Richardson will appear in the cast in his favorite role of picturesque villainy. These photoplays carry stories strong with dramatic situations and will be in modern Western settings, with plenty of thrills and strong passages.

"Man Afraid of His Wardrobe" is the title of the first of the Mustang Star Features, three-reel productions for the Mutual's regular program. This is the first of the "Buck Parvin in the Movies" series, scenarios by Charles E. Van Loan, baseball fiction writer. The preliminaries of this production have already been begun at the Mustang studios under the general supervision of Mr. Van Loan. In this first three-reeler Art. Acord, famous cowboy actor, and Anna Little, the feminine star of the series, are featured. They have reported at the studio and the work has begun. It is announced that "Man Afraid of His Wardrobe" will be ready for release October 2.

The Mustang Film Company officials greet the acquisition of Jack Richardson for the first of the two-reel companies as a real stroke. For a number of years Mr. Richardson has been playing heavy leads with the "Flying A." He made his first appearance on the legitimate stage in Chicago in the "Royal Chef." Later he played in the Far West in Metropolitan and Orpheum stock companies. In 1909 he went into the pictures. Mr. Richardson's initial work with the American Film Manufacturing Company was in the production entitled "$5,000 Reward, Dead or Alive." Since that time he has been killed on the screen with great frequency. He will furnish the breath-taking stunts in the Mustang two-reelers.

SIDNEY DREW RIDES BLOODED STOCK IN "PLAYING DEAD"

When Sidney Drew was arranging for the filming of the picturization of Richard Harding Davis' story, "Playing Dead," produced by the Vitagraph Company under his direction, he required three mounts. As the character portrayed by Mr. Drew, Jimmie Blagwin, a young society, club and sporting man, it was necessary for him to use horses that looked the sleek, well-groomed property of a rich young man, who spent a good part of his time in the saddle, and he was successful in securing three blooded stock. Of the three seen in the picture, the one ridden by Mr. Drew will attract the most attention, being none other than the famous jumping horse "Heatherbloom," whose record jump is eight feet two inches. Mr. Drew secured the famous jumper through the offices of a friend.

"Playing Dead," which is a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, bearing the V-L-S-E trade mark, was picturized by Mrs. Sidney Drew, who played Jeanne Blagwin in the production, from the novelist's original story.

MARIE DORO RETURNS TO SCREEN FOR FAMOUS PLAYERS

Marie Doro, who, through her first appearance in motion pictures in the Famous Players Film Company's "The Morals of Marcus," endowed the screen with a new personality, again attains a screen triumph in that company's forthcoming five-part photo play, "The White Pearl," a fanciful romance of the Orient, by Edith Barnard Delano, to be released on the Paramount programme September 20.

As the American girl whom destiny transplants to far-off Japan and who later becomes a Geisha girl, Miss Doro's delicate beauty and captivating grace and attractiveness help her succeed in making a picture of charm and appeal. In the scene in which Miss Doro is rescued from the sea by the natives of the Japanese island upon which the story develops, opportunity is given Miss Doro for a wraithlike creation. Her garments and hair wet from the sea, Miss Doro is a veritable mist-sprite, a bit of drifting foam that has come to life.

MARIE DORO IN "THE WHITE PEARL" (Famous Players)

LUBIN GUARDING CAREFULLY NEW DRESSLER FEATURE

Since its completion, the new Marie Dressler feature, "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," that will be released by the V-L-S-E, September 20, has been carefully guarded by the Lubin Company.

The first view that will be had of Miss Dressler's new picture will be at a private showing arranged by Miss Dressler, to which have been invited many of New York's most prominent society people.

In "Tillie's Punctured Romance," Miss Dressler gave the motion picture art a screamingly funny comedy; but it is said that in "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" she has far outdone her previous screen effort.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD AND MAY ALLISON AS THEY APPEAR IN THE NEWEST MUTUAL MASTER-PICTURE

TWO PICTURESQUE SCENES FROM "HOUSE OF A THOUSAND SCANDALS"

"DISCIPLE OF NIETZSCHE" CALLED NEW CLASS OF FILM EFFORT

Edwin Thanhouser now comes out with the announcement that every three weeks will witness the release of a three-reel production under the trade name "Than-o-play." This again increases the output of the concern and it is formally stated that another week will see more additions made to the acting and producing staff.

The first "Than-o-play" will be a new class of film effort. The title of it is "A Disciple of Nietzsche." The story is by Philip Lonergan, of the regular Thanhouser scenario staff and it features Florence LaBadie, Lorraine Huling and Harris Gordon. That this is a timely subject will be readily recognized. The teachings of Nietzsche, the great German philosopher, have been assigned as the cause of the present war, but Mr. Lonergan has not entered into any issues of the great European conflict in developing the Nitezschian theories for photoplay adaptation. Instead, he has taken the theme of individual absolutism, as advanced by the great thinker. Nietzsche preached that the power of self must be supreme, that for the strong to aid the weak unnecessarily detracts from the strength of the powerful. This story revolves around the demonstration by a daughter to her own father that she is capable of a strength with which he did not credit her.

The "Than-o-play" will, it is said, carry an exceptional line of lithographs and will be released every three weeks. "A Disciple of Nietzsche" is scheduled for release on Saturday, September 25.

MOROSCO FILMING BLANCHE RING IN "THE YANKEE GIRL"

The musical comedy success in which Blanche Ring appeared for two seasons in Chicago and New York, "The Yankee Girl," is now being filmed by the Morosco Photoplay Company with the original stage star in the featured part. The musical comedy was by George V. Hobart, and this proved to be Miss Ring's greatest success. The adaptation for the screen was prepared by Elliott Clawson, and the cast includes Forrest Stanley, Howard Davies, Harry Fisher, Herbert Standing and Mary Ruby. Jack Clark, formerly with the Universal, is in charge of the production.

The scenes are laid in Central America and some very beautiful effects are being secured.

STORY OF WOMAN'S REVENGE TOLD IN LUBIN DRAMA

"The Red Virgin," a new Lubin drama in three acts, tells the story of the revenge of a woman whose mother has been wronged.

It is a story abounding in thrills and exciting incidents as well as scenic sensationalism.

In the cast are Helen Eddy, who plays the dual role of Rose, a sweet country girl, and Fay, her daughter, known as the Red Virgin; L. C. Shumway, Robert Gray, Melvin Mayo, George Routh and others.

METROPOLITAN OPERA DANCERS FOR "THE BALLET GIRL"

To make "The Ballet Girl," Director Smiley insisted upon having real dancers, and he went to the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, dancing school and secured thirty of the best dancers and brought them to the Peerless studio at Fort Lee, N. J., so that when the scenes were taken that called for real dancing there would be no makeshift.

"The Ballet Girl" tells a story of stage life. It is based on "Carnival," written by Compton Mackenzie. It had a very wide vogue several seasons ago. When it was originally staged, Grace George played the leading role and it is therefore appropriate that Alice Brady should be given the leading role in the film version.

MOLLIE KING, HOLBROOK BLINN, VIVIAN MARTIN AND ROBERT WARWICK TO SHINE FOR WORLD

THE October schedule for the World Film releases gives the selling force a group of features that contain a very high grade. The four are as follows:

October 3—Mollie King in "The Code of the Mountains." This is a story written by Charles Neville Buck, dealing with life in the Kentucky Mountains. Mollie King is a new star, heralded as another Mary Pickford.

MARGUERITE COURTOT (Kalem)

October 10—Holbrook Blinn in "The Family Cupboard" is the release. This play was a big New York stage success produced by William A. Brady and Frank Crane is making the picture.

October 17—The second Oscar Eagle picture will be released. This picture will bring forward Vivian Martin in a clever story called "The Little Mademoiselle."

October 24—Robert Warwick will appear in another picture made by Director Capellani. In this picture Mr. Warwick appears as a crook hero, with Director Capellani making the scenes. There will be many groups shown at the shrine of St. Anne de Beaupré, which is located near the old city of Quebec, Canada. A special trip was made to the shrine to take scenes there and Mr. Capellani spent three days there getting the settings he wanted.

PRESS AGENT'S ANTICS FORM PLOT OF MINA FARCE

"Booming Trixie," the MinA release of September 16, promises to be a side-splitter. "Booming Trixie" deals with the troubles of a press agent who has not been obtaining the proper amount of publicity for Trixie, a theatrical star. His antics, by which he finally gains his end, make one thousand feet of comical film.

"THE BROKEN COIN," UNIVERSAL SERIAL, TO BE EXTENDED

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, stars in the Universal's latest serial, "The Broken Coin," are conferring with Emerson Hough, author of the novelized version of the film and his literary adviser and broker, Seth Moyle, regarding the extension of the serial.

It was originally planned to confine the serial to fifteen reels, but the demand from exhibitors and exchangemen as well as the praise bestowed upon the serial by the general public induced the Universal to issue instructions from its New York offices to lengthen the production to twenty-two installments in all.

Emerson Hough hurried to the Coast where the work of fitting the final installments of the original fifteen-episode serial into the additional chapters was begun. Mr. Hough, Mr. Ford, Mr. Moyle and Miss Cunard went out to dinner every night for a week and the sole topic of discussion besides the hot weather was the additional chapters of "The Broken Coin."

PAULINE FREDERICK IN FLORIDA FOR "BELLA DONNA" UNDER FAMOUS PLAYERS' BANNER

DURING the early tour of "The Eternal City," exhibitors throughout the country requested the Famous Players for a series of Pauline Frederick screen impersonations, and her recent appearance in "Sold," in which she repeated her initial screen achievement, resulted in such a demand for more subjects with this fascinating star, that the Famous Players placed her under permanent contract.

Miss Frederick and a strong supporting company, under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, who produced "The Eternal City" in Rome, left last week for Florida, for the purpose of obtaining the exterior scenes for Robert Hichens' novel and play, "Bella Donna," in which Mme. Nazimova won her first American triumph. In the strongly dramatic role of "Bella Donna," Miss Frederick should find ideal screen expression for her emotional talent.

With the thrilling story itself, and the exotic atmosphere of the desert, "Bella Donna" promises much that is valuable as a photoplay. Through this medium, together with a pretentious film adaptation of "Zaza," in which she will also be presented, Miss Frederick should unquestionably maintain the distinction she has won through her portrayal of Donna Roma in "The Eternal City."

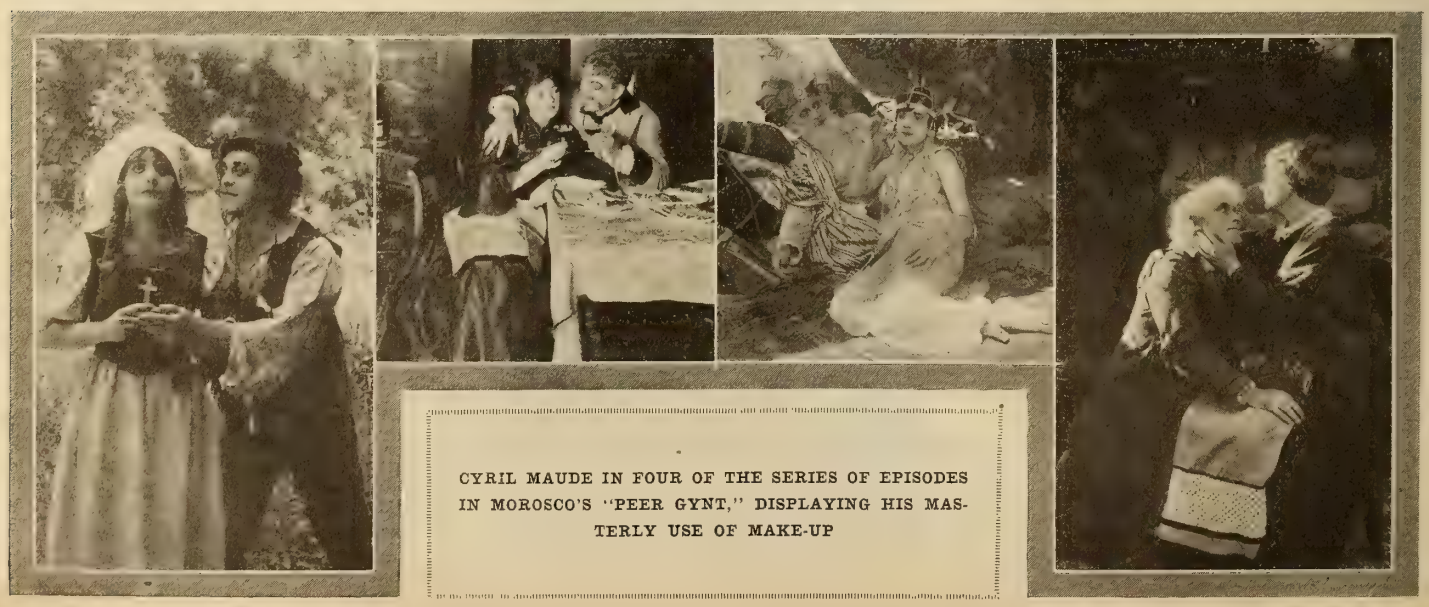
"I was prouder of my screen impersonation of Donna Roma in 'The Eternal City' than I was of my two most successful stage creations, Potiphar's wife in 'Joseph and His Brethren' and in the title role of 'Innocent,'" said Pauline Frederick in a recent interview. "Ten and twenty and even more years from now, people can see me in 'The Eternal City,' and not merely read of my appearance in that play —if, indeed, the flesh-and-blood Pauline Frederick attained even this distinction.

"Mr. Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, explained when he requested me to forsake the legitimate stage indefinitely, that the demand for my continued appearance on the screen had become so great after the first tour of 'The Eternal City,' it was my duty to the public to give all my time to motion pictures.

"I wish to go clearly on record that I did not accept the Famous Players' offer as a duty to the public, but emphatically as one to myself, for I recognize in the silent drama the most comprehensive method for artistic expression ever discovered or devised.

"The motion picture today is the most illimitable form of art that the world has ever known. I have heard stage stars boast of having played, in the course of many years, before half a million people.

PAULINE FREDERICK



Contrast this petty figure, obtained only after a score of years of constant activity, to the screen player's possession of an audience of thirty-five million a week in the United States alone. It was principally for these reasons that I have said good-bye to the oral stage and joined the stellar forces of the Famous Players."

CYRIL MAUDE IN FOUR OF THE SERIES OF EPISODES IN MOROSCO'S "PEER GYNT," DISPLAYING HIS MASTERLY USE OF MAKE-UP

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Los Angeles, Sept. 6.

MESSRS. HORKHEIMER of the Balboa have been advised by the officers of Pathé Exchanges, Inc., that the Balboa subject in five reels entitled "The Shrine of Happiness" is to be made into a Gold Rooster brand subject, and has been sent to Paris where all prints will be hand colored. The story and scenario for this was written by B. F. Whitcomb, of the Balboa scenario staff, and the subject was produced by Bert Bracken. The principals of the cast are Jackie Saunders, William Conklin and Paul Gilmore. The plot is that of the old trinity wherein both love the girl and try to sacrifice because of their friendship for each other.

Cuneo Narrowly Escapes Death

A juvenile comedy company has been organized by the L-Ko, which will produce one and two-reel subjects under the direction of Victor Hermann. Little Billie Jacobs and Olive Johnson, who played leads in the Sterling brand juvenile pictures, have been engaged, together with a number of other little tots. Henry Pathé Lehrmann is now producing a three-reel subject which features Charles Winnegar, who appears as an artist, the painter of more or less artistic September Morns. The extra list for this picture includes a bevy of pretty chorus girls who pose. Craig Hutchinson, formerly scenario editor for the Keystone and lately engaged in that capacity with the L-Ko, has been given a company and is making his first picture with Hank Mann, Peggy Pierce and Dan Russell. This will be of one reel.

Lester Cuneo, of Quality Pictures, narrowly escaped death this week when his automobile was hit by a traction car. Fortunately the Quality actor was not injured, but the machine he was driving is a total wreck. Francis X. Bushman arrived in Los Angeles from the East the first part of this week, accompanied by E. H. Calvert, former Essanay director, who has been engaged for that work by Mr. Bushman, and Beverly Bayne, also late of Essanay, where she played opposite Mr. Bushman in many pictures, has been engaged. It is understood that Miss Bayne will play leads opposite Mr. Bushman in future Quality subjects which will be made under the direction of Mr. Calvert.

The most recent organization of the film colony is the "Don't Rock the Boat Club," composed of temperamental and unduly up-stagish directors, assistants and other important hirelings who do not appreciate the power of the press. Nomination for membership can be made only by publicity men or trade paper representatives. Two directors have been elected charter members. A number of nominations have been made, and election will be held in the near future. It is understood that no Los Angeles typewriter can spell the names of the "Don't Rockers" once they are elected.

The Lasky "Red Mirage" company, the cast of which includes Lou Tellegen, Dorothy Davenport, Billie Elmer, Tom Forman, Theodore Roberts and others, together with two carloads of horses and equipment, went to Brawley, Cal., the first of the week to film desert scenes representing Algeria. The temperature at Brawley for the past few days has been hovering around the one hundred and ten to one hundred and fifteen mark in the shade, and inasmuch as the pictures are to be made out on the sands where there is no shade, the players expect a real hot time. George Melford is in charge of direction.

Lasky Filming "The Chorus Lady"

Captain R. A. Ford, who heretofore has been in charge of the field technical work, library and costuming of the Lasky studio, has been given the additional duties of managing the employment department, succeeding Mrs. Ethel Powell, who has been with the company since shortly after its organization. There is theatrical atmosphere a plenty at the Lasky studio because of the filming of an adaptation of the stage success "The Chorus Lady." Cleo Ridgeley is playing the name part, and Marjorie Daw, the protègé of Geraldine Farrar, has a very important part in this.

The mere matter of the size of a nose forms the plot for the three-reel H. C. Matthews-Universal comedy fairy story picture "Nosey Land." There every one has a proboscis of five or six inches in length with the exception of the scandal monger, and when the plotter for the throne forces the witch to visit the stork's nest and reduce the size of the nose of the heir to the throne before the child is delivered to the king, the troubles of the monarch begin. For many years they continue and finally are straightened out when the prince of a neighboring principality finds the small-nosed princess who has been abandoned and left in the jungle with wild animals, where she grows to womanhood with the beasts as her only companions. The prince and his army, and the real princess and her army of animals drive the long-nosed people out and take possession of the throne. Elsie Albert appears as the princess, John Cook and Seymour Hastings as the heavies, C. Normand Hammond, the king, and William Dale, the prince.

Dave Smith is again directing at the Vitagraph studio filming a one-reel comedy entitled "Nobody Home." Those appearing in this are the three Georges—Conkle, Holt and Stanley—Ann Shafer and Jack Mower. The story is based on the opinion of people of their neighbors, and brings out the fact that too many fingers in the pie are disastrous to all concerned. Webster Campbell, who has been playing leads in the Beauty brand of the American Film Company released on the Mutual program, has signed with the Vitagraph Company, and began work there the first of this week. Mr. Campbell will play leads for Director R. S. Sturgeon.

Work Progresses on Vitagraph Studio

Work on the new Vitagraph studio on the nine-acre plot on Prospect and Talmadge streets, Hollywood, is progressing very satisfactorily under the direction of Managing Director R. S. Sturgeon and Studio Manager W. E. Smith. The stage will be about one hundred and twenty-five by two hundred feet, and the property rooms and scene docks of proportionate size. The company expects to be working in the new studio within a month.

H. M. Horkheimer spent the past week in San Francisco, returning here before departing for New York City on his fall business trip. He took with him to the East a number of recently completed multiple-reel subjects which were made for Pathé Exchanges, Inc.

A Balboa company producing a three-reel out-of-door picture, featuring Jackie Saunders and Louis J. Cody, supported by Madeline Pardee, spent the past week on Mount Baldy, north of Los Angeles. The subject is being produced under the direction of Bertram Bracken.

The filming of "The Message from Reno," adapted from the stage play of the same name, has been completed in five reels. Ruth Roland and Andrew Arbuckle appear in the principal parts of this subject, which will be notable because of the numerous big interior sets. The direction is by Sherwood Macdonald, and William Beckway, cameraman, has a number of new features which he introduced in this.

Essanay Completing Chaplin Subject

At the Essanay studio the coming release "Shanghaied" is hailed as Chaplin's best picture. This has not been totally completed, a number of scenes being needed, which will be made while en route to San Francisco on one of the big steamers this week. This is spoken of as a comedy-melodrama with laughs and thrills intermingling. Charley, as assistant cook, plays ball with the sailors using a leg of mutton and potatoes. It was necessary to retake this scene a great many times before they could get the desired results. While en route to San Francisco the company will spend a day on a rocky uninhabited island in the vicinity of Santa Barbara.

"The Girl of the Dance Hall" is a two-reel subject, featuring Brownie Vernon, who plays the name part, being produced by Leon Kent for Universal. The story is of a Western nature, and some exceptional big early-day Western dance hall scenes will be used. Later the scenes are in a city where the girl weds the chum of the man who aided her to escape from the dance hall. Supporting Miss Vernon will be Malcolm Blevins, late of the Morosco Photoplay Company; E. P. Evers, formerly with the Biograph, and Ray Hanford. The scenario is by Harvey Gates.

Owing to the illness of Hobart Bosworth, now in a local hospital, the members of the company are producing a two-reel subject entitled "Little Maverick" under the direction of Norval McGregor. The story and scenario is written by Olga Clark. It is a story of a minister adopting a foundling who in girlhood shows an inclination toward music, and becomes more or less of a celebrity. She is wedded to a city man, but her youthful experiences in the simple life causes him to soon lose interest in her. The actions of the husband are closely watched by the playmate and lifelong friend of the woman, and when she learns her husband is untrue abandons him. The former playmate then, in a very melodramatic manner, aids in bringing the husband and wife together again for the sake of their child. Jane Novak plays the name part, supported by Frank Newbert, Ronald Bradbury, Frank MacQuarrie, Bill Cauffield and Anna Lehr.

Comedy Drama for Crosman

The Henrietta Crosman Universal Broadway feature picture being produced, first known as "The Chaperone," has now been titled "The Faddist." It is a comedy-drama wherein a wealthy widow attempts to induce friends to aid the poor of a city district, and when she invites the poor to a reception at which the engagement of her daughter is to be announced, her friends are absent. Later her lawyer absconds with the funds she has raised, but her friends in the slums remain true. The youth who is to marry her daughter, it is learned, is the son of a woman hater because the youth's mother had deserted him. The father of the boy tries to break off the match, but the girl's mother is successful in bringing about the marriage, and finally induces the woman hater to wed her.

The Nestor comedies of the week are "An Heiress for Two" with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Elsie Greeson, who with this picture ends her engagement with the Universal to accept a part in a vaudeville act with Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven. The Nestorites producing comedies for the Universal under the general direction of Al. E. Christie had a dandy little celebration the early part of this week when they christened the new stage which was built especially for the two companies, and will be used exclusively by them. The event was made a very pleasant one, and took place just before Mr. Christie was ready to film the first scenes on the new stage, in which a set requiring the entire floor space one hundred by one hundred and twenty-five feet was used. Participating in the event was Mr. Christie, who had charge of all arrangements of details, and who was aided by Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Horace Davies and Neil Burns, and others of the two companies.

Alexander Weds Ann Kroman

Edward Alexander, director and leading man of the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company producing for the Associated program, and Ann Kroman, leading woman of the company, were married August 24 at the English Lutheran Church at Santa Barbara, and spent their honeymoon in Los Angeles, where they were greeted and entertained by their many friends of the film colony.

DeWolf Hopper arrived in Los Angeles Saturday and made his appearance at the Griffith studio, where he was personally greeted by D. W. Griffith, shown over the grounds and introduced to all the leading players. It has not been definitely decided what will be the first production of Mr. Hopper, but there are three already selected, and it will be one of these. It is very probable he will play the part of Mr. Pickwick in the film version of Dickens, or Micawber in "David Copperfield," or the name part in "Don Quixote" by Cervantes. Fay Tincher has been selected to play opposite Mr. Hopper in productions, and the direction will be in charge of Edward Dillon, who produces the Komic brands.

Orrin Johnson, who has been with the NYMP organization for the past two months, is now at the Griffith studio. It has not been definitely decided what picture Mr. Johnson will first appear in for the Fine Arts films, but it is very probable that he and Paul Gilmore will be co-starred in a coming feature.

Griffith Building Mammoth Sets

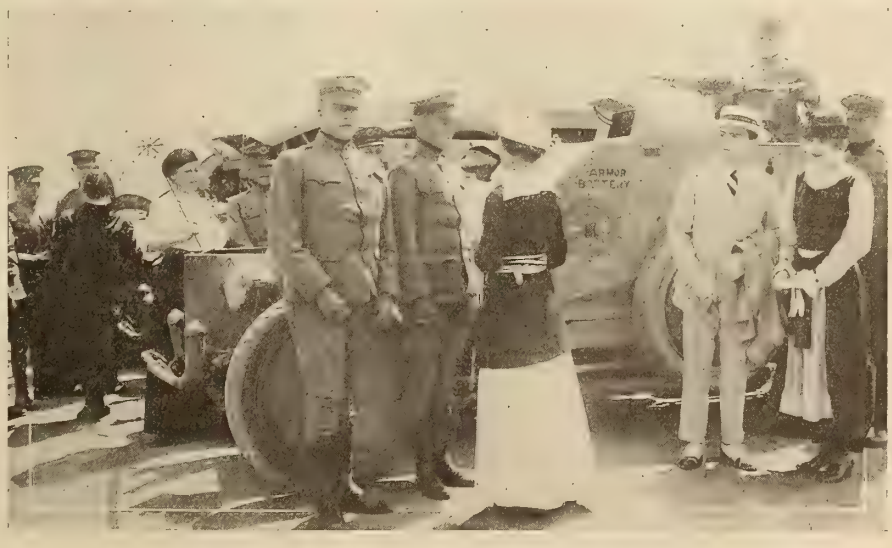
An eight-acre plot of ground adjoining the Griffith studio has been leased and mammoth sets are now being constructed. These are for productions being made under the direction of D. W. Griffith, but at this writing no announcement has been made as to the titles or the nature of the subjects. Rozsika Dolly, who was featured in "The Lily and the Rose," produced under the direction of Paul Powell, and which will in all probability be the second of the Fine Arts films released on the Triangle program, has finished her engagement and departed for New York this week. Before she left, the leading women of the Griffith studio and others of filmdom gave a number of very pleasant social events, including a dinner by Mary Alden, and a theatre party by Teddy Sampson.

At the Griffith studio it is announced that "The Lamb," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, will be the first release of the Fine Arts films on the Triangle program, and "The Lily and the Rose" the second, "Martyrs of the Alamo" third week, and "Old Heidelberg" or "The Scarlet Band" the fourth release. Jack O'Brien and a company of Griffith players, including John Emerson, who is being featured, were at San Diego the past week where they made scenes for "The Scarlet Band," in which a number of government submarines stationed at San Diego harbor were used. Mr. Emerson, who is the author of this scenario, is now engaged in novelizing the same, and it will be ready for the publishers in the next few weeks.

Al Jennings to Appear in "Jordan"

Al Jennings, famous former bank and train robber, whose experiences were chronicled in the "Saturday Evening Post," and who later came back and was more or less successful in politics in his own state, Oklahoma, has been engaged by Frank E. Wood, manager of production at the Griffith studio, to take part in and aid in the direction of the bank and train robbery scenes in the film version of the Sir Gilbert Parker story, "Jordan Is a Hard Road," which chronicles the experiences of the McManns. Tod Browning, who suffered a badly broken leg as the result of the accident in which Elmer Booth, former Komic player, lost his life, is now able to be back at the Griffith studio, where he has been added to the scenario department.

Raymond Wells is a new member of the Griffith studio having come to the Coast from Minneapolis, where he was leading man with Florence Stone and the Bainbridge players. He will make his screen debut in an early Triangle release. Other new players on the Griffith lot are: Robert Anderson, Viola Barry, Fred J. Butler, Gladys Fields, Francis MacDonald, Loyola O'Connor, Monroe Salisbury, Clyde E. Hopkins and Harry Ham.



Jane Grey is now at the Griffith studio, and scenes for her first picture are being rehearsed. The title for this has been selected. The scenes are laid in New England and old Mexico, with down East characters. The subject is a melodrama. With Miss Grey will appear in this subject the juvenile players, including Carmen DeRue, aged eight; George Stone, five, and Violet Radcliffe, seven. The picture will be produced under the direction of C. M. and S. A. Franklin from a scenario arranged by Bernard McConville.

City Chartered for "Double Trouble"

The City of Santa Ana, Cal., with a population of fifteen thousand has been chartered for use in scenes for the Griffith-Douglas Fairbanks second subject, "Double Trouble," the mayor having given Director William Christie Cabanne the key to the city and assuring him of the use of the fire department, police, municipal band, and other city organizations.

Helen Holmes, of the Kalem "Hazards of Helen" series, has been engaged by the Universal to play in the company directed by J. P. McGowan and began work there this week. Helen Gibson, winner of the woman's horseback championship Oregon round-up, has been engaged to succeed Miss Holmes in the "Helen" series. She is considered the cleverest of women riders. Other members of the "Hazards of Helen" company are: Robyn Adair, Franklyn Hall, Clarence Burton and James Davis director.

"THE MAN AND THE TEST," A COMING GRIFFITH MILITARY SUBJECT

(At Right) DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS AND SEENA OWEN

Lee Hill, who played leads in many of the Crown City Company films, has been engaged by the Chaplin-Essanay Company as assistant to Director General Jesse J. Robbins. The Essanay studio is being equipped with a new platform stage which will be used in conjunction with the present large one of this studio.

Frank Keenan, who did one picture at the NYMP studio, "The Coward," which will be the first release from that studio on the Triangle program, and who has since been with the Universal, has now made a long term contract for appearance in NYMP productions and began work there this week. The scenario for the second Keenan production is now being prepared by J. G. Hawks, and will be of the nature of a military play. Some costly sets are now being built for this photoplay, one being the erection of the capitol building, ruler's palace, and park and street scenes of the capitol square of an imaginary nation. These are on the plateau at the big NYMP ranch, and will require eleven carloads of lumber. Reginald Barker will be in charge of this photoplay.

N. Y. M. P. Engages Veteran Actor

William H. Thompson, aged seventy years, well-known character actor, and a personal friend of Thomas H. Ince because of Thompson's directing his present employer when Ince made his first appearance on the legitimate stage, has been engaged to appear in NYMP subjects, and will first be cast in the Billie Burke picture. Miss Burke, according to telegram, has been delayed in her departure for the Coast because of the modiste being unable to complete the gowns necessary for this production. She will probably arrive in Los Angeles about the latter part of the second week in September.

Normand Hackett, leading man of the younger generation of the legitimate stage players, has been engaged to play leading parts by Thomas H. Ince at the NYMP studio, and it is arranged that he shall remain at the studio here.

Work was taken up this week on two new productions at the NYMP studio. One is a comedy-drama with Bessie Barriscale and Bruce McRae, and the second features Mary Boland and Willard Mack. This will be Mr. McRae's first appearance in the NYMP brand subjects as well as that of Miss Boland. The scenarios in both instances were specially written around the principal players. Scott Sidney has been selected to produce the Barriscale-McRae picture, and Walter Edwards, the Boland-Mack subject. For the latter a company of players will go to Grand Canyon and spend some time there securing exterior scenes, the photoplay being of a semi-Western character with scenes laid in Arizona.

Fight Scene Too Realistic

William S. Hart and House Peters have put in several weeks training for a big fight scene which was staged between the two at the NYMP studio last week for "Between Men." As the result both men are badly beaten up and Hart has a bad scalp wound inflicted when Peters broke a large vase made of resin over his head. The prop vase was made much heavier than expected, and the blow put the exponent of Western drama out for a few minutes and there was no need of a count. It was a hand to hand battle in which the men were directed by Thomas H. Ince. The scene lasted for eleven minutes and there were four cameras on the job.

A new department has been added to the NYMP studio for the purpose of preparing oil paintings, sketches and drawings to be used in photoplays. Clyde Tracy is at the head of this, and associated with him are Miss Lillian Draine, Los Angeles portrait painter and protégé of George Grey Bernard, and Miss Kathrine Davidson, whose work at San Diego Exposition has caused a great deal of favorable comment.

The recently purchased electric lighting and power equipment has been installed at the NYMP plant together with a pumping station operated by this plant. The new water system will make it possible to pump from the Pacific Ocean to any part of the studio. In and about the plant are twenty-five different nozzles and as many hose attachments, and the management now feels that they are well prepared to extinguish any fire which might start.

Life of Pearl Hunters Shown

"The Black Pearl" is a two-reel subject, with scenes laid along the Coast showing the life of pearl hunters. The partners separate, one going to the city. The one who remains at the Coast is fortunate in finding a very valuable specimen. The news of his good fortune reaches the city through the press, with the result that an adventuress induces the former partner of the fortunate man to attempt to secure the pearl for her. The manner in which this is accomplished brings about a tragedy. Herbert Rawlinson, Barney Furey, Louella Maxine and Louise Hamilton appear in the cast, and William Worthington is directing.

The entire cast for the George Fawcett, Broadway star Universal feature "The Frame Up" has been selected and besides Mr. Fawcett includes the following: Maude George, Harry Carter, Albert MacQuarrie, Olive Golden and Lule Warrenton. Otis Turner is directing the production.

Bushman Working in New Film

Number nine of the "Lady Baffles and Detective Duck" Joker series is entitled "When the Wets Went Dry." It is a travesty on the temperance question, in which there will be a great deal of trick photography. The usual Joker cast, including Gail Henry, Max Asher, William Franey and Lillian Peacock, appears. Cleo Madison is being featured in the two-reel subject "A Lass and Alack," being produced by Joseph de Grasse. This depicts the life of the hard toiling wife of a fisherman and shows her longing for the pleasures enjoyed by the few. Supporting Miss Madison will be Lon Chaney, Arthur Shirley and Margaret Whistler. The scenario is by Ida Mae Park.

With his arrival at the Coast studio, Francis X. Bushman has resumed the filming of the remainder of "Pennington's Choice," the five-reel Canadian Northwestern story, in which Mr. Bushman will box ex-champion Jim Jeffries. Mabel Normand, the Keystone girl, who owns several medals for long distance swimming, added another trophy to her list during the past week when she defeated twenty-five contestants in a five-mile race at Santa Monica. Plans are being prepared for the enlargement of the administration building at the Keystone studio. Mack Sennett has decided that the scenario department needs additional space, and the office force is badly crowded. The enlargement will consist of an additional suite of offices.

AT SAN DIEGO AND ABOUT THERE

By ALLEN H. WRIGHT

Wonderful progress is being made in the completion of the Lubin studio at Coronado, and the fact that the carpenters and painters have not finished their work is not deterring Capt. Melville from going ahead with the filming of pictures. When the last touch is given the plant it will be one of the best equipped in every way on the Pacific coast.

B. C. Hayward, for some time with the Reliance-Majestic-Mutual people, has taken a position as cameraman with the Lubins. He has had many years of experience as a newspaper photographer on Los Angeles papers besides his motion picture work. L. C. Shumway severs his connection with Capt. Melville's corps this week and expects to sign up with one of the big companies around Los Angeles. Miss Violet McMillan, who used to be known as "The Cinderella of Vaudeville," and who has been playing leads with Thomas Ince and the Universal company, has joined the force at the Lubin studio. Mrs. Leola McLean has closed her engagement with the Lubins and returned to Los Angeles.

Turkish Story a Lubin Subject

This week the Lubin company will start the filming of a three-reel play, "The Power of Selim Bey," the Turkish story in which the U. S. S. Colorado, now in port, is to play a part. Roy Davidge, formerly with the Norbig company, at Los Angeles, has been engaged as superintendent of the laboratory at the Lubin studio. The exposition authorities have designated September 25 as 'Lubin Day," on which occasion Sigmund Lubin, "the father of the moving picture industry," is to be the guest of honor.

"The Sacred Bracelet," a play with a Filipino setting, was filmed the past week. It is the story of a Pilipino, who, in his poverty, stole a bracelet from the wrist of the figure of the Virgin in a chapel, but afterwards returns it and is forgiven by the priest. The old San Diego Mission, with its adobe ruins, was used in some of the scenes. The marine camp at the exposition grounds also appears in the filming.

BETTER-THAN-THOU MORAL UPLIFTERS FAIL TO CHECK "HYPOCRITES" SHOWING IN LEXINGTON, KY.

IN spite of the ruling of the city commissioners of Lexington, Ky., that "Hypocrites" would not be allowed to be exhibited in Lexington, it was put on recently at the Colonial theatre and the police made no effort to stop the show, although Commissioner of Finance Pulliam urged that the order of the commissioners be enforced.

Mayor Cassidy and Commissioner of Public Safety Hunt were in Cincinnati attending the Fire Chiefs' Convention, and Chief of Police Regan, declaring that he had no instructions from his superior to close the show, declined to interfere. A committee from the Woman's Club protested to the commissioners against the presentation of the picture, but no official action was taken.

The management of the Colonial had carried extensive advertisements in the Lexington papers, saying: "We are showing this picture in spite of the refusal of the board of commissioners to allow us to do so because, after hearing the views of the cities where it has been shown, we honestly think that the picture, though involving the use of a figure of an undraped woman, is so artistically done and carries such a strong moral lesson that after the commissioners see it, instead of condemning it, they will place their stamp of approval upon it."

A formal invitation to view the film was extended to the commissioners, but was not accepted, and the picture was put on at 10 o'clock, Friday morning, and showed to packed houses all day.

The action of the city commissioners in forbidding the exhibition of "Hypocrites" was taken after Mayor Cassidy wrote to the mayors of Louisville, Cincinnati and St. Joseph, Mo., where the picture was recently shown, to get expressions from these officials as to the character of the film.

The mayor of Louisville wrote that there was no objection to and no protest against the picture in Louisville, where it was shown for several days, but the reports from Cincinnati and St. Joseph were not so favorable. The mayor of Cincinnati said that the picture had not been shown in that city and a letter from the Ohio Board of Censorship stated that the film had been "carefully scanned, reviewed and pronounced harmful."

In St. Joseph, the picture was condemned by members of the Federation of Woman's Clubs, although the president of that organization had given her personal indorsement of it.

The committee from the Lexington Woman's Club, which appeared before the commissioners to protest, made a plea for a local board of censorship to view and pass upon all motion pictures to be shown in Lexington. City Solicitor James G. Denny expressed doubt of the authority of the commissioners to take such action as the appointment of a censorship board.

Mr. Denny said that it was the duty of the police to stop every objectionable theatrical production offered the citizens, that there was an ordinance at the present time giving the police that power, and that it was the duty of the police to be acquainted with the laws of the city. Chief of Police Regan declared: "I am not the keeper of public morals. It is not for me to say whether a picture is moral or immoral."

The general feeling in Lexington is that the objectors to the picture have succeeded only in raising a tempest in a teapot, and it is probable that no action will be taken against the theatre management for exhibiting the film, if indeed there is any legal action which can be taken.

ST. LOUIS EXHIBITORS FIGHT LEGAL EFFORTS TO STOP SHOWING OF "NATION"

THE "Birth of a Nation" was presented to an overwhelming audience at the Olympic theatre, Broadway and Walnut streets, St. Louis, on Sunday, August 29. As has been the case in other cities where the negro population numbers into the thousands, a delegation of prominent colored citizens appealed to the mayor to have the film stopped. A suit was brought by Prosecuting Attorney Howard Sidener, Associate City Counselor Charles B. Davis, and W. R. Hill, a negro associate counselor. A temporary injunction was granted to the exhibitors, to prevent the police from interfering with the showing of the feature, allowing the first presentation to be put on as advertised. Judge Karl Kimmel, who issued the injunction, Chief Young, head of the police department, and the "morality squad," were all present at the first performance, and the next day another injunction was granted up to September 7. All the newspapers gave the film conspicuous notices and reviews, and declared that if the feature was suppressed in St. Louis, the censors might as well go to the schools and cut out the pages of history. The Olympic has had excellent patronage during the first week's showing, even though the prices range from $2 down to 50 cents for night performances, and from $1 to 25 cents for matinees, which is an unusual price to pay to see a moving picture.

The following statement was issued by Prosecutor Sidener: "The character of the film production, known as the 'Birth of a Nation,' is, I find, after careful examination and investigation, calculated to incite disturbances of the peace, and does not in any degree represent the true character of the negro race of today. My function as a public official is distinctly that of a peace officer. St. Louis has a great negro citizenry, which is law-abiding. Delegations of intelligent negroes have waited upon my office and protested the presentation of the film. Delegations of white citizens have also done the same, notably a committee representing the Civic League. Added to the protests of these representatives of both races in the community is a personal investigation I have made of the character of the film. I am convinced that it is in the interest of public peace and welfare to prohibit the production."

LEO FRANK FILMS SUPPRESSED IN BOSTON

The Leo Frank films have been suppressed in Boston. Mayor Curley has a standing order that no films shall be shown in Boston houses which have not been approved by the National Board of Censorship. It may be remembered that the mayor himself is a member of the censorship triumvirate formed as a result of the crusade of the negroes against "The Birth of a Nation." Acting on this general order, and knowing that the films had not been passed by the national board, Municipal Theatrical Censor John Casey ordered the Frank pictures excluded from an East Boston house. They have not been attempted anywhere in the city since.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, sounds a popular appeal when he asks other motion picture companies not to dangle the bait of "more pay, more pay" before the eyes of his hired help, actors, actresses, and especially directors, and so induce them to break faith with the Universal and jump their contracts.

This appeal is perhaps one of the most encouraging signs of the times. In the past, until very recently, contracts have been straw in the motion picture business and breaches of business faith have apparently had no deterring effect on the offender's progress.

Every dog-gone form of contract, from that of the actors and directors up to and including the contract between the exchanges and the theatres, has been broken repeatedly and with impunity. In fact, to break a contract became tantamount to a statement that one's services were so greatly in demand that contract-breaking was justifiable and rather pleasant if anything.

There is no use going over President Laemmle's ground twice and noting again that a contract-breaker is an ingrate as well as dishonest; this same applies to all contracts, whether written or verbal.

But when the contracts with the artists are under discussion let's not forget the contracts which are broken in another section of the field—the contracts between the exchanges and the exhibitors.

A few weeks ago, when material was being gathered for the "Weak Spots in a Strong Business" series of interviews in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, an exhibitor in the Middle West, of his own volition, sent in an article on what he considered the weakest spot in the business.

His complaint was that many exchanges were going after all the business regardless of the ethics of the matter, with the result that no theatre could be sure that its supply of pictures would not be cut off any day.

The writer said that a representative from one exchange would sign up the Bazink theatre on Monday. Then Tuesday the same exchange would send a man to the Bazunk theatre across the street, soliciting business. If the second theatre would pay more for service than the first, it would get the service and the contract with the first would be abrogated on some pretext.

It is all too easy to believe that this condition of affairs obtains in many, many cities and towns in this country. The motion picture business is an industry which has succeeded in spite of its business tactics, not because of them.

That is possible all right. For a case of an amusement succeeding in spite of policies, look at the vaudeville shows of the old days. Then vaudeville was a low form of entertainment with the double entendre jest predominant. Vaudeville magnates and theatre owners thought vaudeville succeeded because it was "smutty." Then B. F. Keith came along, put on clean vaudeville, with the result that vaudeville is a strong, clean factor in the amusement and far more successful than of old.

Just so the motion picture business has prospered in spite of its ways, not because of them. And the sooner these ways are purified the sooner every contract from that between the manufacturer and his producing staff down to that between the exchange man and the exhibitor, is religiously adhered to, the sooner the motion picture business will assume the business stability to which its bulk entitles it and command the respect it deserves.

JOE BRANDT IN THE ROLE OF A FISHERMAN

Here in the middle foreground you see Joe Brandt, the Universal's general manager, off on a holiday. Joe has a nice white hat, but as far as he is concerned nothing is biting but the mosquitoes. However, a holiday is a holiday and they come all too infrequently in this twenty-four-hour-a-day business.

The week's most important change with the scenario writers lies in the removal of Anthony P. (Tony) Kelly from New York to Philadelphia, where he will write for Lubin. Kelly is one of the few able writers of original plots and he certainly knows the camera and technique. His latest is "The Soul of Woman," a five-part Metro feature with Emily Stevens. "Body and Soul," with Florence Rockwell, is coming.

In addition Kelly writes for the speaking stage. Cohan and Harris will soon present a three-act farce, "Safety First," which he wrote in collaboration with Harry Mainhall, and "The White Swan," a playlet, has been accepted by Nazimova for big time vaudeville.

Now that he will have a free hand it is very safe to assume that he will make them all sit up and beg.

Eddie Roskam is the subject of a manifolded notice which says Eddie is "the king of film editors." Take 'em off, Eddie; we know you. Take 'em off, or we'll send for Bert Starkey.

Edward R. Phillips, one of the original members of the Vitagraph stock company, and one of the best known of screen players, died Sunday, August 29, of heart trouble, leaving a widow and two children. Mr. Phillips brought the late John Bunny into the moving picture business. He was a director for Vitagraph when the only other directors were Charles Kent, the late William V. Ranous and Van Dyke Brooke. Two years ago he retired because of ill health, but came back again and was playing light parts up to shortly before his death.

The Selig Polyscope Company is in receipt of a letter from London addressed to the Selig Periscope Company. Submarine war must have gone to somebody's head.

The New York "Evening Mail" is going after motion picture business in earnest and will issue a special section each week. This feature, if successful, will be syndicated all over the country. Messrs. Semler and Havens leave the "Morning Telegraph" to handle it. They are succeeded by Herbert A. Hallett, formerly advertising manager of the "Telegraph."

Henry W. Savage is producing "Madame X" in nine reels with Dorothy Donnelly.

The French Eclair company is suing for the control of the American Eclair. The individual defendants are Donald McLean Sommers, Henry Calder, Emil Offeman, Alfred W. Varian, Frederic C. Rawolle, Arthur C. Rieger, George E. Van Vorst and others.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation will release a five-reeler a month through Pathé. The first two are "John Glade's Honor," with C. Aubrey Smith, on October 15, and "Body and Soul," with Florence Rockwell, in November.

"Trilby," with Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye, opened with a bang at the Forty-fourth Street theatre, New York. It is the first Equitable feature and a wonderful production by Maurice Tourneur. S. L. Rothapfel arranged the presentation.

RICHARD TRAVERS, THE ESSANAY STAR, AS HE APPEARS IN THE SIX-REELER, "THE MAN TRAIL"

Charles A. Goldreyer, Maurice L. Fleischman and Max J. Kramer, three New York exhibitors, are the incorporators of the Big Three Amusement Corporation, capitalized at $100,000.

Washington House, the famous old landmark at Fort Lee, N. J., in which General George Washington made his headquarters while resisting the British attack on New York in September, 1776, and which through the neglect of the American public has fallen into disuse and decay, will be saved for the benefit of future generations of Americans if satisfactory arrangements can be made by Albert Capellani, a Frenchman who has been in this country but three months. Mr. Capellani has announced that he is arranging to buy the old landmark and the ground on which it stands.

Mr. Capellani came to the United States to direct motion pictures for the World Film Corporation at the World Film studios at Fort Lee. While making outside scenes for the film, "The Impostor," he had occasion to use the old house several times. Upon learning its history and that all attempts to preserve it as a national reservation had failed, Mr. Capellani decided to take some action.

CHANGES OF THE WEEK

King Baggot has at last found a good director. He is Harry McRae Webster, late of Essanay and points West.

William Victor Campbell, screen actor, and Norma Felicia Otero, a Spanish dancer, were married recently at San Diego, Cal.

Eugene Nowland and William Parks are two new Thanhouser directors. This means the addition of two more stock companies. Nowland leaves Edison.

Jack Pelzer is with the new Kriterion Sales Corporation. Jack was formerly Pathé sales manager and then was with the new defunct Alco.

Francis MacDonald, director, is now with Reliance.

Frederick J. Bird, of the Nicholas Power Company sales force, is back at his desk after a Southern trip.

Lester Cuneo is working again with Frank Bushman's Quality Company, having recovered from injuries received in an automobile accident.

General and Mrs. Tom Thumb and W. C. Fields, the comic jugler, will soon be seen on the Mutual program.

Walter Belasco, brother of David Belasco, will be starred in Reliance pictures.

Crane Wilbur, leading man, and Jay Hunt, director, go with David Horsley's Pacific Coast forces.

Dal Clawson, camera man par excellence, who took "Hypocrites," joins the Morosco forces.

Jack Standing, former leading man with Lubin, and later with the Famous Players, who is the youngest of the seven sons of Herbert Standing, of the Morosco and Pallas stock companies, has arrived at the Coast. Mr. Standing is to be leading man with Billie Burke.

W. F. Wood, formerly with the Oz Film Company and the National Film Corporation in the capacity of business manager, has been selected by the H. C. Matthews Company producing for the Universal to act in the same capacity. He took up his work this week.

D. L. Burke, producer of the Deer Brand subjects for the Associated Program, is on his way to New York City from the Coast, and will probably spend several weeks there aiding General Manager Arthur Bard, in charge of all matters pertaining to the company.

Richard Stanton, former director and player at the NYMP studio, has been signed by Universal, and this week began producing the three-reel subject, "The Pinnacle," scenario which is by F. McGrew Willis.

"Punch" Given Picture by Good Titles Known to Fox

He and Director Brenon, at Work on Undersea Fantasy Featuring Annette Kellermann, Often Spend Considerable Time Discussing a Small Matter Affecting Important Results

HERBERT BRENON, who is in Jamaica, West Indies, with one of the largest motion picture organizations which ever left this country, producing for William Fox a submarine and forest fair fantasy, with Annette Kellermann as the central figure, writes from Kingston an appreciation of the man who has given him artistic and financial carte blanche to produce the greatest motion picture possible as follows:

"I cannot say enough in grateful appreciation of William Fox. I regard him as the greatest genius in the motion picture field. His is the great manufacturing and exhibiting mind. He understands the most intimate detail of artistic and dramatic values and not a scenario is chosen without his sanction.

"He has his hand on every detail from that time until the picture ceases to be shown to the public. He is an indefatigable worker, frequently remaining at his office until hours after midnight; yet, unlike so many burners of 'midnight oil,' he is not a machine, but a creative and critical personality. Not a title goes into a Fox production but he passes on it. He and I have battled for an hour many a time over a little sub-title. That accounts for the virility of Fox titles.

"He never forces a director to do anything, but he is the active critic of every detail and is a wonderful help to the broad-minded director. The man who refuses to brook criticism is losing something. No matter how big a man is, in ability or achievement, he is not big enough to get along without at least one critic."

ELEANOR WOODRUFF IN VITAGRAPH FEATURE, "WEST WIND"

Eleanor Woodruff will be seen in her first big Vitagraph feature when "West Wind" is released Tuesday, September 14. "West Wind" is a picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's story of the same name and was produced in Texas by a company of Vitagraph Players, including besides Miss Woodruff, Eulalie Jensen, Darwin Karr, Harry Northrup and Ned Finley.

CLAY GREENE TO DIRECT "JOHN HENRY" STORIES FOR LUBIN

Lubin of Philadelphia announces the engagement of Clay M. Greene, the dramatist and scenario writer, as another director, this being the fifth new director appointed in as many weeks. Mr. Greene's first picture will be a series of "John Henry" stories from the "Saturday Evening Post" in which Kempton Greene will be featured.

Clay Greene, to distinguish him from his star, was educated at the University of Santa Clara and the University of California where he studied medicine, switching eventually to law. His bent, however, was literature, and he wrote what at that time was the greatest success of the decade, "Struck Oil" and "M'Kiss." Then he turned his time entirely to playwriting, writing comedies, dramas and tragedies for the Hanlon Brothers, Kate Claxton, McKee Rankin, Frederick Bryton, Augustus Pitou and others.

Then came years of affluence, due to an inherited fortune which was lost in unfortunate investments. Regaining his status, calamity again overtook him in 1906, when the San Francisco earthquake destroyed everything he had in the world. So he turned his hand to writing scenarios, and in the last three years has been chief scenario writer for Lubin's.

NEW MASSACHUSETTS REGULATIONS HAMPER FILM SHIPMENTS

In Massachusetts the railroads and the express companies are giving the motion picture exhibitors and exchange men something to think about. The railroads have issued an order that messengers carrying film grips must check them in the baggage car at a quarter each. There is a certain amount of hand baggage that a purchaser of a railroad ticket is allowed to carry with him in the passenger coach, but the roads claim that enforcement of this regulation is left to their own discretion. Because film is inflammable the roads in Massachusetts have only recently affixed the 25-cent premium on the film being carried going to and from the theatres in towns and distances away from the exchanges.

But this added expense is as nothing compared with the inconvenience caused the exchangemen by the recent regulation of the express companies that all the lithograph advance matter shipped from the exchanges shall be paid for in advance, whereas it formerly was shipped collect. The exchange office forces are therefore forced to bill the shipments of paper, keep close track of them and see that they are properly checked up with the exhibitors' accounts at the end of the month.

One exchangeman, at least, has found a way to avoid a good deal of this extra trouble. "All my lighter shipments," says Fred B. Murphy, of the United Film Service, "I am sending by parcel post. In this way I not only save a few cents, but I have the satisfaction of knowing that I am contributing to Uncle Sam's business."

GROSSMAN FINDS LARGE DEMAND FOR LINCOLN FILMS

Chicago, Sept. 8.

H. Grossman, of the Charter Feature Film Company, stopped in Chicago several days last week on a trip through the West in answer to inquiries from many exchanges who are desirous of handling the series of Abraham Lincoln pictures which the Charter Feature Film Company are planning to release some time in October.

Mr. Grossman finds that both the public and the exhibitor are responding enthusiastically to the publicity campaign which his company has been running. Many of the leading educators throughout the country have offered their hearty support in furthering the Lincoln movement which these films, featuring Benjamin Chapin, stand for.

FRANK DARIEN SUPERVISING AN INTERESTING PERFORMANCE IN "SHOCKING STOCKINGS" (Reliance)

EMELIE POLINI DESERTS STAGE FOR SCREEN

Still another star of the speaking stage has turned to acting for the motion picture camera, Miss Emelie Polini, who gained fame on both sides of the Atlantic in the leading role of "Hindle Wakes."

EMELIE POLINI

Few plays have aroused more interest and comment than "Hindle Wakes" during its run in New York City. It was but natural that when Miss Polini left the Manchester Players to play opposite Holbrook Blinn at his Princess theatre, she took with her a large following of enthusiastic theatre-goers. That this same following will be deeply interested in her career as a motion picture actress seems most probable.

CENSORSHIP NOW IMMINENT IN ST. LOUIS

Owing to the many complaints filed with Park Commissioner Cunliff against the showing of the Leo Frank Case films that were advertised to appear at several of the moving picture theatres in St. Louis, a censorship bill is being drafted that will authorize the censoring and elimination of objectionable films from being shown in that city. The park commissioner is entitled to supervise public amusements and recreation in the city, but has no authority to suppress the exhibition of undesirable films.

Mr. Cunliff received a telegram from the National Board of Censorship of New York, stating that the Frank Case films were barred in New York and in several other states, and asking what was being done to prevent their exhibition in St. Louis. The new censorship ordinance is the result, and as soon as the bill is ready it will be submitted to the Board of Aldermen.

MOROSCO ENGAGES WOMAN AS ART DIRECTOR

Following its arrangement for a specially written musical program for "Peer Gynt," starring Cyril Maude, which marked an epoch in the annals of regular program releases, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company present further indication of its progressiveness through its engagement of Mrs. Una Nixon Hopkins, as art director with jurisdiction over the furnishings of all sets in its productions.

Mrs. Hopkins is a distinct acquisition, having a national reputation as an artist and authority along this line. For years she has been one of the most authoritative writers on these subjects in the country, is on the regular staff of the "Ladies' Home Journal" and the two Hearst publications, "Harper's Bazaar" and "Good Housekeeping," and contributes regularly to the "Craftsman," "House Beautiful," the "International Studio," and magazines of similar caliber both in this country and abroad.

Mrs. Hopkins' writing has been correlative with her principal work, that of a designer. She studied art and architecture in Paris and is a housebuilder of note, some of her work for the millionaire colony in Pasadena being among the finest examples of the new art ideas on the Pacific coast.

Picturesque Scenes Lend Originality to Vitagraph Feature, "Troubled Waters"

WILLIAM DUNCAN AND MYRTLE GONZALEZ IN "TROUBLED WATERS"; MR. AND MRS. SIDNEY DREW IN "PLAYING DEAD"

A PICTURE story, whose theme is the drifting apart of a married couple and their reconciliation as castaways on a desert island, is the latest Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature to come from the Western Vitagraph Company at Santa Monica, California. "Through Troubled Waters," was picturized by David Smith from an original story by William MacLeod Raine, and was produced by Ulysses Davis, with a cast that includes Myrtle Gonzalez, who will be remembered for her exceptional work as Enid Maitland in the Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Chalice of Courage," Alfred Vosburgh, Anne Schaefer and Jack Mower in the principal parts.

The story opens with the marriage of Gordon White, an unlettered poet of the mountains, and Viola Lorraine, an actress. White becomes absorbed in playwriting and neglects his bride. They drift apart, and finally separate. By a strange coincidence, the two embark on the same steamer for Buenos Ayres. On the way South, the steamer is wrecked and the two are cast away on a desert island. Impossible to continue his playwriting, White's eyes are opened and he learns to really love his wife. Their primitive life on the island is attractive, and although they keep flying a signal of distress, when a rescue party comes, they are loath to leave.

While the theme of "Through Troubled Waters" is old, the treatment of the story is original and the scenes so strongly in contrast with the usual development of a story of this kind, where the closely crowded city is the background, it appears to be different, a story that is entirely new.

In filming this feature, the scenes which show the castaways were taken on an island of the Pacific, Miss Gonzalez and Mr. Vosburgh, using drift wood to build their shelter and gunny sacks that were washed ashore, to clothe themselves. "Through Troubled Waters" is a picture in which realism was the keynote and action the watchword. Every person in any way connected with the production was earnest in his or her endeavor to make this Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature a quality three-part picture.

Fifty-nine Selig Exposition Tourists at First Monthly Dinner in Chicago

GUESTS OF THE SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY ON TRANSCONTINENTAL FLIER AT THE FIRST MONTHLY DINNER IN CHICAGO

FIFTY-NINE of the guests who enjoyed a seventeen days' tour of the West aboard the Selig Exposition Flyer enjoyed their first monthly dinner on Saturday evening, August 21. Telegrams were read during the evening from out-of-town members voicing their regret that they were unable to attend.

A splendid program was given under the direction of Clarence A. Frambers, who also appeared in several original playlets. At the conclusion of the banquet a handsome loving cup was presented to Herbert C. Hoagland, of the Selig company.

The presentation was made by Maude Moore Clement in behalf of the Selig tourists and as a token of appreciation of the many courtesies extended the Selig guests on the westward journey. Mr. Hoagland expressed his appreciation for the beautiful gift in a few well chosen words. Following the dinner dancing was enjoyed.

RIGHTS TO "SILVER THREADS" FOR VIRGINIA AND CAROLINAS SOLD

Harry Newman, of 1402 Broadway, has purchased the rights on "Silver Threads Among the Gold" for Virginia, North and South Carolina.

Henry Wolf, who handled "Neptune's Daughter" in that territory for the past year, will handle this feature.

FLORENCE ROCKWELL FINISHES WORK IN "PURPLE NIGHT

Florence Rockwell, late Broadway star, has finished her work in "The Purple Night," Knickerbocker Star Features. This feature marks her debut before the camera and promises to bring her to the very front rank of moving picture favorites. To rest up after the strain of this new work, Miss Rockwell has taken to her favorite retreat—the beaches of Rockport,

FLORENCE ROCKWELL

Maine. There she will rest awhile before taking up further work.

Supporting Miss Rockwell in "The Purple Night" are Noah Beery and Lionel Adams. For the last three years, Mr. Beery has been playing the lead in Klaw and Erlanger's "Trail of the Lonesome Pine." Among his other stage successes are "Strongheart" and "My Man." Lionel Adams is a well known figure on the screen and has been associated with Vitagraph, Lubin and Famous Players.

September 15 is set as the release date of "The Purple Night," which is the story of a woman artist tired of the milk and honey life, has passionate infatuation for a man of the slums and her final awakening—too late!

"ENEMY TO SOCIETY" TOPS DRAMATIC CAREER FOR JONES

Edgar Jones, who directed the coming five-reel Rolfe-Metro feature, "An Enemy to Society," regards this motion picture as his greatest dramatic achievement. "An Enemy to Society" tops a long dramatic record for Mr. Jones, who, though but a little more than thirty years old, played important roles on the speaking stage for fifteen years and has been in motion pictures for three years and a half.

Edgar Jones was but a lad when he left his home in Steubenville, O., to go on the stage. During his fifteen years before the footlights he appeared with Kyrle Bellew in "A Gentleman of France"; he played Stephen Ghent in "The Great Divide," following Henry Miller in the role; he created the part of Marius in "The Holy City" and supported Viola Allen in "The Herfords." These roles are only a few of the high spots.

Three years and a half ago Mr. Jones left "The Herfords" to join the Lubin forces as leading man. After six months he was made a producer and for three years directed motion pictures and played his own leading roles. While with the Lubin forces Mr. Jones made many highly exploited pictures.

Mr. Jones recently joined the Rolfe-Metro producing forces where his first work is an adaptation of "An Enemy to Society" from the book of the same name by George Bronson Howard. Lois Meridith, Hamilton Revelle, H. Cooper Cliff and Henry Bergman are the stars in the picture.

KALEM PLANS NOVELTIES FOR MODERNIZING "BLACK CROOK"

In announcing their forthcoming production of "The Black Crook," the famous old sensation of the stage, it is apparent that the Kalem company is about to add another success to their long record of novelties. The revival of this extravaganza also revives a wealth of memories. Produced at the celebrated Niblo's Garden in 1866, "The Black Crook" has been presented innumerable times in every city—and in every hamlet which boasts an "opera house."

Nowadays the broadened public taste accepts the "ballet" as an essential to successful operas and musical comedies; but the introduction of "The Corps of Seventy

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA

Ladies" created a furor when "The Black Crook" was first produced. Nothing could be more wholesome than the fairy story of "The Black Crook," which Kalem is now adapting for the screen.

Kalem has planned many novelties which will have the effect of "modernizing" "The Black Crook." A star cast is being assembled and the production will be directed by Robert Vignola.

LATEST CHAPLIN COMEDY COMBINES THRILLS AND LAUGHTER

Charles Chaplin's latest comedy, "Shanghaied," might be called a "thriller," so filled is it with intense action. But while Chaplin has injected the dramatic element into this comedy, he never loses sight of his purpose to amuse the public. In every scene the Chaplin antics predominate, and when the action is leading up to a thrill and one has set himself for a stirring climax, he is suddenly jolted into an uproar of laughter, which is all the more spontaneous because of the unexpectedness of the turn of affairs.

Chaplin occupies the exalted position of assistant cook. The owner of the vessel and the captain plot to blow it up to get the insurance. The owner's daughter, hearing of the plot and not knowing that her father has concocted it, hides herself on board.

She is discovered by the captain and mate, who bind and gag her and cast her into the hold. Chaplin, ever on the look out to rescue beautiful maidens in distress, releases her. The captain and mate scuttle all the small boats except one, light a bomb and prepare to flee. Chaplin and the girl steal a march on them, however, and take the small boat and escape. The ship is blown to pieces, but they are saved. The Essanay Company bought an old tramp steamer to take these scenes.

WISWALL IS NOT CONNECTED WITH COLUMBIA

J. J. McCluskey is president of the Columbia Amusement Company, Denver, and Bruce Wiswall is not connected with the company, as stated in a previous issue. Mr. Wiswall, however, has a company of his own in that city, but in no way affiliated with the Columbia concern.

J. W. Early is vice-president and general manager, and Dr. E. A. Scherrer is treasurer and secretary of the Columbia Amusement Company.

TRIANGLE STARS TO BE PRESENT AT KNICKERBOCKER OPENING

Things are shaping up for the presence at the Knickerbocker Theatre opening of all the Triangle screen stars to appear that first week. They are Raymond Hitchcock, Dustin Farnum and Douglas Fairbanks. Messrs. Hitchcock and Farnum are already in town, and Mr. Fairbanks hopes to get here in late September following the filming of his second picture, "Double Trouble," at the Griffith Studio.

The report that Farnum had returned to California was incorrect. He will be in New York for several weeks to come and he says he is anxious to see himself in "The Iron Strain." It appears that that play had not been assembled by the time Mr. Farnum departed from the Ince Studio. The handsome young actor was aware that he had appeared in a number of heroic and gallant attitudes and had emotions of sorts, but his mind is hazy as to what it was all about. The Knickerbocker presentation will tell him.

"Hitchy" says he would rather see his new picture "My Valet," than eat. The only thing that will stop him is the possibility of his being presented in a "legitimate" production that night across the street from the Knickerbocker.

Horsley to Make 4th Brand Contribution to Mutual

In Six Weeks or Less He Will Bring Out Four Reel Masterpictures, Staged at the Bayonne Studios and Featuring Broadway Stars Supported by Strong Casts

WITH the release of "The Protest" on September 29 through the Mutual, David Horsley introduces his new brand of three-reel features and brings into the Mutual his third brand since he became allied with that distributing organization less than two months ago.

Later on, within the next six weeks, he will have a fourth release, this to be four-reel Mutual Masterpictures, in which prominent Broadway stars will be featured.

The brands now being produced are the Cub Comedy, the Centaur Features and the three-reelers, for which no name has so far been selected. All three releases are being made at Mr. Horsley's studios in Los Angeles.

DAVID HORSLEY GEORGE OVEY CRANE WILBUR CAPT. BONAVITA

The Cub Comedy was the first Horsley brand to make its debut on the Mutual program. George Ovey, who has been heralded by the Horsley company as the funniest man in America, is featured in these one-reel comics, one of which is released every Friday.

With George Ovey for his leading fun maker, surrounded by a company of experienced motion picture comedians, under the direction of Milton H. Fahrney, who has long been recognized the dean of comedy directors, Mr. Horsley obtained a combination which, in making a comedy every week, is one of the busiest and most effective companies on the Coast.

Mr. Horsley's second brand to be brought into the Mutual is the Centaur Features, which are two-reel subjects, featuring the Bostock animals and Captain Jack Bonavita.

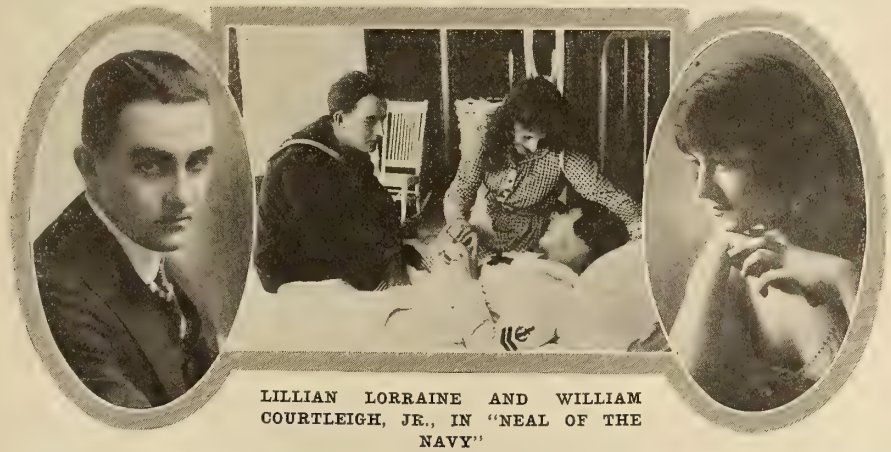
While the opinion of exhibitors and the public is not yet to be obtained on these subjects, those who have seen the first release, "The Rajah's Sacrifice," at private showings and are competent to judge, agree that it lives up to Mr. Horsley's promise to present in the Centaur Features animal pictures in an advanced form.

For his three-reel features, of which "The Protest" is the first, Mr. Horsley has gathered a company headed by the popular photoplay star, Crane Wilbur, who won success by his work in "The Perils of Pauline" and other important productions.

For director he has secured Jay Hunt, for three years with Thomas Ince, and previously with Vitagraph. A Crane Wilbur picture in three reels will be released every four weeks by Mr. Horsley in the regular service of the Mutual.

Preparations are now under way for the production of the first Horsley Mutual Masterpictures, which will be staged at Mr. Horsley's studio in Bayonne, N. J. Announcement of the name of the star and of the supporting people and the director will be made shortly.

"Neal of Navy" Gets Big Ovation at First New York Showing; Triumph for Pathé and Balboa



"NEAL OF THE NAVY," Pathé's new serial, had its first showing in New York at the Loew Theatres Monday night, and was received with great enthusiasm on Broadway. One of the New York newspapers in reviewing the opening of these pictures said:

"The chief character, as may be inferred from the title, is a young man who wears U. S. N. on his uniform, and to judge from the enthusiasm aroused by a first showing on Broadway, the story of his adventures will prove more popular than any of those other serials, 'The Perils of Pauline,' 'The Exploits of Elaine,' and 'The Romance of Elaine,' all issued by the same company, Pathé exchange.

"The firts chapter of 'Neal of the Navy' introduced unusual characters, in the midst of dramatic conflict, and revealed stirring scenes through marvelous photography. Even if the story had to stop after this episode, it would still be a credit to the Balboa company which made it as a master production of the Panama Films. On various occasions lavish praise has been given to the films that were brought in from Europe for their wonderful views of great scenes.

"Now there is a film 'made in America,' and equalling any of them in its pictorial value. The views it gives of Mount Pelee in eruption, with a great stream of molten lava pouring down the mountainside, have never been equalled."

The "Neal of the Navy" pictures are being filmed by Balboa at Long Beach, California. U. S. warships and training stations are being used as settings for many of the pictures.

Moving Picture Day Set for Exposition at San Diego

Committee Appointed for Supervision Over Event Designed for Celebration in Honor of Screen Stars, From Whom Will Be Elected a Carnival King and Queen

San Diego, Cal., Sept. 6.

THE motion picture people of southern California, which means a large percentage of the men and women interested in the moving picture industry in the United States, are going to have a big day all of their own at the Panama-California Exposition on Saturday, September 11.

The plan to hold this celebration in honor of the screen stars originated with Harry F. McGarvie, the director of the new department of Exploitation at the San Diego Exposition. Mr. McGarvie, who is known to show folks all over the world, submitted to E. J. Chapin, the director-general of the fair, the proposition for Moving Picture Day, pointing out the geographical advantages of the southern California Exposition as a place where such an event successfully could be held.

Mr. McGarvie immediately began negotiations with members of the executive staffs of the big film producing companies of southern California, and the editors and publishers of magazines devoted to news of the film world. As a result this general committee was appointed to have supervision of events on Moving Picture Day: W. H. Clune, president, Clune Film Producing Company; W. S. Smith, of the Santa Monica executive staff, Vitagraph Company; James L. McGee, of the Western Selig Polyscope Company; R. F. Taylor, Bostock-Hersley studios; Frank E. Woods, Reliance studios; Kenneth O'Hara, director of publicity, Inceville; M. G. Jonas, publicity manager, Universal City; E. W. Hewston, personal representative Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince; Frederick Palmer, publicity manager Keystone studios; Lewis M. Head, publicity director, Major Film Company; H. O. Stechhan, publicity director, Balboa Amusement Company; Benjamin Ziedman, publicity director Mutual Film Corporation; Kenneth Magaffey, publicity manager, Lasky studios; Robert M. Yost, Jr., publicity director, Morosco studios; "Captain Jack" Poland, editor "Static Flashes"; Sycliffe A. Hill, editor "Movie Magazine"; Captain Melville, Lubin studios; Robert G. Camby, editor, "Photoplay Art Magazine"; Jack Sacker, manager, "Photoplayers' Weekly"; C. W. Pope, New York "Morning Telegraph"; Clark Irvine, "Moving Picture World"; and J. C. Jessen, Motion Picture News.

In addition to the foregoing, there will be a committee of writers of scenarios, consisting of Roy L. McCardell, author of "A Diamond from the Sky"; Harry Williams, Vincent Bryan, Jean Schwartz, and other creators of Keystone comedies, and some of the directors of photoplay masterpieces who have made southern California famous.

In order to add generally to the gaiety of the event and to promote interest among the motion picture stars, a voting contest was organized to elect a king and a queen to rule over the festivities. This contest is being conducted through the newspapers of Los Angeles and San Diego, each of which carried each day a voting coupon on which the name of the favorite can be written.

The committee to have charge of the vote counting for the motion picture favorite for king and queen on Motion Picture Day, September 11, is composed of President G. A. Davidson of the exposition; Mayor C. E. Sebastian, of Los Angeles; Mayor E. M. Capps, of San Diego; President Robert N. Bulla, of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce; President Carl Heilbron, of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce; President D. F. Garrettson, of the First National Bank of this city; and President Marco H. Hellman, of the Hellman Commercial Trust and Savings Bank of Los Angeles.

Among the leaders in the voting are: For king, Francis X. Bushman, Charlie Chaplin, J. Warren Kerrigan, Fred Mace, Roscoe Arbuckle, Victor Moore and Irving Cummings; for queen, Blanche Sweet, Mary Pickford, Mabel Normand, Marguerite Snow, Dorothy Gish, Anita Stewart, Mae Marsh, Bessie Barriscale, Marguerite Clark, Theda Bara, Mary Fuller, and Vivian Rich.

Record Crowd Sees Kleine's "Spartacus"; Modest Altschuler Arranges Music for Showing

WHAT is probably one of the the largest gatherings that ever witnessed a moving picture performance, was the monster crowd that packed the great amphitheatre at Chautauqua, N. Y., last week to see George Kleine's "Spartacus."

The production was the biggest event in the season of Chautauqua. The great drama of Roman life thrilled the immense audience to enthusiasm, assuring a continuation of the novel innovation of motion pictures in this famous center of art and learning.

One of the interesting features of the performance was the incidental music. Modest Altschuler, who originally arranged the score for George Kleine shortly after the subject reached America, and who, with his marvelous symphony orchestra of fifty startled Chicago critics when the film was given its initial presentation at the Chicago Auditorium at that time, was engaged by the Chautauqua.

Altschuler at all times held his orchestra under an expressive direction and rendered what the Baltimore "American" terms "the greatest accompaniment any motion picture ever had."

The crowd ran into the thousands. Long before the overture every seat had been taken and hundreds were in line four deep in the aisles and standing spaces.

Says the Baltimore "American": "The film itself is one of the triumphs of motion picture photography. Many familiar Roman settings were seen, including the Circus Maximus, the Appian Way, the hills above Rome and the Senate Chamber, all accurate with respect to furnishings and detail.

"Mr. Altschuler rendered a beautiful score. In the first act a beautiful love motive for Spartacus and Narona rose to passionate heights. Pompous military marches for the Roman soldiers, wild dances for the feasting and drinking scenes and a wonderfully worked up climax motivating the rebellion of Spartacus and the gladiators thrilled the great audience to its feet.

"During the second act there was spirited dramatic incidental music as the gladiators climbed over the cliffs, and stirring marches for the victors after the battle. In the last act came a new theme indicating the despair of Spartacus when accused of the death of Crassus, another expressive death scene and funeral march, weirdly affected music for the conspirators, all working into a final climax at the end of the picture."

Bucolic Retreat Mantell's Ideal Rest from Stage

Tragedian's Slogan Might Be "I Love the Footlights, But Oh You Cows and Chickens"—to Say Nothing of the Horse with Pedigree Long as Noah's

A FOREIGNER coming to America in summer in search of the ideal country gentleman, and landing in New York, would have only to convert a Sandy Hook boat into a Diogenes tub, and finish his quest at Atlantic Highlands, N. J. For there, on the pretty little estate of Brucewood, with its cozy country mansion, he would discover Robert Bruce Mantell, considered by many the leading living American tragedian.

Though scarcely more than twenty miles from New York, the village of Atlantic Highlands might be a thousand. There is nothing about it of the hurry and bustle that characterizes the busy manufacturing towns within more than twice that radius in most every other direction from the great metropolis.

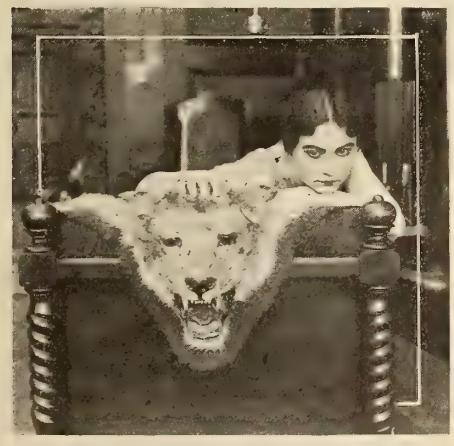
It is on one edge of this village that Robert Mantell has his estate of some ten or a dozen acres. Brucewood proper resembles in appearance the big country estate of England. It is a large plot of woodland, tamed by the expert hand of the landscape gardener, and ornamented with numerous flower beds. In the middle of it is a big, comfortable house, and down a little hill to one side are a gymnasium and a barn.

In front of the barn is an old-fashioned wellhouse, hung with two buckets which alternately dip water from the coolest underground spring in the whole vicinity.

Adjoining Brucewood is another estate, Maywood, acquired later by Mr. Mantell, and it is here that are found his cornfields, orchards and pasture land.



Both Brucewood and Maywood are surrounded by artistic rail fences of Mr. Mantell's own designing. It is on this estate that Mr. Mantell spends his summers in the midst of a happy family. And he has made it all so comfortable that he actually spends his time there.

Mr. Mantell is a great lover of horses, and he has three as fine as can be found anywhere around Atlantic Highlands. Two of them constitute a match team which he uses for carriage horses when he wants to drive out, and which John uses to plow the little field. It is a safe bet that there is not a finer team of plow horses in America.

The third is a young race horse with a pedigree as long as Noah's.

UNIVERSAL FINDS MAUD GEORGE A VALUABLE ASSET

Although she has been with the Universal only a comparatively short time, Maude George, who plays the role of Muriel Evers in the film production of Joseph Medill Patterson's novel, "A Little Brother of the Rich," has proved herself to be of inestimable value to the west coast directors. Her services are constantly in demand by a score of directors, but the producers of Broadway

MAUDE GEORGE

Universal Features have been given first preference.

Miss George appears in "Business Is Business," in which Nat Goodwin is featured as the wife of Isidore Lechat, a particularly thankless role. Miss George showed her histrionic ability in the leading role in the Smalley's second picture, "A Cigarette—That's All." Later she proved her willingness to undertake the dangerous feat in her dive from the bridge over the Universal's artificial lake, in Turner's production of "The Scarlet Sin." In "Both Sides of the Cross," soon to be released by the Universal Miss George also enacts the lead.

AL RAY YOUNG IN YEARS, BUT OLD IN EXPERIENCE

Al Ray, the young director-general of the Federal Film Company, recently celebrated his twenty-first birthday by starting work on a two-reel production, one of the Federal Special Films that are to be released through the Associated Service.

AL RAY

Ray started his screen career playing child parts with the old Biograph Company.

Later he kent into vaudeville with a sketch entitled "Breaking Into Society," which he wrote himself, and which proved a great success financially. During a layoff he played in several comedy films, and liking it so well he gave up the stage, and went in for pictures altogether. He has played with numerous companies including Ramo, Vitagraph, Champion, Royal, Drako, Keystone, Comedy, and many others.

His directing attracted considerable attention, and he was signed up by the Comedy Film Company, of Galveston, Texas, but their studio burnt down, when he had been there but five weeks. The Federal Film Company then signed Ray, and he has been with them ever since.

TRIANGLE'S NEW YORK OFFICES MAY BE CONSOLIDATED

It is rumored that the New York general offices of Triangle Film Corporation will be consolidated. Many thousand feet of space in one of the largest skyscrapers devoted to film managerial offices are being contracted for. At present the executive offices are on the seventeenth floor of the Masonic Temple building, while the publicity department is in the Longacre building.

A decided innovation is that very little office space will be used in the Knickerbocker Theatre, which will be the first one of the model theatres to open on or about September 23. Every particle of available space in that historic playhouse will be utilized for the comfort and convenience of the patrons.

ROBERT WARWICK SIGNS WITH WORLD FILM FOR TWO YEARS

Robert Warwick, the man whom Charles Frohman and David Belasco selected to play the leading role in their all-star revival of "A Celebrated Case," has deserted the speaking stage for the motion picture drama. Mr. Warwick has signed a contract with the World Film Corporation which binds him to appear in that company's productions for the next two years. This means that for that time Mr. Warwick will not appear in the speaking drama and that all of his appearances will be in features released by the World Film.

During his career on the speaking stage Mr. Warwick was associated with the leading producers. He was born in San Francisco and his first work toward a theatrical career was with operatic ambitions. A throat affection made it necessary for him to abandon this work. His rise in dramatic work was rapid. He became associated with such producers as William A. Brady, David Belasco, John Cort and others and following his appearance in "A Celebrated Case" he scored a marked success as leading man for Miss Frances Starr in "The Secret."

Mr. Warwick has already appeared in seven World Film plays. Among these are "The Dollar Mark," "The Man of the Hour," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The Man Who Found Himself," "The Face in the Moonlight," "The Stolen Voice" and the forthcoming feature "The Flash of an Emerald."

FREDDIE WELSH PLANNING ENTRY INTO PICTURE FIELD

Freddie Welsh, lightweight champion of the world, recently visited Universal City where he consulted with Director-General McRae regarding his contemplated entry into the motion picture field. Freddie has no desire to oust Warren Kerrigan from his niche in the moving picture hall of fame, but he harbors the impression that he could "put the punch" into a feature if given the chance.

MR. AND MRS. FREDDIE WELSH

"If I am still the champion of the world at the end of another year, during which I expect to have a number of interesting fights," declares Freddie, "I will retire from the ring and go into moving picture work. Then I'm going to buy a home and build a sanatorium like Muldoon's. I have long had in mind the establishment of an institution of that sort and am putting my money aside with that end in view."

Welsh was accompanied on his tour through Universal City by Mrs. Welsh and his sister-in-law, Bertha Weston.

WILL NOT RETURN TO FROHMAN, SAYS BILLIE BURKE

Miss Billie Burke, the Triangle star, on her arrival in Chicago recently received one of the greatest receptions ever given to a celebrated actress. Representatives of practically the entire Chicago press met the Twentieth Century Limited and asked Miss Burke many questions about her screen and stage plans. The most important news she gave out was that she had definitely broken with the Frohman firm and did not intend to return to them after the Los Angeles trip for the Triangle.

Her first vehicle in Thomas H. Ince's studios will be a Scotch comedy. Miss Burke's ward, Miss Cherry Carlyl, will have a part in it. Even little Ziegy, the fluffy terrier whom the vivacious star has cunningly nicknamed after her husband, Florenz Ziegfeld, will do a small turn.

MUD SAVES TRAVERS FROM DEATH IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Richard C. Travers, who takes the role of Don John in Essanay's six-act production, "In the Palace of the King," written by F. Marion Crawford, narrowly escaped death in an automobile accident at the Naval Training Station, near Waukegan, Ill. He turned a sharp corner going at a high rate of speed. The road was oiled and slippery. The auto skidded, struck a rock at the side of the road and turned turtle. Travers was pinned under the car. Fortunately the ditch was muddy and half full of water. Travers was pinned down in the soft mud and nearly strangled before his companions pulled him out.

FINAL SCENES FOR "LONESOME LUKE" SERIES MADE

The Rolin company at Los Angeles have made the final scenes for the "Lonesome Luke" series released by Pathé on the Phunphilms brand. This episode is laid in a shoe store wherein Luke, as a clerk, has many battles with a rival for the love of the fair wrapping-clerk, played by Miss Beebe Daniels. H. C. Lloyd appears in the name part supported by Harry Pollard as the rival, and Gene Marsh. The tenth of the series concerns Luke's work as a janitor in a fashionable apartment house. Hal E. Roach, president of the Rolin company, is in charge of direction and is assisted by Arthur Harrison.

COMEDIAN DON IS NOW MEMBER OF LUBIN STAR

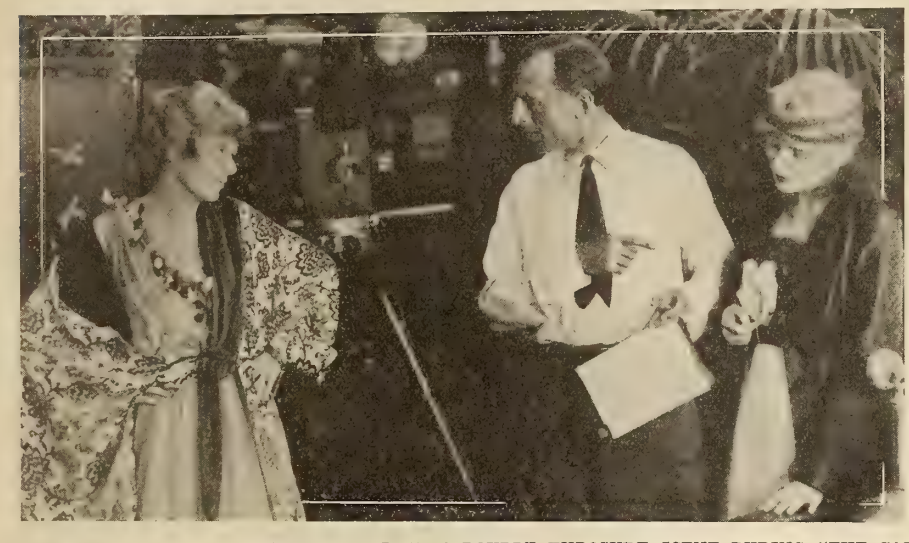
Lubin of Philadelphia announces the engagement of David L. Don as a comedy star. Mr. Don has an enviable record as a light opera comedian, having played leading roles in "The Girl from Paris" with Louis Mann; "Adonis" with Henry Dixie; "The Belle of New York"; "The Merry Whirl"; "The Belle of Bohemia," and other famous Broadway productions.

DAVID L. DON

Mr. Don began his public career as an acrobat with a circus at the mature age of nine. Then he deserted the sawdust and became an interior decorator and scene painter, and eventually a professional ball player. In the course of time he became a minstrel with the original Barlow, Wilson, Primrose and West Company on their first tour of the country.

Now he is featured in Lubin comedies being filmed by Edward McKim, the new Lubin director.

MANHATTAN STREETS AT MIDNIGHT FILMED FOR STERLING RELEASE



The Sterling Camera and Film Company have a good New York detective story in their five-part feature film production, "The Game of Three," which was announced in Motion Picture News as being released September 1.

Barney Gilmore and Lillian Niederaur, two well known and popular stage stars, are featured, being assisted by E. F. Roseman, Roy Gahris, Frank Stone, John Sharkey, George Henry, Roy Applegate, Violet Stuart, Mabel Wright and Grace Norman. There are three hundred scenes of interiors, street and water front scenes in and about Manhattan Island, among which are several New York street scenes actually photographed at midnight.

"The Game of Three" is being distributed by state rights on a unique plan in which the state right exchange is liberally considered. A line of advertising material has been provided, consisting of one, three and six sheets lithographed in colors; 8 x 10 lobby photos; slides and heralds.

Hidden Psychic Art Talent Is Found in Blanche Sweet

DeMille and Reicher, Directing Actress in Dual Personality Roles, Find a Latent Faculty of a High Order for Interpreting Female Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde Types

BLANCHE SWEET AND FRANK REICHER IN A DOUBLE EXPOSURE SCENE DURING "THE CASE OF BECKY"

SINCE her appearance as the star in the photoplay production, "The Secret Orchard," Blanche Sweet, of the Lasky Feature Play Company, and one of the Paramount stars, has passed through a peculiar transition in her work as a screen artist. Miss Sweet, with only a few others, relatively, occupies a unique place among popular motion picture stars, as she is essentially of the screen and never appeared on the legitimate stage except in small roles and for only a short time.

With "The Secret Orchard" Miss Sweet started a series of dual characterizations in her work for the Lasky company. In this play she appears as a young woman of refinement and sweet nature underneath whose calm poise lies a personality which is the result of pre-natal influence. In the screen version of "The Secret Orchard" this phase of the girl is only suggested, but nevertheless it is important.

In her next Paramount picture the Lasky-Belasco production, "The Case of Becky," Miss Sweet actually plays two different persons—Becky, who is mean and mischievous, and Dorothy, who is sweet and good. Here, again, pre-natalism figures as the cause of this strange feminine phenomenon as Dorothy's mother when a girl ran away with a hypnotist and for years was the subject of his wierd power.

"The Case of Becky," which is by Edward Locke and which in dramatic form ran for a whole season in the Belasco theatre, New York, is considered by David Belasco to be among his best productions.

Frank Reicher, who is one of the best known players on the American stage and who was stage manager for several years for the late Henry B. Harris, is the Lasky director under whom Miss Sweet has acted her past several roles, including "The Secret Orchard" and "The Case of Becky."

Mr. Reicher, with the utmost co-operation from Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Lasky Company, has been developing Miss Sweet's powers in the direction of dual characterizations even further than revealed in the two plays above mentioned. In her next Paramount picture after "The Case of Becky," Miss Sweet, it is learned, will act throughout a long feature play as "sisters."

The accompanying photograph is one of the most interesting ever made in a motion picture studio. It shows a double exposure with two views of Blanche Sweet and in between is Mr. Reicher. The question is, where was Mr. Reicher when the two exposures were made?

HAMILTON AND PARSONS IN NEW YORK CITY

G. P. Hamilton, who resigned from the presidency of the Albuquerque Film Manufacturing Company, and William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation, who left the Pacific Coast a few days ago, are now in New York City.

SECOND RIALTO FEATURE ABOUNDS IN THRILLING SITUATIONS

Thrilling situations crowd one upon another throughout the three reels of "The House With Nobody in It," second of the Rialto Star Features produced by the Gaumont Company for release in the regular Mutual program September 22. In this stirring drama, Ivy Troutman, popular young Broadway favorite, recently engaged by the Gaumont Company, makes her initial appearance as a Mutual star. She is supported by a cast which includes Bradley Parker and Frank Whitson.

"The House With Nobody in It" was prepared for the screen by the Rev. Dr. Clarence J. Harris, Gaumont editor, and was produced under the direction of Richard Garrick, Gaumont director.

The story of the photodrama centers about an exclusive home maintained by an aged woman, of whom her beautiful young daughter is her sole companion. At the death of her mother, the girl, now penniless, goes into the world to seek a living. A bachelor artist who scorns women meets the young girl by accident and finds himself facing the girl of whom he has so frequently dreamed but whom, he told himself, never existed outside of imagination.

Later the now deserted mansion becomes the center of unexplained and continued flashes of lights, which appear every evening after dark. These mysterious flashes lead to reports that the house is haunted and the populace shun it as they would the plague. Many and varied are the experiences that meanwhile befall the young girl.

TRIANGLE AUDITOR BEGINS NEW DUTIES

P. M. Brinch, former chief auditor with the Mutual Film Corporation, who recently returned from his honeymoon, has taken up his duties as auditor of the Triangle Film Corporation.

Mr. Brinch entered the film business in 1907 with Pathé Freres, remaining with that company until 1910. He visited the Pathé plants in France, and while on the continent made trips to Russia, Belgium and Germany for the study of film conditions in those countries.

He returned after a six months' absence, and later became connected with the General Film Company as assistant auditor. He was made traveling auditor and visited every city in the United States and Canada where a film exchange was operated. After four years with the General Film he joined the forces of the Mutual.

KLEINE ESTABLISHES OFFICE IN NEW ORLEANS

Increasing business throughout the Middle South and in particular in the immediate neighborhood of New Orleans has made necessary the establishment of a George Kleine office in that city. This territory, which up to the present has been handled by the Atlantic branch, will be in charge of Howard Gail, with offices at 103 Nola building.

CORT TO PRODUCE HESSER'S "TRIUMPH OF VENUS"

Production work is just being started by the Cort Film Corporation, John Cort, president, on the "Triumph of Venus."

The scenario was written by Edwin Bower Hesser and it is planned to make a seven or eight-reel picture out of it, the spectacle to be staged mainly in the White Mountains, under the production and supervision of the author. The story embraces a cycle of all the best known legends of Venus, the goddess of love and beauty, as well as practically all the major deities of ancient Greek mythology, including Jupiter, Juno, Diana, Apollo, Mercury, Vulcan and Cupid.

A souvenir book containing over 200 illustrations from the film will be issued simultaneously, being entirely published in the rotogravure process.

A special advertising campaign is also being arranged, lithographs ranging from 24 and 12 sheets to the regular motion picture sizes to be made. Photographic frames with 16 by 20 inch prints will also be used. There will be 100 photographs to each set and they will be treated with a color toning process.

Contracts for the production were arranged by Sanger & Jordan, of 1432 Broadway, New York, the play brokers who are handling all of Mr. Hesser's photoplay scripts.

PASSING OF MILWAUKEE CABARETS A BOON TO EXHIBITORS

Milwaukee's cabarets are a thing of the past. Not a cabaret entertainment exists in Milwaukee—not even in the most famous of the downtown establishments—and the result is that the business at the photoplay houses has taken a decided increase.

The cabaret entertainment in Milwaukee had gone beyond all common sense bounds. At some of the places it was possible to see a complete six-act vaudeville show for the price of one or two beers.

The cabarets were a very unfair form of competition, not being compelled to abide by the same fire laws as the theatres. When the Wisconsin legislature passed the Stemper bill giving the Chief of Police full power to decide what saloons were to receive licenses, Chief Jansen announced that no saloon, restaurant or cafe having a cabaret of any description would be given a new license.

"THE SALAMANDER" CAST COMPLETED

The B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation have finished selecting the players to appear in "The Salamander," visualized from Owen Johnson's novel and play, which will be released shortly.

The cast contains the names of such prominent artists as Ruth Findlay, John Sainpolis, Iva Shephard, Edgar L. Davenport, J. Frank Glendon and J. Elbert Hall.

In some of the big scenes in the photoplay, the services of several hundred players will be utilized.

The producing of the feature has been entrusted to Arthur Donaldson.

TRUE BOARDMAN
Who will enact the title role in "Stingaree," the new Kalem Series

PHILADELPHIA "TELEGRAPH" SELECTED BY PARAMOUNT

The Paramount Pictures Corporation has awarded the contract for their extensive publicity campaign to be made in "The Evening Telegraph" of Philadelphia. The tremendous growth and development in the motion picture business is no more noticeable in any other city than in Philadelphia.

This development is due largely to the co-operation of "The Evening Telegraph," whose management prophetically foresaw the development of this industry, to which it has given its columns to furthering the advancement of the silent drama.

The motion picture editor of "The Evening Telegraph" is Frank V. Armato, a very efficient and enthusiastic exponent of pictures and the picture industry.

SUGGESTS CENSOR OF PICTURES IN MSS.; NOT PRACTICAL, SAYS SELIG

Mrs. Earl Rogers, of the moving picture commission of Los Angeles, California, according to reports, would draft an ordinance that shall provide for the censorship of films in manuscript thus doing away with Boards of Censors.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, according to an interview published in the Chicago "Herald," says he does not believe the plan is practical. "Changes are frequently found necessary in producing a scenario," said Mr. Selig. "It does not seem to me a censor board could pass on a picture from the manuscript. Things do not always materialize on the screen as we plan in the written version." J. A. Berst, general manager of the Selig Company, was of the same opinion.

BINDER IS NOT CONNECTED WITH EFFORT TO PROTECT "EXTRAS"

Following the announcement that a central employment agency to protect motion picture "extras" from rapacious agents would be organized—the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation taking the initiative—J. W. Binder, whose name was mentioned as "permanent secretary," was asked for an outline of his intended activities in that connection.

Mr. Binder emphatically denied that he had anything to do with the project.

"I was not at the meeting," said Mr. Binder." And I am not to be made 'permanent secretary.' I have my hands too full organizing the Motion Picture Board of Trade. And as I am not connected with the National Board of Censorship any more, even that statement is wrong. Aside from these minor details it is a good story.

"This doesn't mean, of course," added Mr. Binder, "that I am not interested in the conditions under which extra people are hired, as a trade problem. I am."

Bonavita Fights Lion in Darkened Room for Second Centaur Release

FOR the second Centaur release of Thursday, September 23, David Horsley presents "The Woman, the Lion and the Man," a drama in two reels relating an episode of life in the animal arena. This release, in point of thrilling punch, is pronounced even more effective than "The Rajah's Sacrifice," which in intensity of power to claim and to hold attention has been proclaimed by film critics the most remarkable ever obtained in an animal picture.

As in "The Rajah's Sacrifice," the Bostock animals and Capt. Jack Bonavita are featured, and again this combination stages some sensational animal scenes. In "The Woman, the Lion and the Man," the climax is a fight in a darkened room between a crook named Mancey (played by Captain Jack Bonavita), and Nero, the most ferocious of the Bostock lions. This situation is brought about by Mancey's demands upon Mrs. Fairfield, a lion trainer, for money to keep him silent about the past history of her father, whose downfall and death he caused. Mrs. Fairfield's husband, also a lion trainer, overhears Mancey's demands and when Mancey calls at the Fairfield home that night to take the money which Mrs. Fairfield has promised, Fairfield liberates Nero, who springs upon the intruder and crushes out his life.

Another especially thrilling scene in "The Woman, the Lion and the Man" is that in which Mrs. Fairfield, while going through a performance with her lions, recognizes Mancey in the crowd. Overcome with emotion at the sight of the man she swoons, while the lions, free of their trainer's eye and rod, close in upon her. Fairfield, realizing his wife's danger, jumps into the arena, and amid the commotion of the audience saves her.

Besides the Bostock animals and Captain Jack Bonavita there appear in this picture Charles Gay, Mlle. Ottawa, Ray Watson, Herr Batty and Madam D'Orsey in the principal roles. Capt. Jack Bonavita and Frank Montgomery directed.

SOME OF THE SCENES THAT MAKE EQUITABLE'S PRODUCTION OF "TRILBY" AN INTERESTING RELEASE

TRILBY, THE MODEL | TRILBY, THE WORLD-FAMOUS CONTRALTO | TRILBY, THE WOMAN

"TRILBY"

(Equitable—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THE Equitable Motion Picture Corporation's film production of "Trilby," based on the Paul Potter stage version of de Maurier's famous novel, was given its trade showing at the Forty-fourth street theatre, New York City, on Monday evening, September 6.

The importance of the event had been heralded in film circles for sometime previous, with the result that the audience was a representative gathering of theatrical and film people.

Everybody went away with the feeling that he had witnessed one of the best pictures of the year. In many respects it was better than the spoken play. Many scenes impossible to treat on the boards were given satisfying pictorial exploitation. The whole drama was presented with due regard to the requirements of technique, the sequence of plot development moving forward with a certainty of touch that is a tribute to the scenario writer and the director.

The inimitable Clara Kimball Young was cast for Trilby, and in the rendition of the part she added to her histrionic laurels. Some of the best things accredited to this famous screen actress were registered in this subject. She portrayed the attributes of the character with all the delicacy of feeling and emotional appeal called for by the requirements of the part. Clara Kimball Young made Trilby measure up to the average person's conception of the character in the book, a very difficult thing to do with the majority of fiction personages.

Ability, grace, beauty and finished acting, the result of years of training—all these Clara Kimball Young has brought to the role, making it one of the parts by which she will long be remembered among motion picture audiences.

Her work will have the effect of sending old readers back to the book with a desire to renew acquaintance with the simple, touching story of the artists' model in the Paris Latin Quarter, and creating a desire among those who have not already read "Trilby" a wish to peruse the novel. In both cases, the spectator will want to see the picture again.

Wilton Lackaye, who created the stage part of Svengali, the wandering, erratic musician, gifted with the sinister power of hypnotism which he exercised over Trilby, probably exceeded his own former acting in his present assumption of the role.

Paul McAllister gave a pleasing characterization of Gecko, the pupil of Svengali over whom the master casts an uncanny spell, inducing the young musician to aid in the scheme to make Trilby a great singer for the enrichment of their own purses.

Chester Barnett made Little Billee, the youngest of the Studio Three Musketeers, a likable person. The supporting cast gave the principals able support.

The Paris scenes, made in this country, are excellent examples of motion picture studio ingenuity.

The musical accompaniment to the picture on the opening night was impressive. It was arranged by S. L. Rothapfel, former manager of the Strand theatre, New York City, who also arranged the musical program for the first part of the entertainment, an exhibition of war pictures, entitled "With the Fighting Forces of Europe."

"THE CURIOUS CASE OF MEREDITH STANHOPE"

(Kalem—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2D

MEREDITH STANHOPE, a famous artist, is infatuated with a mercenary actress known as The Firefly. This woman dupes him into giving her valuable paintings. He introduces her to his invalid friend, Eustice Kennedy. Kennedy also comes under the woman's spell, and Stonhope discovers the two in a compromising position.

Disillusioned, he is about to commit suicide, when a country boy who aspires to be an artist asks Stanhope to teach him painting. Believing in the transmigration of characteristics, the artist wills his health as well as his art treasures to Kennedy, and takes his protegee to another city.

Kennedy, persuaded that he can now become healthy, actually becomes so. The actress prevails upon him to sell Stanhope's pictures at auction. The artist returns to his home in time to stop this proceeding and to marry Kennedy's sister, whom he now recognizes to be in love with him. Kennedy, believing that the artist has returned to take back his vitality, falls dead.

The cast is very well balanced, and in spite of occasional unrealities, the action is made convincing.

The title role is played by Harry Millarde, while Arthur Albertson takes the part of Kennedy. Other parts are played by Alice Hollister, Stockton Quincy and James B. Ross.

"THE COUNTRY PARSON"

(Biograph—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2D

ALTHOUGH acted in America by Americans, this adaptation of Balzac's tragic love story of the same name has a flavor undeniably French. The sets and outdoor scenes are so well selected that an Old World atmosphere is created, and the prototypes of the characters represented by the actors may be found in any French province.

Veronique Sauviat, a romantic girl in love with Jean Tascheron, is forced into a loveless match with an old man who abuses her. Tascheron wishes to take her away, and to get the means, goes with her to rob an old miser. The miser appears, and Jean is forced to murder him to save Veronique's good name.

The crime is traced to Jean and he goes to the guillotine, while Veronique must suffer the living hell of remorse.

Louise Vale makes an emotional Veronique, and Franklin Ritchie is the ill-fated Tascheron. The cast also includes Charles H. Mailes, Jack Drumeir, Clairette Clair and Gretchen Hartman. Travers Vale is responsible for the very able directing.

DRAMA VIES WITH ANIMAL COMEDY IN CURRENT UNIVERSAL RELEASES

"JOE MARTIN TURNS 'EM LOOSE"—NAT GOODWIN IN SCENE FROM "BUSINESS IS BUSINESS"—"THE WOUND WILL NOT BE SERIOUS" (HERBERT RAWLINSON AND ANNA LITTLE IN "THE QUEEN OF HEARTS")

"BUSINESS IS BUSINESS"

(Broadway Universal Feature—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

FULL scope is given Nat Goodwin for the exercise of power over laughter and tears in this screen adaptation of Octave Mirbeau's famous French tragedy, and Goodwin avails himself fully of his opportunities in both instances. As a swaggering, cold-hearted millionaire, newly risen to the estate of riches, he is convincing throughout, and registers his pantomime with all the ease he has so often displayed on the stage. Especially effective are his moments of subtle comedy, so that if the piece had been confined entirely to humor the tsar would have carried it safely and securely.

But the plot must not be understood as comic, for it is quite the reverse. Isidore Letchat (Nat Goodwin), afflicted with the belief that business is the most important thing in the world, makes an attempt to bargain his daughter, Germaine, to a nobleman who has lost his wealth. Germaine, with a mind of her own rebukes her father as a modern Judas, and fortified with a love affair which brings motherhood almost before it brings marriage, blocks her father's scheme.

Lechat appeals to his wife for aid, but she refuses to be party to his plan and deserts him. Always resourceful, Lechat turns for solace to his favorite son, Xavier, a gilded youth, nominally a student in Paris, but chiefly a frequenter of Parisian cafes. He offers Xavier the gift of a gold mine in French Africa, if Xavier will influence a Government official, father of Xavier's boon companion, to remove a restriction that forbids the ownership of mines within military lines.

This Xavier accomplishes, but Isidore's further effort to sell his son to a marriage of noble rank collapses through the death of the son in an automobile accident on the road to Monte Carlo. Then Lechat, overwhelmed by the death of his son, and the accidental shooting of his mistress, sinks back in his chair, recalling his daughter's taunt: "And my own child called me Judas."

Then it is that Lechant sees, as his heart fails, a vision of the betrayal of Christ by Judas at the Last Supper, and the whole sordidness of his life is revealed to him.

Now this, you will agree, is not comedy. Nevertheless, the scenes of violent death in the production are slender in effect as compared with those in which Lechat disports himself: in a holiday mood, he drives away a family of tenants because of the birth of a child; or he is a gay figure in the cafes of Paris; or else he is the incarnation of a playful old dog in the apartments of his mistress; or, finally, he takes fiendish delight in outwitting a couple of crooks in the gold mine transaction.

All of which makes it quite evident that audiences will be glad to see Mr. Goodwin's abilities displayed in pictures that call for a fuller exercise of subtle comic pantomime than is possible in "Business Is Business."

Hobart Bosworth gives a dignified and wholly satisfying interpretation of Christ in the flash showing the Last Supper scene. Gretchen Lederer as Celeste, Lechat's mistress, Wellington Playter, as an impecunious nobleman, who enters Lechat's employ, and Mlle. Marguerite as Germaine Lechat, are entirely capable, and the rest of the cast serves as an excellent background for the star.

The photography is nearly everywhere adequate. Perhaps a little more care could have been taken with the interiors, particularly the Monte Carlo set which lacks the richness usually given scenes of the sort. F. McGrew Willis wrote the scenario, and Otis Turner directed.

"THE INCORRIGIBLE DUKANE"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

COMEDY and melodrama are the chief ingredients of this feature which tickled and thrilled, but mainly tickled the audience of the Broadway theatre during Labor Day week. It's John Barrymore in the title part, who cavorts gaily throughout the four reels. But he isn't so incorrigible after all; in fact, Dukane fearlessly defies old Noah Webster, the well-known compiler of dictionaries, by completely reforming before the termination of the picture.

THE FUTURE BOSS OF THE DUKANE CONSTRUCTION COMPANY

Really "The Incorrigible Dukane" is a feature that will heartily amuse any variety of audience in the country. Mr. Barrymore's performance verges on the slapstick at times and is very funny whatever tactics he resorts to. The supporting cast, considerably well subordinated to the star, is capable of any situation that arises. William T. Carlton, Helen Weir, Stewart Baird and William MacDonald comprise the principal support.

The picture is based on the play by George C. Shedd and contains a wealth of comical situations and several of the melodramatic sort, all of which materially assist Mr. Barrymore in his unique manner of reaching his audience.

Dukane, the wayward son of a contractor, goes west to take charge of the construction work on a dam. While Dukane sleeps peacefully, a tramp makes away with his clothes and leaves his own, which are hardly worthy of that dignified appellation. Arriving at the dam, unwillingly incognito, Dukane is laughed at when he informs the superintendent that he is the boss's son. However, he is given work. But Dukane's disguise serves him in good stead, as he discovers that the superintendent employs crooked business tactics.

At length he succeeds in convincing half of the employees that he really is younk Dukane, and then follow some exciting battles for possession of the dam. Dukane finally wins out and is able to turn the rascally superintendent over to his father.

Of course most of the comedy happens while Dukane meanders about attired in the tramp's raiment. He is very funny nursing his sore foot and his sweetheart's hat, which he carries close to his bosom. And that reminds us that there is a little love story thrown in with the comedy and the melodrama, all of which combine to make "The Incorrigible Dukane" an enjoyable feature.

"JOE MARTIN TURNS THEM LOOSE"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is an animal picture, but not an animal drama. It is a comedy and one of the most startling forms of humorous amusement that we have ever laid eyes upon. Many dramas featuring carnivori become vapid as time goes on, chiefly because their principal players refuse to enter into the spirit of the thing. But such is not the case with "Joe Martin Turns Them Loose," for the wild beasts allowed to freely ramble about during the exposition of two thousand feet of film, do so with an unusual display of ferocity, which strikes terror into the hearts of the poor humans in the pictures but makes the spectator heartily laugh and wonder who had the nerve to do it.

A pet orangoutang bearing the dignified name of Joe Martin perpetrates the deed that is responsible for the confusion and laughter that lies in the two reels. Joe just for diversion opens the gate of every animal cage in the circus and consequently the wild beasts wreck an entire town.

An elephant shoves the police station in the river, tigers enter a millinery establishment and completely devastate its contents as well as petrifying the occupants, several bears wreck a delicatessen store, an entire boarding house is thrown into pandemonium by the unheralded entrance of all varieties of animals. All this and a lot more that is both thrilling and funny.

Paul Bourgeois, the noted animal trainer, prepared the scenario and produced the picture with the assistance of Rex de Rosselli. It is evident that Mr. Bourgeois fully understands the whims and eccentricities of the inmates of the jungle, but even so it is a wonder that he and all the rest of the players who dared poke their heads within camera range are alive today.

"Joe Martin Turns Them Loose" is really one of the most novel pictures that have ever held the screen. It will please the public because of the wonderful daring of the humans who appear and its many humorous incidents, each one of which is as novel as the picture itself.

"NO ONE TO GUIDE HIM"

(Keystone—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

MANY a true word is flashed upon the screen. In this instance it is absolutely true. He had no one to guide him, and so he wandered from bad to worse, into the frying-pan; he lost all moral sense, sense of location, proportion, his grasp on known cosmic properties, his watch and his equilibrium.

Automobiles whirled him from the scene of his domestic infelicities, and from the retribution for his commercial peculations; panel doors opened before him, trap doors sprung under him; minions of the law rose up around him, tattered and dog-bitten; but Fate spread its pinions over him like a borrowed umbrella, and a sword and pistol are thrust into his hands, together with a knowledge of the workings of the trap door, so that the pursuers are confounded.

If, from this, it be inferred that there is a certain amount of "rough-house," let it pass. If knocking one man down seven separate times with a bung-starter, and giving nine other persons a taste of the same experience once each; if stabbing men through curtains with an ancient sword; if filling men and women full of bullets from convenient revolvers, and then dumping them down secret slides; if interrupting a dining party by clearing the room of diners, table and dishes, be "rough-house," make the most of it.

The plot is outlined above with the same incisive clearness that it is on the screen, but there is too much action to make a plot necessary, anyway.

Incidentally, this is the last Keystone comedy to be released on the Mutual Program.

"THE MONEY MASTER"

(Kleine-Edison—Five Parts)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THIS picture is a drama of big business and modern tenement conditions—a subject that is, to be sure, not new, but nevertheless is of perennial interest both on the screen and the stage. Cleveland Moffett's play, "The Battle," forms the basis of the piece, which is concerned with the career of Haggleton, a domineering, criminally-successful capitalist who ruins all his rivals, and alienates his wife because of his cold-blooded methods, driving her into poverty on New York's East Side.

Many years afterwards, he finds there his son, grown to young manhood and become a deep-sea diver under the tutelage of Gentle, a picturesque character of the Ghetto. The discovery leads Haggleton to take a hand in the betterment of his own unspeakable tenements, and to a reformation that involves the gift of a million dollars for alleviation of the condition of the poor. Romance is abundantly supplied in the love that springs up between Phil, Haggleton's son, and Margaret, who becomes a tenement-worker after her father, ruined by Haggleton, commits suicide.

The producers of "The Money Master" have done well not to make the picture a sermon on tenement-evils for the picture-goer is not interested in preachments. He wants to see stirring narratives, clever comedies, or anything else that flashes with life. And this last is what he will see in this picture.

Frank Sheridan, as Haggleton, vitalizes the plot, and keeps it from becoming too much of an uplift affair. Sheridan has, first of all, the necessary physique for the popular conception of the capitalist, and what is just as important, he has an understanding of the fine art of restraint that does not need to resort to ranting or violent acting in order to accomplish its ends. Especially effective are his moments of remorse after finding Phil, his own son, a victim of his own greed and ruthless disregard of the necessities of the poor.

Paul McAllister gives an entirely lifelike impersonation of a Russian anarchist, and Fania Marinoff is pleasing in the role of Jenny Dvorak, his daughter. Of the other members of the cast, all of them capable, Sam Reid's Gentle merits especial notice.

A careful eye for detail was exercised in the interior settings, particularly in the Ghetto hovel scenes. A judicious use of the pruning-knife on subtitles will probably be made by the producer before he shows the picture to the public, as there are too many of these to permit the action to move as quickly as it might. The production was directed by George Fitzmaurice.

"ESMERALDA"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"ESMERALDA," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, contains merely the shadow of a homely plot. Perhaps the story could have been told on the screen in one thousand feet of film, but if such a course had been decided upon by the producers the screen would have gone without some of the most delightfully human situations that it has ever reflected to the eyes of an admiring audience. A picture such as "Esmeralda" refuses to miss a lack of plot aggressiveness, for practically each successive scene visualizes a situation that brings tears or smiles.

ESMERALDA AND HER FATHER ARE LOATH TO LEAVE THE OLD HOME

What sort of a photoplay "Esmeralda" would have presented without Mary Pickford is hard to surmise. For such a sympathetic characterization does Miss Pickford render in the title role that Esmeralda and Little Mary will forever appear as one in our eyes. The four reels exhibit an appealing series of her inimitable interpretations of various human moods, from unconfined happiness to deepest sorrow, and so comprehensible are her expressions that she completely wins her audience in each one of these phases.

"Esmeralda" was produced by James Kirkwood. He has furnished the beautiful story with a setting that does justice to the action itself. The comfortable living room in the farm house is particularly pleasant, while the rooms of the metropolitan residence are entirely appropriate. Besides, Mr. Kirkwood should be given credit for the evenly running picture itself. It could hardly have appeared to better advantage.

Fuller Mellish, playing the father of Esmeralda, is most pleasing as the companion in joy and sorrow of his little daughter, while Ida Waterman as his upstart wife, Charles Waldron as Esmeralda's lover and Arthur Hoops as the Count give capable support.

The story relates how the suddenly discovered riches of Esmeralda's family separates her from the man she loves. Her mother's social aspirations being lofty, influence the woman to tell her daughter that her lover is dead. And then she sorrowfully accepts the Count's offer of marriage, but in the crowd outside the church she recognizes her David. The mother repents her evil ways and the picture closes with all of them back on the old farm.

Labor day afternoon the Strand theatre was crowded to overflowing and correspondingly speaking, so was every eye in the house.

G. M. ANDERSON ADDS TWO-REEL DRAMA SERIES TO REGULAR RELEASES

The popularity of the Essanay Western photoplays has increased so greatly that G. M. Anderson now is putting out a series of two-act dramas besides his regular releases of one-act Broncho Billy films. The first two-reeler is "A Convict's Threat" and will be released September 28.

"THE QUEEN OF HEARTS"

(Gold Seal-Universal—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A GAMBLER always "on the square" save in the immediate environs of his establishment where business demands questionable methods, is a well-known figure on the American screen. He holds the same idolized position in the hearts of some people as the indomitable detective among the motion picture goers of Europe.

And so it seems entirely reasonable to assume that "The Queen of Hearts," a drama that boasts of just such a gambler, will easily ride on the topmost crest of popularity with the many folk who patronize the Universal output.

Herbert Rawlinson's suitability for this role is obvious to those who have seen his work in other pictures. He invests this character with such a pleasing degree of gentlemanliness and keen wit that he is continually the center of attraction. His support consists of such popular players as Anna Little, William Worthington and others of less note, including Barney Furey, Jack Wells and Cora-Belle Bonnie. Under the direction of Mr. Worthington the players have appeared to good advantage in their respective parts.

The settings of the play are as good if not better than any that have come from the studios at Universal City while the photographic effects are not to be adversely criticised.

The story is by L. V. Jefferson and leaves little room for remarks of a deprecatory nature. It is swift-moving, developed smoothly and contains many a situation that materially heightens the interest. The story in brief concerns the reformation of the gambler. He quits the game for the sake of his fiancee and incidently cures her father, who holds a government position, from any further dabblings in poker and roulette games.

Besides this he performs a great service to the entire family by saving the son from the clutches of spies and regaining valuable papers of the father's.

Finally the venerable gentleman, seeing the inestimable favor that the one-time gambler has done the family, heartily sanctions his daughter's marriage.

"THE MAID OF THE WILD"

(Balboa-Pathé—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

SAYS the Pathé publicity department: "Marguerite Nichols has never shown to better advantage than in this tale of a mountaineer's daughter, who loved an idea, but hated its realization." This is an accurate description, both of the picture and the actress, but all the credit is not due to Miss Nichols; there is much to be traced to the director who saw the possibilities in the story and the adaptability of the star, and put them together with rare sympathy and discernment.

The story is logical and of wide appeal. The touch of nature is true enough to overcome the little irregularities which will always exist as long as films are made by human agencies, and the director has utilized these touches in places where often cumbersome and lengthy titles are employed to achieve the same object. It is one of those differences which mark the line between a sculptor and a blacksmith.

Lucy, an orphan of the mountains, has the care of a little brother and sister. A millionaire, sent to the mountains for his health, meets her, falls in love with her, and she forsakes her native sweetheart for him. They are married, and he takes the whole little family back to his vast mansion.

Lucy does her best to accustom herself to city ways, to elaborate gowns, maids, and the "so-good-of-you-to-come" which figures so prominently at afternoon teas, and is about as important as the tea. She fails in many cases, and on being upbraided by her husband after a particularly flagrant breach of etiquette, decides that the life is all wrong, and seizing the two children, slips back to the mountain cabin. Her husband commandeers an automobile and pursues her finding her alone on a knoll by the creek, dressed in her old rags. There under the stars and in the solitude of the forest, they reach a true understanding of the meaning of love and life.

The ending is as artistically told as the rest of the story, and leaves a glow of warmth with the spectator, which is the kind of thing which raises a feature film to a thing of real art. Miss Nichols has the able support of Gordon Sackville and other capable actors.

"THE RAJAH'S SACRIFICE"

(Centaur-Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THERE is enough majesty in the presence of real wild animals, photographed in all their wildness, to give any two-reel picture an absorbing interest. When they are made the settings of a story of their own climes and haunts, the picture is bound to stand out among other offerings. This is the case of "The Rajah's Sacrifice."

There is apt to be a little disappointment that the story does not revolve around the animals, or that they do not figure to a greater extent in the telling of it, but the whole composition is testimonial to the fact that if crowds of savage lions, tigers and other gigantic cats, with elephants and bears are herded before the camera in the midst of jungle vistas, there is enough action and red-blood to distract attention from the "story."

Captain "Jack" Bonavita is again the hero of the lion's den. He is the Rajah, who, when the English officer's niece is kidnapped, plots to free her by making her his wife, technically. He is killed and she is condemned to be burned on the funeral pyre with him, but the priest, attracted by her beauty, arranges a trap door in the pyre, and she is saved. Later she is rescued by the officers.

During the action of the story, the women walk through an enclosure occupied by a handful of snarling lions, brave tigers in their jungles, and ride through quaint streets on the backs of elephants. This is the whole part of the animals in the picture, except a fleeting flash of a lion pouncing upon the Rajah, and one enthroned in state upon a pedestal in the royal audience hall.

The scenes of city streets, temples and life in India are so carefully and thoroughly done as to have a real educational value and strengthen the film wonderfully. Mlle. Ottowa, Roy Watson, H. Batty, M. Gay and Vera Robson, assisted by Mlle. D'Orsay, Gavette, Ora Cecil, G. Tiez, T. Hayes and E. Capon, of the Bostock training forces are prominent in the picture.

THE RAJAH TO THE RESCUE

"THE JUNGLE LOVERS"

(Selig—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

FILLED with action from start to finish, this three-reel Diamond Special portrays an exciting romance of southern Africa. The Selig jungle-zoo with its wild scenery, its bands of scantily attired native Africans and its variety of apparently untamed animals, supplies settings so appropriate, that it is hard to realize the picture was not taken in the jungles of Africa.

The battles between the whites equipped with guns, and the natives armed with their primitive spears and shields are fiercely fought; the introductions of the wild beasts are effectively made; the cave filled with blazing gases offers a unique scenic effect for the camera and the explosion which blows the old inventor into unconsciousness is ghastly in its realness.

James Oliver Curwood wrote the story which tells how a little boy and girl, whose respective families have been wiped out by the tribe of hostile savages are picked up by Van Cleeve, an eccentric scientist.

Van Cleeve builds a cabin at the mouth of a cave which is filled with inflammable gases and spends his life in perfecting the invention of a high explosive from these gases. His two adopted children, Naida and Jan, grow up with the wild creatures in the jungle and eventually fall in love with each other. Starling, an ivory trader, who meets Naida is attracted by her beauty. His courtship being unsuccessful, he abducts her, but Jan goes to her rescue and enables her to escape, though he himself is captured.

THE MARRIAGE

Starling and his band bind him to a tree, where he is left to the wild beasts, while Starling goes to Van Cleeve's cabin to demand that Naida be given up. Naida hides in the cave and Starling firing upon the cabin, explodes the scientist's powerful compound. This sets fire to the gases in the cave and Naida, coming out of the flaming entrance, runs upon a band of savages who, believing she is a witch, throw themselves before her.

She leads them to the rescue of Jan, and in the fierce fight which follows, they wipe out the band of ivory traders. Returning to the cave, they find Van Cleeve is not seriously injured.

The picture ends with the primitive wedding of Naida and Jan at the entrance of the cave.

"KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES"

(Gaumont-Mutual—Split Reel)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS is another score for the films. For some months the New York "Globe" and other newspapers have been publishing a series of drawings by a young man named Ragland Momand, working over the pen name of "Pop." These cartoons were chiefly remarkable for their lack of climax, and the absence of anything like dramatic action; although essentially illustrations, the lines assigned to the various characters did not lend themselves to illustration. Now, however, as "animated" by Harry Palmer, the "Pop" drawings have taken on real life, and "Keeping Up With the Joneses" appears as a series of living cartoons with almost a dramatic "punch."

The first release shows "Pa," "Ma," and "Julie" in the grip of the dance fever. "Pa" decides he must also learn, and becomes proficient in "the midnight throb"; but when he tries out his new knowledge in public, he finds the dance is at least a week old, and nobody cares to indulge in such antiquated steps.

On the same reel is an installment of "Seeing America First," a series of scenic views of this continent. This reel is devoted to striking glimpses of Au Sable chasm, with the Gaumont party negotiating the rapids in small boats. The pictures are exceptionally impressive, the photography being of the first order, and the selection of views made with artistic care.

PELZER, NOT PELDER, HAS JOINED KRITERION FORCES

THROUGH a typographical error last week, the name of John Pelzer, who has just joined the Kriterion Sales Corporation, was spelled "Pelder." Mr. Pelzer is so well known that no mistake could have been made as to the person meant in the article.

"TISH'S SPY"

(Essanay—Two Acts)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

THIS is the third one of the "Saturday Evening Post's" Tish stories written by Mary Roberts Rinehart, which has been filmed by the Essanay Company in the mountains of Tennessee. Richard Travers and Lillian Drew play the leading roles, assisted by the same cast that appeared in the previous offerings, namely: Camille D'Arcy as Tish; Marian Skinner as Aggie, Louise Crolius as Lizzie, Eugene Acker as Tish's nephew and Edmund F. Cobb, who in this number is the red haired detective.

STARTING ON THE TRIP

The comedy verges more on the slap-stick than do the other two, as for instance the scenes wherein all the cast, one by one, fall into the lake, and to cap the climax the irate village constable after he has arrested them, also receives a ducking when the engine of the motor boat back-fires. Much of the story's original humor is carried over by subtitles.

The plot, though rather weak, serves to connect up the adventures of Tish, Aggie and Lizzie on a camping trip through Canada. They advertise for a lady chauffeur to accompany Jane Newcomb, a wealth girl who has just turned down Jim McDonald, her suitor, on the grounds that he is a "money loafer," secures the position.

A detective whom her father employs to see that no harm comes to his daughter, and Jim McDonald follows the party, thereby arousing the suspicions of the old ladies.

The trials of camp-life prove to Jane that she must marry Jim in order to take care of him, so everything ends happily.

"THE MAN FROM OREGON"

(New York Motion-Mutual Masterpicture—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

BECAUSE as a whole it is so excellent and possessed of a drawing power which no live exhibitor can afford to ignore, this picture can easily stand some of the criticisms which have long been yearning for expression.

The story is one of Washington official life, always of absorbing interest to the whole public, and the atmosphere of the capital, the Senate Chamber, and the congregations of official characters, has been reproduced with remarkable faithfulness. If the Senate scenes were not photographed in the chamber itself, the set is one of the most remarkable ever constructed in a studio. One can almost pick out various senators, and the president is Thomas Marshall to the life.

The railway lobby plans to "get" the new senator from Oregon. As he cannot be cajoled into voting for their bill, the woman lobbyist is called in, and the old trick of putting the victim in the position of having attacked her in her home is resorted to. This time, probability is strained when the main lobbyist takes a photograph of the "attack" and holds the negative as evidence.

The woman repents her part, and tries to get the lobbyist to surrender the negative; he refuses. But instead of the simple expedient of declining to make the charge, or exposing the blackmail, she burglarizes the safe where the negative is kept. The lobbyist bursts into the office just as she has seized the negative, but instead of throwing it to the floor and smashing it, she hands it to him, and he carelessly leans it up against a telephone, where a few seconds later she shatters it with a pistal shot.

In the first place, this blackmail scheme could not possibly succeed. It has been tried numberless times, notably on Senator Gore, of Oklahoma, in 1913, and has been beaten every time. And, furthermore, the lobbyists expose their hand at every turn. In one Case, while taunting the repentant woman with the evidence, the lobbyist holds the negative lightly in his fingers, where she could easily knock it to the floor and put it out of its agony.

Why, after this, does he carefully lock it in a safe and change the combination? The only answer which comes to mind is that the author distrusted his inventive faculty so greatly that he feared to lose one situation through logical solution, lest he be unable to create another.

These things need not worry the exhibitor, for the "Man from Oregon" is the kind of picture the average "fan" will want to see more than once. It gives the touch of "high life" and the glimpse behind the scenes in Washington which is irresistible. Clara Williams, who is featured in the cast, overacts her part, but is always pleasing, and is ably supported by Howard Hickman, Herschel Mayall, Fannie Midgley and Joseph J. Dowling.

"THE WOLF MAN"

(Reliance-Mutual Masterpicture—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

IF lingering suspicion that someone intended to picture a new type of character, or attack a condition which has long called in vain for exposure, is cast aside, this film can be accepted as a straightaway melodramatic story, told to entertain the masses, and well adapted for that purpose. There is nothing new in character, condition or story, and no effects in photography or stage device used to make it other than ordinary.

The wolf-man is simply our old friend, the sardonic villain of the spoken, shouted and gun-powdered melodrama, masquerading under a new name. He is just as heartless, just as remorseless, and his methods are the same, and retribution overtakes him on the same corner. He might be Lawyer Marks of "Uncle Tom's

MARY GUARDS THE FORMULA

Cabin," or Desmond Van Alstyne of "The Bloody Banker's Bride." In this case he is a manufacturer of pottery, who unknown to his honest partner, steals the formula for a new glazing process invented by an aged chemist and his grandson.

To get the formula his tool kills the aged chemist and blows up the laboratory; then attacks the younger man and his sweetheart, leaves them locked up to die from a deadly gas, and runs off to the directors' meeting with the formula. The wolf-man's tool finally turns on him and exposes him just as he is seizing control of the directors' meeting.

Ralph Lewis is convincing as the wolf-man, and Billie West does full justice to the part of the younger chemist's sweetheart. Others in the cast are Jack Brammall, Richard Cummings, William Hinckley, Alberta Lee and William H. Brown.

"THE GREAT RUBY"

(V-L-S-E—Lubin—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

CECIL RALEIGH and Henry Hamilton are the co-authors of this play, depicting the stirring battle of wits and sometimes fists waged between a group of international thieves and one lone detective. The pictorial possibilities of "The Great Ruby" are large enough to warrant an unusually thrilling production. There is situation after situation which, if developed properly and presented carefully, would make a photoplay of distinction and value.

But "The Great Ruby" is one of those pictures that has been marred by carelessness. It is not irreparably harmed, so if a few suggested improvements are made, the picture will have a wider appeal. A subtitle here and there, though not grammatically incorrect, could be written in an easier style. "These Men's," to cite an instance, is a stumbling block in its particular title.

Then, too, after a dummy villain has executed a realistic fall from a balloon, the illusion is spoiled by a jerk in the film, following which the real villain is seen lying on the ground. The dummy and the villain are not counterparts of one another. There are so many ways to remedy this faulty scene that to enumerate them is superfluous. Again Beatrice Morgan, playing Lady Garnett, spoiled a dramatic scene by fainting in a comedy style.

There are little incidents in the development of the story that fail to ring true. How, one may question, was the detective able to re-enact a sleepwalking scene when he was peacefully dozing while it transpired, and why does not the fiancee of the aviator give over the bracelet when she discovers it does not belong to her?

With these faults remedied, and we are sure that with a small expenditure most of them can be remedied, "The Great Ruby" can rank as a commendable picture. Its story is full of action and action of the most interesting sort, because the methods of the thieves and the detective are ingenious and cleverly wrought.

A great asset in behalf of the picture is its realistic English atmosphere, its beautiful scenes and its clear photographic work. The settings are magnificent and appropriate in every sense, even the street scenes appear as if they had been photographed in the real England.

The cast is headed by Octavia Handworth, who plays the leader of the thieving band. Ferdinand Tidmarsh is the detective, while Howard Mitchell, Charles Brandt, James Farrell, Douglas Sibole, George Soule Spencer and others render good support.

"HER HAPPINESS"

(Edison-General—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

RARELY has the beauty which underlies all nature been so well caught by the camera as in this picture. That which the artistic director constantly strives for—the expression of the simple desires, sorrows and passions of humanity, through the simplest human acts—has been achieved to an extent far beyond the average, and by keeping close to nature the higher levels of art are reached. Inanimate nature, left to itself, is the only field for the true artist to work in; and this applies also to human nature. This, however, is a truism, and its academic discussion is a waste of space.

Viola Dana is ideally cast in such surroundings. As a village girl, giving her first and only love to a childhood companion, she is unusually convincing, and certainly a pleasing shadow on the screen. Her father has ambitions for her, and although he finds nothing wrong with the youth of her choice (Johnnie Walker), he forbids the marriage, and orders the young man to keep away. The girl's mother, after the way of such, sympathizes with her, but can do nothing. There is, however, a Mrs. Curtis, who draws her sympathy from the fullness of her own bitter experience; she furthers their love, aids in the elopement, and makes her home with the young couple in the city. She is killed by a burglar's bullet, and leaves her fortune to the young husband, who is thrifty and successful already.

Then disaster overtakes the hard-hearted father. His speculations with the bank's money go wrong, and he must have more money to cover his margins by morning, or he is exposed and ruined. A telegram from the mother brings the young couple to the old home; they grasp the situation, and the husband telegraphs his banker to cover his father-in-law's margins in the morning. The final touch of simple beauty is given when the young couple take their old places in the village choir. The whole cast, which includes Charles Sutton, Nellie Grant, Gladys Leslie, Mabel Dwight and Helen Strickland, is excellent. Harry Beaumont, the director, is entitled to all praise for his achievement.

"VIA WIRELESS"

(Pathe-Gold Rooster Play—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

VERSATILE as the motion picture camera is, it has been taxed heavily in the scenes of "Via Wireless." There is little it is not called upon to do, and not once has it failed. But what is a greater joy, the director has not once failed, although he has had numberless opportunities to do so.

A BLOW FOR THE LIEUTENANT

What he has made out of "Via Wireless" might well stand as a monument to any producer, and no matter what the past performances of George Fitzmaurice may be, his reputation will rest on this accomplishment—and it should be safe for a long time.

Confronted with gigantic feats of melodrama, tense moments of drama, and gripping scenes of romance, he has not forgotten little details which would be beneath the notice of a lesser artist.

Gail Kane has been seen in pictures before as a diamond set in brass. These she has lifted above the mediocre, and one or two, notably, she has saved from absolute ruin. But one of the nicest things one can say of "Via Wireless" is that it is a vehicle almost worthy of Gail Kane. Her charm is eminently of the screen type, and she has excellent opportunity to exert it on the spectators.

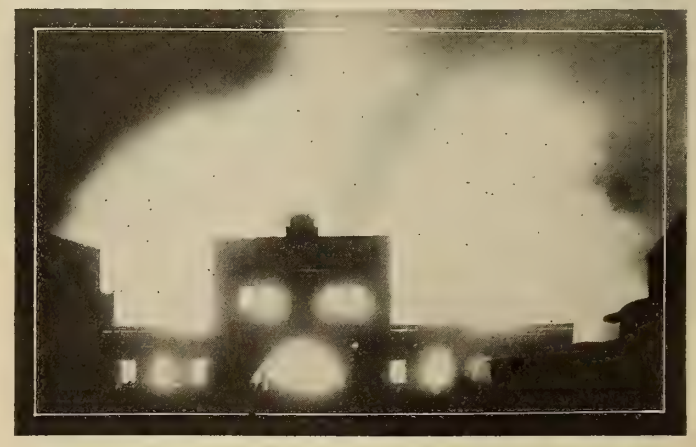
The picture is freely adapted from the play by Winchell Smith and the late Paul Armstrong. It is a melodramatic story of competition between two men in the invention of a new naval gun, and the competition of a wealthy man with one of the inventors (a naval officer) for the hand of an ironmaster's daughter. Through trickery, the officer's gun blows up at the test, killing two men, a mine sinks the yacht on which the girl and the officer's rival are cruising, and she summons the battleship on which the officer is returning from Turkish waters, through her knowledge of wireless telegraphy.

The most distinguished member of the cast is a man named Woodrow Wilson. He is shown addressing a vast multitude on the question of national defense. Immediately thereafter, flashes of West Point cadets at drill, and the Atlantic fleet on cruise are shown, and then we plunge into the story.

Impressive scenes showing the casting of great guns were taken in the Pittsburgh steel mills; scenes on the deck of a battleship actually show the dreadnaught "New York," both in dry-dock in the Navy Yard and at sea; scenes of the testing of giant guns were taken at Sandy Hook during actual firing; the home of the wealthy ironmaster is in reality the magnificent Indian Harbor estate of Commodore E. C. Benedict, at Greenwich, Conn.; glimpses of "Turkish waters" from the bridge of the battleship are nothing less than views of the shores of the Bosphorus.

With these settings, which must have been tremendously expensive in patience, time and money, and with such principals as Gail Kane, Bruce McRae and Paul McAllister, the way has been paved for a most convincing picture.

The melodrama includes the explosion of the mine, the sinking of the yacht in ten fathoms of water, the rescue of the heroine by the battleship's whaleboat, the throwing from the battleship of the lieutenant, who swims in mid-ocean until rescued by a schooner, and the wrecking of an automobile, which plunges over a cliff after its driver, the villain, has been killed by a shot from his pursuer.



Bruce McRae, as Lieutenant Sommers, is, as ever, convincing and natural. His work is difficult, but he handles it in masterly style. In fact, there is no moment in the whole five reels when any character fails to stick closely within his or her part.

The foregoing may be condensed into five words: "Via Wireless" is a triumph.

BURNING OF FACTORY STAGED IN FOX FEATURE

THIS remarkable picture shows the burning of a factory in the William Fox production of "The Little Gypsy," which is directed by Oscar Apfel, and the scenario of which was written by Walter Dare. The scene was made at night by dint of Mr. Apfel's expert knowledge of night photography. The factory which is supposed to be burned down by strikers, cost $5,000 to construct and occupied 110 laborers one month to construct. When it came time to apply the torch, however, it was ruthlessly burned, although it was almost as solid as a structure intended to be a permanent one.

The burning of the factory is only one of the remarkable scenes in "The Little Gypsy," which is screened with a massiveness rarely to be found in even the William Fox feature pictures. For another scene of this photodrama, in which Dorothy Bernard, who is now under exclusive contract with William Fox, to star, a dam 170 feet wide and six feet thick was constructed at Port Jervis, N. Y. The action of "The Little Gypsy" requires that this dam burst and inundate the surrounding country. When the time came to make the flood scene, dynamite was placed under the dam and was blown up.

THE BURNING FACTORY IN "THE LITTLE GYPSY" (Fox)

"THE CIRCULAR STAIRCASE"

(Selig Red Seal—V-L-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

A DETECTIVE story of the familiar sort, fully equipped with all the necessary complications and a few of the inevitable improbabilities, this picture will be welcomed by the large audience of film devotees who never tire of the mysterious. A shot in the night, three women rushing about to discover the cause, a lifeless body at the foot of the Circular Staircase, the disappearance of two men without apparent reason—and you have all the elements vital to a theme in which Poe would have reveled. The piece is based on Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel.

The plot is woven about a gracious personality, Aunt Ray Innes, who is sojourning with Halsey Innes and his sister

AUNT RAY SETS OUT TO FIND THE MURDERER

Gertrude, in "Sunnyside," the country home of Banker Paul Armstrong. The first night of their stay at Sunnyside the two women find Arnold Armstrong dead at the foot of the Circular Staircase.

Jack Bailey, Gertrude's intended husband, and Halsey disappear. Bailey, because of a quarrel with Arnold Armstrong, is suspected of the murder. A detective is called in, but fails to connect Bailey with the tragedy. Aunt Ray then discovers that her housekeeper is suffering from an injured arm. The Armstrong bank fails, Paul Armstrong goes West with his physician, Dr. Walker, and the newspapers announce that securities worth a million and a quarter are missing from the Armstrong bank.

The mystery is heightened when Aunt Ray finds Louise Armstrong, far from being West with her sick father, in the Lodge at Sunnyside, brought there by Old Tom, the butler, the night Arnold was killed. She refuses to explain her presence. The "death" of Banker Armstrong is reported, and Aunt Ray is asked to vacate the house at once. When she declines, Dr. Walker warns her that she had better leave Sunnyside before something happens that will bring her sorrow.

Here the unraveling process begins. Mrs. Watson, the housekeeper, dying in the hospital, tells Aunt Ray that she killed Arnold Armstrong after he had struck her with a golf-stick because she would not surrender the keys to the house.

Aunt Ray, determined to carry her ordeal through to the end, finds a secret room. Made a prisoner there when the door closes behind her, she is startled to see Paul Armstrong entering by a hidden passage. In his effort to escape, Armstrong is killed by a fall on the Circular Staircase.

A cash box found in the secret room contains the securities stolen from the bank by Armstrong and his confederate, Walker.

Eugenie Besserer creates a charming individuality as Aunt Ray in situations where gentleness and poise are not always displayed by many screen actors. Her naturalness more than once saves the scene in hand from being nothing more than artificial. Guy Oliver (Halsey Innes) is the typical hero of modern fiction.

The rest of the cast follows: Stella Razeto, Edith Johnson, William Howard, Anna Dodge, Jane Watson, F. J. Tyler, Fred Huntly, Clyde Benson, George Hernandez and Bert Grasby.

The photography, while it does not offer any extraordinary effects, is adequate. Edward J. Le Saint was director.

WILLIAM N. SELIG THE REAL PIONEER IN CALIFORNIA FILMDOM

ACCORDING to a Pacific Coast publication a movement is afoot to honor Frank Boggs. Honor paid the memory of any conscientious worker in the motion picture realm is laudable. However, exception must be taken to a recent editorial statement that Frank Boggs was pioneer in the western field and that he set up the first camera and built the first studio on the western coast. The editorial further says: "Not only the state of California but practically all manufacturers have benefited by the film colonization in California; for they were led into elysian fields by the discoverer, Boggs."

It is a fact well known to the pioneers of motion picture industry that William N. Selig was directly responsible for the first motion pictures to be made in California. Frank Boggs, years ago, requested employment from Mr. Selig. He asked to be sent to New Orleans. He went there and his sojourn was not entirely satisfactory. Mr. Selig said to him: "Boggs, go to California. The conditions there are ideal for the filming of pictures." And so at Mr. Selig's suggestion and at Mr. Selig's expense, Boggs went to California and established the first motion picture studio. Boggs was also equipped with a motion picture camera manufactured and supplied to him by Mr. Selig.

There is no effort being made to avoid giving Mr. Boggs his just deserts but according to the real facts, the Golden State is really indebted to William N. Selig.

SCREEN CLUB NAMES BALL COMMITTEE

AT a meeting of the Board of Governors of the Screen Club on the evening of Tuesday, September 7, King Baggot was named as chairman of the committee of arrangements for the annual ball of the organization, which will be held in the grand ballroom at the Hotel Astor on the Saturday evening before Thanksgiving. Mr. Baggot was authorized to make his own selections as to the committee to aid him.

President James Kirkwood appointed as a press committee for the event Arthur Leslie, chairman; J. H. Gerhardt, William A. Johnston, George Blaisdell, Fred Beecroft, Harry Innes, Robert Welsh, Hanford C. Judson, Wen Milligan and Luke Severens. Jule Burnstein will be in charge of the sale of boxes.

To confer with the temporary committee on the Motion Picture Hospital Fund and to aid it in any manner possible, President Kirkwood appointed Dave Wall and Billy Quirk.

LEHIGH VALLEY R. R. GIVES BEST TRAIN FOR PATHE PICTURE

THE Pathé producers, Wharton, Inc., succeeded recently in securing the most remarkable concession ever obtained from a railroad. In filming the first episode of "Wallingford" it was necessary to show the private car in which that famous high financier dazzles the inhabitants of the little "tank" towns.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad not only permitted the Whartons to attach a big steel flat car, properly equipped, to their best train, the Black Diamond Express, but stopped the train twice to allow for the taking of scenes.

KRITERION TO ANNOUNCE DEFINITE RELEASE DATES SHORTLY

THE Kriterion Sales Corporation, reported as setting back its releases from September 1 to 15, announces that it has not set any dates for release of its pictures, but expects to make a definite announcement shortly.

John Pelzer is now on a tour of Eastern cities to close contracts with exchanges for handling Kriterion subjects.

MALITZ STANDS ON PREVIOUS STATEMENTS

FELIX MALITZ, of the American Correspondent Film Company, declared recently to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, that he had nothing further to add to his statement in reply to the neutrality articles printed in the New York newspapers. An error in typing Mr. Malitz's signature led to the use of "Gustav" instead of Felix, his first name.

Keen Competition Among Producers Improves Posters

By Robert E. Irwin, of the Poster Division, Metro Pictures Corporation

Lack of Original Colors to Relieve Glaring Monotony of "Circus" Tones, Has Been a Prevailing Fault—Old Convictions in the Average Mind Have to be Uprooted—Present Development Follows Artistic Lines—Public is Keenly Alive to the Merits of Good Posters

IN the realm of moving pictures, no branch of the business has shown so little advance as has that necessary adjunct, the Poster.

Designed to herald the approaching film attraction and second in importance only to the film themselves, the poster has received little or no consideration at the hands of the film magnates.

The growth of the picture business has been so remarkable, and most of the manufacturers have made so much money in spite of themselves, that it is small wonder that some branches of the business have not received their proper share of attention.

With the coming of keener competition, however, when good pictures are bringing legitimate returns and poor ones are going to the discard, the need has made itself felt of better business getting and advertising methods. To put a moving picture properly before the public eye is now almost, if not quite as important as having a good picture.

Those with their ears to the ground began to hear the rumble of complaint from the public and exhibitor alike as to the usual poster which assailed the public eye from in front of every picture emporium. They began to realize, that to some extent at least, the oft repeated and much discussed objections of parents to their children going to see motion pictures, was based on the bad taste displayed in the posters, while the films themselves were mostly inoffensive and while not always good art, were in most cases at least harmless amusement.

Realized Difficulties Besetting New Path

Realizing the difficulties which lay in the way of any innovations, however, innocent, it was with some misgivings that I assumed charge of the Metro's poster department some months ago, for I felt that the chief difficulties would not be in procuring good poster designs, with the aid of good artists and good lithographers, but because I knew in advance the opposition that anything different would meet with from a certain class of exhibitor and exchange man. I knew that commendation for anything good that might be produced, from those inside who knew, would be offset by adverse criticism from those outside who didn't.

I owe it to the broader visions of the heads of the Metro and their faith in the ultimate victory of good advertising over bad, that we have been able to produce some good posters in the past few months, as well as some which while they did not come entirely up to our expectations were still away from the usual run of poster mediocrity.

A set conviction in the average moving picture mind is, that a poster must necessarily be a reproduction of a scene from the picture it is intended to advertise, and another is that it must contain a portrait of the principal actor or actress in the film. Without being considered an extremist, one must therefore follow closely the stills from the picture with small latitude for turning out anything original in the way of composition, nor must one stray too far from the original groupings of the figures, however bad, without meeting criticism.

Color one must have, the more the better, and if glaring better still. In fact, the old circus man's order for "a swell poster in seventeen colors, mostly red," applies with equal truth to the old fashioned moving picture ideal.

Under prevailing conditions of mind of the average picture man and what he considers business conservatism, proper development of poster art as applied to moving pictures is almost impossible, and as long as the hackneyed still photograph is slavishly followed for designs, really good posters will be an unknown quantity, for the simple reason that the photographs are of small artistic value and lend themselves with few exceptions not at all to poster composition.

Bans Work of Apprentice Artists in Print Shops

A large help would be lent the potser man, however, if the moving picture directors would use more care with his stills and would bear in mind the need of the advertising and poster departments of pictures which really meant something and which had life and action, in so far at least as the scenario permitted.

While still sticking somewhat closely to the original stills a good artist can sometimes produce sketches, which possess interest and a good color scheme, but the average picture man has been content in most cases to have his sketches furnished by the house which made his printing, and turned out by the apprentice artists employed in the printing shop. As these sketches are generally furnished without cost, the picture man felt he was getting something for nothing, and as usual in such case, that was about all they were worth.

One reason the usual printing house design is of small distinctive value and therefore poor advertising is, that with an eye to his employer's interests, in reproducing the design, the artist limits himself to the use of colors, which are always on the presses and therefore necessitate no washup. He revels in blue, yellow, black and red, and colors which can be made from these, and according as he uses these colors and no others he is a good artist in the eyes of his employer. Purples, lavenders, greys, and unusual greens are colors, not in his ken nor his paint box. Thus is his standard of art limited by his employment and his artistic worth is in an inverse ratio to his limitations.

The picture man who expects, and who really wants good posters, next to securing sketches of pleasing merit and advertising value, should exercise care in the selection of his printer. It is impossible to secure satisfactory results with poor material and inferior labor. The best sketch is but half the battle, for it can be surely ruined by unskilled and incompetent printers, and the picture man who pays for a design of beauty and merit, and then turns it over to the tender mercies of an unfeeling and wholly mercenary lithographer, might as well save his money in the first instance, for his results will most surely be unsatisfactory.

Public Easily Responds to Good Posters

In other lines of modern endeavor, where the poster has been developed along artistic lines the results have shown in a substantial way that the public is appreciative of and responds to good advertising designs. This has been proved by the increasing interest in and increasing sums spent by the big advertisers in getting the best to be had in their posters.

The reason that this country is so far behind the older nations in poster art, lies not with the artist nor with the lithographer, for both can be found here equal to the foreign product. In the case of motion pictures, at least, it is the lack of appreciation of the possibilities of posters as business getters on the part of the picture producer.

It is a mistake for the picture producers and distributors to imagine that the public, which is always keenly alive to a good picture, is not appreciative of a good poster.

Good posters will attract additional attention and cause commendation for god pictures, and it is only a question of time when this fact will be appreciated by those who are responsible for the present bad taste and poor craftsmanship of the average motion picture poster.

MILWAUKEE EXHIBITORS ELECT NEW OFFICERS HEADED BY SILLMAN

Special to Motion Picture News

Milwaukee, Sept. 8.

At its monthly meeting, held in the club rooms of the Plankinton House, Friday afternoon, September 3, the Milwaukee Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association held its annual election of officers.

John H. Sillman, manager of the Liberty theatre, and for a number of years very prominent in local film circles, was elected president; Philip O. Gross, manager of the Strand theatre, vice-president; B. K. Fischer, secretary, and Harry D. Graham was re-elected treasurer. In addition to the officers, the following board of directors was elected: Col. O. Preusser, Henry Trinz, Samuel Trinz and S. Grauman.

The meeting was very well attended and all the exhibitors seemed very enthusiastic over the outlook for the coming season. Business on the whole has proved very good this summer, the weather being unusually cold.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR THE BUSY EXHIBITOR

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"A Lasting Lesson." (Biograph. One Reel. Thurs., Sept. 16.)—A sermon on the evils of intemperance. Because her father is addicted to drink, the girl forswears marriage. Her lover, disgusted by the other's weakness, reprimands him, and the drunkard strikes him down. The girl, resolved to try a desperate remedy, makes her father believe he is a murderer. The lover arrives in time to save the father from suicide, while the father, believing he is in the presence of his victim's ghost, is immediately sobered.

"The Girl and Her Trust." (Biograph. Re-Issue. One Reel. Fri., Sept. 17.)—A melodrama featured by a thrilling race between a train bearing rescuers and a handcar driven by two tramps who have stolen a shipment of gold. The girl clings to the handcar in fulfillment of her trust as guardian of the gold, and is rescued after a fight.

"Heart Trouble." (Biograph. One Reel. Sat., Sept. 18.)—Badly smitten, a young novelist follows a beautiful girl home, learns that her father is an eminent heart specialist, and, determined to meet the girl on any pretext, deluges his system with strong coffee to produce symptoms of heart trouble. When the father withholds his consent to the marriage, the lovers elope. This is a clever comedy drama, well acted.

"The Man Who Never Was Caught." (Biograph. One Reel. Mon., Sept. 13.)—This is an old-style thriller, the first of a series of adventures in which an elusive crook always outwits his pursuers. A sensational chase over housetops, a gang fight in a low dive, and the crook's final escape on the way to the station house are the high lights in this picture.

"The Rehearsal." (Biograph. Two Reels. Tues., Sept. 14.)—A young playwright, seeing a young girl attacked by footpads, rescues her, takes her to his home and introduces her to his fiancee. The latter, impatient of his failure to become a successful author, grows tired of him. Just at this point, the girl whom he rescued finds his discarded play in the waste basket, acts the principal scene as he watches, and encourages him to re-write it. He does, and success comes. Needless to say, he does not marry the pessimistic fiancee. The usual thrill is provided by a scene in which the fiancee, maddened with jealousy, attemps to kill the playwright.

"The Soul of Pierre." (Biograph. Three Reels. Wed., Sept. 15.)—Waldimir, an artist, completes his devotion to his invalid model by taking poison, thus freeing his spirit to enter her body and renew her health. Loriot, another artist, hearing of the remarkable cure, resolves to perform a like sacrifice for his bosom friend. He throws himself into the sea, but is later rescued by fishermen, and returns home. His friend, who had by that time been restored to health, falls mortally ill. Pierre gets back his soul, and is married happily to the sister of his friend.

"The Manservant." (Kalem. Three Reels. Mon., Sept. 13.)—This is an unusual story, full of unexpected situations, which add to the tenseness of the interest. A wealthy man, in order to study sociological conditions, disguises himself, and is employed as a valet by a dissolute clubman. The clubman's brutality to his wife arouses the "valet," who has fallen in love with the woman, and later when the clubman becomes suspicious of his "servant" he tries to provoke him to open protest. With an unprincipled adventuress, the clubman calls at his home, and attacks the valet. In the struggle, the clubman is shot by his woman companion. In the cast are Jack Henderson, Robert Ellis, Eve Prout and Belle Slaughter.

"Romance a la Carte." (Kalem. Tues., Sept. 14.)—Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare are the features of this comedy of a restaurant. Both Bud, the waiter, and Garlico, the cook, are in love with Carmencita, the dancer, until Eva, the new cashier, appears; then in their rivalry for the new girl they wreck the restaurant, and the first shots of the battle awake a couple of slumbering policemen, who chase Bud and Garlico into the lake. The two policemen then supplant them in the affections of the two girls. Dave Morris, Martin Kinney and Margaret Keyes are also in the cast.

"Under Oath." (Kalem. Two Reels. Wed., Sept. 15.)—This is another of the Grand Hotel Mysteries, following a somewhat different line from the others. Prentiss, a young American, falls in love with Celeste on the steamer. At the pier he finds a peculiar ring, which he wears. Later, at the Grand Hotel, he meets Celeste, who is working as a manicurist. She sees the ring on his hand, and immediately evinces marked hatred toward Prentiss. After he has caught her ransacking his effects, she explains that her father was killed by a secret society, and she is seeking to avenge him through the death of a man she never saw, but who is to be identified by the ring. Prentiss tells how he found the jewel, and shortly after they learn that the real owner has died. True Boardman, Marin Sais, Thomas Lingham and Frank Jonasson compose the cast.

"The Key to Possession." (Kalem. Two Reels. Fri., Sept. 17.)—The dramatic story of a young couple estranged from their marriage day, and living in separate parts of the house. Although Gwen loves Tony, she had refused to marry him because of his dissolute habits, and has only consented after he has kidnapped and compromised her. Her pride will not allow her to confess that she loves him, and his friend, seeing this, attempts to blackmail her. She orders him from the house, and Tony, hearing the cries, rushes to her assistance. He thrashes the supposed "friend" and the two are reconciled. In the cast are Robert Ellis, Richard Purdon, Eve Prout and Steve Purdee.

"A Girl's Grit." (Kalem. Sat., Sept. 18.)—This episode of the Hazards of Helen series starts with a bank robbery. The robbers appear at Helen's lonely station, and after compelling her to give them tickets on the limited, lock her in the attic. Just as the limited is pulling out she smashes the window, crawls out onto the roof, and catches the top of the last car. She makes her way to the engine, informs thte crew, and the train is stopped. The suspicious robbers leap from the train, but Helen pursues them and keeps them busy until the train crew arrives. Assisting Helen Holmes are Robyn Adair and E. Z. Roberts.

"Breaking the Shackles." (Edison. Sat., Sept. 11.)—This is an unnatural story of a young doctor, helpless in the grip of the cocaine habit. In order to break him of it, his young wife conspires with another doctor and some more friends to have him accused and convicted of theft, and he is sentenced to a year in prison. There he is deprived of the drug, and escapes from its thrall. Herbert Prior and Marguerite Prussing lead the cast.

"The Silent Tongue." (Edison. Wed., Sept. 15.)—An amusing comedy, wherein a young man, tired of silly girls who do nothing but talk, and determined never to marry unless he can find a wife with a silent tongue, is led into matrimony by his guardian's niece, a pretended deaf mute.

Her power of speech is "restored" by the shock of a near-drowning accident in which the susceptible young man plays the hero. Jean Dumar, Robert Brower, Raymond McKee, Guido Colucci and Maxine Brown are the cast.

"The Call of the City." (Edison. Sat., Sept. 18.)—A simple story of a country girl, who came to the city to find work, failed, and found herself ejected from her room in a boarding house. She is seized upon by an underworld gang, but their plans are foiled when a quarrel starts and one of them is shot, and left dying with the frightened girl. A young novelist sees her plight, and gives her shelter, explaining when the police call that she is his wife. Later their story to the police "comes true."

THE TABLE OF CONTENTS WILL HEREAFTER BE FOUND ON THE PAGE FACING THE ACCESSORY NEWS COVER.

"Man's Law." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 13.)—This story of a fishing village is from the pen of Colin Campbell, director of "The Spoilers." Needless to remark he also directed this one, as the evidence is there. A more enjoyable two-reeler would be hard to find. Exceptionally clear and sharp photography serve to accentuate some beautiful exterior scenes. This coupled with excellent acting on the part of the principals and a god plot result in a better than the ordinary release.

"Weary Goes a Wooing." (Selig. Tues., Sept. 14.)—This Western comedy release from Selig is full of laugh-producing situations. The little schoolhouse in a cowboy community, and a new girl school teacher are used in a new and original setting that is a decided novelty. A welcome addition to any programme.

"Cocksure Jones." (Selig. Sat., Sept. 18.)—Another roaring comedy from Selig, with the Western cowboys furnishing the laugh provoking element. The would-be detective proves himself a pest, and the cowboys put him through a thorough hazing in order to frighten him out of his malady. As a result he captures a real rustler in spite of their plot and becomes their hero instead of their victim.

"Sonny Jim and the Amusement Co., Ltd." (Vitagraph. One Reel. Mon., Sept. 13.)—An excellent little "kid" comedy. Sonny Jim, told by the Sunday school teacher that he cannot go to the school picnic because he brought a huge bullfrog to school, organizes "The Amusement Co., Limited," as a counter attraction to the picnic, with amusing results.

"West Wind." (Vitagraph. Three Reels. Tues., Sept. 14.)—This is an Indian-military feature, starring Eleanor Woodruff, who is ably supported by Ned Finley, Harty Northrup and Eulalie Jensen and others. The rescue of a ranch owner's daughter, who is abducted by a half-breed cowboy, is the basis of the plot. The scenes for this production were taken in Texas, and a band of Indians is employed.

"Save the Coupons." (Vitagraph. One Reel. Wed., Sept. 15.)—Lillian wants Jack to give up smoking, until she finds that coupons are given with each pack of cigarettes. Then she wants him to smoke himself to death. He very nearly does, with the net result that they fail to get the premium they wanted, and Jack swears off. Lillian Walker and Evart Overton are the cast.

"The Shadow of Fear." (Vitagraph. One Reel. Thurs., Sept. 16.)—Haunted by the knowledge that his parents died insane, John Sterling confesses the fact to his sweetheart. Urged by a rival suitor, she tells Sterling she cannot marry him. The girl's aunt comes forward with proof that John was only an adopted son, whose real parents were killed in a train wreck, and all ends happily.

"The Professional Diner." (Vitagraph. One Reel. Fri., Sept. 17.)—The usual Sidney Drew comedy, perhaps a little more amusing than usual. Gregory Buxton, a young Englishman gets a job at a hotel as Guest No. 14 at all suppers where there are 13 in the party, with serious results to his digestion. Later, he falls heir to a title, weds Hortense, and when, several years afterward, their anniversary dinner lacks the fourteenth guest, Gregory solves the dilemma by bringing in his son and heir to fill the place.

"His Golden Grain." (Vitagraph. Two Reels. Sat., Sept. 18.)—Hart, a wealthy bachelor, discovers Elsie, the tool of crooks, attempting to burglarize his home. Instead of handing her over to the police, he takes her in, believing in her inherent goodness. He esapes unhurt from a wreck, and without denying the report of his death, returns home to find a crook trying to blackmail his secretary and his ward for trying to fasten a robbery on Elsie. In the fight that follows Elsie saves Hart's life, and of course becomes his wife.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Jinx on Jenks." (Komic. Sun., Sept. 12.)—Jenks, who has broken a window during an evening of revelry, is trailed by a detective, and locks himself into his office. In the morning the detective is still on guard, and Jenks telephones to his friend Max, who brings one of his mother-in-law's costumes, and an outfit of false hair, in which Jenks makes his escape. Gossips, however, see Max enter his hotel with a strange "woman," and notify his wife, who bursts into the room and orders Max to explain. This he does, to the discomfiture of Jenks. In the cast are Max Davidson, Frank Darien, Ann Slater and Pearl Elmore.

"His Guiding Angel." (Majestic. Two reels. Sun., Sept. 12.)—This is a dramatic story of an actress and a "bad man" from the West. The man sees the actress on the stage and idealizes him. He reforms, and in New York becomes acquainted with the actress, who is a heartless woman of the world. She, however, falls sincerely in love with him. A former paramour threatens to reveal her past unless she borrows money for him from her new admirer. She refuses, and is exposed, but the "bad man," recalling his own past life, takes her anyway.

"Out of the Sea." (Thanhouser. Sun., Sept. 12.)—A strong story of the conflict between love and duty, with several dramatic features which make it a real stirring picture. Falsely accused of embezzlement, a banker takes his daughter to live in a secluded fishing village.

One day the daughter rescues a man from drowning, and as he is recovering the two discover that he is a detective sent to track down the banker. The banker stifles an impulse to make way with the convalescent detective, and the latter falls in love with the girl.

The conflict between his duty and his inclination is at its height when a telegram notifies the detective that the real embezzler has confessed.

"Superstitious Sammy." (Falstaff. Mon., Sept. 13.)—Sammy's belief in omens makes all manner of trouble, especially when he plans to wed. Three times the ceremony is postponed, because of a black cat, because of the day, because he forgot the ring, and for numerous causes, all valid to superstitious persons.

Finally the bride-elect sends word that it is unlucky to wait so long, and that she is the bride of the best man. So upset is Sammy when he receives this news that he breaks a mirror.

"The Little Life Guard." (Majestic. Tues., Sept. 14.)—A delightful juvenile story of Adrian, who sees his little sweetheart Anita won away by a boaster, and consults Larry, the lifeguard, as to the best way to be a hero. Larry sends him back covered with medals, and he poses as a hero of the deep. Anita, to test him, pretends to be drowning and, rushing to the rescue, the two are swept far out. Larry rescues them. Violet Radcliff, George Stone, Carmen De Rue and Porter Strong compose the cast.

"A Dark Horse." (Reliance. Mon., Sept. 15.)—An impossible story of a newsboy, turned groom in a racing stable, who has care of a $100,000 thoroughbred. To raise money for his sick mother he enters the horse in a race for a $1,000 prize, bets al his own money and wins. The owner is furious at seeing his horse entered without permission, but eventually forgives the boy and takes him back into his employ. The cast includes Bobby Fuehrer, Fred Burns, Margie Wilson, Ben Lewis and William Rhyno.

"Shorty's Ranch." (Broncho. Three reels. Wed., Sept. 15.)—Although essentially a comedy, there is a succession of tense situations in this picture. An English baronet, owner of an Arizona ranch, is seized with the gout on his way to inspect the property, and hires Shorty, a cowboy, to make the inspection.

Armed with a roll of bills, Shorty decides to impersonate the Englishman, and is received at the ranch as Sir Cecil. He entertains extensively, flirts with the superintendent's pretty daughter and stirs things up generally. The real owner starts for the ranch and finds no one sent to meet him at Prairie Dog Siding, so his valet gets a wheelbarrow and starts with his gouty master on the ten-mile trip across the desert.

In the meantime there is trouble with "cattle rustlers," and the ranch is attacked, and the wheelbarrow caravan arrives just as the sheriff is putting an end to the battle. Shorty is exposed and makes his escape in the dead of night.

"The Rajah's Sacrifice." (Centaur. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 16.)—Reviewed elsewhere in this isue.

"The Knockout." (Cub. Fri., Sept. 17.)—George Ovey, finding the card of a count, impersonates him to win the doctor's daughter. He finds the daughter was not the girl he thought, bu instead is a 300-pound athlete, who easily knocks him out in the gymnasium. This gives him an idea, and he arranged that most of his enemies shall have a taste of the same experience.

"The Senor's Silver Buckle." (American. Mon., Sept. 13. Two reels.)—A drama of the old California days featuring the strife between the Spanish settlers and the "Gringo." George Davis (Ed Coxen) a young surveyor is instrumental in foiling the plans of Felipe (Geo. Field) son of Don Miguel, and wins Alise (Winifred Greenwood) for his wife. A good story with the excellent photography and acting so typical of the "Flying A" releases. Directed by Henry Otto.

"Incognito." (Beauty. Tues., Sept. 14.)—A society drama of high life in which some interesting situations are developed. Three different parties are arrested in conjunction with a theft of valuable jewels, the property of a wealthy society woman. A thoroughly enjoyable story with Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber in the leads and Lucille Ward as the woman of wealth.

"The Little Lady Next Door." (American. Fri., Sept. 17.)—This number contains a thoroughly engrossing heart-interest story that will please any audience. Louise Lester, Jack Richardson and Vivian Rich carry off the histrionic honors while Virginia Fordyce as the motherless child deserves special mention. How a child's life is saved, how a lonesome father's hesitancy almost causes her death, the doctor's opportune arrival, are some of the tense situations offered. Excellent photography throughout marks this release.

"A Friend in Need." (Beauty. Sat., Sept. 18.)—A good rollicking comedy is presented in this number with Frank Borcage, Beatrice Van and John Sheehan furnishing the laughs. Johnny and Beatrice get married secretly with Frank's help. The latter is the "goat," losing his girl, his job and his clothes during the course of the story. A thoroughly enjoyable number directed by James Douglas.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Business Is Business." (Broadway Universal Feature. Six reels. Mon., Sept. 13.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Too Many Smiths." (Nestor. Mon., Sept. 13.)—While based on a familiar theme, the capability of the Nestor cast and Al Christie's handling of the picture lift this to the level of a highly amusing comedy. An eloping couple and two crooks, both bearing the same name and both pursued by detectives, produced the laughter.

Lee Moran, as Potts the detective, is most comical, while his support is Eddie Lyons, Dolly Ohnet, Carmen Philips and Jack Connelly.

"The Queen of Hearts." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Sept. 14.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"How Early Saved the Farm." (Rex. Tues., Sept. 14)—Mayhap this will be of interest to children but hardly to others. Baby Early, appearing as the granddaughter of a destitute farmer, wins the heart of the agent by her sincere efforts to save all the livestock from his grasp. An educational closes the reel.

"A Shriek in the Night." (Victor. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 15.)—The story here presented is not sincere. Perhaps it is not meant to be taken seriously, but still it does not ring true. It's a romance with Jack Kerrigan and Helen Leslie playing the lovers and Norbert A. Myles the heavy.

Its scenes and photography are very beautiful. Toward the termination, when the hero rescues the heroine from the villain, he is shot in the thigh, but seemingly laughing it off he stops at a minister's house on the way home and gets married.

"Joe Martin Turns 'Em Loose." (Rex. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 16.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"In the Heart of the Hills." (Big U. Thurs., Sept. 16.)—Weak in dramatic value this offering will please because of its delightful mountain scenery. The plot merely displays the villainy of a girl's lover and the worthiness of her rejected suitor. Adele Lane, Edward Sloman and Seymore Zeliff are cast in the important parts.

"The Suburban." (Imp. Four reels. Fri., Sept. 17.)—This offering from a story by C. T. Dazey seems to attempt to break away from the conventional although carrying the burden of a common theme.

It was produced by George Lessey and features King Baggot, who appears as the greatly misrepresented son. This young man marries contrary to his father's wishes and is subsequently disowned. In the end he completely frustrates the man whom his father has made his heir, by rescuing his father's imprisoned jockey. A reconciliation follows.

The race serves as a climax to the action and is handled with an eye to its possibilities of suspense. Others who appear are Bill Bailey, Frank Smith, Ned Reardon, Florence Malone, Brinsley Shaw and Iva Sheppard. The picture offers pleasing entertainment without exhibiting anything out of the ordinary.

"Molly's Malady." (Nestor. Fri., Sept. 17.)—One of the Christie-Davey subjects with Jack Dillon, Billie Rhodes, Neal Burns and Jack Connelly in the leading parts. Jack as an M. D. makes a decided hit in the small town and succeeds in stealing Molly from her farmer lover. This is up to the standard of previous Davey subjects.

"The Surrender." (Bison. Three reels. Sat., Sept. 18.)—This melodramatic number draws a comparison between life and war. It features Marie Walcamp, who plays the part of a poor girl who, after receiving a small but telling sample of underworld life, prefers to settle down to married drudgery.

She refuses to have anything to do with her husband until she awakens to the fact that he dearly loves her. Joe Singleton plays opposite Miss Walcamp, while Seymore Zeliff as the heavy and Clarence Burton complete the cast of principals.

In some of its situations the picture fails to ring true, while the entire story is overdrawn. Its patrons are likely to be found among the unsophisticated.

"He Couldn't Fool His Mother-in-Law." (Joker. Sat., Sept. 18.)—This is one of Joker's best, written and produced by Allen Curtis. The mother-in-law penetrates the "night work" of her daughter's husband by disguising herself as a beggar and following him everywhere. This is laughable all the way through. Max Asher, Gale Henry, Lillian Peacock and William Franey are the leads.

"The Pine's Revenge." (Gold Seal. Two reels. Sun., Sept. 19.)—In which a forest ranger proves his worth by putting an end to a conflagration started by his enemies, and wins back the love of his one time sweetheart by rescuing her from the water. This is an average story written by Nell Shipman and produced by Joe De Grasse. Its Northern scenes and photography are most satisfying. Cleo Madison, Arthur Shirely and M. K. Wilson are the leads.

"No Flirting Allowed." (L-Ko. Sun., Sept. 19.)—One of the funny low comedies with Hank Mann leading. Both Hank and his boss flirt with each other's wife, and finaly the entire quartette lands in jail. Peggy Pearce, Dick Smith and Sylvia Ashton lend support to Hank.

"The Broken Coin." (Universal Special Feature. Episode 12. Two reels. Week of Sept. 6.)—This is called "A Cry in the Dark." Count Frederick rescues Kitty from the torture chambers benneath the palace. Kitty goes automobile riding with the king. The car is held up by Apaches, but the count again comes to the rescue. In the meantime Rolleaux escapes from the King of Grahaffen, who was planning to stage a fight between Rolleaux and the bull. The action is rapid and startling as usual.

"The Broken Coin." (Universal Special Feature. Episode 13. Two reels. Week of Sept. 13.)—"War" is the separate title of this number. Most of the action concerns Count Sachio (Ernest Shields), who believes he possesses both halves of the coin when in reality one is a subtstitute. Sachio is in a rough combat with Count Frederick, but Kitty rescues the latter. Besides this, the ferocious band of Apaches is captured by King Michael's soldiers. This instalment well maintains the standard of the serial.

WEEKLIES

This notice is addressed to the minority of our subscribers who do not regularly answer advertisements.

The service described is, however, open and free to all who wish our help.

We do not wish to discourage you from writing direct to our advertisers; in fact, you do not do enough of it for your own good, but we do want you to get the proper goods to fit your needs.

There are many, perhaps you, who are too busy to write each company separately; therefore we are offering our co-operation, which means that you will receive full information on any subject which you may designate by merely filling out the coupon, designating by numbers the goods in which you are interested.

Your inquiries thus received will be forwarded to reputable manufacturers, even though the goods on which you wish information are not advertised in the "News."

"THE GREAT QUESTION"

(American—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

THIS is the first of the American Film Company's new three-reel productions which will be brought out every third week under the brand name of Clipper. If the high standard present in this first offering is maintained, these pictures will prove a most popular addition to the Mutual program.

The story opens with a wedding rehearsal, after which Morton Bagley, Jr., the groom, returns to his apartment and sitting before an open fire proceeds to destroy the mementoes of his past.

The memories brought up by each of these take the form of visions which are skilfully and artistically visualized with much clever use of double and triple exposures. The series of these episodes ends by showing of his flirtation with an unscrupulous woman, who is paid $20,000 by his father for her promise to relinquish her influence over him.

The father in despair over the dissipation of his son, sends him to a Western ranch where Morton meets Flora Donner, the daughter of a rancher, and they fall in love. They are married and live in New York.

Flora discovers the duplicity and artificiality of both the men and women in New York society, when through an innocent indiscretion she is imprisoned by society vultures who thrive on family discord. Finally succeeding in getting word of her imprisonment to her repentent husband, he rescues her. They go directly to the station, pausing only long enough to dispatch a letter to his father.

The story, though rather involved for film presentation, is filled with action every minute and is most carefully staged and produced with excellent photography and tinting effects.

The characters of the participants are most ably acted out by a strictly star cast, including Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Harry Von Meter, William Stowell and Eugenie Forde.

FIVE ALABAMA BEAUTIES TO ACT IN CHICAGO FOR ESSANAY PRIZE FILM

The Essanay scenario and prize beauty contest, conducted in conjunction with "The Age-Herald" of Birmingham, Ala., is nearing a close. The scenario contest was won by Morgan D. Jones, of Dadeville, Ala. It is entitled "The River of Romance," and will be produced by Essanay at the Chicago studios and be released under the General Film Co. program.

AUTHORIZED STUDIO DIRECTORY

In response to an insistent demand from exhibitor subscribers Motion Picture News will issue in October a complete and authoritative directory of all directors, players, scenario writers, camera men, etc.

The directory will list each subject alphabetically together with a complete biography (and cut, if desired). This will be followed with a cross-index by studios and by occupations.

The prime purpose of this directory is—not merely to advertise the players, etc., WITHIN the trade—but ALSO to the public and upon a large scale.

The exhibitor will use the material in this number —EACH WEEK—to hand to his newspaper along with his program advertising copy. He is now using our regular issues for this purpose. But in the directory issue he will have a COMPLETE, READY-REFERENCE volume for PERMANENT use—giving him EACH WEEK interesting biographical items about those concerned with the pictures he is showing, which items serve best to bring the public to his doors.

The aggregate effect, therefore, of this issue will be to secure millionfold circulation for the players and their firm names.

The representatives of the Directory issue are J. C. Jessen, at our Los Angeles Offices; T. S. Mead, at our Chicago Offices, and Herman Holland, at our New York Offices.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS
222 West 42d Street, New York

IN THREE WEEKS TIME

Motion Picture News, in line with the standard and leading publications of the country, goes to the news-stands on a strictly non-returnable basis.

This step is an important one in the furtherance of our policy to acquire an intensive trade circulation—to place the paper in the hands of all those, BUT ONLY THOSE, directly and equally interested in its news and advertising columns, and thereby to protect the advertiser and ourselves against all waste circulation.

The news-stands, on this new basis whereby they cannot return unsold copies, will take care to place the publication only where a regular demand from the trade exists.

We strongly advise, therefore, that you send in your subscription to make sure you will get the publication every week, by mail, at YOUR DESK and EARLIER BY TWO DAYS THAN FROM THE NEWS-STAND.

B. A. ROLFE, Managing Director, Strand Theatre

To State Right Buyers:

"Guarding Old Glory" is selling faster and booking faster, than any picture of modern times. First, becaues it is the picture of the hour, dealing with the Big Question of the day Preparedness; Second, because it has the solid backing of the Press and Officials who have the guarding of the country in their care; Third, because it is full of action, wonderfully thrilling, and appeals to every American man, woman and child who sees it.

☛ Territory is going fast, and indications point to every State in the Union being sold within the next ten days. Wire YOUR bid.

WE WANT

four more exchanges. We want only four and we want these four only on a sound and permanent basis. We have plenty of applications: but we want only exchanges equipped and resourced as we are—not merely to start but to stay in business in a business way.

Our financial resources are open to your investigation. We own outright over two hundred high class subjects, sufficient for eleven weeks advance releases. Positives are being made under our technical supervision. Lithographs are ready to be shipped. No other announcements will be made until our distributing organization is complete and ready to deal with the exhibitor everywhere immediately and continuously.

If you are the kind of exchangeman we want, and if you want to be shown what we are—then jump a train to New York and talk business.

Wire us first and we will wire if your territory is open.

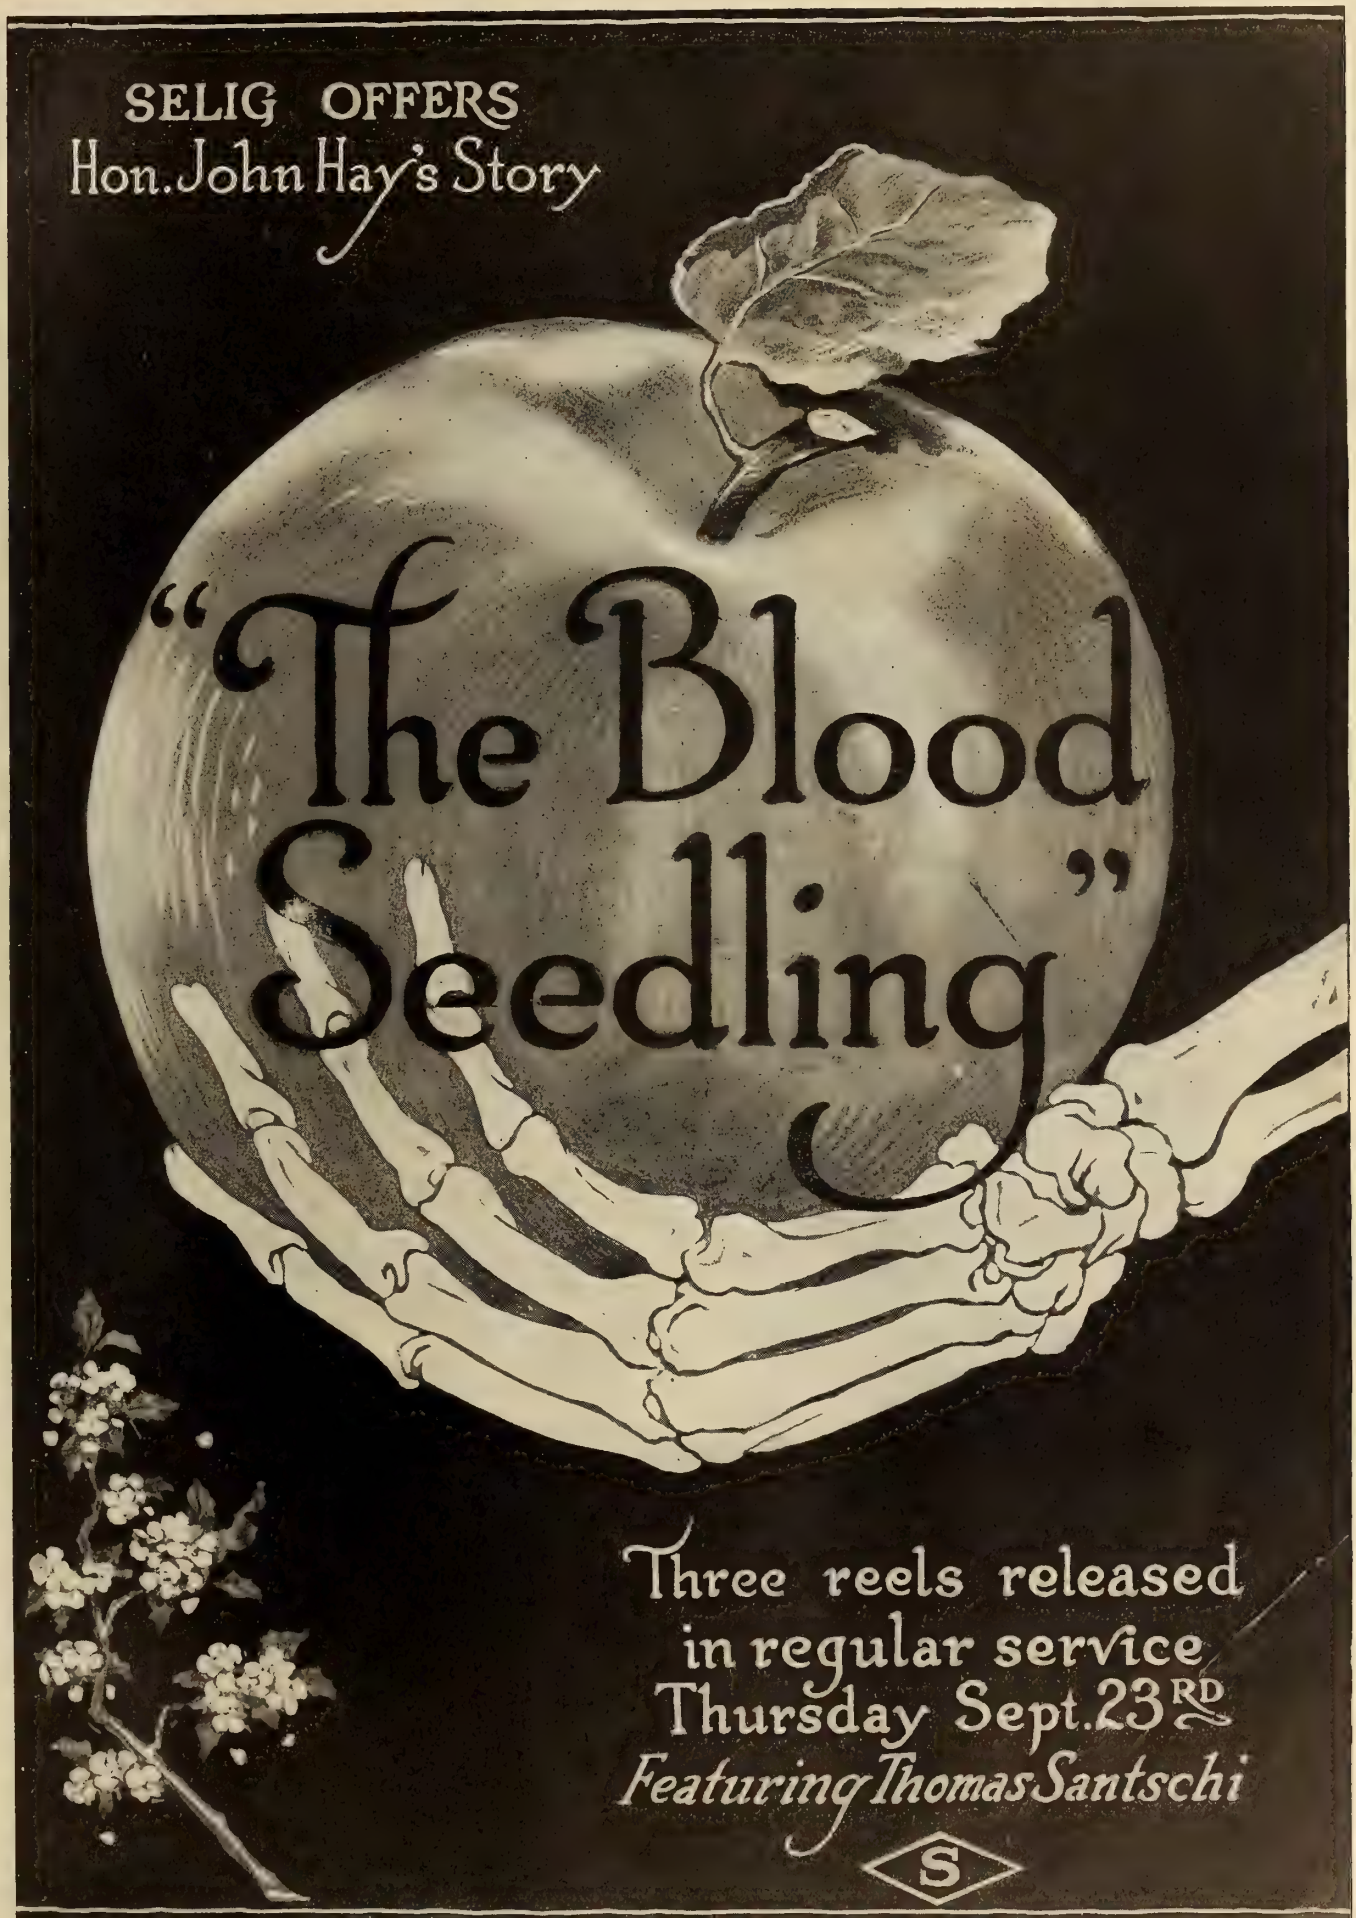
Viola Dana

In a play written especially to frame in and picture forth the charm and genius of this little artist

"Her Happiness"



In 3 Happy Acts

Harry Beaumont, screen-artful as actor and director, and with day-to-day study of this little girl to help him to know her better, wrote "Her Happiness" to let your public know the real Viola Dana better—to make them love her the more.

This feature is just Viola Dana, wholesomely sweet, living in a real story of life that we all have met. It's a simple theme but strong with situations, to sketch forth a sincerely convincing section of life.

Judged by the hodge-podge of "thrillers" by train-wrecking, automobile-smashing "dramas," "Her Happiness" stands out with a refreshing difference. It brings back memories of our own school and dream days, and somehow makes us feel better for the seeing it. Briefly, it's a "Viola Dana play." Your patrons will tell you—after the play.

GENERAL FILM CO.'S
Regular Service

How can an advertiser continue advertising? By giving YOU value.

You Are Buying Pictures—not Overhead

Just look at this matter of picture prices in this way: Pictures, so much; Business Office, so much; Exchange rents, salaries, etc., so much. Every added link adds to your price or detracts from quality. You can't put more than one hundrd cents in a dollar. Every eliminated element means lower prices and higher quality in pictures.

Associated Service is laid out on efficiency lines, with all the "red tape" cut out. Associated Service is a closely knit combination of producers whose artistic and manufacturing problems are separate and individual, but whose business and distributing problems and expenses are massed and concentrated in one office, so that everything costs a fraction of what it did before.

Here is the executive department for all,—the central sales office, which not only lifts the burden of selling responsibility from the producers' minds which should be devoted solely to picture making—but acts in addition as a central exchange. But Associated Service does not pay for offices located all over the country. It does not pay extravagant salaries to managers and assistants. Associated Service cuts all this off your price and puts it into the pictures. Under Associated Service methods independent exchanges act for us and you. Here is efficiency at last!

Why We Program Twelve Reels a Week

The best of us must admit that there are other good pictures on the market. And the exhibitor is coming to the point where he does not want his hands tied. Nevertheless, he wants a regular program for a solid foundation to which he can add as he will. Thus Associated Service furnishes 12 reels a week which is the right number for your regular schedule. This means that you will never pay for pictures you can't possibly use. There is and you can at any time headline any production you may desire.

ASSOCIATED SERVICE

FILM BUSINESS ON A BUSINESS BASIS

is a natural development, worked out by sound business principles, answering to the call of the exhibitor. Here are the most approved commercial ideas as found successful in the great businesses of America applied to motion pictures. Eliminated are the middle men. Eliminated are the tremendous overhead percentages. And, because independent exchanges give exhibitors better service Associated Program comes to you in that way.

Every Picture Must Measure Up to Standards

Here is the gauntlet every reel on Associated Service must pass before it gets to you and why it must be of a standard quality.

A committee composed of every member of the Association of Producers in Associated Service passes on each picture and you may well imagine that a majority of these is not going to permit one member to ruin the reputation of all others.

The exchanges being independent and considering what they can sell and what their patrons want are not, like those paid managers, going to take anything they get, they are going to insist on a quality that is up to the Associated Service standard.

This is why Associated Service guarantees you no dead wood in any single reel.

Now Releasing

At this moment a surprisingly large number of fine exhibitors are showing Associated Program. This is the first week of our releases and if you want to see a rounded, perfect, just sort of a program, go to the nearest exhibitor, or the nearest exchange and see the Associated Program. Associated Service gives you comedies, quick fire, glowing with humor, condensed, a laugh to every foot, regular laugh torpedoes, each with its war nose on.

Associated Service comedies are not forced. They are not slap-stick. They are the kind your audiences want to see. Associated Service gives comedies which will bring a laugh and make Associated a synonym for stuff that will bring them back.

Associated Service balances comedies with fine gripping, clean dramas by good authors, with fine actors.

There are no fillers in these films. Every instant bristles with attention-commanding action. Associated Service gives The Grand Prix Photo Plays special features in five and six reels, great dramas featuring well-known stars. Associated Service gives you protected service. 120,000 ft. of film all ready. Ten weeks supply constantly on hand, thereby cutting out another expensive factor, vexations and costly delays and interruptions.

Associated Service provides paper which gets the eye, whets the appetite and curiosity and leads the transient interest of the man on the street into the lobby past the box office.

Federal Special Productions!

NOTICE!

The Federal Film Company will hereafter produce only Special one and two reel comedies and dramas. The first of these will be, a screamingly funny two-part special comedy, featuring Gertrude Bambrick, who played lead in "The Billionaire," and numerous other Biograph features, and Harry La Pearl, former producing clown at the N. Y. Hippodrome, who starred in and directed MinA comedies. There is a supporting cast of fifty well-known funmakers. This film was written and produced by the demon comedy director

"THE WAITER WHO WAITED"

Exhibitors will do well to demand Federal Films on your program. They will pack your houses. Watch for announcement of the first Federal Special drama, a series of which is being produced under the personal direction of

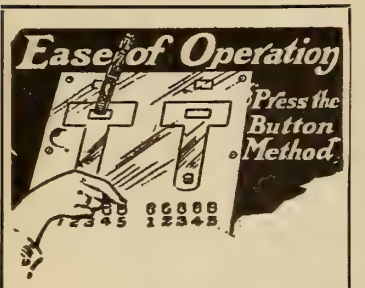
Only recognized stars of stage and filmdom will appear in these pictures. Book them now! The Federal Films are being released weekly on the

ASSOCIATED SERVICE

OVER many a weary and wandrous mile of moor and mountain, bog and barrier, with bare feet hacked and hewed by scrug and brier, Carina, the Gypsy maiden, roves up and down the great round world until, at the end of her faring, she finds fabulous fortune and love that knows no ending.



Carina is the heroine of "AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN," a five-act soul-stirring drama of rags, rogues and riches that unfolds as thrilling and as pleasing a story as has been put forth in many a long day.

William Bonelli for eight years played "AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN" across the length and breadth of North America. As a motographic production it excels in every way the stage presentation. Mr. Bonelli takes the leading role in the filmized version.

"AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN" is sold at prices so low as to astonish you. Better wire about your territory.

Feaster No-Rewind Machine

Bulletin No. 5

The Manager of the Decatur Theatre, 1676 Broadway, Brooklyn, New York, writes as follows:

"Since installing your FEASTER no-rewind machines on our three projecting machines we have not had a broken film, and naturally our audiences are better satisfied, which of course is our chief aim."

The use of the FEASTER machine means better projection, and both time and labor saved.

The FEASTER is easily and quickly attached to Power and Simplex machines, without mechanical change in same—simply replaces present upper magazine.

Motion Picture Projection Simplified

Copyright, 1915, by J. H. Hallberg

20 H—Define and illustrate the fixed resistance in series with a projector arc, and give an example how to calculate the amount of resistance required.

Ans.—For certain classes of work, especially in permanent installations where the voltage is always maintained constant on the electric lighting company's system, it is practical to install a rheostat within which all of the resistance is fixed or non-adjustable. The different makers of rheostats have different forms of construction, but the results from any one of the different makes are practically the same.

The accompanying Fig. 18 illustrates in diagrammatic form (without reference to the enclosing case) an ordinary non-adjustable, or fixed resistance for connection in series with a projector arc. By referring to the illustration, it is shown that after the arc is once started, the fixed resistance controls the current, therefore the amperes at the arc will remain constant as long as the voltage on the line is constant.

The example in question illustrated in Fig. 18 shows the line voltage to be 110, the arc voltage is 50, the amperes flowing through the circuit is 40. The drop across the resistance is the difference between the arc and the line voltage, which is 60 volts.

In order to find the resistance of this circuit, including the rheostat and the arc, we proceed as follows. We use the formula.

$$R = \frac{E}{C}$$

In the above formula R stands for resistance and E stands for voltage and C stands for the current flowing. Putting this formula in a simplified form it reads as follows: Resistance in ohms equals voltage divided by the amperes. The line voltage is 110, which divided by 40 amperes flowing through the circuit gives a result of 2.75 ohms, which is the total resistance of the circuit when the arc is operating at 50 volts and 40 amperes.

Continuing to analyze our circuit we will now determine the resistance required in the rheostat. Proceed as above, voltage drop across the rheostat 60, which divided by the amperes flowing through the circuit 40, equals 1.5 ohms, which is the resistance of the rheostat.

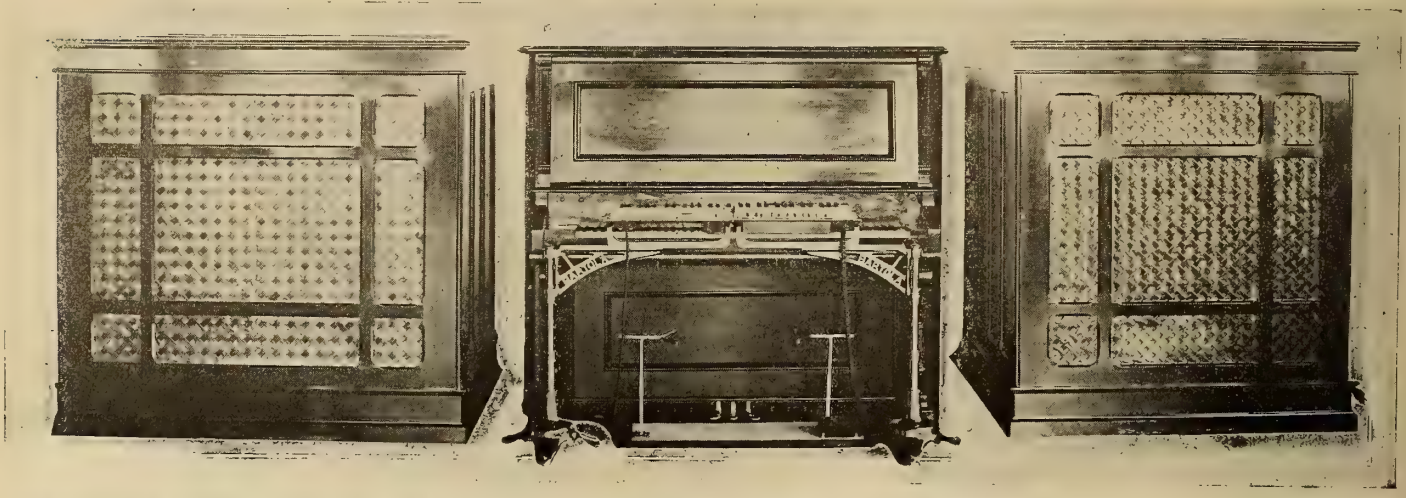
Going still further we determine the resistance of the arc as follows: Voltage drop across the arc 50, which is divided by 40 amperes flowing, gives a result of 1.25 ohms, which is the resistance of the arc.

If we add together the resistance of the rheostat, which is 1.5 ohms and the resistance of the arc which is 1.25 ohms we find that the sum of these is 2.75 ohms, which was the original calculated resistance of the entire circuit.

Any operator who follows the above method can within a few moments' time, determine for himself what the resistance in ohms is of any kind of apparatus, rheostat or arc in which he may be interested. You understand that it is immaterial what the amperes may be or the voltage drop; all you have to do is to follow the above routine and you will make no mistake as long as you have correct voltage and ampere readings of the circuit in question. For projector arcs you know that 50 volts drop across the arc is about right in all cases.

BIRD REPORTS GOOD BUSINESS FOR POWER

FREDERICK J. BIRD, of the Nicholas Power Company sales department, and one of the valuable cogs in the organization which has placed the Power's motion picture projecting machines on such a high plane, recently returned to his desk, after a sojourn of several weeks in the Southern states.



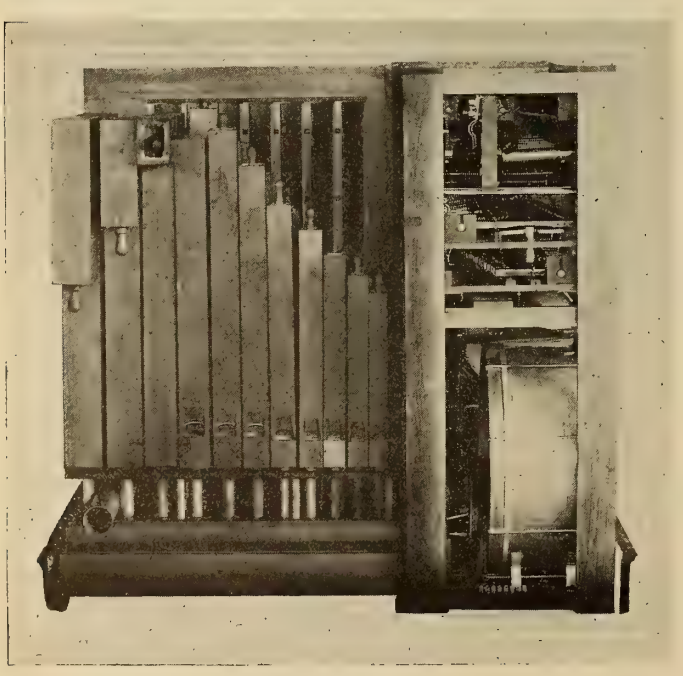
Mr. Bird reports business in general to be excellent and looks forward to a most prosperous year.

FEASTER MACHINES INSTALLED IN FOUR MORE THEATRES

THE Feaster non-rewind system has been installed in the Parkway, Antoinette and Criterion theatres, Brooklyn, N. Y., and the New Grand theatre, Paterson, New Jersey.

Bartola Is Panacea for Ills of Competition

By Charles C. Pyle, Sales Agent of Bartola Company.



THE COMPLETE BARTOLA INSTALLED AND READY TO PLAY. THE TWO MANUALS ARE SHOWN SWUNG OVER THE PIANO KEYBOARD IN POSITION FOR PLAYING

NOW that I have taken you from the scratchy phonograph to present day music in the motion picture theatre, it is my belief that the manually played one-man orchestra is the proper and successful music for the progressive and up-to-date picture theatre. Not the automatic, but the straight manuually played instrument, such as the Bartola Orchestra.

This instrument takes the place of both the human orchestra and the straight pipe organ. It is not mechanical. It is just as easy to play as a piano, but with the aid of a Bartola your piano player can obtain the same music as a large orchestra.

The Bartola is entirely electrical, the inventor having done away with the rubber tubes, belts, disks, small pouches and pneumatic action. It is so constructed that your player can play any instrument separately, any two together, or instantly change from any one combination to another, which enables him to correctly play any scene of the picture. You have in the Bartola the sweet tones of the pipe organ or the snappy orchestral music. You have unlimited combinations, harmony and effects which help to make your picture a success.

There are several different models to appeal to the managers of every theatre, no matter how large or small. There are a great many advantages in installing a Bartola Orchestra. It is an absolute improvement over any music you now have. If it will improve your music, it should increase your business, besides cutting down your musical expense—three excellent reasons for its great success.

THE INTERIOR OF ONE OF THE CABINETS EXPOSED

It has been hard work to convince the exhibitor that he must give up "Canned Automatic Music," straight pipe organ and the human orchestra, but he has finally been "converted" and now the finest theatres in America are using the Bartola Orchestra in preference to any other music. It is the duty of every exhibitor who has not heard this wonderful instrument to write and arrange for a demonstration and see for himself if this instrument will really do what I have said it will do.

RHEOSTAT VERSUS COMPENSATOR

E. K. Midland, Ont., Can.—I am using two simplex machines, one on a Bell and Howell compensator and on the other I have a simplex rheostat. I get better results with the compensator than with the rheostat and would like to know if I can use the compensator on both machines; if so, how would I connect it? I am using 110 volt, 60 cycle, alternating current.

Ans.—It is not to be expected that you should receive as much illumination at the arc with alternating current, when a rheostat is used in series with the arc as when you are using a transformer like the compensator you speak of. If you stop to think, you will realize that the rheostat being connected in series with the arc limits the number of amperes at the arc to that passing through the rheostat.

The effect of the rheostat on the arc is to act as a spring cushion, in other words the current at the arc is flexible without much push to it, because the rheostat serves as a big ballast, or reserve which prevents flushing of the current at the arc. As a matter of fact if you put the carbons fairly close together, the arc will die out.

A transformer or compensator on the other hand is an electro-magnetic device which takes, say 25 amperes from the line at 110 volts and delivers to the arc about 35 volts at 50 or 60 amperes. In this transformer there is not anywhere near the flexibility there is in a rheostat, therefore when you push the carbons fairly close together instead of the arc dying out, it will be put under greater force, which will push the arc to the front of the carbon points. This is one reason why your compensator gives better light than the rheostat. Then again the compensator saves more than 50 per cent. on your bill for electric current.

You may connect your compensator to your two Simplex machines, as illustrated in Fig. 1, but remember it will be better for you to have two of them, one on each machine, as this not only gives you better service, but allows you to dissolve one picture into the other with perfect results and it also gives you an emergency device.

The arrangement in Fig. 1 allows you to steal the arc from the running machine by merely putting the carbons together on the machine to be started and slowly separating them so that in this way you can really get a dissolving effect if you are careful, without actually burning two arcs at the same time. This arrangement should cut your lamp bill almost an additional 40 per cent.

TWO-WING SHUTTER SOLVES TROUBLE

Chillicothe, Ohio.

J. H. Hallberg.

Dear Sir:—Your answer to my question of August 28, carefully noted, and for the benefit of the manufacturing company which ridiculed your remarks, I wish to say that I had kept on experimenting prior to receiving your answer and had found that a two-wing shutter was the one most suitable for my trouble. Which goes to show that you were right, and I can safely say that I am showing the clearest and best picture in the city.

Thanking you for the answer and courtesy shown me, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

V. B. Cone,
Operator Star theatre.

Ans.—I thank you, Brother Cone, for your courteous letter. In the issue of August 28 I asked you to please try my suggestion and if you would let me know the results I would publish them. It is with pleasure that I reproduce your letter and it is naturally gratifying to know that you have been successful in applying a method like that which I suggested in answer to your question.

I shall not mention the name of the manufacturing company whose letter you sent me, but it is enough for me to say that this company is just marketing a new machine and it may be a lack of experience on their part in the use and application of methods known to some of us who have been in this branch of the business longer than they have which makes them ridicule or criticize.

MICA AND GELATINE FOR TRANSPARENT SHUTTER

J. A. L., New Roads, La.—I have noticed in your issue of the Motion Picture News what you have to say in regards to the transparent shutter.

I would like some experience in that line and if you will be kind enough to furnish me with information as to where I can get the necessary material such as the mica and the two colors of gelatine.

I am using at present a three-blade shutter and my projection is 41 feet. Any information in this line will be highly appreciated.

Ans. You can secure the mica or isinglass in almost any hardware store or electric shop. The colored gelatine sheets are the same as used for spot lights and can be had from any motion picture or calcium light supply house.

MOTOR DRIVE FOR EDISON "B" MODEL

H. E. Eidson, Alcazar Theatre, Americus, Ga.—In August 14 issue of Motion Picture News I noticed a friend operator wanted advice on a motor drive for an Edison "B" Model.

Enclosed you will find a photograph of a little device of my own. I have been running my Edison with it since about the first of the year, with very satisfactory results.

The motor is a G. E. fan motor with three speeds. I run on low speed, running a 1,000-foot film in about fifteen minutes. On high speed it will run a picture off in about one and one-half to two minutes faster. After a day's run, the motor is no warmer than running a fan all day.

I just made this of wood for a model. Later I am going to have the entire device made of steel, with lightly constructed pulleys.

If you will, I would be glad to have you print this photograph in your projection columns, and state that any operator desiring to try this little device, if he will write me I will gladly give him full particulars of the construction.

Ans. Thank you, Brother Eidson, for the very interesting letter with the photograph which I herewith reprint, illustration Fig. 2. That is the way to do things. Your liberal offer to your brother operators to communicate with you will no doubt be of service to those who have and are using Edison machines and who wish to apply motor drive. Your device is well put together and your description is particularly clear and interesting. Many thanks from this department to you.

VOLTAGE VARIES WITH DIFFERENT MONTHS

S. V. S., Hartford, Wis.—We have had some trouble in regard to our light and would appreciate any help you could give us. We are apparently using the same amount of light each month and yet one month will run high and the next month low. Our last three readings are as follows: June, 209 K. W.; July, 151 K. W.; August, 201 K. W. This will give you some idea of how it has been running ever since the house has been built. The light company have tested and changed meters at different times, but cannot find the trouble. There are other meters in town doing the same thing. We have A. C. with 110 volts on the house and 220 on the lamp.

We have a Bell Compensator and at times it gets so hot that it smokes, the insulation is already badly burnt; am afraid it will burn out. What can I do with it?

Ans. The only explanation which I can offer for the variation in your current consumption, judging from the limited number of readings you give me, would be that during the month of June the Electric Light Company maintained a higher voltage on their system than during the month of July. Also in August they had come right back with the higher voltage. Your reference to that other meters in the town doing the same thing is also a confirmation of my statement. The fact that the Bell Compensator gets so hot that it smokes, would also indicate that at times the line voltage is excessive.

You understand of course that if the line voltage should have been 110 or 115 on your house line and 220 or 230 volts during the month of June and August and may be 10 volts less during the month of July, your kilowatt consumption would be considerably lower for the month of July.

Besides you naturally use less current for illumination during the month of July because the days are longer and you would start your exterior illumination at a later hour.

The Bell Compensator, if it smokes, had better be attended to because one of these nice nights it will short circuit and blow your fuse, which will put your show out of business. No doubt there has been a voltage variation on your entire system throughout the town which accounts for the irregular bills for current and your hot compensator.

Building and Furnishings

Improvements in Decoration of Picture Theatres

THE treatment of the subject of the Photo Playhouse of Today is indeed a greater and more complex task than a similar subject would have been but a very few years ago.

Then even the better houses of the time were generally of about five to six hundred seating capacity, with the audience on one floor and with a reasonable amount of exits. A gaudy and over-illuminated front was of more importance than good ventilation, perfection in lighting, and the many details we must now consider.

Today, large or small, the successful house must be well treated architecturally, as well as have all the details that will aid to provide a perfect picture and give to the patrons comfort and the come-again feeling.

Later numbers of Motion Picture News will contain a series of short articles treating more fully the various component parts of the whole subject.

Requirements of Race Division in the South

In the South there is the necessity of race division. There the negroes form a large percentage of the population and must be segregated. They are generally illiterate, and the reading matter of the pictures is of less importance to them than to the whites.

It has been found feasible and very profitable in that section of the country, and it may be found that in other sections a similar condition might make it worth while to give like consideration, to build the house from street to street. The stage and screen are built between two entrances, not necessarily in the center of the house, but in such a location that the seating may be divided in due proportion to the class requirements of the population and the price of admission. In this manner, from the more important streets the higher priced seats are obtained for the better class of patrons, while the less desirable patrons are received from the rear street. The two classes of patrons never mingle.

The screen in such a house must be transparent, so that the picture may be seen from both sides. The picture must necessarily be projected from that side of the screen containing the higher priced seats, so that the reading matter may be read by the more intelligent patrons. The film run in reverse fashion and thrown upon the back of the screen, would serve the same purpose.

We have to consider the houses with the seating all on one floor, of auditorium and one balcony, and those with two balconies, the narrow and proportionately long house, and the wide and shallow house.

In some cases it has been found that the machines had to be placed on the first floor, others in the front of the balcony, and so on indefinitely, each a study in itself.

The style and type of construction is an important matter. City and state ordinances already enacted must be faithfully complied with. It is folly to evade them.

Style of architecture is not or should not be a matter of the architect's choice. It should be dictated, not by personal preferences, but rather by inspirations received from a combination of all conditions. Site, class of patrons, money to spend, shape and construction of the house, style of the houses of competitors, class of show and many other matters must all decide the final style to be adopted.

Good Seats in Poor Houses

Seating is a matter that has undergone a great change. Even in the poorer class houses, there is now used a much better seat, and in some picture theatres, we find seats that vie with the best.

The day has likewise passed when a maximum amount of seats to the detriment of the comfort of patrons is sought. No more eighteen-inch seats and even less in width, and with back to back twenty-nine inches. A wider seat, and yes, a much greater distance between them is used to an immeasurable advantage.

The inclusion of boxes on either side of the stage was never a matter for picture theatre design. They are mostly found in theatres formerly used for other theatrical productions and afterward taken over by the photo play. Their object in the theatre was for a general frame or setting to the proscenium and stage, and their use was for people who wanted to be seen by the masses rather than enjoy the performance. They have no such place in the picture house.

Has anything undergone such a change as the screen and its environment? First, a blank wall with but a painted frame, and on through the many stages of development; then the finest shadow boxes and frames, amid superb decorative effects devised by the best scenic artists.

These things are not just done for show and pomp. It brings the play into a finer atmosphere, it elevates an audience, it teaches them to look to higher things in their own work, and not least, it actually pays in dollars and cents.

The exhibitor must go to the architect who has proven his ability in this particular branch of work for the best results.

Nathan Myers.

The Theatre Beautiful Is Big Asset to Good Pictures

THE importance of interior decorations as a means of getting and holding patronage was evident to Louis Weinberg, the progressive manager of the Avenue theatre, Chicago, the largest house on the South Side. The theatre has individuality with a comfortable, home-like atmosphere. The decorations are impressive and you feet that motion picture decoration is indeed a fine art.

Entering the theatre you at once realize that "Here is something different." The lobby, spacious and tastefully decorated in cream and tan, has a floor of mosaic tiling and an eight-foot wainscot of English-veined marble runs entirely around it. Brass display frames with glass doors and lock and key, built into the marble, are conveniently arranged for the eye of the passerby. Palm trees and festoons of flowers help to beautify.

Of this beautiful theatre the most notable decorations are the mural paintings in the lobby and over the sounding board in the auditorium.

The mural decorations occupy the foyer between the marble wainscot and the ceiling. These mural paintings are masterpieces, works of art in every respect. The composition is excellent; while the color scheme is highly decorative and rich, there are both balance and harmony. These paintings are executed on canvas and tacked on the walls, each being bordered with an attractive gold moulding. These master productions make a deep, lasting impression, and are the cause of admiration, enthusiasm and many appreciative comments from the patrons.

From the lobby one enters the foyer, which runs along the entire width of the auditorium. The walls are decorated in old rose and ivory, in art nouveau style, worked out in soft, delicate greens, browns and crimsons. Sanitary drinking fountains, mirrors built into the walls and two good-sized dressing rooms, with toilets, all add to the many conveniences which the Avenue affords its patrons.

Between the ground floor and the balcony is a spacious mezzanine, reached by two wide English-veined marble stairways, located at either side of the lobby. The balustrades of these stairways are decorated in a verdigris effect.

In this mezzanine, partly over the lobby and partly over the foyer, is Mr. Weinberg's office. This is imposingly decorated with an old ivory ceiling and soft green walls in art nouveau style. It is furnished with comfortable mahogany furniture.

Walls and Ceiling in Ivory and Old Rose

Here, too, is another noteworthy feature for the convenience of Avenue theatre patrons. This is the mezzanine lounge. The walls and ceilings are decorated in old ivory and the dado in old rose. Extending the entire width of the auditorium, the tile floor is carpeted in deep, rich red velvet and is furnished with pompous furniture in the period of Louis XVI.

From the mezzanine lounge one may enter the balcony and there obtain a grand view of the auditorium. One is immediately attracted by the handsome decorations, for the idea from the first was to make the house a Theatre Beautiful, rich and pleasing.

The sounding board is decorated with a large mural painting, nine by fifty feet. It is an allegorical subject, called "The Goddess of Flowers." To speak of the superb grandeur of this mural production cannot give one the least idea of its heavenly magnificence and charm.

The main ceiling of the auditorium is imposing. It is subdivided by very massive ornamental plastic relief beams, two feet thick and three feet high, finished in old ivory, while each division of the ceiling proper is decorated in ivory.

The wall decorations are most tasteful, being in old rose, ivory, old ivory and gold. They are paneled with ornamental plastic relief mouldings, done in old ivory, forming large panels. The panels at the top are of a light old rose color, blending gradually down to a dark old rose. The style is of a very light old rose, while the dado is very dark old rose. The result is magnificent, yet restful to the eye.

There are eight commodious boxes, decorated with gold and ivory plastic relief moulding and ornament of much beautiful detail.

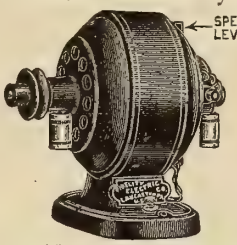
One conspicuous feature is the absence of wood in the construction work. With the exception of the mahogany doors and opera chairs, which are upholstered in Spanish moroccoline, a non-absorbing material, yet comfortable in the extreme, there is no wood in the house.

The Avenue is thoroughly fireproof and provided with wide and numerous exits. The ventilation system is most modern.

A corps of neatly uniformed maid ushers attend to each and every want of the patrons.

Mr. Weinberg, speaking of the decorations, said: "A description of the Avenue without special mention of the decorators would be incomplete. It was the well-known Chicago mural painters and decorators, the Swift studios, that painted each master mural production and worked out the magnificent decorative scheme. There is something about the Swift Studios' work that is particularly appealing. When they accept a contract they guarantee complete satisfaction and never fail to please. Their work, executed so skillfully, is a tribute to them." T. S. MEAD.

FOOLISH PRICE CUTTING WAR BEGINS IN LOS ANGELES



LOS ANGELES is having its first price cutting war in a number of months. The fight was started in a suburban theatre located on Moneta avenue, where the proprietor is also the owner of the building.

He is using four, five and six reel programs and two people are admitted for five cents. The theatre to adopt this price is the O'Keefe at Fifty-second street. Because of this reduction, Manager L. S. Lutz of the Palace at Forty-seventh and Moneta, where features and regular programs are used, has reduced the price from ten cents to five cents.

The Mission theatre, at Forty-third street and Moneta, has reduced its price to five cents. The folly of this price war is apparent to all parties concerned, as all theatres are now said to be losing money.

CALIFORNIA

THE Princess theatre, San Diego, has reopened with Metro and Pathé releases. Arthur Davidor is manager.

CONNECTICUT

Babcock's new theatre, Plainfield, held its first show recently.

Sylvester Poli announced recently his intention to build a theatre on his recently acquired site on Phoenix avenue, Waterbury, a tract fronting on the avenue 152 feet, with a depth of 90 feet.

Loomer opera house, in Willimantic, opened September 1, with Paramount pictures, under the management of D. J. Casey, of New York City.

FLORIDA

The Grand theatre, Jacksonville, is now showing a small musical comedy along with their regular program.

Universal pictures are now being shown at the Republic, Jacksonville, and they report a bigger business than ever.

ILLINOIS

Vernon C. Seaver has again assumed charge of the Hippodrome theatre, at Peoria, and will run high-class motion pictures exclusively during the coming year. This house, which seats 18,000 people and was devoted to vaudeville last year, has been entirely remodeled to suit it for motion pictures. Mr. Seaver has installed two 1916 model Motiographs.

Chicago's southwest side is to have a theatre with a seating capacity of 1,200 in the building now in course of construction at Fifty-fifth street and Ashland avenue. The building, which was designed by Architect Henry L. Newhouse, will cost about $125,000, it is stated, and is expected to be completed by November 1 next.

J. B. Reilly, of Kankakee, has purchased the Princess theatre, owned by H. H. Schmidt, giving in exchange a cash consideration and the moving picture theatre at Manteno, and will take possession at once.

INDIANA

Manager J. A. Schull has taken charge of the Wallace theatre, Peru. He is from Dowagiac, Mich., where he managed the Orpheum and the Idle Hour theatres.

The Philbarg theatre, at North Vernon, was opened September 1. Tuesday and Thursday nights are announced as feature nights.

After having been closed for about two months, the Starette theatre, at Newcastle, has been reopened. The ceiling has been raised, a new entrance built, a new picture machine installed, and a new ticket office constructed.

James Alcorn's Airdome, at Greensburg, has been abandoned. Mr. Alcorn says the fact that August broke all records for coolness and July all records for rain, explains the reason.

A new theatre has been opened at St. Paul. The house has a seating capacity of 600 and is attractively furnished. Pleak and Howard are the proprietors.

Lafe Troyer, manager of the Princess theatre at Elwood, has taken over the management of the Habit theatre at Tipton.

The Idle Hour, in Upland, which has been closed for the last few weeks for repairs and alterations, was reopened Saturday, September 4. D. K. Kaver is the proprietor.

IOWA

Richard Snell has announced that his architects are working on plans for a two-story theatre building to be erected on the Snell property west of the Wahkonsa hotel, Des Moines.

Plans and specifications have been filed with the city building board for the enlargement and improvement of the Princess theatre, Cedar Rapids.

KENTUCKY

J. N. Berryman has opened a new motion picture theatre at Brandenburg. He will show every Friday and Saturday, for white people only, with a matinee Saturday. The shows on Tuesdays and Wednesdays will be for colored people.

Harry C. Mills, formerly of Sandusky, Ohio, has taken over the management of the Gem theatre, at Maysville, which has been closed for several months. The former picture policy will be continued.

The Hippodrome theatre, at Second and Market streets, Louisville, has been thoroughly repaired and renovated, a new system of ventilation installed and a $5,000 Unit orchestra added to the equipment.

The Desberger Amusement Company, owners of the Arcade, Star and Gem theatres at Paducah, has incorporated, with a capital stock of $80,000. The holders of stock include Mrs. Rose L. and Norma Desberger, and Joseph and David Desberger. The limit of indebtedness of the company is fixed at $250,000.

MAINE

E. M. Chase has sold out the Camden Opera House to Tucker & Dowling, of Brockton, and the latter have contracted for straight Universal service.

The Mortimer Amusement Company, inventors and promoters of the Mortimer Film Cleaner, are erecting a new ground floor moving picture theatre at Freeport, the building will be 75 x 50 and have a seating capacity of 500. They expect to be ready to open October 4.

The week of August 22 saw the breaking of ground for the new Elm theatre, Portland. The architects, Miller and Mayo, are at work on plans for the new amusement place.

Richard Webb has announced that the Casco theatre, Portland, has been leased for a term of years to New York theatrical people.

MASSACHUSETTS

J. Lauries is enlarging the Shawmut theatre, Roxbury, and will install a ten-piece orchestra. The theatre opened on Labor Day. with L. Siegelman directing the musicians.

The Beacon theatre on Washington street, Boston, is at present doing a big business with a large number of features.

The new Strand theatre, in Haverhill was opened to the public on September 9. This theatre has all the modern improvements. It seats 1,500 persons and is being managed by B. Coplan and Harry Norton.

The Milford Opera House, Milford, leased by the Royal Theatre Company, of Worcester, opened September 4, with Franklin Tompkins as resident manager.

The Bijou theatre, Greenfield, has been leased by W. E. Benson to A. B. Brunell, who buys its equipment, and is completely renovating the building. Mr. Brunell is the owner of a theatre at Greendale, Worcester.

The Worcester theatre, Worcester, is to be rebuilt, the plans have been drawn by Jackson & Salomonson, architects, of Boston. The entire front of the theatre will be changed. There will be a seating capacity of 1,600.

MICHIGAN

On Saturday evening, September 4, two large moving picture theatres, at Detroit, were opened for the first time. One was the Strand, owned by John H. extreme eastern section of town. Both theatres were crowded for the evening shows and hundreds turned away.

No theatre in Grand Rapids ever had a more auspicious opening than the new Majestic which opened Saturday evening, August 28. The Majestic is the property of A. J. Gillingham, who operates a chain of houses there, as well as one in Detroit. He is also manager of the General Film Exchange in Detroit. The house is one of the finest in the state and will play exclusively feature films. A. J. Gillingham was in the city for the opening and was immensely pleased with the manner in which everything was conducted, to say nothing of the immense crowds that stormed the playhouse. Bert St. John is manager of the Majestic for Mr. Gillingham. He was formerly associated with Bert C. Whitney, of Detroit.

The newest picture theatre, in Jackson, the Kuhl, opened on Friday evening, September 3. It is just east of the Rex theatre, also owned by C. A. Kuhlman. The lobby is finished in mahogany with an ivory effect, while the stairs to the mezzanine floor are also of mahogany finish. In the entrance is a solid porcelain drinking fountain. Entire new equipment was installed at a cost of $2,000.

Plans are completed and contracts let for the remodeling of the Jeffers theatre, which reopens about October 1 as the Strand theatre. For several seasons the Jeffers was a vaudeville theatre. It belongs to Col. W. S. Butterfield, who operates a chain of Michigan theatres. A new lobby, new ticket office and entirely new furnishings will be put in. The entire theatre will be carpeted, new seats installed, also a new pipe organ, and a new stage setting made. The interior decorations will be in black and white lattice effects. L. H. Gardner will manage the new Strand. He was formerly manager of the Rosedale, in Detroit.

A permit was recently issued by the department of buildings, Detroit, to William F. Klatt, for the erection of a one-story reinforced brick and steel theatre building on the east side of Woodward avenue, between the boulevard and Horton avenue.

MISSOURI

James J. Barret, owner and manager of the Chippewa theatre, on Broadway and Chippewa streets, St. Louis, has had the theatre decorated and remodeled for the fall season, which began on September 4.

Work is nearing completion on the new motion picture theatre being erected by W. L. Denham, at the northwest corner of Thirty-ninth street and Shaw avenue, St. Louis, in a neighborhood being rapidly built up with apartment houses and flats.

A deal was closed recently whereby Joe Leininger, of Chillicothe, takes over W. L. Field's one-half interest in The Trio theatre.

NEBRASKA

A. H. Blank, of Des Moines, who controls a string of high-grade motion picture shows throughout Iowa, has leased the American theatre, Eighteenth and Douglas streets, Omaha, and will show motion pictures there after several alterations, which will include changing the name of the house to the Strand.

He will open it about September 15.

The seating capacity will be enlarged to 2,000.

H. M. Thomas is engaged as manager and is now making plans. He has had wide experience in the amusement business in Kansas City, Chicago, St. Louis and San Antonio.

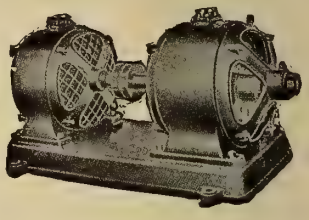
Hougton & Ansell have been awarded contract to erect a $6,000 moving picture theatre at 2908 Sherman avenue, Omaha, the building to be ready for occupancy October 12. The new theatre will be a one-story, 100 by 300 foot building, with a ceiling 20 feet high.

A four-story fireproof moving picture and office building, costing $100,000, will be erected soon at the corner of Second street and Burlington avenue, Hastings.

NEW JERSEY

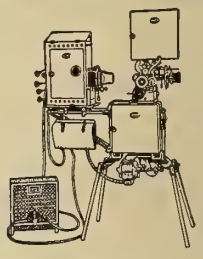
Plans were filed recently by Daniel Rentschler in the municipal superintendent's office for a motion picture theatre, to cost $18,000, in Kearny avenue, near Grove street, Arlington.

Arrangements have been made for the reopening of the Linden Moving Picture theatre, Elizabeth, which was closed a few weeks ago by state officers because the proprietor, Benjamin Friedman, did not have a 1915 license. The new manager is Lewis Ampolsk, of New York City.



John Thum & Sons, of Arlington, have accepted plans for a $75,000 motion picture theatre, to be erected at Kearny and Quincy avenues. The theatre will accommodate 1,500 persons.

NEW YORK



The estate of Jay Gould is about to alter the five-story building at 31 Park Row, New York City, into a motion picture theatre, at a cost of $18,000. The property was recently leased to the Reliance Company, Joseph Weinstock, president, for a long term of years. Louis A. Sheinart drew the plans for the alterations.

On Monday, September 6, Leon Schlesinger, manager of the Palace theatre, Buffalo, the newest local Mitchel H. Mark theatre, was succeeded by Claude S. Weill, former manager of the Premier theatre and part owner of the Central Park theatre, in that city.

Men are at work giving artistic touches to some of the more detailed work on the surface of the interior of the new Avon theatre, Utica.

Clyde Hoskins has sold the Royal theatre, Sidney, to G. R. Stiles, of DeGraff, and a brother of the propretor of the Gem theatre.

OHIO

Harry Palay has assumed the management of the Wade Park Orpheum, Cleveland. This house has had a successful career as a motion picture theatre and is expected to make greater strides under the management of Mr. Palay.

Smithfield, an Ohio town of 1,200 inhabitants, wants a motion picture theatre. There are very few amusements in Smithfield, and advertisements have been placed in Ohio papers urging someone to go there and establish a picture house.

The Duchess theatre, which is the largest motion picture theatre in Cleveland, again is under the management of A. A. Comey.

A new feature for Cleveland motion picture theatres will be introduced in the new Stillman theatre, now being built on Euclid avenue. The plans call for 100 smoking lodges in the rear on the mezzanine floor of the theatre. A special ventilating system will be installed to apply directly to this section. A new system for cooled and warmed air will also be installed to properly distribute fresh air throughout the theatre, which will seat 1,200 persons.

Harry W. Kress, for over a year the lessee of the picture show rights of May's Opera House, Piqua, has taken over the entire theatre for all the big theatrical and photoplay attractions. Recently Mr. Kress took over Mr. May's part of the theatrical business with an extended lease and option to purchase the property. Mr. Kress has engaged the services of Jack Harvey as house manager.

OKLAHOMA

The Strand theatre, Oklahoma City, changed its policy September 1, the price of admission was advanced from 5 to 10 cents, and nothing but feature pictures will be presented.

The Busty theatre, at McAlester, opened the season on September 15, having been completely renovated, repaired and put in first class shape in every respect.

The Busty will show moving pictures and vaudeville on dates not filled by regular theatrical attractions.

PENNSYLVANIA

It is reported that the Metropolitan Opera House, Philadelphia's biggest playhouse, with a seating capacity of three thousand, is to be devoted this season to the showing of motion pictures.

The Globe, at 5901 Market street, west Philadelphia, has reopened for the season. J. D. Cunningham, proprietor and manager, has made many improvements in his house. The theatre has been enlarged, the aisles widened, the interior redecorated, a new ventilating system installed and a $15,000 Kimball organ ordered.

The Ruby, at Market and Marshall streets, Philadelphia, one of the Stanley houses, is under the management of Ralph Marlow. The Ruby, although small and a ten-cent house, is a very successful theatre, with a high-class clientele.

As the site for a moving picture theatre, with stores adjoining, the lot at the northeast corner of Fifty-sixth and Pine streets, Philadelphia, has been sold to Cornelius W. Van Artsdalen for a nominal sum and a mortgage of $15,000. The lot has a frontage of 81 feet 6 inches on Pine street, and 140 feet on Fifty-sixth street, and is assessed at $9,000. The structure will be built by Ketchum & McQuade at a cost of $37,000.

The moving picture theatre at 456 to 460 North Sixtieth street, Philadelphia, lot 47 feet 9 inches by 100 feet, has been conveyed by Israel G. Wasman to Rose Kenin for a nominal sum and a mortgage of $18,400. The assessed value is $20,000.

Work is completed on the Bell, east Scranton's second nickelet, at 817 Prescott avenue, and it is expected that it will be thrown open to the public in a few days.

The Park theatre, Forty-sixth and Butler streets, Pittsburgh, the largest theatre in that part of the city, which has been closed for the summer, has reopened. Manager J. P. McConnell has had the

Music and the Picture

Edited by Ernst Luz

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

MUSIC PLOTS OF VALUE TO ONE-MAN ORCHESTRA

E. R. B., Reading, Pa.—You are mistaken in thinking the music plots in this department are of value to the orchestra alone. They are of even more benefit to the One-Man orchestra player, for to get the best results out of his instrument prior preparation is essential. Many players on these instruments say otherwise, but conscientiously I am sure they know better, for many of them do very ridiculous things when playing unknown pictures.

All of my works are for the combined benefit of the pianist, one-man orchestra player, organist or orchestra leader.

To the first three mentioned it should be a great help, to the last mentioned it is an actual necessity. That the lone player can add much to these plots at the second playing may be true at times, but only when his selection of musical numbers is misconceived and happens to be of unlike picture temperament.

These plots will not play the picture for you but will assist. Nothing is accomplished without effort. Try again and the necessary knowledge will come to you as naturally as walking comes to the child, if you have musical ability.

NO SCHOOL OF PICTURE PLAYING

J. R. L., Chicago, Ill.—I know of no school for picture playing that I would recommend. Advanced picture playing depends first upon the player's musical ability. The schools for musical education all accomplish this. To commercialize your musical ability in picture playing requires earnest application to the practical, not the theoretical. Music and the Picture gives each week practical picture music information and is ready to answer any questions you may ask as a help to you in becoming competent in picture playing.

OVERCOMES DIFFICULTIES IN QUICK CHANGES

S. M. R., St. Louis, Mo.—The A. B. C. Dramatic Music is arranged for playing complete scenes from one sheet of music. They are intended to overcome the difficulty in playing a quick interchanging of melodramatic action. For very long agitatos and hurries I would advise you to use the M. L. Lake Dramatic Numbers, published by Carl Fischer, 4-6 Cooper square, New York City. The Lake hurries are better used for long agitated or hurry action instead of using galops.

"SOUL OF A WOMAN" FULL OF MUSICAL OPPORTUNITIES

IT is impossible for words to express the wonderful musical opportunities in the Metro Feature release of September 6, "The Soul of a Woman." Had the producer, B. A. Rolfe, meant it to be a two dollar production, making music the paramount feature, he could not have more perfectly accomplished his purpose.

From beginning to end the picture suggests musical sychronization. At its showing to the trade in the Strand theatre, New York City, I was impressed beyond expression of words. Organ was the musical accompaniment, but I assure you it was nevertheless some music. The picture is positively adapted for the organ with few exceptions which are shown in the Music Plot in this issue.

I could write thousands of words in praise of such picture work, but I give you the plot hoping that you may have the opportunity to please your audience with good music, which will be understood and appreciated when played to this feature.

All the music numbers suggested in plots appearing in MOTION PICTURE NEWS can be bought for piano solo, orchestra, one man orchestra or organ from the publishers whose names appear in the parenthesis after the number suggested. Only numbers considered good for use in general picture playing are suggested as a means of assisting the player to accumulate a good repertoire of music for picture playing.

MAKING MUSICAL ACCOMPANIMENT TO COMIC SCENES AN ART

ACCOMPANYING a comedy musically is a great deal more difficult than accompanying a drama. Some pianists think "any old lively thing will do" for the funny pictures, but the spectators know better, and many times would like to tell the pianist a few things.

The Leader, Washington, D. C., has a valuable acquisition in the person of George Emmons, who knows how to put on the musical end of a comedy.

His recent accompanying of "In the Bank," an Essanay Chaplin, was a masterpiece of its kind.

Mr. Emmons, be it known, is an artist at the piano, and is frequently heard in recitals, so he is thoroughly at home with a wide range of compositions, popular, classic and operatic. He does not always play a complete selection, or a complete theme, but will interpose cadenzas, trills, forceful chords, and accentuated top-notes in the most effective manner, and thus become a part of the comedy itself.

This can be done to detract from the picture, but Mr. Emmons knows that his part is that of the background or accompaniment and he plays the role excellently. It would be well if more musicians took this view of their post. William Miley, the other pianist at the Leader, also appreciates the effective way of playing for the pictures.

MUSIC A BIG FACTOR IN A THEATRE'S SUCCESS PROVEN BY PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITOR

MUSIC at the Palace, Philadelphia, contributes to its success. Jay Mastbaum, house manager of the theatre at 1214 Market street, is much pleased with the success of the new policy of feature pictures instead of the mixed program long in vogue at this house.

The Palace is situated right in the heart of the busiest retail thoroughfare of the city and caters to a first class patronage. The prices are ten and twenty cents and Paramount service is used, with a diversified program.

"The Secret Orchard," after its adventures with censors and courts was popular enough to run a whole week to packed houses. Mr. Mastbaum attributes much of the good business of the theatre to the special attention paid to the musical part of the program of the house.

A first class orchestra of seven pieces is headed by Professor David Kaplin, former leader of the Keystone orchestra, and more recently of the Orpheum, in Germantown. The orchestra in addition to playing during the pictures, gives selected overtures during intermissions.

Music Notes:—No. 1 should be a slow, melodious number, suggesting harp accompaniment. No. 2 must be a very slow legato waltz with sustained melody. Nos. 3, 8, 16, 18, 21 and 30 are slow, sustained numbers, having a pathetic as well as dramatic appeal. Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 26, 28, 31 and 33 are short, melodramatic numbers, as published by Carl Fischer, New York City, and Photo Play Music Company, No. 1520 Broadway, New York City. Nos. 9, 10, 11, 12, 27, 29 and 34 should have a religious as well as pathetic appeal.

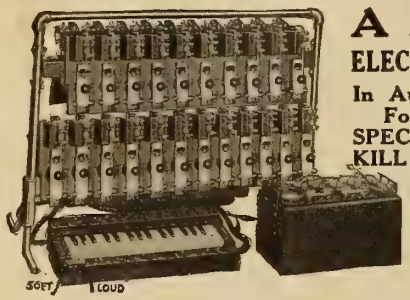
"The Rosary," by Ethelbert Nevins, should be used as a theme for Nos. 12, 27, 29 and 34. Nos. 13, 15, 17 and 20 should be the same waltz. Should be legato but played moderately fast. Nos. 23, 24 and 25 are covered with one number. The abrupt pause is necessary to picture action synchronization. The music throughout should be quiet, with the exception of No. 23. The picture is ideal for organ or organ effects. "The Rosary" should be played each time by organ. With the exception of Nos. 4, 6, 13, 15, 17, 20, 23, 24, 25, 28, 31 and 33, all numbers are excellent for organ.

TOY THEATRE, BUILT BY CHINESE MILLIONAIRE IN MILWAUKEE, WILL OPEN ON 13TH

THE Toy theatre, Milwaukee's newest and smallest photoplay, will open Monday, September 13, with a seating capacity of 460 people. "The Blindness of Virtue" is the opening attraction, but one production a week being shown. All seats are reserved at the Toy, which is planned to cater to the highest class of patronage, the seats for matinee performance being thirty-five cents and the evening fifty.

The house, constructed by Milwaukee's millionaire Chinaman, Charlie Toy, has been magnificently decorated along pronounced Oriental lines. No expense has been spared to make everything most exquisite. Most all of the interior wood work is hand carved and has been imported from China.

Many novel features have been planned for the opening performances by Manager Edwin J. Bigelow, among them being the serving of tea to the Monday night audience by Chinese servants, the tea cup and saucer being presented as a souvenir to the patrons. Preceding the first public performance Monday evening a special invitation performance will be given Friday night at which the Mayor, Governor of the State and prominent citizens and society leaders, as well as the members of the press will be present.



Every convenience for the comfort of the patrons has been included in the Toy, which is expected to become the society theatre of the city.

MAXCY, BARTOLA PRESIDENT, MAKES VISIT TO NEW YORK

W. G. MAXCY, president and treasurer of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, of Oshkosh, Wis., makers of the well-known Bartola Orchestra, is in New York. The Bartola company is bringing out a new instrument, the Autola, one of considerable interest to exhibitors and feature buyers, and announcement of which will be made in next week's Motion Picture News.

Mr. Maxcy reports a steadily increasing business for Bartola orchestras throughout the year and which is now at the point of the fullest capacity of his plant. Many exhibitors remember the Bartola president for his sportsmanlike spirit at the Dayton convention of 1914, when, finding his exhibit shut out of the exposition hall, he hired a hotel roof and ran his own show, with great success. The same enterprise and square dealing mark all his and his company's transactions.

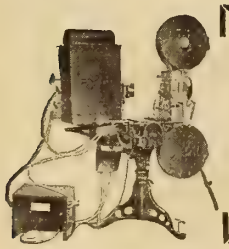
theatre remodeled. The ventilating system has been renewed, new heating systems have been installed and other improvements made. Mr. McConnell also conducts the Model theatre, at 4513-15 Butler street, and reports that business in his theatre was first class during the summer months.

The new Miles theatre, Pittsburgh, opened September 10 as a home for high-class photoplays. This style of entertainment was given a trial in the theatre last May, and proved so successful that Mr. Miles has decided to continue it this winter.

RHODE ISLAND

The New Empire theatre in Providence, formerly the Westminster, opened its doors to the public recently under the management of Keith's. The policy of the house is "particular photoplays for particular people," and popular prices prevail.

The Globe theatre in Providence, formerly Bullock's theatre, has been opened under a new policy, which will give high class films and musical comedies.



Workmen started recently to remodel the old railroad station, Pawtucket, which has been leased for a moving picture theatre. The theatre will be ready for occupancy by the late fall or early winter.

Work will soon be started on the Leslie theatre, at Taunton avenue and James street, East Providence. It is to be a two-story $10,000 building, with the theatre seating 600.

WISCONSIN

Milwaukee is to have another photoplay theatre within the year, if the present plans are carried out. Figures are now being taken by Architects Holabird and Roche, 104 South Michigan avenue, Chicago, for the erection of a 2,300 seating capacity theatre on Second street and Grand avenue. The theatre is to be part of a building covering half a city block that is to be erected on the site of the old Plankinton House.

A permit was recently issued for the erection of the Hippodrome theatre, at Sixth street and Grand avenue, Milwaukee. The structure will cost approximately $300,000.

THE MASTER MODEL PROJECTOR, because of its ease of operation, its perfect work, its low maintenance cost, is qualified for a many-year engagement in every photoshow house throughout the country. For particulars, address

RE-ASSURANCE TO THE TRADE

Despite the destructive fire which occurred last week at the studios and laboratories of the Famous Players Film Company, and the tremendous losses which have resulted, we can definitely assure the trade at large, and Paramount exhibitors in particular, that all plans for productions formulated before the outbreak of the fire will be immediately continued and matured without interruption. We are glad that the loss is ours only and that exhibitors will in no way be affected by it. For, although the greatest disaster that has ever befallen a producing company in the entire history of the industry, we are totally undismayed, and can substantially state to all exhibitors that the unrivalled standard of our past productions will not be lowered in the slightest degree in our forthcoming releases.

The erection of the new studio and laboratory buildings now in the course of construction on our recently acquired tract of ground in upper Manhattan will be rushed to completion at a maximum speed. We intend these studios and laboratories to be the most modern, efficient and comprehensive plants ever devoted to the production of motion pictures, and under these unparalleled advantages we are wholly confident that we will not only continue, but by far excel, our record of achievement, which, from the very inception of our organization, has been a tradition in the trade.

The Famous Players Film Co. expresses its sincere gratitude and appreciation for the messages of sympathy received from thousands of exhibitors, exchangemen and manufacturers, and determinedly assures them that it will emerge from this temporary inconvenience stronger, greater and firmer than ever.

ALTERED SCHEDULE OF FUTURE RELEASE DATES

Note: Due to the necessity of hasty removal and the unavoidable delays occasioned by the fire, we deem it feasible to rearrange our forthcoming productions on the Paramount Program. The production of Marie Doro in "The White Pearl," scheduled for release Sept. 20th, will be postponed to Oct. 11th, the original date to be filled by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co.'s production of Lou Tellegen in "The Explorer." The release of Charles Cherry in "The Mummy and the Humming-Bird," intended for Oct. 4th, will be announced at a later date. The official schedule of our forthcoming releases is now as follows:

Sept.	30	John Mason and Hazel Dawn in "The Fatal Card"
Oct.	4	Marguerite Clark in "The Prince and the Pauper"
"	7	Mary Pickford in "A Girl of Yesterday"
"	11	Marie Doro in "The White Pearl
"	28	Hazel Dawn in "The Masqueraders"
Nov.	4	Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters"
"	8	Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly"
"	11	Pauline Frederick in "Zaza"
"	15	John Barrymore in "The Red Widow"

It is needless to add that we are determined to rise—Phoenix-like—upon our ashes, greater in artistic strength and prestige, even more efficient and progressive, but with all the old ideals that have made our name synonymous with feature history and advancement!

EQUITABLE

TRILBY

Was announced as the biggest and most profound success, before it was shown.

NOW READ WHAT THE PAPERS SAID

"ZIT" in the NEW YORK JOURNAL Said:
"It is greater than any other 'TRILBY,' and I've seen many. It is the final word in filmdom."

New York American Said:
"The screen play of "TRILBY" is in every sense a masterpiece. In many ways they have accomplished things impossible in other companies. It is gripping and entrancing."

NEW YORK HERALD Said:
"Equitable made "TRILBY" live again in all its picturesque charm."

THE EVENING MAIL Said:
"It is a temptation to say that "TRILBY" is the greatest offering of the screen drama. It relies on a powerful closely knit theme, splendidly produced and played. It is unbelievedly vivid."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD Said:
"The result obtained in TRILBY places this motion drama among the finest examples of its kind. It takes a firm grip on the emotions and elicits a stronger response from the hearts in the audience"

The World. Said:
"TRILBY is a genuine masterpiece. The camera work is faultless, the portrayals without a flaw."

The Evening Sun. Said:
"TRILBY captured a huge audience and held it to the finish. The picture would have amazed Du Maurier himself. Svengali was greater and TRILBY finer than ever in the spoken drama."

The Evening Post. Said:
"TRILBY makes Du Maurier live again. It is most impressive."

NEW YORK CLIPPER Said:
"TRILBY assures the future of Equitable. It met the unqualified approval of a blase, critical audience."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS Said:
"Everybody went away with the impression that they had seen the best picture in years."

First Triangle Model Theatre

THE Knickerbocker Theatre in New York will open Thursday Evening, September 23rd. The opening has been moved forward from September 20th, the date mentioned last week, not because it would be impossible to give the first presentation of the Griffith-Ince-Sennett plays then, but because the Triangle Plan requires that every detail shall be plus-perfect.

These details have been most carefully worked out, not only because the Triangle offerings deserve the best, but for the purpose of setting a standard that shall bring out the highest qualities of this newest dramatic art.

Effects wholly new to the art have been devised to set forth the supreme qualities of these coming Triangle Plays.

The special music for each picture, written by William Furst, will be interpreted by an orchestra of 30 musicians under the personal leadership of the composer.

The initial three part bill made up of a splendid five reel Griffith-supervised Mexican drama, "The Lamb," with Douglas Fairbanks in the title role, supported by Seena Owen; a stirring five reel Ince-supervised Alaskan love play, with Dustin Farnum in the leading part and Enid Markey as his chief support; and then the Sennett-Keystone three reel farce, "My Valet," with Raymond Hitchcock as the star, supported by Mabel Normand.

At a date later to be announced, the Model Theatres in Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago will open with first offerings to be presented with the same care and artistry.

You will find much of value and interest in the new methods of presentation which have been devised.

the popular photo play star and a strong supporting cast including Leona Hutton and Margaret Gibson in an absorbing drama of life, told in three reels, in which a girl of the tenements striving for happiness voices a powerful protest against man's assumption that woman must trade on her honor for every favor in life she receives. In her protest she is joined by a young district attorney, played by Mr Wilbur, and overcoming all the obstacles which her station in life presents, works out her triumph. A drama with a punch.

WARNING!

Owing to the great popularity of the Charles Chaplin photoplays many unauthorized prints of our productions, portraying him in his different pictures, are being handled in the United States. Some of these are fake prints and some are duplicates.

This company has adopted a policy of vigorous prosecution of every violation that comes to its notice, whether it be by the person who makes the unauthorized films or the person who rents or distributes them.

In the past three weeks the company has seized two unauthorized two-act Chaplin photoplays and has instituted two suits for injunction, accounting, and confiscation of the films, charging violation of our copyright.

It is our intention to protect our property rights and also to assure the public that it will see a genuine Chaplin picture when it is advertised as an Essanay-Chaplin Comedy.

We intend to pursue this policy until there is not a fake or duplicate Chaplin picture in the country.

This announcement is made so that dealers, exhibitors and the public may be put on their guard.

We earnestly request that you assist us in this campaign for Picture Honesty by sending us notice of any fake Essanay-Chaplin picture that you may know of.

For such information we thank you.

Skeletons of the Dead Past Stalk Boldly Forth "In The Palace of The King"

Cruel, fanatical, revengeful, Philip II was one of the most hated monarchs of history. Plots and intrigues characterized his reign. Tortures of the inquisition and the executioner's axe were resorted to without mercy.

In the midst of this reign of blood and horror, the king lived in daily fear of usurpation and death. He shrank from the skeletons that filled the royal closets, from the grim ghosts of his own conjuring.

But romance lived, for knights were bold and ready to risk their lives for the love of a woman.

F. Marion Crawford wove a thrilling romance around Philip the Second's reign of terror in his novel "In The Palace of The King." This great drama, in which Viola Allen won such a success on the stage, has been made into a wonderful spectacular six act photoplay by Essanay.

Five thousand persons appear in the various scenes. There are 1,000 horsemen, 1,000 foot soldiers, peasants, courtiers and royal personages.

The all star cast includes E. J. Ratcliffe, the noted stage actor; Richard C. Travers, Essanay leading man; Arleen Hackett, who plays opposite William Faversham in "The Hawk" next season; Lewis Edgard, famous on Broadway; Ernest Maupain, Nell Craig, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford. Directed by Fred E. Wright.

The "News" and the Newspaper

THERE is another angle to this very important matter of the newspaper and the picture—an angle wider than the manufacturer considers, if he considers it at all.

Let us quote from two leading newspapers—the Atlanta "Constitution" and the Indianapolis "News."

* * *

EVERY newspaper man knows and respects the "Constitution" and its large circulation in the South, and, I imagine, every reader knows and respects its excellent motion picture page, edited by Britt Craig.

An Atlanta correspondent writes:

ATLANTA has, in a measure, taken advantage of the opportunity offered by the newspapers, as you will see from the two whole pages taken from the two leading dailies here. A year ago hardly a column a week given over to motion picture news, but now you can see for yourself the change.

"All three papers use everything of local interest in their columns, but, as one of the editors of those pages told me, there is plenty of stuff that could be used if the exhibitor would just use his head a little.

SOME of the local theatres are, for a comparatively small sum, hiring the local reporters to handle their stuff for them, and the result is that those particular theatres are getting the best notices in all the papers, for all the local men work together and are willing to use each other's stuff. They, of course, work this feature on the side and find it very profitable, as newspaper work goes, in addition to their regular work.

"I was talking with Britt Craig, editor of the Constitution page, who in addition to the regular stuff, runs the "Behind the Screens" column. He also does the publicity for several of the local theatres.

"He tells me that he gets all his news from "Motion Picture News" and would have no other. He says it gets here in time on Friday night or Saturday morning for him to work up the very latest news from it and has found it very reliable."

FROM the Indianapolis "News," J. R. Gadbury, on the city desk, writes—just in criticism of the press sheets sent him by the manufacturer. If he printed all of it, he says, "I would lose my job."

* * *

I HAVE yet to find more than one paragraph out of ten to twenty pages of matter I get, which I can use. What I do use from that sent is sometimes a paragraph out of the mimeographed or typewritten material. The printed news sheets I cannot use."

And he concludes his letter with:

"As it is, whatever I print in my motion picture notes is obtained from 'Motion Picture News.'"

THESE comments from the Atlanta "Constitution" and the Indianapolis "News" are strictly representative of the leading newspapers of the United States, all of whom want only the news which is "real news." I quote the latter because of the many letters we receive from them emphasizing this phrase.

The fact, too, that these papers rely for their news matter upon MOTION PICTURE NEWS is conslusive enough evidence of the other angle to the newspaper situation to which I have referred.

That angle is a trade paper like MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

THE editorial influence of such a paper is by no means confined to the trade.

Its circulation should be. We take particular pains to keep it so.

The only variation we are proud of is the comparatively very small one (though large in itself) of the editors of motion picture departments in newspapers.

THE trade paper cannot go to the public, but the right kind of a trade paper can, through the newspaper editorial desk, reach millions of the public, every week, with its editorial items.

The trade paper, therefore, the right kind of a trade paper, is a very big, a fundamental, cog in the all important and co-operative movement, now largely under way, but greatly to increase, between the newspaper and the motion picture.

THERE is every reason why the motion picture editor should turn to MOTION PICTURE NEWS for his news service; in fact, it would seem that no better news service could possibly be devised.

Our news is authoritative, as fully so as a number of men in close touch with the trade and the trade centers can make it. It is served up "newsily" by newspaper men.

Our staff men cover the production centers each week in a constant endeavor to get advance news and often with such success that it is published before it reaches the manufacturer's New York office. Our reviewers are impartial, informative and critical.

AND, finally, this whole budget of news and criticism, a book of it, leaves New York each Thursday in time to reach every newspaper in the East, South and Middle West before Sunday and the far West before any other such medium.

With this double avenue to the trade and to the public through their daily papers, the trade paper will hold a powerful and strategic position in the greater campaign of publicity now before the motion picture.

The Handwriting on the Screen

THE statement was made on this page some time ago that the unlimited power allowed the motion picture censors would surely develop in them a policy of tyranny and intolerance.

The recent conduct of the censors of Ohio and Kansas has now made this forecast a fact.

* * *

WITH their sense of the rights of others blunted by the power they do possess under the existing law, the censors of these states have utterly overstepped the bounds of their offices, and arrogated to themselves powers which no law, under the Federal Constitution, could possibly confer upon them.

They have forgotten that their sole statutory duty is to censor motion pictures.

Their present, self-elected vocation is that of attempting to repress free speech, whenever that speech takes the form of a criticism of motion picture censorship.

IN Ohio, Sam Bullock, of Cleveland, exhibited for several days at his theatre, a film of a business men's picnic.

A single sentence from an address by Fred Herrington, the National League President, was flashed on the screen during the picture, reading:

"Censorship was conceived in iniquity, born in sin and is dying in disgrace."

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller and her associates ordered the sentence cut out. Mr. Bullock refused and invited them to take the matter to court.

The censors, needless to say, threw down their hand.

IN Kansas, a news weekly containing the following words was submitted to the Rev. Festus Foster and Miss Carrie Simpson, of Parsons, pasteurizers of pictures for the public.

"This theatre pays its share of an unjust two dollars per reel tax to the state of Kansas because our august legislature thought you didn't know any better than to pay us your money to see something that would injure you."

Miss Simpson used her scissors on the offending strip of film, instead of her better judgment, and—unfortunately, there was no Sam Bullock to appeal from the petticoat to the ermine.

IF these events had not actually occurred, there would be every reason for denying that they could occur.

Two of the reasons are these:

First—The United States is a country where the right of an individual to criticise, in speech or in writing, any state or national law under which he lives, is fully acknowledged and universally exercised.

Every political campaign, local, state or national, is the occasion of unsparing criticism of various laws by the members of the parties involved.

Every newspaper in the country is instant to attack any law which it has reason to think worthless in form or unnecessary in substance.

That any official of an American state should deliberately use his office to prevent criticism of the law that made him, by the voters who made that law—and can repeal it whenever they choose—is almost beyond belief.

Yet it has twice happened within the last thirty days.

* * *

SECOND—The censorship laws authorize the censors to eliminate from a film anything that is "harmful, indecent, lewd, vulgar, or tends to debase public morals."

Will Mrs. Maude Murray Miller and Miss Carrie Simpson be good enough to explain under what clause of the censorship law they ordered the elimination of the two statements we have quoted above?

Perhaps the worthy ladies believed the statements in question to be "harmful."

But it is hard to see how they could possibly be "harmful" to anything but their own jobs.

SHALL we call it an act of official cowardice on the part of the "protectors of public morals?" Are they afraid of the power of the screen to drive home facts and tell the truth?

Can they believe themselves in the right in forcing censorship upon an uninformed public, and yet be so terrified and unnerved by criticism?

Are they so uncertain of their own positions that they must adopt questionable methods of protecting themselves?

THE censors have already given abundant proof of their recklessness within the limits of their office.

It is just as well to remind them, however, that before the courts, the censor is no better than the average citizen, and will there be treated as one who is just as liable to error and impropriety as any of his fellow-men.

The Vindication of The Film Companies

THE real facts of the Famous Players' fire, as revealed by investigation, seem to indicate that Fire Commissioner Adamson's attack upon the film companies as a menace to the community's safety is not only premature, but is unwarranted because founded upon a total misunderstanding of the facts.

One has only to read the story published in this week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be convinced that the evidence is wholly against the Commissioner.

This is no Triangle holocaust—though Mr. Adamson's remarks seem to group the film concerns with sweat shop and factory fire-traps. Instead of seeking for carelessness where all is precaution and scientific prevention, would he not do better to ferret out criminal negligence in the numerous quarters where it still continues to flourish?

Famous Players Output Unaffected by Studio Fire Enough Films on Hand to Complete Release Dates

Although Plant of the Company at 213-227 West Twenty-Sixth Street, New York City, With the Exception of the Laboratory, Was Completely Destroyed by the Flames, Production Will Not Cease—The Conflagration Only Hastens the Completion of the Studios and Offices Planned for Erection at Northern End of Metropolis—Enough Films on Hand to Fill Release Dates

BY far the largest and most disastrous fire that has ever visited a film manufacturing company, last week completely destroyed the studios of the Famous Players Film Company, in New York City. The conflagration, discovered at 6:55, on the afternoon of September 11, had its origin in a braid factory which occupied the lower portion of the building at 213-227 West Twenty-sixth street, the upper stories of which served as the film company's studios, laboratories and executive offices.

Although the studios, offices and their co-related departments, such as dressing rooms, property rooms and projecting rooms, were entirely demolished, it has been definitely established that the laboratories of the Famous Players, contrary to the first reports of the fire published in the daily newspapers, was not blown out by an explosion.

In fact, the laboratory was the only division of the entire building which remained intact after the fire, which totally refutes the assumption held by Fire Commissioner Adamson that film factories within the confines of the city are a menace to New York.

As the laboratory comprises the entire manufacturing end of the studio structure and is the portion of the plant which contained the chemicals that are believed by the fire authorities to be so dangerous to the community in the event of fire, the astonishing success of this part of the building in withstanding the attack of the devastating flames is at once a direct and incontrovertible contradiction of the theory that film factories are of necessity dangerous to the community, and a conclusive illustration of the efforts exerted by the Famous Players to maintain an absolutely fireproof factory.

That this portion of the building was subjected to the severest possible test by the flames is shown by the fact that the laboratory was situated on the third floor of the building, and that the flames, which completely enveloped it, swept past it in their upward flight and ate their way through the roof itself.

Flames Eat Way Around Laboratory

The blaze communicated to the studio floors before the three men who were in the film plant at the time, including Frank Meyer, laboratory manager, were able to remove anything of value. So dense was the smoke, in fact, that they barely succeeded in escaping with their lives by jumping to the roofs of adjoining buildings. It was soon apparent that the huge building was doomed, and the firemen devoted their entire efforts to the saving of adjoining property. All the firemen in Manhattan were summoned to fight the blaze before it had been going half an hour, and a solid wall of water was thrown around the building for four hours before the flames were declared to be under control.

Despite the losses involved in the destruction of every inflammable article in the building, except a few negative films stored in the laboratory, which, while not yet fully determined by the officers of the Famous Players, are known to reach a staggering figure, the company proceeded at once to organize its forces in order to rush at top speed the completion of the varied work which had been planned or was in progress previous to the fire.

A temporary meeting place was established at the Hotel Astor on Sunday so that the productive activities of the concern could be resumed without interruption or delay, from which various members of the company were dispatched in search of offices, studios and printing plants.

New executive offices were opened at 507 Fifth avenue on Monday morning; production was under way at the company's Yonkers studio on the same day; Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Hazel Dawn, Pauline Frederick and John Barrymore were assembled and at once prepared to appear in a series of new productions to be substituted for those injured or destroyed in the fire, and the printing of the first film on the newly arranged release schedule was begun at another laboratory.

Plans of Company Uninterrupted

The Famous Players are already in a position to assure the trade that no plan which had been formulated or contemplated before the outbreak of the fire will be in any way modified or impaired, and that the only change of schedule will be that arising from the necessary delay in printing and assembling the scattered negatives rescued from the fire or the re-taking of such subjects as have been partially or wholly destroyed.

This includes the postponing of release of Marie Doro in "The White Pearl," scheduled for September 20, which will now be issued on October 11; the indefinite postponement of Charles Cherry in "The Mummy and the Humming-Bird," and the rearrangement of the next two-months' program.

The original release date of "The White Pearl" will be filled by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company's production of Lou Tellegen in "The Explorer."

The first Famous Players release on the revised Paramount schedule will be John Mason and Hazel Dawn in "The Fatal Card," which will appear on September 30, to be followed by Marguerite Clark in "The Prince and the Pauper," October 4; Mary Pickford in "A Girl of Yesterday," October 7; Marie Doro in "The White Pearl," October 11; Hazel Dawn in "The Masqueraders," October 28; Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters," November 4; Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly," November 8; Pauline Frederick in "Zaza," November 11, and John Barrymore in "The Red Widow," November 15.

Fortunately, many negatives of future releases were stored in safety vaults, not on the premises destroyed. It is feared, however, that two or three exceptionally elaborate features planned for release in the early spring, have been totally ruined.

Fire Hastens Work on Other Studio

The immediate result of the fire has been the rushing to a speedy conclusion of the plans in preparation, prior to the fire, for the erection of the studios and laboratories on the newly acquired tract of land at 225th street, west of Broadway, overlooking the Harlem and Hudson rivers. These plans, which call for the erection of the large and comprehensively equipped motion picture studios, are now in the hands of the contractors who have been given instructions to rush the completion of the work.

It is an interesting commentary on the completeness of the plans for the new studios and laboratories that Edwin S. Porter, under whose personal supervision they were drawn, declares that not one change in specifications will be necessitated by the experience of the last week.

"Every contingency which could possibly arise in a fire in the studios which we are now building has been anticipated and provided for. Last week's fire has not disclosed the necessity for any safeguard that had not before been anticipated and planned.

"The lessons of the fire prove conclusively that the fire prevention measures which we had already contemplated are more than adequate to cope with any situation which could conceivably confront us," said Mr. Porter.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players, stated that the work of the organization would go on uninterruptedly.

"We are undaunted by our tremendous loss, and will abate no effort to continue to hold our place as the foremost producing concern in the world," declared Mr. Zukor, when seen at his temporary offices.

"Our plans remain unchanged. They will simply require more determined effort to push them through in order to make up the temporary delay which naturally arises from the sudden scattering of our forces. With the Yonkers studio as our production headquarters, we will quickly obtain the use of other studios in the vicinity of New York, where all our work will be rushed with the maximum speed compatible with a high standard of artistic production.

Plenty of Pictures for Release

"One of the great revelations to us is the immense advantage to be derived from a schedule of productions making possible the completion of a film long before it is to be released—a policy we have always striven to maintain. Had we not had several films ready for almost immediate release, our organization would have been badly hindered, and our distributing system demoralized.

"It is with the most heartfelt appreciation," added Mr. Zukor, "that I acknowledge in behalf of the Famous Players, the innumerable telegrams from exhibitors, exchangemen and manufacturers offering sympathy and, in many cases, the complete studio facilities and organizations of the senders. The Famous Players can never express in words the gratitude and pleasure which these sincere tributes from the members of the trade have afforded them in this hour of great trial, but it is particularly gratifying that the organized resources of the company made the acceptance of these offers unnecessary."

History of Famous Players

The Famous Players Film Company, organized in the early part of 1912 by Adolph Zukor, Daniel Frohman and Edwin S. Porter, was the first concern to present the celebrated stars and plays of the legitimate stage in motion pictures. The studio on West Twenty-sixth street, which was destroyed, has been used constantly by the company since its inception.

It was in this place that the first feature ever produced in America, presenting an important stage star and based on a great dramatic success, James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda," was staged, the previous and initial offering of the Famous Players, Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth," having been produced in France.

The recuperative powers and efficient organization of the Famous Players Film Company could not be better demonstrated than by the rapidity with which actual production of films was resumed after the disastrous fire which completely devastated the company's New York studio.

Immediately upon receipt of the news of the fire, the officials of the company rushed to the scene of the blaze, and as soon as it was definitely assured that the building was doomed, work was begun on the re-assembling of the principal stars of the organization, together with their respective supporting casts, for the purpose of beginning the production of new features, to replace the negatives injured or destroyed.

As a result of the expediency with which the directors worked scenes were actually taken on Monday morning, and on Tuesday five productions were under way.

FAMOUS PLAYERS FIRE WILL NOT AFFECT PARAMOUNT RELEASES EXCEPT IN CHANGES OF DATES

That the destruction by fire of the Famous Players Film Company's Studio at 213-227 West Twenty-sixth street, New York City, last Saturday night would not affect the Paramount Program except in so far as necessitating certain changes in release dates, was the statement made by W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, when seen by a representative of this paper.

The Famous Players' first release following the fire, instead of being Marie Doro in "The White Pearl," on September 20, will be Hazel Dawn and John Mason in "The Fatal Card" on September 30, followed October 4, 7 and 11 by Marguerite Clark in "The Prince and the Pauper," Mary Pickford in "The Girl of Yesterday" and Marie Doro in "The White Pearl."

The complete schedule of the Paramount Picture Corporation's releases for the next two months and a half will be: September 20, Lou Tellegan in "The Explorer," Lasky Company; September 23, Elsie Janis in "'Twas Ever Thus," Bosworth; September 27, Donald Brian in "The Voice in the Fog," Lasky; September 30, "The Fatal Card," Hazel Dawn and John Mason, Famous Players; October 4, Marguerite Clark in "The Prince and the Pauper," Famous Players; October 7, Mary Pickford in "The Girl of Yesterday," Famous Players; October 11, Marie Doro in "The White Pearl," Famous Players; October 14, Laura Hope Crews in "Blackbirds," Lasky; October 18, all star cast in "The Chorus Lady," Lasky; October 21, Blanche Sweet in "The Secret Sin," Lasky; October 25, Blanche Ring in "The Yankee Girl," Morosco; October 28, Hazel Dawn in "The Masquerader," Famous Players; November 1, Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," produced by the Lasky Feature Play Company by arrangement with Morris Gest; November 4, Marguerite Clark in "Still Water," Famous Players; November 8, Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly," Famous Players; November 11, Pauline Frederick in "Zaza," Famous Players; November 15, John Barrymore in "The Red Widow," Famous Players; November 18, not decided; November 22, Victor Moore in "Chimmie Fadden Out West," Lasky; November 25, Dustin Farnum in "A Gentleman from Indiana," Pallas; November 29, not decided.

From this it can be seen that the pictures announced for exhibition at Paramount theatres will make their appearance there, though in some cases not at the time originally decided upon.

Kansas Dailies After Scalp of Officious Censor Board

Its Recent High-Handed Action, Forbidding Display of a Strip of Film Criticising Unjust Tax Law, Arouses Newspapers to Danger from Free-Speech Stranglers

Special to Motion Picture News

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 15.

SLIDES are being prepared for the fight against the censorship in Kansas and these will be run in the picture theatres throughout the state in an effort to have the law amended at the next session of the legislature.

A campaign will be carried on in the theatres in the state against office-seekers who are in favor of censorship. It is hoped to arouse public opinion to such a pitch that those who are in favor of censorship will amend the law so that the high tax that is now paid for the censoring of films will be done away with and only such films that are objected to will be censored.

The newspapers of the state are taking up the fight since the censors turned down the strip of film which contained an argument against censorship in its present form. The papers are taking up the fight on the ground that the censors have overstepped their authority and are aiding in the suppression of free speech. It is admitted that there was nothing vulgar or obscene in the strip of film that was submitted for censorship, yet the censors turned it down solely on the ground that it was a criticism of the law.

The slides that are being prepared will be in the hands of the exhibitors the early part of next week and enough of them will be prepared so that all the theatres in the state will be supplied with enough for a forty weeks' campaign.

It is understood that inspectors have been sent out on the road by the censor to see that no uncensored films are shown. That is where the money will be spent that is paid into the state by those having films censored.

WORLD BUYS RIGHTS TO CALIFORNIA M. P. PLAYS

The World Film Corporation announces that at a meeting of its board of directors, arrangements were completed for the purchase, outright, of all rights to the motion picture productions of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "The Lily of Poverty Flat," and "Mignon," in which the famous star, Beatriz Michelena, was starred by the California Motion Picture Corporation. Heretofore, the features had been released by the California Corporation through the World Film, but with the closing of the present transaction the California company relinquishes all rights to the photoplays.

Another announcement made by the World Film is that of the purchase of all film rights to Edward Sheldons famous drama, "Salvation Nell."

BALBOA PICTURE SENT TO FRANCE TO BE COLORED

"The Shrine of Happiness," a three-reel Balboa production which is to be released through Pathé, has been sent to France to be colored. This film, featuring Miss Jackie Saunders and William Conklin, has a wealth of wonderfully beautiful exteriors, being made in Southern California.

Ohio Censors Face Big Fight On "Hypocrites"

Carl H. Pierce, Undaunted by the Board's Reputation for Autocratic Methods, Throws Down the Gage of Battle and Intends to Force the Issue Whether It Is Possible for the Snap Judgment of a Handful of People to Govern the Wishes of 5,000,000 Picture Fans

Special to Motion Picture News

Columbus, O., Sept. 15.

At last the expected has happened. Maud Murray Miller and her board have precipitated the fight for which they have been spoiling ever since the Ohio Censor Board was formed. This time the fight centers around the photoplay "Hypocrites," with Carl H. Pierce present and accounted for, on the ground—prepared to fight to a finish the question as to whether the 5,000,000 people of Ohio shall have decent pictures which they themselves wish to see, or whether the will of one woman shall dominate the affairs of the exhibitors and public of the state.

Mr. Pierce some time since remarked to the News that "Hypocrites" had been passed in every state in the Union except Ohio, and ventured the remark that this in and of itself did not seem to be a right condition. He stated that he felt the situation needed attention and accordingly, after the close of the Paramount convention in Chicago, and after consulting with Mr. Steele, president, and W. C. Bachmeyer, branch manager, of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., of Pittsburgh, who handle the Ohio territory, Mr. Pierce journeyed to Columbus.

The film was duly brought again to the attention of the censors. The fee was again forthcoming. It seems that each time the censors review a film they charge an additional fee, which makes the revenues from the office more lucrative and hence present the force of argument to the state that the censor board is a most desirable adjunct to its sovereign administration.

"Hypocrites" having been rescanned, the censors expressed themselves as of the same opinion still. Charles G. Williams, whose previous experience as an attorney in Dayton has probably provided him with exceptional facilities for knowing the wants of the photoplay fans, thus expressed himself, "I'm afraid that this film might be misinterpreted by children."

To this Mr. Pierce replied: "I have shown it to my children. Mr. Steele has shown it to his children. It has been shown to wives, mothers, heads of civic and social organizations, ministers, priests, mayors, police officials, judges and mixed audiences. Probably in all I have seen it viewed by 50,000 people from all classes of society—and viewed most respectfully and with commendation. I feel that your fears are based on fear and not on fact."

Mr. Williams' Objection

Mr. Williams, however, was obdurate. "That picture," he said, "was made purely to commercialize the form of a naked woman. Your director ought to have shown the minister's mother instead of the young maiden. Then no one could have had impure thoughts from the nude woman."

Mr. Wilson was of still another mind. "The director," he said, "has pictured truth as a woman. Now we all know that woman does not typify truth. Those of us who have experience with women know that."

On Friday Mr. Pierce received the certificate from the board stating that the cause of rejection of "Hypocrites" was "on account of being harmful," having delivered which ultimatum the Ohio censor board resumed its quiescent attitude of watchful waiting and the music began.

Mr. Steele and Mr. Pierce then called upon the industrial commission, whose secretary, George L. Stoughton, is secretary of the censor board under the Ohio statute. Ben H. Harmon, general manager of the Neil House—a famous hostelry where Charles Dickens once stopped and concerning which he has written an immortal tribute—went with the film representatives, introducing them to Wallace D. Yaple, chairman of the commission. "Mr. Yaple," said Mr. Harmon, "these gentlemen have come to see you about a film called "Hypocrites" which I have seen myself and in which I see absolutely no harm—in fact it is a film that I believe will do much good. It has been turned down by the censor board and I would speak in behalf of these gentlemen who are personally known to me as men of business integrity and repute, asking you to use your best efforts to have the decision reversed."

Mr. Yaple, after listening to Mr. Pierce's explanation of the film was asked to view it. "I am rather stale on account of too much work," he replied. "I want to get away to the country and go fishing for a while. I'll turn you over to Mr. Stoughton, who is secretary of the censorship board. I will see what can be done. I will ask Mrs. Miller to look at the picture again," said Mr. Stoughton. "But won't you look at the film first to satisfy yourself as to its fitness," asked Mr. Steele. "No, I have not the time," replied Mr. Stoughton.

Refuse to See Picture Again

That afternoon Mr. Stoughton reported that he had used all his measures of persuasion to get Mrs. Miller and her board to review the picture again. While speaking of other things he said: "There was one time that I went up to the board and made them review three pictures and they did."

"Why wouldn't it be right to make the board review this picture again with you present?" asked Mr. Pierce. "For one thing," replied Mr. Stoughton, "I'm too busy." "You cannot spare forty-five minutes to look the film over?" he was asked. "No, I cannot. Besides, it would start a dangerous precedent for film manufacturers to make an appeal from the board. We put the censors there to do their work. We believe in them and their conscientiousness and they should be allowed to run their own department."

The matter was thus dismissed by the industrial commission, who evidently believed in having a board from whose decision there is no appeal, this being their idea, apparently, of what a constitutional law is supposed to mean.

Mr. Pierce has now put the affairs concerning "Hypocrites" in the hands of Attorney Henry Gumble for such determined action as Mr. Gumble thinks best to take. Mr. Gumble viewed the film at the Majestic theatre during the week announcing that, in his judgment, it was perfectly fit to be exhibited.

In addition to taking such steps as seem to be necessary to present the matter most favorably to the courts, Mr. Pierce has engaged the Majestic theatre—the best motion picture house in Columbus, where he will show "Hypocrites" to a specially invited list of Columbus' first citizens, from whom a ballot will be taken as to their opinion of the picture.

The vested choir from Trinity Church has been engaged and steps have been taken to make such a presentation of the picture as Columbus has possibly never before seen. This private showing will take place on Saturday morning next at 10 o'clock, admission being by ticket only, although the public will have the right to make appeal to Mr. Pierce for admission, subject to acceptance. The opinions of these first citizens will, it is believed, form valuable evidence if the case comes up in court, as it now seems fair to do.

When asked as to his future plans, Mr. Pierce replied: "It is perhaps too early to give out the plans that we at present have in mind. They are elaborate and thorough. We propose to let every man, woman and child in Ohio know just the conditions existing in the censor board today. Ohio has been some problem to manufacturers of good films. The attitude of the ordinary film man is 'pat them on the back.' So long as you smooth them the right way you can get anything you want—but for heaven's sake don't antagonize Maud Murray Miller.' This—mind you—irrespective of the merits or justice of the case."

It has been rumored persistently that her time has expired and that some one else is to be appointed in her place. That decision is said to be about due.

According to authorities, Mrs. Miller's time expired the first of September. It is understood that she is temporarily filling the place because the Governor cannot make up his mind whom to select from among the 200 to 300 applicants for her position. But one might prognosticate without fear of contradiction that "Hypocrites" will be the official death of Maud Murray Miller.

"THE SPOILERS" IS POPULAR IN AUSTRALIA

Word has been received from friends in Australia by Colin Reed of the Selig Polyscope Company that the famous multiple reel production of this company, "The Spoilers," is one of the most popular pictures in that country at the present time.

"Royalty" Shoves Democracy Aside at San Diego

"Rule By the People" Suspended (in Pickwickian Sense) While "King and Queen," Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Metro, "Reign" on Motion Picture Day

METRO stars shone among the brightest in the constellation of screen artists that scintillated about the grounds of the San Diego Panama-California Exposition on Motion Picture Day, Saturday, September 11.

In a formidable field of starters that included the foremost artists of the screen, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Quality-Metro stars, were respectively crowned King and Queen of the great carnival, their selection being made after a hotly waged popularity contest conducted by the newspapers of Los Angeles and San Diego. The public voted for their favorite screen actor and actress on coupons provided for the purpose and Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne won "hands down" with an overwhelming plurality.

The royal purple and ermine fitted snugly upon Mr. Bushman, as he was elevated to the King's throne in a similar contest a few weeks ago at the San Francisco exposition, and was easily the most popular personage at the recent Brighton Beach Motion Picture Carnival.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN

On that occasion Metro captured many of the chief prizes, not least of which was the carrying off of the first honors with the most attractively decorated automobile in the mammoth parade, the principal event of the day.

The signal honor bestowed upon Miss Bayne, the newest stellar attraction of the Quality Picture Corporation, was received with considerable elation by President Fred J. Balshofer and her co-workers of the Quality-Metro forces.

The keenest sort of rivalry and interest prevailed in the newspaper popularity contest, for the "Who's Who" among screen artists appreciated the distinction of being named to don the regal robes and crowns.

A committee of representative citizens of Los Angeles and San Diego had personal charge in the final count of the bales of coupons deposited in the contest. This committee was composed of Mayor E. M.

BEVERLY BAYNE

Capps, of San Diego, Mayor C. E. Sebastian, of Los Angeles; G. A. Davidson, president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce; Carl Heilbron, president of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce; D. F. Garrettson, president of the First National Bank of San Diego, and Marco H. Hellman, president of the Hellman Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, of Los Angeles.

King Bushman and Queen Bayne ruled over the festivities arranged for the occasion, riding in state throughout the exposition grounds, where they received the plaudits of a record crowd, and the envious glances of a score of motion picture stars who were unsuccessful in the contest. The throng at the exposition swarmed around Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne to obtain a "close-up" of them in the flesh. So many persisted in shaking the hands of the King and Queen that at last guards were summoned by the exposition authorities, who rescued them from an uncomfortable, but withal, a pleasing situation.

FOX NEW YORK OFFICES ENLARGED BY ANOTHER ENTIRE FLOOR

The rapid enlargement of its business necessitated the Fox Film Corporation extending its business to another entire floor in the Leavitt building, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, the past week. This now gives the William Fox concern four complete floors in the building and one of the most complete executive suites in the business. The fourth floor, which is the new accommodation to be occupied, was formerly occupied by the Eclair company and was purchased, with all its furniture and fittings, by William Fox.

The offices of General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan and his executive staff, those of General Representative Abraham Carlos and his attaches, and those of John H. Goldfrap, general publicity and advertising manager, are among those who moved to the new quarters, which are elaborate and roomy. Archie Bell, critic of the Cleveland "Leader," who was in New York last week, made a tour of the William Fox studios and interviewed the ten stars and directors now at work in the vicinity of New York.

"Athens of America" for First "Carmen" Showing

Geraldine Farrar, Operatic Star, Who Makes Her Initial Screen Appearance in the Picture, Picks Boston to See Film Before It Is Exhibited in Other Cities

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Boston, Sept. 15.

CULTURED Boston is looking forward to October 1 as a date of great importance in its artistic history. That is the date when Boston's own pet of the operatic stage will make her public debut in motion pictures.

Geraldine Farrar herself chose Boston as the city which should see her "Carmen" film before all others. Miss Farrar considers her debut in the films of every bit as much importance as her first appearance on the operatic stage; and when Paramount left the decision as to the first showing of the film in her hands she promptly selected Boston, since her home town, Melrose, Mass., is but a few miles away.

Another significant fact in connection with the limited engagement of the film, previous to the regular release on November 1, is that it will be shown in the famous Symphony Hall, the home of the world-renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra. Morris Gest was in Boston Thursday, and secured permission from the city officials for showing the film at this hall, which is one of the largest auditoriums in the city.

Paramount has also secured the services of S. L. Rothapfel, of New York, the best known exhibitor in the business, and he will be in charge of the Boston engagement. Mr. Rothapfel plans to decorate the hall in gray, to make a strong contrast with the lighting scheme he plans to use in connection with the tragic scenes of the film play.

The music will be another feature. The nucleus of the big orchestra of more than fifty pieces will be the famous People's Orchestra of Boston, directed by Emil Mollenhauer. It is very likely that special soloists will be engaged to take part in a musical program preceding the film itself.

The prices for this engagement will not be high. The highest will be one dollar and a half and the lowest twenty-five cents. At the showing of the film on the regular program at the Park later, however, the usual prices of that theatre, twenty-five and thirty-five cents, are expected to prevail.

John C. Flinn, publicity man for Lasky, is assisting Charles Ellis, personal representative of Miss Farrar, in completing arrangements for the Symphony Hall engagement. Mr. Flinn paid a call on the NEWS representative and was glowing with enthusiasm, not only for "Carmen," but for all Paramount undertakings.

Gold Rooster a Sign of Quality Is Pathe Plan

Company Inaugurates New Policy of One Picture a Week, Under Favorable Auspices—A Large Array of Histrionic and Directing Talent Engaged Under the Pathe Banner for the Achievement of the Concern's Intention to "Offer the Picture-Goer Pictures of the Highest Type It Is Possible to Produce"

THE immense resources of the Pathé offices are being chiefly directed this week toward the inauguration of the new one-a-week policy, which began with the release of the first Gold Rooster feature picture, on September 10. The announced intention is to make this series the most successful, both from the standpoint of the exhibitor and producer, ever launched, and the policy will be to achieve this by a direct appeal to the public—by offering the picturegoer pictures of the highest type it is possible to produce.

It is with the hope that the Gold Rooster will become the signal mark for films which are absolutely good in every respect, story, settings, actors and direction, that everybody in the Pathé offices and studios has been working for several months, and the result is now ready for the verdict of the public.

Plays and novels which have already proven successful have been picturized by expert scenario writers, and turned over to the most capable directors and companies to be found. The greatest care in everything, from the main essentials to the most minute details, has been exercised, that the finished picture may be free from flaws of every sort.

The first two releases, "The Galloper" and "Via Wireless," have already been viewed at private screenings. They set a mark of unusual excellence, and the reviewer is responsible for the statement that if the Pathé forces can maintain the standard set in these two productions, their ambition for the Gold Rooster plays will undoubtedly be carried to full realization.

These will be followed, in regular order, by "Simon the Jester," "The Spender," "John Gleyde's Honor," "An Affair of Three Nations," and then will come "Mary's Lamb," "Comrade John," "The Weavers," "At Bay," "The Closing Net," "The Beloved Vagabond," "Nedra," "The Shrine of Happiness," "The River Alley Mystery," and others yet to be announced. Two of these, "The Beloved Vagabond," and "The Shrine of Happiness," have been sent to France, where the films are being colored.

Gratifying Advance Bookings

Advance booking for the series, it is announced at the Pathé executive offices, have exceeded all expectations, and practically insure the success of the new series. Exhibitors who have not seen any of the pictures, and have heard little concerning them have accepted them on the strength of the guarantee of excellence which goes with the Pathé name.

General Manager Gasnier of Pathé, when he determined to put out features of the highest quality, found his hardest problem to be the assembling of a thoroughly competent corps of producers. That he has solved the problem successfully is evident from a survey of the names now associated with Pathé.

There are the Horkheimers, H. M. and E. D., for example, who have made a name for themselves with their company, the Balboa. "Neal of the Navy" is a living witness of their ability. With their new studios and large force of well-known players, the special features from their studios for the Gold Rooster plays may be confidently expected to be far above par.

In their enlarged studios at Long Beach, Cal., the Horkheimers have under way a series of pictures complete in themselves, which will be a sequel to the "Who Pays?" series that proved so popular last year. Among the actor folk gathered by the Horkheimers for their productions are William Courtleigh, Jr., Henry King, Lillian Lorraine, Ruth Roland and Jackie Saunders.

Leopold D. and T. W. Wharton, former Pathé directors, now producing their own pictures at their Ithaca, N. Y., studios, and releasing exclusively through Pathé, have been identified with Pathé for many years. The excellent dramas, "The Boundary Rider," "The Pawn of Fortune," and "The Prince of India," are proof of the ability of Wharton, Inc.

Leopold Wharton was born in Manchester, England, in 1870, but was brought to this country two years later by his parents, who settled in Hempstead, Texas. After a long career on the stage, when he was associated with Minnie Maddern Fiske, Augustin Daly, Olga Nethersole, and others of equal celebrity, he became interested in pictures in 1909, and made an extraordinary success as a director for Pathé.

His brother, Theodore, is a native of Milwaukee, but was reared in Texas, where for nine years he was treasurer of the Dallas Opera House. Feeling that life would be more interesting on the stage, he joined the Hopkins Grand Opera Company as an actor in 1895, later being associated with E. H. Sothern, Frohman's Empire Theatre Company, Hammerstein's Victoria theatre and Hanlon Brothers.

SOME OF THE CLASSICAL FEATURES THAT ANIMATE THE MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE, "THE HOUSE OF A THOUSAND SCANDALS," MADE AT THE STUDIOS OF THE AMERICAN FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Wharton Name a Household Word

Wharton was first attracted to motion pictures in 1907, when he began writing scenarios, with what success was proven by his selling twenty-eight of his first thirty scripts to the Edison Company, who then made him scenario editor and studio supervisor. When Pathé Frères established their American studio, he went with them and became their first director.

Since that time, with the exception of short intervals, he has been associated with Pathé, first as director, and now, with his brother Leopold, as producers for Pathé. Through "The Exploits of Elaine" the Wharton name has become known in every hamlet in the land.

The other producers of Pathé's Gold Rooster plays are these:

Donald Mackenzie, who has been with Pathé for over three years. When the "Perils of Pauline" was put on his ability was recognized by his being placed in charge of the production of most of the episodes. Mr. Mackenzie has two pictures already on the Gold Rooster program, "The Spender" and "The Galloper." He has just finished the third, Richard Carle's "Mary's Lamb."

George Fitzmaurice, who started in as Pathé's scenario editor several years ago, later becoming a director, put on two successful pictures for Pathé. After a number of months with Kleine, during which he made a number of big pictures, he returned to Pathé and produced "Via Wireless," a big theatrical success, which was the second Gold Rooster play to be released by Pathé.

Edward Jose, who starred in a number of Pathé's best pictures a year ago, and then went with Fox. He has, since his return to Pathé, finished two very fine plays, William J. Locke's "The Beloved Vagabond," and "Simon the Jester," and is now at work on Henry C. Rowland's "Closing Net."

Arnold Daly, who is the latest acquisition to the staff of Pathé's Gold Rooster play producers. Famous as an actor on the legitimate stage, he added to his fame and popularity in the "Exploits of Elaine." Trying the production end recently for the first time, he made a feature based on one of the "Ashton Kirk" stories, that will cause a sensation. Mr. Daly's talent and long theatrical experience insure the excellence of his product.

Carle and Arden in Pathe Ranks

Among the stars now appearing for Pathé, Richard Carle, who starred in the Gold Rooster play, "Mary's Lamb," produced by Donald Mackenzie, is easily one of the foremost figures. To show Mr. Carle's ability it is only necessary to say that for the last ten years he has been at the head of his own companies as star, and is the author of no fewer than ten musical comedies. The list comprises "Mam'selle 'Awkins," "The Storks," "The Tenderfoot," "The Maid and the Mummy," "The Mayor of Tokio," "The Spring Chicken," "Mary's Lamb," "The Hurdy Gurdy Girl," "The Boy and the Girl," and "Jumping Jupiter."

Edwin Arden is also starring in Pathé pictures. Mr. Arden brought to his work with Pathé a vast experience gained from playing leading parts in many of the most noteworthy American plays and in companies with the most celebrated actors and actresses of the last twenty years. Thomas W. Keene, Dion Boucicault, Edwin Booth, Clara Morris, John Gilbert, William H. Crane, Julia Arthur, Elsie Ferguson, Marie Tempest, Viola Allen and Mme. Simon—these are a few of the really great names in the career of Mr. Arden.

Another Broadway favorite, Clifton Crawford, plays the lead in "The Galloper," the Broadway success of Richard Harding Davis, which has recently been produced for Pathé at their Jersey City studios.

Melville Stewart, who is now playing in the "Follies of 1915," supports Mr. Crawford.

Max Figman, a Pathé star, is easily one of the best known actors of the day. Mr. Figman was associated with Charles Frohman, and then with Mrs. Fiske. Later he starred under the management of John Cort.

Lolita Robertson, in private life Mrs. Max Figman, is a California girl and began her stage career in stock at the Alcazar theatre. After a season or two there she came to New York and was engaged by Henry Miller for "The Great Divide." Mr. Figman offered her a good part in "The Substitute," with which company she remained for two years. The acquaintance thus begun soon ripened into love, and resulted in her marriage to Mr. Figman.

Charm of Gail Kane

Gail Kane, who appears in "Via Wireless," has the well-earned reputation of being one of the most beautiful women on the stage today, and her talents have been displayed not only in Broadway successes but pictures as well. Miss Kane was born in Philadelphia. It is safe to say that if all Philadelphia girls possessed her attractions Broadway would soon be depopulated of its men. She went to boarding school in Newburgh, N. Y., and through amateur theatricals in school got the stage fever. While summering at Long Beach, L. I., she was offered a small part in Charles Frohman's "Decorating Clementine" and eagerly grabbed at the chance. Thus she began what has proved a brilliant career.

Her next engagements were with Marie Tempest in "Vanity Fair" and in Augustus Thomas' "As a Man Thinks." Her first leading part was with Chauncy Olcott in "Macushla." Then came leading parts in Augustus Thomas' play "The Model," "Anatol," at the Little Theatre, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "The Miracle Man," and "The Hyphen."

In "Via Wireless" Miss Kane achieved a triumph that will be long remembered in picture annals.

Bruce McRae's Successes

Bruce McRae, who plays the lead in "Via Wireless," has enjoyed great popularity on the stage. He has appeared in some of the most successful vehicles and has co-starred with some of the best in the business.

Among his more recent stage successes may be mentioned: "Told in the Hills," "The Step-Sister," "Dr. Wak's Patient," with Mrs. Fiske in "Rosmersholm," Richard Lassales in "The Flag Lieutenant," Richard Archer in "The Commanding Officer," Huzar in "The Lily," the Duke of Moreland in "Nobody's Widow," with Blanche Bates and Michael Doyle in "Years of Discretion," which brought him up to the summer of 1913, when his services were secured by Cohan and Harris, for whom he created the role of Harry Lindsay in the successful farce "Nearly Married."

His work in "Via Wireless" for Pathé stamps him as an actor perfectly fitted to the screen in a production whose scenic effects might easily have overshadowed a star of less ability.

Full-Time Production on All Universal Stages

George Kann, Secretary of the Company, Back in New York from Flying Trip to West Coast, Sees Evidence at U City of Immediate Need of Expansion for His Concern to Keep Pace with the Demands for Features and Program Plays Manufactured by the Company

GEORGE KANN has returned to his desk at the Universal headquarters after a flying trip to the Western studios at Universal City, in a very optimistic frame of mind.

"The Universal is going to spring a surprise in the very near future," he declared in a recent interview. "We are putting on some productions in Universal City which will cause considerable discussion when they are seen on the screen.

"We have increased our staff of directors and likewise our staff of actors. Every foot of the stages is used daily, and it will be only a question of a very short time when we will have to enlarge their area.

"The Beauty Contest, recently handled by the Universal with success, has added to the popularity of the pictures released under our various brands. During my trip all that I heard was flattering remarks from exchangemen and exhibitors for the Universal and its program.

"The placing of Broadway Features on the regular program has been greeted with open arms by the exhibitors everywhere.

S. R. O. Sign for Broadway Features

"Wherever an exhibitor is using the Broadway Features he is using the S. R. O. sign. The one question which seems to be puzzling the exhibitor and the public is how we can afford to put big legitimate stars on the program. But if they could visit Universal City they would be able to understand why it is possible for the Universal to do this.

"When it is taken into consideration that the cost of production is minimized, with such an enormous plant it is not very difficult to fathom.

"We are going to surprise the public when we release 'The Dumb Girl of Portici,' with Pavlowa, the Russian dancer. I had the pleasure of witnessing the taking of some of the scenes in this production, and I think it is no exaggeration to say that her work is simply marvelous.

"There are many other productions now being staged at Universal City which are moving picture gems. One of the best pictures the public has seen in some time will be 'Judge Not,' or 'The Woman of Mona Diggings,' in which Julia Dean plays the leading role. This is a stirring drama of a gambler's attempt to wreck the life of an innocent girl, and I am certain the public is going to receive this as one of the best dramas of the present season.

"Another picture which will be very popular is 'The Long Chance,' in which Frank Keenan will be seen shortly. This picture is greatly enhanced with the aid of the sterling actor who was peculiarly adapted for the role in this piece. In 'The Long Chance' I think Mr. Keenan does some of the finest work of his career.

"Henrietta Crosman is also working on an excellent picture entitled, 'The Faddist,' which offers great opportunities for an actress of her vogue. Some of the scenes in this picture are remarkable in artistic effects.

GEORGE KANN AT UNIVERSAL CITY

"At present Universal City is a very busy place and one sees nothing but mile after mile of big sets all being used in the various pictures now under course of production.

"Despite the European conflict the Universal has had a remarkably successful year and there is an increasing demand for our program, both here and abroad. We have put over some big things during the past few months, but we are going to do bigger things in the near future.

"At the present moment we are planning certain things which will amaze and startle the film industry when we announce what they are."

Pavlowa Production Completed

The big Universal's eight reel feature, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," which is founded on Auber's famous opera "Masaniello," and adapted for the screen by Lois Weber, with Anna Pavlowa in the leading role of Fenella, the dumb girl, has been completed.

The last scenes in this production were taken last week, and the Russian dancer is now on her way to New York to prepare for her regular tour with her ballet. She should reach the metropolis by the latter part of the week and she will at once begin rehearsing her ballets and divertissements.

This picture will mark Pavlowa's screen debut and all those connected with the production are enthusiastic over the results obtained. The greater dancer herself says she is satisfied with the work, while Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley declare that Pavlowa is going to surprise the entire world when the picture is shown to the millions who will have the pleasure of seeing it.

The picture was just two months in the making, and during that time the directors were amazed at the great interest shown in her work by the incomparable dancer. Although some of the scenes had to be taken several times, the great dancer was always ready and anxious to assist the directors in every way possible and evidenced as much interest as if she were staging one of her ballets.

MME. PAVLOWA AS SHE WILL APPEAR IN "THE DUMB GIRL OF PORTICI"

FENELLA IS COMMANDED TO DANCE FOR THE DUKE AND THE RIOTERS

The picture is now being "cut" and should reach New York in a couple of weeks, where it will be viewed by the Universal officials. The first exhibition will probably be held about the middle of October.

Dinner Party for Anna Pavlowa

A most pleasant dinner party was given by the Universal Company in compliment to Anna Pavlowa, Wednesday before last in the ballroom of the Alexandria Hotel, Los Angeles, at which Lois Weber, who has been in charge of directing the Pavlowa Universal feature, presided.

During the dinner Miss Weber introduced a number who responded with appropriate toasts, and included in this list were Henry McRea, Otis Turner, Mack Sennett, Henrietta Crosman and others. Immediately following the dinner the floor was cleared and Mlle. Pavlowa, accompanied by her dancing master, N. Clustine, surprised all by presenting the dance known as "The Invitation to the Dance." The remainder of the evening was spent in dancing and the event proved a very great success of the good fellowship idea where nothing was formal but the dress.

Included in the list of guests were Henry McRea, H. P. Caulfield, Otis Turner, Al Christie, William Worthington, W. C. Dowlan, Joseph DeGrasse, J. P. McGowan, Herbert Rawlinson, M. G. Jonas, Wallace Kerrigan, and their wives, Hobart Henley, Robert Ross, Adele Farrington, Laura Oakley, Marshall Stedman, Cleo Madison, and many others of the leading players of the Universal staff, Henrietta Crosman, Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand, D. W. Griffith, Fred Mace, Margaret Loveridge, Courteney Foote, Jean Darnell, Myrtle Stedman, Ruth Roland, Frank Elliott, Harry Hamm, Herbert Standing, and many others, in all nearly one hundred. Mlle. Pavlowa left for New York the latter part of last week.

Keystone Laughs Itself Into a New $100,000 Studio

Mack Sennett Buys a 4-Lot Plot for Administration Building Sites, the Structures of Steel and Concrete to Take the Place of Present Offices

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 13.

THAT the Keystone Film Company is to have a new one hundred thousand dollar studio of fireproof construction became known when it was learned that Mack Sennett, managing director, had purchased a plot of ground consisting of four lots on Aaron street, which is the first north of the original Keystone studio, and just around the corner.

These four lots, which constitute the third quarter of the square, are to serve as sites for a new administration building, which will be built of concrete and steel, as soon as plans which are now being prepared are completed. This building will take the place of the present offices of the business and scenario departments, and will make it possible for the removal of the present buildings, thereby giving additional space that can be used in enlarging the recently completed mammoth stage.

Following the completion of the new administration building it is the intention of the company, according to plans now being perfected under the direction of Mr. Sennett, to replace all the other buildings of the company with modern ones of steel and concrete, with sufficient additional space for enlarging the laboratories, projecting rooms and the various shops and wardrobe department.

With this addition the Keystone studio will occupy three-quarters of a square of the block numbered from seventeen to eighteen hundred on the east side of Allesandro street, and all but one lot in the block across the street directly west. The added facilities will greatly aid the producing company by the much needed additional stage space, and make for the company one of the finest and best appointed studios of the West Coast film center.

While the plans are being prepared for the administration building, the bungalows which heretofore have occupied the recently purchased four lots are being razed and every preparation made for early beginning of work on the buildings.

Director Taylor Makes Record in Filming "Diamond"

He Handled 536 Supernumeraries in Fifty-Two Scenes in One Day—Possible Only Through Organization—Much Depends on the Technical Knowledge of the Cameraman

WILLIAM D. Taylor, director of the $20,000 prize photoplay, "The Diamond from the Sky" recently handled 536 supernumeraries through fifty-two scenes of picture-making in one day.

This performance is considered a record and is illustrative of the untiring energy and great directive genius of the man, also of the responsive organization with which he has surrounded himself.

"Organization is the key to 'big' picture production," Director Taylor commented at the end of the tremendous day's work. "If a director organizes well he will turn out good pictures. To do so, however, he must weigh well his subordinates and coworkers. The camera is a most important element and unless the director has the cooperation and confidence of his camera operator all will not go well.

"In Homer Scott, 'the man behind the lens' in the production of 'The Diamond from the Sky,' I believe there is invested more technique, more knowledge, more artistry and more care than in any of the wonderful cameramen with whom I have come in contact.

"Mr. Scott is abreast of every opportunity, full of ideas, and weighs every situation with regard to both actors and background, with the result that there is intense life in the countenances of the actors and the detail of the sets are brought out with a vividness not seen frequently enough in high class productions."

"It is well enough for a director to exert his skill and the actors their ability, but if the camera does not 'get' all it should the work of everyone is lost. There is no fear of that while Homer Scott turns the crank."

The group of assistants to Director Taylor has been given a touch of "militarism" by their superior, each having his regular position during the day's work, each is responsible for certain activities and each is required to report progress every hour.

The result is that the production of the prize photoplay has moved forward with a precision that would do credit to some foreign legion. The watchword is "organization" and the success of this big picture confirms the wisdom of its selection.

September 23 Set for Triangle Opening in New York

Initial Showings of the Pictures in Philadelphia and Chicago Are Fixed for a Week Later—Will Present 4 Plays Every Seven Days

DIRECTORS of the Triangle Film Corporation, which has been making great strides in its giant organization for exploiting the dramas of the Griffithville, Inceville and Keystone studios, met in New York Friday, September 10, and definitely decided on Thursday evening, September 23, as the date of opening for the first of their model theatres, the Knickerbocker, in New York City.

The openings at the Studebaker, Chicago, and the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia will probably be simultaneous a week later, that is, Thursday evening, September 30. William Furst reported to the directors that he had brought back the orchestral score of two of the plays, namely, "The Iron Strain" and "The Lamb." The rest of the music has been shipped and was due to reach New York Monday, September 13.

On account of the contracts that the corporation is making with exhibitors throughout the country, it has been decided to present four plays the first week as well as in the succeeding weeks. That was the original plan, but the desire of Messrs. Sennett and Hitchcock to run "My Valet" as a four reeler allowed only three plays, hence the change in plan.

Now the original plan has been resorted to: "My Valet," Raymond Hitchcock's medium, will be somewhat abbreviated, and a second Keystone will be added, namely, Harry Booker in the costume burlesque, "A Game Old Knight."

This makes the first entertainment consist of Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain," Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb," Raymond Hitchcock in "My Valet," and Harry Booker in the screaming farce, "A Game Old Knight."

The first "week," by the way, in the four model theatres will last ten days, and the second week will start Sunday matinee, October 3.

STRAND OPENING FOR "GLORY" ON 19TH

"Guarding Old Glory," F. O. Nielsen's big peace, preparedness and patriotic picture, will open at the Strand, September 19.

Kleine-Edison Releases for Next 2 Months Notable

Aims of the Producing Companies Indicated in the Quality of the Pictures Scheduled for October and November—On Sixth of Next Month the Edison Version of "Vanity Fair," with Mrs. Fiske, Will Be Put on the Market, Followed by "The Magic Skin," Edison, Kleine's "Green Cloak" and Other Important Multiples

MRS. FISKE AS SHE WILL BE SEEN IN THE KLEINE-EDISON FEATURE PRODUCTION OF THACKERAY'S "VANITY FAIR"

FOR its October and November programs the Kleine-Edison Feature Service announces a series of big multiples well in keeping with the reputation of both manufacturers and illustrative of the present aims of the new service.

October 6 marks the initial release for that month and the first of the Edison subjects to be handled through the Kleine offices. Needless to say the Edison Company has been particularly anxious that its first release should be thoroughly representative of its future plans and ideals. With this in mind Mrs. Fiske was engaged to portray her familiar role of Becky Sharp in Thackeray's immortal classic "Vanity Fair."

Aside from the immense advertising value of both Mrs. Fiske's name and the well known title of the novel, "Vanity Fair" will prove an especially attractive "buy" from an exhibitor's standpoint because of the elaborate campaign arranged for its exploitation.

All forms of advertising and publicity material will be utilized. The paper display is unusually handsome, having been prepared by one of the best known artists in New York. A wide variety of styles and sizes, all of it beautifully colored and given seven printings, is now ready, in addition to artistic posters of Mrs. Fiske. Newspaper advertising, press stories, electrotypes, prepared advertisements for exhibitors, window cards and a host of other publicity helps will be at the disposal of exhibitors for preliminary advertising.

Two Hundred in "Vanity Fair"

The cast includes more than two hundred people. The grand ball given by Lady Richardson, in Brussels, the night preceding the battle of Waterloo, which is interrupted by the appearance of a mud-bespattered courier who staggers into the great ballroom with news of Napoleon's attack, is a dramatic and spectacular bit of picture-making.

The entire Edison studio was used for the staging of this scene, an orchestra was engaged, over four hundred costumes provided, and the curio shops of Manhattan ransacked for furniture and hangings of the period.

On October 13 the Kleine-Edison Feature Service releases its second Edison. This is "The Magic Skin," a delightful romance founded on the story of that name. Booklovers the world over are familiar with the drama, tragedy and mysticism of the quaint French romance and will exult in the announcement that it is soon to be seen in film.

How the idealist, on his way to the river to commit suicide, stops at the antique shop where the dealer gives him the magic skin; how he uses that wonderful skin which grants him every wish and shrinks in proportion to the wish gratified, is a story as uncanny and weird as it is novel and interesting.

To portray the difficult role of the idealist and dreamer, Everett Butterfield, who is now playing the leading juvenile part in "The Last Laugh" at the Thirty-ninth street theatre, was engaged. The leading feminine role is taken by Mabel Trunelle.

"The Green Cloak," on Oct. 20

On October 20 George Kleine's "The Green Cloak," featuring Irene Fenwick, will engage the attention of theatres handling the Kleine-Edison program.

"The Green Cloak" is one of Owen Davis' best stories and affords Miss Fenwick an opportunity of which she was quick to avail herself; viz, to appear in the role of a real tragedienne. As usual, an all-star cast including Richie Ling, presents the story.

The November program covers two Kleine features and one Edison. "The Politicians," that inimitable stage farce by Aaron Hoffman, has been filmed with those funny comedians, Bickel and Watson, in the title role. If these laugh-makers were funny in "The Fixer" they are doubly funny in "The Politicians."

It is a farce of many ludicrous situations, the central theme of the story pivoting on the adventure of two typical New York ward-healers who, by happy chance, are thrown into power in a small, conservative, stifly-Republican New England village. From this situation many laughs are produced.

"The Politicians" marks the second appearance in film of Bickel and Watson.

The offering for November 10 will be Edison's "The Purple Dawn," by Mary Rider. This is essentially a heart interest story containing many extraordinary views of the New York Ghetto, featuring that popular favorite, Viola Dana. "The Purple Dawn" possesses many powerful scenes and plays close to the heart strings from title to tail-piece. It is an earthly story, very human and very understandable.

"Sentimental Lady" in November

"The Sentimental Lady," a Kleine five-reel production featuring Irene Fenwick, is scheduled for release November 17. Owen Davis and Henry K. Webster are joint authors of "The Sentimental Lady," the theme of which is less dramatic but no less interesting than "The Green Cloak."

The story has to do with the controlling interest of a great gas company. Miss Fenwick plays the familiar role of the wealthy orphan girl who holds the necessary balance of the stock and who is quite sentimental in matters of old-fashioned business honesty. "The Sentimental Lady" was Miss Fenwick's last picture made prior to her road tour with "The Song of Songs."

The Kleine-Edison September program is meeting with unsurpassed success. George Kleine's "The Woman Next Door," release of September 1, is the subject of much praise on the part of the exhibitors, many of whom have played to capacity business and are booking return dates. "The Money Master," Kleine release of September 8, threatens to smash booking records because of its well known story and remarkable cast. This production features Frank Sheridan, Fania Marinoff, Paul McAllister, Anne Meredith, Sam Reed, Malcolm Duncan and Calvin Thomas. "The Fixer," Kleine release of September 15, featuring Bickel and Watson, bids fair to establish a new standard for comedies. Such well known players as Snitz Edwards, Ben L. Taggart, Ruby Hoffman and John Nicholson are in the cast.

Fire Drill Is Plan for Rolfe-Metro Studio Employees

Ex-Fire Chief Croker Makes Inspection of the Plant and Pronounces It in Excellent Condition—He Only Suggested Minor Changes in General Fire Prevention Scheme

PROMPTED by the disastrous fire that swept through the Famous Players studios last Saturday night, Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Rolfe-Metro studios at 3 West Sixty-first street, New York City, announced that, following plans already well under way looking toward minimizing the fire hazard in the big plant over which he has charge, he had called in Edward Croker, ex-chief of the New York Fire Department, and a recognized authority on fire prevention, to make an expert inspection of the premises.

Former Chief Croker was authorized to conduct a thorough personal investigation of the studio and offices and make any arrangements, regardless of expense, which he deemed essential to protect the lives of the employees and the property of the company.

While Mr. Croker found that the Rolfe-Metro folks had installed every known device for fire prevention, he suggested some minor changes in the general prevention scheme and insisted on the company adopting a fire drill, which will be enacted daily hereafter. Without warning, an alarm will be set off every day, and directors, actors, actresses, motion picture machine operators, supernumeraries and attendants in the studios will be obliged to immediately "drop" everything and anything they are doing and "fall in" for the fire drill that files them with all expedition possible to the street.

"In calling on the services of Ex-Chief Croker," said Mr. Karger, "we are only following out a plan we have had in contemplation for some time. We had scrupulously observed every regulation which the New York Fire Department required, but still we felt that we were not entirely satisfied. The film business, like all other business, requires that no precaution should be omitted to minimize the fire hazard.

"Several months ago we had an expert go over our plant and recommend alterations and changes to this end, all of which we made, but nevertheless we had been thinking for some time of calling in Former Chief Croker and his fire prevention bureau with a view to perfecting the previous expert's investigations.

"Mr. Croker was good enough to say that he had never been in a motion picture studio where the danger of fire was so slight as in the Rolfe-Metro plant. In fact, he found it necessary to recommend only some very unimportant changes in the arrangement of the studio.

"The most important recommendation which he made was the fire drill, and every member of the Rolfe-Metro staff will be carefully coached as to fire exits and will be given a frequent opportunity to show that they know exactly what to do when a fire alarm is turned in.

"Fire drills will occur every day or two and every director, actor, actress, cameraman and the regular studio staff will march to the exit previously assigned for the workers in the particular section of the studio where they are engaged.

"Ex-Chief Croker will be on hand with members of his fire prevention organization and no warning whatever will be given before the alarm is rung.

"By this means we hope to make the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., studios a model of fire prevention."

Philadelphia Activity Unchecked by Hot Weather

"An American Gentleman" Is First Release of Liberty Motion Picture Company—"For Five Thousand a Year," Five Reels, Featuring Louise Huff, Under Production

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Philadelphia, Sept. 15.

THE Liberty Motion Picture Company, whose offices and studios are at 20 E. Herman street, Germantown, is a busy place these days. The company has been thoroughly reorganized. Philadelphia people with ample capital have become interested, and a future of great prosperity seems in store for all concerned. The Liberty, which makes a specialty of developing and printing films for the open market, is also producing feature photoplays.

The first of its pictures ready for release is "An American Gentleman" from the play of the same name by William Bonelli, who was leading man with Rose Stahl. Mr. Bonelli has the lead in the picture, which is a five reel production. John Gorman, well known as a producer of Western pictures directed this subject.

Mr. Bonelli is assisted in its presentation by such well known photoplayers as Charles C. Graham, Wilbur Hudson, Virginia Fairfax, Douglas Sibole, Geo. W. Middleton and a company of about fifty others.

"An American Gentleman" is a strong drama of gypsy life, and as a stage play was a pronounced financial success. The picturized version gives latitude for much greater efforts and the result is a story full of splendid situations and many thrilling incidents, all held together by an absorbing heart narrative. "An American Gentleman" will be released by the Liberty Motion Picture Company on September 15.

Another production of the Liberty studios now in work, is the Mary Mannering success, "The Struggle."

Still another five reeler is just being started. This scenario is from the pen of Edwin B. Tilton, ex-Lubin director, who will also direct the picture, which he has named "For Five Thousand a Year." Mr. Tilton will have as his leading woman Louise Huff, former Lubin star, but more recently with Universal, where she played ingenue lead in the "Sphinx," in which Effie Shannon and Herbert Kelcey figured.

Other well-known actors with Liberty are Louis Mortelle and Edwin Lorenz. In this picture not only the large inside studios of the Liberty will be utilized, but also the new outside studios which has just been added to the resources of the plant.

A new and complete lighting system, the bets to be had, has also been installed, enabling work to go on night and day if necessary.

A further benefit to those using the Liberty plant is the large farm of two hundred acres situated about twenty-five miles from the studio, in the picturesque and historic neighborhood of Norristown. Here every kind of background that a fine feature would require will be found available.

EDGAR LEWIS TAKES CHARGE OF FEATURES IN LUBIN PLANT

Edgar Lewis left New York, Saturday, September 13, accompanied by his staff of assistants, cameramen, film cutters, property men, carpenters, wardrobe women and a number of players, to take charge of the features in the big Lubin plant at Philadelphia.

Theatre Owners: Keep Step With Tomorrow!

By Samuel M. Field, Secretary Mutual Film Corporation

Opportunities for the Live-Wire Exhibitor Are Unlimited—The Man Who Is Not Contented with a "Steady Business" and Branches Out in an Enterprising Way Is Bound to Be Successful—Story of the Motion Picture Theatre Owner Who Would Not Stand Still in His Town

ARE you running a 500-seat house in a 1,000-seat territory? A lot of motion picture exhibitors are guilty of just that mistake. You may wonder how it would be possible for you to get a bigger house. There is a way. If you have succeeded in a small way there is a way to do it big. The success of today does not insure success for tomorrow unless you keep step with tomorrow.

The Mutual Film Corporation is interested in seeing every exhibitor who pins his faith to the new, better, stronger Mutual program make the most of his opportunities for success.

You are familiar with the experience of business men in other lines. You have seen the man with the little cigar stand or the little restaurant, long contended with what he called a "steady business" finally put out of business by some enterprising chap who dashed in with a shop that was really designed to serve the needs of the community. The point is that the stranger, being a stranger, came in and saw things with an eye unclouded by familiarity with conditions. He saw the possibilities all fresh and new, not like the man who had walked down the street every morning for years and opened up his little shop to handle every day's business in just the same old way. The same thing is happening in the motion picture business every day.

Just as President Freuler remarked in his "message" last week this motion picture business is a rapid-fire business. You have got to grade off the business right as opportunity offers. Every day is a new deal, with new possibilities fresh every morning.

Laying a Film Egg Every Day

Arthur Brisbane, the great New York editor, once said that the newspaper man was like a hen "because he has to lay a perfectly new egg every day."

That is to a considerable degree true of the motion picture exhibitor. You have to stay fresh and young in the game. It means keeping alive. Now no amount of push and effort and advertising and publicity and fine pictures are going to help your business if you haven't the business capacity to handle it. In the exhibition business it means having a show worth seeing and enough seats to handle the people when they want to see it. Patrons are quick to learn and pay attention to the capacity of a house.

How often do they say as they get to coffee at the family dinner table, "There's a swell picture at the Empress tonight." And then somebody breaks in with "Yes, but we'll have to stand up outside until the 10 o'clock show."

That means that the Empress will lose its business to some other house and probably it also means that somebody with an eye to the main chance will build and give the Empress a hot line of competition right across the street.

Now, as I said in the beginning, there is no reason why an exhibitor confronted with these conditions cannot have a bigger, better theatre and take his rightful share of the business that he has built. It is of his creation and it is up to him to build the machinery to take care of it and take in the profits at the box office.

We will take the case of Bill Jones—which isn't his name at all—who operates a motion picture house with a great deal of success in a certain midwestern city. Bill Jones had a lease on a house with 450 seats. He was doing pretty good business and as the word went "didn't have to worry none."

But Bill got uneasy. He heard rumors that this fellow and that was talking about putting a big house in the district to make a big splash and go out after all the business. This worried Bill considerably, because he knew conditions well enough to realize that a little competition could do him a lot of harm. He felt his program was all right and he knew he could push his advertising and publicity stunts and get more business, but in his little house he could not handle much more.

Seeks Help Where Money Is

One day a bright light broke in on him. Why not build that big new house himself? Of course he hesitated some over that. He had been doing fairly well, but he hadn't accumulated enough money to finance a big house at all. How was he to do it. He felt sure he could handle it if he only had it.

The neighborhood bank occupied his attention for a while. The bank had money. Money was what he needed. He knew that other business men borrowed money on their business.

One day he got bold enough to approach the head of the bank—one of the regular patrons of Bill's theatre, by the way.

"I've been doing pretty well, so far," he explained. "But I see a chance to do better with a better house. And if I don't do it pretty soon somebody is going to beat me to it. I was wondering if there was anyway you could help me get a better house, one that I could handle the business in? I don't exactly like to go in debt, but I'm pretty sure I can make it pay out."

The banker, with considerable money that was "willing to work" on his hands, saw opportunity. He reflected that in the last few years he had always noticed a pretty fair run of business at Bill Jones' theatre, and recalled that he had often wondered just how strong this motion picture business was. Also he knew from his close personal knowledge of the bank's affairs that Bill Jones had a modest but healthy account. He encouraged the motion picture man to bring his books. The showing that was made there resulted in the bank's management of a deal that gave Bill Jones his new house, The Empire, three months later.

The Empire is a regular theatre and it seats 1,200 people. Bill Jones is doing business there with a wide smile and a wonderful consumption of ticket rolls.

The formula is very simple. There is nothing hard to understand about getting credit. The bank financed the deal and took Bill Jones' paper because he had demonstrated his ability to run a picture house and make a profit. He had done it with a small house. His business demanded expansion. The bank came in for its normal function of financing business expansion. The bank stood no chance to lose. In the first place it knew Bill Jones for a careful, successful exhibitor. His books and his history proved the worth of the business. It was a certainty he would pay out. But failing that, he had convinced the banker that the business was there. This being true, since the bank held mortgages on the new house as security, it was another certainty that if Bill Jones failed to deliver somebody would be found who could deliver with that property—since it was established that there was an actual demand for that theatre and its service.

Grasps Opportunity

That gave Bill Jones his opportunity. Now he has a big paying house, a long term lease on the site and is rapidly acquiring ownership of the building.

There are a dozen ways such situation as his may be worked out. Often an exhibitor looking around for room to grow into can find a real estate owner with idle property eager to improve it with a chance of increased earnings. As, for instance, in a case I know of where an exhibitor with just enough money to pay a year's rent got a house built for him and put up the rent in advance by way of encouraging the owner.

In another case an exhibitor leased the bare ground for a long term, borrowed money on his lease and put up a theatre. Another exhibitor had enough money to buy the ground he needed. By loans on his ground and the new building he was able to borrow enough to put it up. In yet another case an exhibitor was given a deed to the land by the owner. The exhibitor mortgaged the land for the cost of the theatre building. Then he deeded the land back to the owner, subject, of course, to the mortgage. Then the owner of the land gave a bond for the deed subject to payment of the price of the land and the cost.

Really it all goes back to the question of whether or not the exhibitor has demonstrated his ability to conduct a show properly and to make it pay a profit. If he has done that he can get more credit, I believe, than a man doing the same volume of business in any other line.

The country is full of money looking for a place to work. This is one of the results of the war.

The motion picture business is the only big important thing that has not suffered through war and trade conditions. Other lines of trade and industry have been halted, or at least delayed in the natural process of expansion and these lines have not absorbed the available capital.

The Mutual has a great program now. It has grown with the demands of the public and the needs of the exhibitor. It will continue to grow and to keep pace with the growth of the industry. Look for the bigger things to come.

THANHOUSER NARROWLY ESCAPES DEATH IN ACCIDENT

Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, had a narrow escape from death September 5, when his chauffeur, turning sharply aside to avoid collision with a passing automobile, drove the front wheels of his machine over a steep embankment overlooking the Hudson River. A steel cable, running parallel with the edge of the road, but about a foot out in the air caught the Thanhouser machine and held it back from a sixty-foot drop.

With Mr. Thanhouser at the time were Mrs. Thanhouser and their son and daughter, Lloyd and Marie.

GERAGHTY, WELL KNOWN NEWSPAPER MAN, JOINS METRO PUBLICITY STAFF

Tom J. Geraghty, one of the best known of New York newspaper men, has joined the publicity staff of Metro Pictures. Mr. Geraghty's experience should make him a valuable addition to the Metro forces; he has spent six years on the staff of the New York "Herald," and has also been connected with the New York "Press" and the New York "American."

Employes' Faith Pulled Balboa Through Hard Times

Horkheimer Attributes Success of His Company to Steadfastness of Five Executive Heads and Other Members of Staff, Who Stuck to Posts in Dark Hours of Its Affairs

FIVE employees who joined H. M. Horkheimer two years ago and formed the nucleus of his original organization when he opened the Balboa studio in Long Beach, Cal., are given credit by their employer for the major part of his success in the motion picture industry to date. They are: William Beckway, chief cameraman; Robert Brotherton, head chemist; John Wyse, stage manager; May Brotherton, superintendent of the assembly department, and Norman Manning, business manager.

THE NUCLEUS OF BALBOA'S ORIGINAL ORGANIZATION—NORMAN MANNING, BUS. MGR.; MAY BROTHERTON, ASSEMBLY SUPT.; W. BECKWAY, CHIEF CAMERAMAN; H. M. HORKHEIMER, PRES. AND GEN'L MGR.; ROBERT BROTHERTON, CHIEF CHEMIST; JOHN WYSE, STAGE MGR.

Today, the Balboa Amusement Producing Company has a weekly capacity of 20,000 feet of negative film. But for the loyalty and splendid support that these people gave him, Mr. Horkheimer says there would be a different story to tell.

As an evidence of their faith in him, when the clouds were blackest, some of these department heads even loaned their employer money of their hard-earned savings, despite the fact that he was in arrears on salaries to them.

After having met financial reverses in the theatrical business, although he scored a distinct artistic success as a producer, H. M. Horkheimer decided back in 1912 to make a venture into the cinema world. At the time he did not know what a motion picture camera looked like. Taking stock of his resources, he could count just about $7,000.

Most of the initial Balboa force came from the Selig plant. And these five people are still with Mr. Horkheimer. There were many times during the first year of Balboa's operations when any one who had less than heroic faith would have been tempted to fall away. There was even one time when Mr. Horkheimer owed his workers $11,000 dollars, yet they stood by him. What is more, they refused to desert him when offered more money to join other companies.

They stuck and finally the clouds dispersed. The market turned in favor of Balboa, so that Mr. Horkheimer could pay every cent he owed. He discharged a part of his obligation to the faithful ones, insofar as that is possible.

As soon as it is feasible, they will be rewarded with a working interest in the business which they have contributed so much to build up by their whole-hearted interest and unselfish devotion.

Besides the five already named, there are on Balboa's roster today more than forty people who have been with the company in its various departments the greater part of the two years since it began.

At the Balboa studio, these men and women are all on the roll of honor. The names on the list, in addition to the five already mentioned, are: Bertram Bracken, Joe Brotherton, Jackie Saunders, Henry Stanley, Mollie McConnell, Frank Erlanger, Daniel Gilfether, Charles Dudley, Fred Whitman, Gordon Sackville, Bruce Randall, Harry Harvey, Bruce Smith, Sherwood MacDonald, Roland Groom, William Reed, Frank Kearns, William Kearns, Gene Kearns, James Loy, Guy Ward, Mrs. B. Ahrens, Grace Scott, Nettie Clark, Edgar Moore, R. R. Rockett, Irma Mendenhall, Richard Johnson, Roy Freichett, D. Willey, John Cunnard, Percy Dewey, George Crane, Marguerite Nichols and Madeleine Pardee.

Boost Meeting for Keystone Exhibitors on 19th

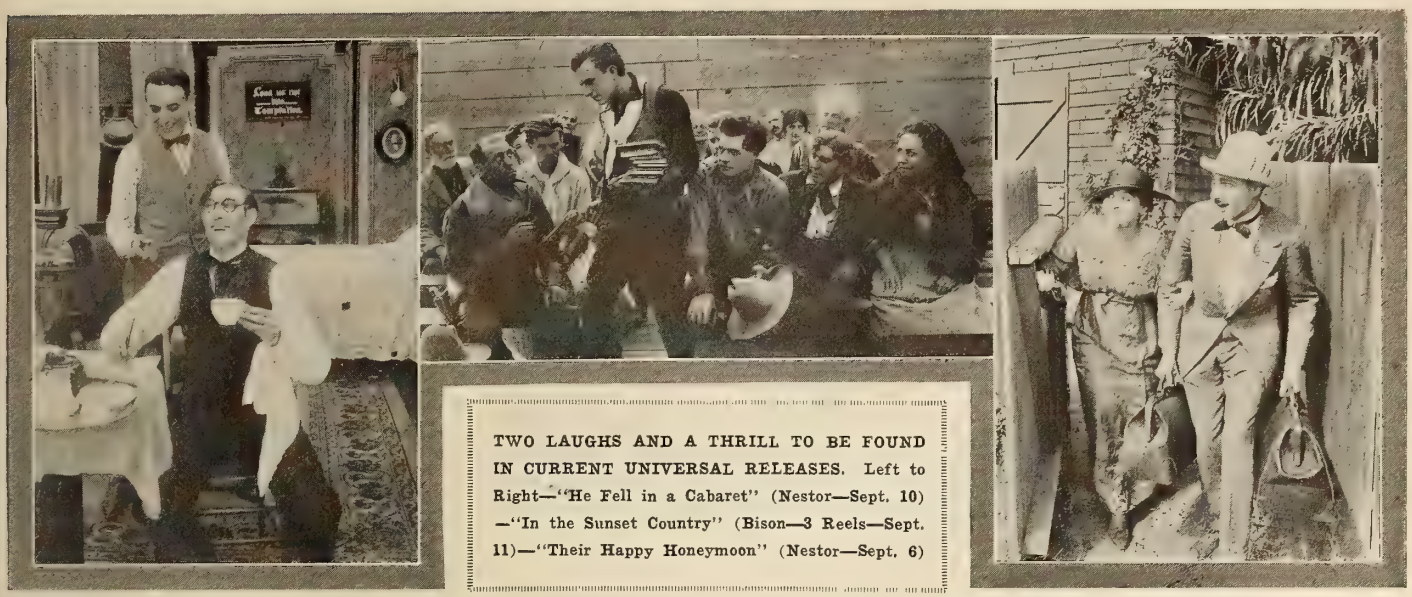
Local No. 1 in Pittsburgh Issues Appeal for Wide Attendance of Film Men, Whether Members of the Organization or Not—Herrington Will Address the Gathering

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 15.

SEPTEMBER 19 has been selected as the date for the meeting of Local No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Pennsylvania. A circular letter has been sent to all exhibitors in the state telling them of the meeting and is self-explanatory. The letter follows:

"To exhibitors in general and all those interested in the film business, including exhibitors not members of the organization as well as those who are members, film exchange men or managers and supply dealers:



"A mass meeting will be held in the Olympic theatre, 318 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., on Sunday, September 19, at 2:30 P. M.

"Questions of the most vital importance to the motion picture interests will be brought up for your consideration and everyone in the business should make a special effort to be present.

"The meeting will be held under the auspices of Local No. 1, M. P. E. League of Pennsylvania and many able speakers will be present to address them, including National President F. J. Herrington and others.

"'Make arrangements to be on hand early,' is President Herrington's appeal. 'Let us have you with us and get closer together. We are too much divided and the time was never more opportune or appropriate to get together for our own good. United we are a power, otherwise we are a failure.

"'If you find it is impossible to attend personally, delegate your manager. Let us have a booster meeting and do something for ourselves.'"

MOROSCO MAKES ADDITIONS TO STUDIO

The steady expansion in the facilities of the Oliver Morosco studio continues, owing to the growth of the productions. The big Council Street enclosure for the outdoor stages has been extended through to First street, giving a depth of a full block and increasing the area to over 120,000 square feet.

An extension of the big concrete wing forming the north wall of the glass-roofed stage is expected to be under way shortly, and this will provide the additional quarters for directors' offices and dressing rooms now in demand.

NEW ADDITIONS TO STAGE OF MOROSCO STUDIOS

When the studio was built the architects took pains to anticipate what at the time was thought to be any possible growth for the next ten years, but the activity has unexpectedly increased by such leaps and bounds that now at the beginning of the second year there is already an imperative cry for more room.

The studio is now in use for the production of "The Yankee Girl," starring Blanche Ring in her original role which was so successful on the stage.

Mutual Recovers 200,000 Feet from Film Thieves

Several Thousand Posters Also Part of the Loot Taken by Three Men Arrested in New York and Newark—Company Will Wage War on "Pirates"

THE Mutual Film Corporation has declared war on the "film pirates."

A national campaign against the theft and the "duping" of films has been started. The reports of special investigators for the Mutual have uncovered a wholesale organization for the theft and sale of films from the Mutual exchanges.

Three men have been arrested in New York and Newark. Warrants have been issued for a number of others and daily facts are coming to light to warrant the prosecution of many more.

In a series of raids in Newark a total of 200,000 feet of valuable film has been recovered within the week. Several thousand posters for the advertising of the film were also found hidden in a rooming house in quarters rented by one of the men arrested.

The executive offices of the Mutual Film Corporation have issued a letter to exhibitors in Greater New York district calling on them for co-operation in the apprehension of the film thieves and pointing out the injury done by the thieves to the exhibitors' business by making unfair competition by use of stolen film possible.

"All the film companies have been victims of the same sort of thieving operations and the Mutual anticipates their co-operation in this war on the crooks," said J. C. Graham, assistant to the president.

"The loss annually to the film companies through these crooks must total an enormous figure. It has run to a very high figure in New York for the Mutual alone. We cannot reach an accurate estimate of the number of reels or the total amount that has been stolen. Some of the work has been done so cleverly that it is doubtful if it all will be uncovered.

"This much we know—there will be no more of it. The Mutual will prosecute to the ultimate bitter end and fight to put every film thief that it gets a hand on in prison."

The general direction of the New York campaign against the film pirates is being directed by Arthur F. Beck, manager of the Twenty-third street branch of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Selig Park a Huge Arena for Civil and Social Bodies

Organizations of All Kinds Use the Jungle Zoo for Meetings—12,000 People in Attendance on Labor Day—Other Big Gatherings Scheduled as Near Events

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Sept. 13.

THE Selig Jungle-Zoo is becoming a most popular gathering place for organizations of all kinds. The most recent was that of the members of the various labor organizations of Los Angeles and vicinity on Labor Day.

It is estimated that were twelve thousand in attendance at this, and besides the two hours' program of animal vaudeville put on under the direction of John Robinson, there was a number of other events including a baby parade and contest, led by the Selig Stork carrying a baby suspended from its bill in the usual manner. This feature was photographed by the Hearst-Selig camera and judging from the noise, it is estimated a million babies were taking part, in fact, the sounds caused a riot of roars from the hundreds of animal cages.

Governor Hiram Johnson, of California, was the speaker of the day, and discussed California and national conditions. In the near future there will be a number of other big gatherings at the Selig Zoo. The list for the immediate future includes Mexican-Indian Day on September 16, when ex-President William Howard Taft will be the speaker; on the nineteenth will be a gathering of Italian Red Cross relief society members; on the twenty-fourth Spanish-American war veterans, and the twenty-sixth Swedish-Danish and Scandinavian societies of California. All of these will be big gatherings.

First 3 Companies for Kellermann Film in Jamaica

Voyage Made Exciting by Woes of Couple Who Couldn't Get Married and Fears of Pet Dog, Without Sausage Aspirations, Getting Locked in Vessel's Butcher Shop

THE KELLERMANN-BRENON PARTY DISEMBARKING AT JAMAICA, WITH A VIEW OF THE COMPANY ON BOARD THE S. S. CARILLO, EN ROUTE TO THE ANTILLES

SINCE the arrival of Director Herbert Brenon and his company at the Island of Jamaica, British West Indies, to make the William Fox picture starring Annette Kellermann, the tropical island has gone completely mad over motion pictures. The steamer Carillo, which carried the first of the three companies, docked at Kingston, Jamaica, on August 29.

From the very start of the steamer from New York, there were exciting incidents, as just as the vessel was passing off the line two girl stowaways, who were determined to accompany the party, were found hidden on the boat. When they were discovered one leaped overboard and swam to the shore. The other swam after her. It appeared that they were disappointed applicants for positions as diving girls in support of Miss Kellermann.

There were also on board members of the company, two disappointed candidates for the matrimonial stakes, who indulged in a romantic party. They were Earl Carroll and Mlle. Marcel Hontapat. Mr. Carroll had to remain behind in New York as twenty-four hours before the ship sailed, he and his fiancee visited a Catholic priest who was unable to marry them for twenty-four hours, so that their romance was blighted.

After the ship got to sea Miss Kellermann discovered that according to the rules of the ship her pet dog would have to be confined in the butcher shop. On the second day out one of the assistant camera men, Francis Herndell had his foot badly crushed by a falling camera. On this day all the male members of the company appeared in Palm Beach suits, no two of which were alike and Director Brenon, who is the author of the production, as well as the director, read Miss Kellermann his full manuscript. Athletic contests were organized and everybody was busy writing letters. Several hundred feet of film were also made.

Mr. Brenon's first act on arriving at the island was to establish an office and engage stenographers to assist those that he took down with him. On the day after their arrival Dr. Lockett, the health officer of Kingston, made a physical examination of each member of the company, and reported them all in splendid health. He recommended, however, three grain capsules of quinine for everybody every morning. Assistant Harry Lee had five hundred capsules made up.

Prominent Jamaicans are giving Mr. Brenon every assistance in their power. An abandoned motion picture theatre on King street is being fitted up as a studio, and the under-water city and the oriental palaces and streets have been finished, and work began two days after the company landed.

PATHE'S "HEINIE AND LOUIE" COMEDIES GOING WELL

The "Starlight" comedies, "Heinie and Louie," have won their way with the exhibitors, and assumed an important position on the Pathé program. The idea of having two leading characters, both of them men, is certainly novel, and was the conception of Mr. Mittenthal, of the Mittenthal Film Company, makers of the comedies.

JAMES AUBREY

James Aubrey, who plays the part of "Heinie," was born in England, and came from the London Music Hall to this country. He toured the United States playing "A Night in an English Music Hall," a popular vaudeville sketch. In this sketch he played all the principal vaudeville theatres in America. Mr. Aubrey comes of a well-known English pantomime family, which explains to some degree his adaptability to screen work.

Walter Kendig, the "Louie" of the comedies, was born and brought up in Philadelphia. He put in three years in the Lubin stock company, and then came to New York, where he was engaged to play the younger brother with William Farnum in "The Gilded Fool." Through his fine work in that production he was secured by Mr. Mittenthal to play with Aubrey in the Starlight comedies.

WALTER KENDIG

Pathé exchange managers report an increasing business on the "Heinie and Louie" comedies, which, after all, is the best proof that they are good and meet with popular approval.

WILLIAM COLLIER JOINS RANKS OF TRIANGLE STARS

The engagement Saturday of William Collier as a Triangle star by Messrs. Kessel and Baumann is one of the most important film events of the week. Mr. Collier will start November 1 for Mack Sennett's Keystone Studio where he will work for the Triangle under a two-year contract. He will carry with him the scripts of the principal plays in which he has achieved success as the foremost light comedian of the American stage. In his support will appear all the important funmakers of Keystone as well as several specially engaged distinguished actors from the "legitimate" stage.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. OHIO EXHIBITOR ISSUES HOUSE ORGAN COMBINING BEAUTY WITH "PUNCH"

ONE of the most informing and artistic house organs ever received by MOTION PICTURE NEWS from an exhibitor is "The Majestic Monthly," issued by the Majestic theatre, Columbus, Ohio. In fact, it marks a new era in the publication of theatre organs in this country, because it combines to a remarkable degree excellence and beauty of arrangement with just the kind of information the picture-goer wants.

Consider how the publisher of this organ has utilized the space in his 24 good-sized pages (9½ x 6⅝). First, he has used a dignified cover in two colors, with a neat design of organ pipes as a background for the name of the publication (top), the letter "M" in white on red (center), and an excellent reproduction of a scene from "The Blindness of Virtue" (lower half of the cover). The second page contains nothing but a list of coming Paramount attractions—simply the names of stars and productions, but no dates. Then follow pages, all of them made up in two columns with the modern typographical ideas evident throughout, on the following subjects: Editorial, Just About Ourselves, Musings of the Office Boy, Verse and Veracity. Pages 7, 8 and 9 are occupied with notices of three pictures, one notice to a page and each illustrated. Then on page 10 begins the arrangement of material shown in the accompanying cut, viz., on the left hand page, general information about the picture world, or the Majestic theatre; on the right hand page, the illustrated synopsis. In all there are descriptions of twelve current and coming releases. The picture-goer finds in addition to these, cleverly written stuff under the heads: Paramount Points. V-L-S-E—What the New Corporation Is, In Studio and Home, and Among the Players. Page 23 tells the patron the hours of the afternoon and night when shows begin. On the back cover is found a well displayed announcement of "Carmen."

The whole appearance of "The Majestic Monthly" is one of dignity, refinement and force. Among the many tips exhibitors may take from it are these:

Not to overcrowd your pages; put the dates of pictures in footlines after the synopsis, as shown in the reproduction of two pages from "The Majestic Monthly" accompanying this article (this will avoid making your house organ too much of a calendar); give your readers short, brightly-written gossip about screen stars who will be seen at your theatre (publicity matter sent out by various manufacturers will help you here). Finally, tell your patrons exactly what hour each show will begin. The Majestic's hours are these: Afternoon, 1, 2:45 and 4:30; night, 6:15, 8 and 9:30. This is an excellent arrangement, especially with regard to the night shows. Too many exhibitors make the mistake of beginning one of their night shows at 7:30, when they should begin it nearer the regular theatrical hour, say 8 or a few minutes after.

"SHOWMAN'S ADVERTISING BOOK" CONTAINS VALUABLE HINTS

Busy exhibitors who are looking for a guide to the complete art of picture advertising will find many valuable hints in a book written by Low Warren, acting editor of the "Kinematograph Weekly," and recently published by the "Kinematograph Weekly," London, entitled "The Showman's Advertising Book." Though this volume was issued especially for the English exhibitor, its material is of wide enough range to interest Americans. Exhibitors in this country will discover that their British brethren are facing many of the difficulties familiar to themselves. The problem of advertising a picture, furthermore, is the same the world over, and there are just as many pitfalls for the unwary American as for the unwary Englishman. Many of these pitfalls, such as lurid and inartistic posters, misleading statements in house organs and heralds, and cheapness in general, this book points out effectively. It also goes into a thorough discussion of just what relation successful advertising has to the motion picture business, how to arouse curiosity in the reader of advertising, the importance of the poster, the value of street and newspaper advertising, using the theatre itself as an advertisement, the use of lantern slides, different methods of securing results from outside lighting and electric signs on the theatre front, and the mapping out of a

A HOUSE ORGAN NOTABLE—THE MAJESTIC MONTHLY, COLUMBUS, OHIO

IN STUDIO and HOME

MYRTLE GONZALEZ, whom we are seeing this month in "The Chalice of Courage," is the leading woman of the western Vitagraph company. She is blessed with happiness and vivacity and a generous supply of beauty. She has done some splendid work for this company. She dresses her parts well and acts them with earnestness and charm.

Cyril Maude, the noted English actor, who has done such famous impersonations as his David Garrick and his Grumpy, made his debut in this country. It was in East Lynne, at Denver, Colo., in which he took the part of the servant. He returned to England, appeared at the Criterion in London and registered an immediate hit.

Blanche Sweet, of the Lasky, is an artist who takes her work very seriously. She has seemed to be perfectly at home in the films from her first introduction. She had grace and bearing and intelligence from the very first. Part of that grace came from the fact that she was one of the favored proteges of Gertrude Hoffman, the noted classic dancer. The breeding and elegance of Miss Sweet is inescapable. Then, her intelligence has grown with careful study. It is a saying at Hollywood, Cal., that she is wedded to her books. Recently (in "The Secret Orchard") she had a part that required some study in psychology. This she pursued at odd times at the public library of the town, and her delineation profited by this studious care.

Edna Mayo, of the Essanay, is always well dressed. For that reason a fashion article by her in the Movie Pictorial seems quite appropriate. She points out an interesting fact when she says that she has a red dress of each peculiar shade that it always takes white in the pictures. "The camera is relentless," she says. "It is astonishing how conspicuous feet appear on the screen. I have observed buttonless shoes and runover heels that showed up sickeningly. It may be remarked in passing that the short-vamped shoe, so long in theatrical favor, has given way to the current vogue for the slender aristocratic shoe."

Recently Fannie Ward was going to sail for Europe on the St. Paul. But when she got to the vessel she discovered that she had forgotten her transports and was forced to postpone her departure. The boat was bound for Liverpool carrying a number of distinguished Americans.

We anticipate something remarkable in the "Carmen" pictures, in which we will have Geraldine Farrar before long. In preparing for this week a real cigaret factory was used; a bull fight was actually staged in the Los Angeles stadium, where 20,000 people saw Miss Farrar as Carmen and Pedro de Cordoba as Escamillo. A special square was built to represent accurately a scene in Seville and was made so substantially that it will be retained at the Lasky studios. Her personal manager, Monte Gest, is very enthusiastic about her work in films. "Her very soul has been laid bare in some of the emotional scenes," he says. "In fact, I think I may say that Miss Farrar has practically X-rayed her soul before the camera." This was to be expected of her who is one of the finest actresses on the operatic stage.

William Duncan, who works with Miss Gonsales, was with the Selig company for three years and a half, but he is now with another part of the V. L. S. E. He is a repertory actor of seasoned character; is versile and always qualifies in the rough and ready parts of outdoor drama. And yet he can wear a dress suit as easily as any Beau Brummel.

Mary Pickford does practically all of her personal correspondence on a little correspondents' typewriter—the "little" applies to the machine as well as the writer. She is not a perfect typist, mechanically, but she has a very of expressing herself quite succinctly and with a good deal of grace. Her letter to the winner of the recent Baby Camp contest was an example.

Laura Hope Crews is in the all-star legitimate cast of "The New Henrietta," with W. H. Crane, Thomas Ross, Marilyn Arbuckle and Mabel Taliaferro.

CHARLOTTE WALKER AND THOMAS MEIGHAN

CHARLOTTE WALKER in "Out of Darkness"
By Hector Turnbull

CAST:

Miss Walker takes the leading part and her support includes Thomas Meighan who played Helme in "Kindling," Loyola O'Connor and the attractive juvenile, Marjorie Daw.

SYNOPSIS:

"OUT OF DARKNESS," in which Charlotte Walker appears at the Majestic, under the direction of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, is Hector Turnbull's first original photoplay. He recently resigned as dramatic critic of the New York Tribune to join the Lasky literary and photo-drama department. The photoplay is a severe arraignment of inhuman working conditions of women and children, although the theme is one of exceptional dramatic interest.

It will be recalled that several years ago labor conditions in these great establishments were the subject of special federal investigation. Mr. Turnbull, through his newspaper connections, had the opportunity of special study and knowledge of the wrongs at first hand.

Miss Walker made her debut as a photoplay star in the Lasky production of "Kindling." This is proving throughout the country to be one of the most popular productions of the Lasky studios. It also was a severe indictment of inhuman conditions—tenement life in big cities. Unlike her first role, Miss Walker in "Out of Darkness" will be seen for some minutes of the drama in exquisite costumes of the modern society girl.

The turn of the story from the upper to the lower social level takes place when the heroine is wrecked at sea. This is a scene exciting in episode, as Miss Walker, on a small sailing boat, is thrown into the water when a big liner runs down the sloop. Injured, she loses her memory and forgets her identity. Friends care for her, and when she recovers she obtains a position in one of the Scott canneries—a branch of the industry she owns. Previously she had refused to better the labor conditions. Now she finds herself caught in the mesh of her own business.

ILLUSTRATING EFFECTIVE THEATRE ADVERTISING—AND THE REVERSE

complete publicity campaign by exhibitors.

The book is illustrated with special poster designs by John Hassall and Will Owens, cuts of specimen theatre programs, displays of all kinds and many novelties found useful by English exhibitors. Of course, many of the ideas suggested are suited only to England, but exhibitors here will find a mass of clever hints out of which they will be able to select many that ought to prove winners. They will do well to give particular attention to the chapters on effective lobby decoration, and how to give all their advertising a "punch" without making it misleading.

THE ARTISTIC LOBBY DISPLAY VERSUS "THE CHAMBER OF HORRORS"

ONE of the best ways in which an exhibitor can put the right advertising in the right place is to arrange an artistic display in his theatre lobby. The theatre front makes the first impression upon the patron as he enters the house, and the last as he leaves, and the exhibitor should make sure that the right impression is left in both cases.

The first step is to see to it that the lobby does not look like a cheap billboard. In too many theatres, patrons have to thread their way through a maze of posters of the most lurid character. If the patron succeeds in getting through without a headache, he will remember nothing of this sensational advertising except that it is a motley collection of more or less sensational train wrecks, automobile accidents, and horrors of various descriptions. If there is an artistic sheet in the lot, its effect is totally lost on the spectator.

As an example of what we mean look at the photographs of two lobbies shown on this page. Note the effectiveness of the Portola display as contrasted with the overcrowding all too evident in that of the Star. Now, the Star is not an extreme example of poor arrangement, but its weakness beside the strength of the other demonstrates the point.

The Portola exhibitor knows it is not necessary to line every available inch of wall space with advertising. He also knows how to put his display in effective groups. The Star, on the other hand, presents a monotony of impression which the eye cannot take in. Half the number of posters, arranged cleverly, would have made eight or ten times the impression. The large "Jitney Bus" banner over the ticket booth is also a mistake, it seems to us. A much better place for it would be over the entrance to the auditorium itself, as in the case of the Portola. And the two billboards that greet the patron as he approaches the Star are crude and unsightly. Better to abolish them altogether.

Nothing will do more to give a motion picture theatre respect and consideration in a community than a sensible, as well as an attractive, front. Wise exhibitors will recognize this and will make as good a selection as they can from the advertising material offered by the manufacturers. The manufacturers, notably the Metro Pictures Corporation and the Vitagraph Company, are themselves beginning to recognize the supreme value of genuinely artistic posters. Then, wise exhibitors will make their displays neat, in good taste, and capable of giving the picture-goer an irrepressible desire to see the pictures that are advertised in the lobby.

WHAT LIVE EXHIBITORS EVERYWHERE ARE DOING

W. C. Odle, proprietor of the Princess at Williamsport, Ind., is giving a free show each Wednesday night for the merchants of Williamsport.

The Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind., is promoting a film play to be put on by local talent for the benefit of a hospital fund.

Extensive outdoor advertising is used by the Novelty Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. Supplementing their billboard display, they recently adopted the policy of placing window cards of V-L-S-E productions on the dashboards of Brooklyn trolley cars. This is said to be the first time that this style of advertising has been employed by motion picture exhibitors in Greater New York.

George Pliakos, manager of the Marquette Theatre, St. Louis, has added greatly to the attractiveness of his house by placing at intervals on the walls of the theatre nine large oil paintings of popular classical subjects.

By way of increasing interest in the "Hazards of Helen" series, the Grand Opera House, Washington, Ind., sent out letters with passes attached to employees of two railroads which maintain division headquarters in the town.

Jack Gold, proprietor of the Family Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., made a lot of new business for his house the past summer by organizing and equipping a baseball team of boys residing in the neighborhood. On the front of the uniforms was printed the name of the theatre, and the scores of all games were printed under the theatre's name in the Harrisburg papers. A group picture of the team was shown on the screen each night, and the youngsters proved valuable advertising agents for Gold's theatre.

THE WEEK'S BEST LIVE WIRE STUNT

Billing the country for a hundred miles around was the enterprising scheme employed by Manager J. E. Williams, of the Grand Opera House, Oshkosh, Wis., for his eight-day showing of "The Birth of a Nation." But Williams did not stop there. He also engaged an old time minstrel, Eli Rice, to announce with a megaphone in all the surrounding towns. Result: at 25-50-75 and $1.00 prices, crowds were turned away from the regular sixteen performances, and an extra performance was given Saturday morning to a crowded house. The Grand is a "legitimate" house, but it will hereafter play pictures on all open nights.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

PHILADELPHIA OFFICES CONTINUE TO REPORT LARGE BOOKINGS; SOCIETY MATRON NOW A BOOKING AGENT

HARRY A. BUGIE, the new manager of the George Kleine offices, Philadelphia, was formerly located in the Kleine New York offices. Mr. Bugie reports the biggest kind of business in the Philadelphia section on "The House Next Door" with Irene Fenwick. Ethel Grandin, a former United star, but who is now being featured in Kleine two reelers, which can be had from the General Film Company, is another great favorite with Philadelphia exhibitors.

William U. Bethell, treasurer of the Metro Film Exchange, announces a considerable increase in the bookings of the Philadelphia Metro office during the past two weeks, with the outlook specially bright for a big winter season. Mr. Bethell attributes this spurt to the interest engendered by the announcement on the Metro program of such Philadelphia favorites as Ethel Barrymore, Beverly Bayne, William Faversham and Francis X. Bushman.

Herbert Given, of the Famous Players Exchange, reports a great time at the Paramount Convention in Chicago and thinks the meeting was of incalculable benefit to all who attended.

The Famous Players Exchange is now busy with elaborate plans for a fitting premiere in Philadelphia of Farrar in Carmen, over which Mr. Given, usually undemonstrative, waxed exceedingly enthusiastic. The V. L. S. E. Exchange finds one of their most popular releases of recent date has been the Vitagraph's "Chalice of Courage."

The Pathé Exchange through its manager, G. H. Atwood, has closed a contract with the Stanley Booking Company by which the first exclusive showing of all Gold Rooster pictures will be had in the best of the Stanley chain of houses. As this is about a fifty thousand dollar yearly contract the manager is much pleased. Flattering also are the many good words from the exhibitors both in and out of Philadelphia about "The Galloper" and "Via Wireless," the first Gold Rooster pictures to be released in a few days, private screenings of which have been given to the trade. The twenty-four sheet stands advertising these Gold Rooster specials are causing much favorable comment all over Philadelphia.

Mrs. Stephen Morris, the young society matron, who as Edith Ritchie entered the picture field a year ago, has forsaken the camera end for the commercial side of the game, and is now booking agent for the Central Market Company, of which William Goldenberg is manager.

This company controls several of the most prominent picture houses of Philadelphia, amongst which are the Globe, at Juniper and Market, the Victoria, the Princess, the Auditorium, at 219 N. Eighth street, and the Market Street.

MALCOLM SUCCEEDS HICKS AS LOS ANGELES MANAGER FOR GENERAL

T. C. Malcolm, formerly of the Los Angeles General Film Exchange, and for the past year manager of the office at Portland, has been named successor to H. H. Hicks, who was manager of the Los Angeles exchange, and who has been promoted to the office of district coast manager. Mr. Malcolm arrived in Los Angeles this week, and is taking up the work here and renewing old acquaintances among the exhibitors and exchange men. Mr. Hicks will have his headquarters, it is understood, at Seattle, and has left for a trip over the Northwest.

Mr. Hicks has been affiliated with the General for several years, and his success here is best shown by his promotion. During his administration as manager, the exchange has been very successfully conducted and most satisfactory to the exhibitors. Many regrets were to be heard on the floor of the exchange from the exhibitors when they learned of the departure of Mr. Hicks.

EXCHANGEMEN IN OMAHA TERRITORY ENTHUSIASTIC OVER PROSPECTS

H. Heyman, of the World Film Corporation exchange in Omaha, just returned from three weeks on the road, said a man couldn't help smiling as he talked with the enthusiastic exhibitors over the territory. "It is positively catching," he said.

J. J. Clark, of Bedford, Ia., an old exhibitor, said he never saw prospects better. He started the season anew with the World features.

"Prosperity? We are booked solid," said Manager Goldstone, of the Omaha branch of the World Film Corporation. "We are booking fine for 'Trilby,' the first Equitable release, with Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye. By the way, there was an exhibitor in here talking with me today. He said he had booked 'Trilby' on the strength of the review in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and he wanted to heartily second everything the NEWS said."

PATHE NEWS NOW IN ALL FIRST-CLASS BOSTON THEATRES

Manager Bernfield, of the Pathé Boston offices, writes the home office that the Pathé News is now placed in every first class theatre in Boston.

THEFT OF VALUABLE MUTUAL FILMS CHARGED TO CLERK

The theft of several thousand dollars' worth of motion picture films from the Mutual Film Corporation exchange, at 294 Market street, Newark, N. J., is charged by the police to Samuel Glauber, 26 years old, a clerk at the exchange. The police have recovered about 75,000 feet of film, which they say Glauber had hidden in two rooms he had rented at 280 Washington street and 124 South Thirteenth street. According to detectives, Glauber kept the films, which are highly inflammable, in flimsy wooden boxes. After an examination at headquarters, Glauber was held in bail of $3,000 to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Arthur F. Beck, of 71 West Twenty-third street, New York, who made the complaint against Glauber as a representative of the Mutual concern, declared films had been missing over a period of several months, and said the company believed the losses were due to systematic thefts on the part of some of its employes. Beck placed the valuation of the films at more than $3,000, and said he believed Glauber intended to derive an income from renting the films to motion picture houses in small towns.

KANSAS CITY EXCHANGES REPORT UNPRECEDENTED BUSINESS

Simon Libros, former manager for the Picture Playhouse Film Company, in Kansas City, has been transferred to St. Louis, and he has been succeeded there by R. W. J. Bettis, a former road man for the same house.

There is not an exchange in Kansas City that is not enjoying an unprecedented business. It is attributed to the cool weather and the prosperous condition of the Southwest.

Some of the Kansas City exchanges are doing more business than they ever did before. An example of this is the World Film Corporation, which, a week before last, was at the head of the list of that firm's exchanges in the matter of business for the first time.

PURCHASES TERRITORIAL RIGHTS TO "JUST OUT OF COLLEGE"

The Bert Levey Circuit of San Francisco has purchased the territorial rights to the Frohman Amusement Corporation's recent production "Just Out of College," for the states of California, Arizona, Nevada, the Hawaiian Islands, Canada, and seven Southern States. Mr. Sherrill, president of the company, has received a wire from the Bert Levey Circuit informing him that "Just Out of College" has been booked for the first one-week run, opening October 3, at the Tivoli theatre of San Francisco.

MIDDLE WEST, IN FLOOD TIDE OF PROSPERITY, YIELDS GOLDEN RETURNS TO EXCHANGES

OTHER parts of the country may fret over their censorship and Sunday closing problems, their outside interference and inside competition, but the Middle West, while it has its problems, has nothing now but a tale of prosperity.

Exchange managers in Omaha, looking forward to the most wonderful season this part of the country ever saw, have big stories to relate of things they saw and heard while on trips through the territory. This part of the country, concerned with furnishing the food for America, is the least affected by the war and is the most prosperous.

The summer business was bad. Roads were awful, crops were hard to manage and the farmer had too many troubles on his hands. In the towns the weather was cool enough to allow a steady season in place of the usual torpid months of the winter, but it knocked the bottom out of the airdome business, which was so promising early in the season.

But as fall approaches, the farmer's fears of a ruined crop have passed, harvest has been a grand success, the entire section feels the uplift of prosperity, exhibitors decorate their houses, open up new ones, arrange for better and bigger service and everyone is a live wire from the bottom up. That is the real, true situation out there. Here is some detailed evidence:

The Mutual exchange in Omaha, according to Manager Taylor, is stirring up any number of new orders in South Dakota. Many of them are from new theatres.

Joe Levy, manager of the Fox exchange in Omaha, spends most of his time on the road, nowadays. Here's what he had to say about prosperity:

"We have been looking for larger and better quarters for our exchange. If we can't find them, I guess we'll have to build a building for ourselves. If prospects hold out, everyone in the picture business in the Middle West will apparently be able to do it. Business is bigger than ever. We were lucky to start our exchange here at such an opportune time, and when business is so good. I am out on the road, talking shoulder to shoulder to the exhibitor, a whole lot, and I know."

To uphold Levy's claim, C. L. Worthington, of Chicago, Fox general manager in that district, said last week: "If business keeps up as it has, this exchange will be one of the best the Fox people have." W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox corporation, was also in Omaha and he seconded everything Levy and Worthington said. The General Film Company has established its headquarters in Des Moines, Ia., the better to cover the fertile Iowa field, while a thriving branch is left in Omaha. The Metro people are figuring on headquarters in Omaha. The Pathé will establish a branch in Des Moines, leaving its headquarters in Omaha.

The prosperity of the Middle West is shown plainly in the eaction of the Mutual in putting its Des Moines branch office on a buying basis, where it will handle first run stuff and look out for Iowa business, while the Omaha base turns its attention to the West and the uncultivated, fertile fields of the Dakotas. Prospects were never better, says Manager Taylor, for selling the new $8,000,000 program. "The Diamond from the Sky" is booked solid in this territory, said Mr. Taylor.

E. & G. FILM SERVICE TO HANDLE GRAND PRIX FEATURES

William Weisfeld, vice-president and general manager of the E. & G. Film Service, 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, has concluded a contract with the Associated Film Sales Corporation by which the E. & G. Film Service obtains the right to handle the Associated Grand Prix features in Greater New York, and in northern New Jersey. The Grand Prix Photoplays are special features, great dramas of five and six reels.

The E. & G. Film Service is one of the largest exchanges in New York City, and in securing the right to handle these Associated features, it has added materially to its ability to supply strong, drawing pictures for its patrons.

HAPPENINGS OF INTEREST IN SYRACUSE OFFICES

I. Schmertz has arrived in Syracuse, N. Y., and is busy making arrangements to open up an office for the Variety Films and Associated Service. Jesse Kauffman has opened the new Exchange for the Noted Players Feature Film Company, with offices in the Eckel Theatre building, Syracuse.

With the beginning of the fall season, the larger downtown theatres have adopted the policy of running all big features three days instead of one and two days as heretofore.

SEATTLE THEATRE TO RUN "NEAL" A FULL WEEK

The Pathé Seattle office has just closed a contract with the new million dollar Pantage's theatre in Seattle to run "Neal of the Navy" a full week for each episode. This theatre is the first in the West to run a picture for a full week. The same office has also closed a contract with the Liberty theatre of Seattle to run the Gold Rooster plays on a yearly contract running into large figures. Manager Quimby wires that "The Galloper" and "Via Wireless" are the greatest features ever released in his territory.

SAMPSON SUCCEEDS ALLEN AS PATHE MINNEAPOLIS MANAGER

S. B. Sampson, recently noted in MOTION PICTURE NEWS as leaving the New Orleans managership of Pathé, left on September 5 for Minneapolis, where he replaces W. P. Allen as manager of that exchange. Raoul Junet has been formally installed as the new manager of the New Orleans branch.

FILM HOUSES AT MAINE RESORTS HAVE EXCELLENT SEASON

Charles Stern, manager of the Bangor exchange of the Universal Film Company, has returned from a trip to Bar Harbor, Seal Harbor, Northeast Harbor and Ellsworth. These places include Maine's most fashionable summer resorts, and he brings back word that the business with the picture theatres at the summer resorts has been exceptionally good this season.

Bar Harbor has had the largest season in years with the greatest number of visitors. The Star theatre there has had a good business throughout, but the Airdome, under the management of J. A. Guthrie, has not been so successful owing to adverse weather conditions. More than 50 per cent. of the days in July and August were rainy, and much of the rest of the time it was either cloudy or foggy. The Airdome will close October 1. At Northeast Harbor the theatre which has been running every night has closed down to three and will remain open until October 1. At Ellsworth, which is the principal city of the county, the business has been good.

Mr. Stern found all the managers optimistic and looking for a good fall business.

UNITED OPENS BRANCH IN BANGOR; PLANNING OTHERS

Fred B. Murphy, of Boston, vice-president and general manager of the United Film Service, was in Bangor during the past week, opening a branch exchange, which has been left under the management of C. H. Barolet, of Boston, who has been connected with Mr. Murphy for the past three years. The United has been doing a large business in Maine, according to Mr. Murphy, and because of the demands of the exhibitors the Bangor office was opened.

The company has made plans to open several branch offices, and has already established one in Springfield, Mass., under the direction of W. F. O'Brien. The Graphic theatre in Bangor has purchased the exclusive right to the United service in the city.

NEWS OF THE EXCHANGES IN ST. LOUIS

The Triangle Film Corporation have secured quarters on the second floor of a building nearing completion at 3316 Locust street, St. Louis, which will be the distributing office for the entire Southwest territory, it is said. Floyd Lewis, who came to St. Louis from Cincinnati, is in charge of affairs.

The Universal Exchange of St. Louis, at 2116 Locust street, was paid a visit recently by M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Universal exchanges, who was on an inspection tour of the exchanges under his supervision. Mr. Hoffman found business in a flourishing condition, with even better prospects for the coming season.

Charles Werner has returned to St. Louis from Kansas City, where he was in charge of the Kriterion office there, to take care of the Metro features in St. Louis and surrounding territory.

FILM NEWS FROM FOREIGN PARTS

Special to Motion Picture News

Paris, Sept. 8.

THAT great numbers of English picture theatres would have to close for lack of material if it were not for the American films imported into England, is the assertion of "The Kinematograph Weekly," London.

A big fight took place between the Parisian film renters as to who was to have the now famous films of Charlie Chaplin, produced by the Essanay company in Chicago. I am informed that fabulous prices were offered. The Agence Generale Cinematographique has won the battle by securing the exclusive French rights to all these films. The Trans-Atlantic Film Co. has similar films of Billie Ritchie, but they don't go so well with the public here.

New French Company Organized

A new company called Société des Grands Films Français has been registered, with the object, I am told, of publishing one big film every month, but only exceptional films will bear the mark of this firm. I have called to see the manager, and have been gratified to see a small part of their first film called "La Fille du Boche" ("The Daughter of a German"), after the romance published not long ago by the Paris Matin, and I am sure that this film will create quite a sensation all over the world, even in Germany, if shown there.

Mr. Nalpas, the active manager of the Société Generale de la Cinematographie (late Film d'Art Co.), is very busy reorganizing affairs for the coming season. He informed me the other day that he has just concluded arrangements with a well known American firm who is going to show all their films in the States. In one of my previous articles I happened to express my surprise that successful films like "Comtesse Sarah," "Alibi," "Fil à la Patte," "Denise," "Miquette et Sa Mère" and many others issued by this firm had never been shown in America. Better late than never! The company has certainly made a good choice in appointing Mr. Nalpas as a manager; he is without doubt the right man at the right place.

I had an opportunity to see at a private view a sensational Italian film called "'Bajonetta," in which some extraordinary feats of the famous Bersaglieras are seen at the front. The exclusive rights have been secured by a gentleman in Paris for France, England and the States.

"La Dame aux Camelias"—everybody has seen Madame Sarah Bernhardt in this world famous play, or at least the film which was shown three years ago—was not a success, not in France in any case. The rights of the authors expired last July and now a well-known Italian firm is releasing a new film of "La Dame aux Camelias." I saw this picture at a private show, and I must confess it is one of the best I have seen for a long time.

American Films a Boon to England

The well-known London paper "Kinematograph Weekly" writes with regard to an agitation, supposed to be of German origin, engineered against productions emanating from America: "A patriotic and disinterested support of British film productions in the lay press at this time is all to the good. But as good as home-made pictures may be, the fact remains it is but as the five loaves and two small fishes for a great multitude. British pictures are simply insufficient in quantity. Our Allies, one and all—French, Italy and Russian—are enormously handicapped in the work of film-producing owing to the war. If it were not for the Americans exported, vast numbers of English picture theatres would have to shut up for lack of material."

Italy is moving again in the way of film productions. The Tiber Film Co. has just released a fine picture called "Ciceruacchio" in which the Papal Court is wonderfully well reproduced. Bonnard Film has a highly interesting film "La Bara di Vetro." Milano has shown a sensational picture "L'autre Mère" and the Caesaro Film "Le Balze del Trentino." All of them are well staged and sure to please everywhere.

Spain, too, is going ahead with fine productions. The Hispano Films in Barcelona has lately published a very good one called "El Leon de la Sierra" and a most exciting drama, "Tragedias del Destino." The Segre Film two good films "El Sello de Oro" and "El Pollo Tejada," both of great interest. Condal Film has just started a new series with the great Spanish artist Torto la Valencia. The first one was shown this week. It is called "Pasionaria," and was well received by the trade.

Madame Sarah Bernhardt made her first appearance at her theatre in Paris, after more than a year's absence, last Thursday, but this time only as a spectator in a box watching the performance. A most enthusiastic reception was given to her by the crowded house. She had to bow and express her thanks many times.

AMERICAN COMPANY TO FILM WAR NOTABLES IN LONDON

Special to Motion Picture News

London, Sept. 2.

Since the commencement of the war the taking of photographs and films in Downing street, London, the centre in which all the government offices are situated, has been prohibited. Quite a mild sensation was caused in the film trade the other day when it was learned that an unusual privilege had been granted to an American company for photographing Lord Kitchener and other notable characters associated with the war. Why the exclusive rights should have been granted to an American firm is causing no little perplexity to those in the trade.

The Chaplin craze has subsided somewhat, and now the weekly press is attempting to revive the boom by publishing, in more than one case in serial form, the biography of the eminent comedian. Mary Pickford is also receiving a good share of publicity. Chaplin this week has attained a further distinction of being burlesqued on the legitimate stage. His principal exponent seems to be Mr. Hanson, who plays in "To Night's the Night," a production which made a great hit in New York.

The Trans-Atlantic Company intend opening a scenario department in England and have appointed R. Tabbot, the writer of "Jane Shore," as editor. Some good things may be expected from the British Studios of the Trans-Atlantic Company.

The cartoon comedy is coming into its own slowly but surely, and the public is showing a decided liking for these productions. The Edison films in this category will prove able competitors of the Pathé "Colonel Heeza" series, and the Neptune series (British) of war cartoons.

The premises of a well-known renter in the film trade had a remarkable escape from damage in the recent air raid by Zeppelins on the Eastern Counties of England, and practically the only damage was a piece of shrapnel embedded in the front gate.

First Metro Film Reaches England

In the realm of drama the Famous Players and Lasky films maintain top notch. The first Metro film to reach this country, "The High Road," has created a very favorable impression.

One of the leading characters of the new film company, "The Moonshine Comic," is B. Wright and his first film, "Muddled Millinery," will be released on October 18. The Yorkshire Cine Company are handling the Moonshine Comics. One of the finest of the war topicals is that which has just been obtained by Gaumont entitled "Lord Kitchener's visit to the French Army." It is 880 feet in length and will be released here on September 13. Among the most recent productions of the English studios which are ready for export at the present writing are the following:

"Hard Times" (British Trans-Atlantic Film). An excellent pictorial record of Dickens' famous novel, featuring Bransby Williams, the inimitable impersonator of Dickensian characters. Although somewhat incomplete the story is quite coherent and the plot is ingeniously developed.

"Hearts That Are Human" (B. & C.). Stern parents drive their daughter from home, as punishment for coming home late After vicissitudes, she achieves success as a vocalist. Pestered by unwelcome attentions, the climax shows her reconciliation with her parents.

"Ragtime Cowboy Pimple" (H. A. Browne & Co.). A comedy of 660 feet, showing how Pimple tries to imitate Broncho Billy in the Wild West.

"No Fool Like An Old Fool" (Yorkshire Cine Co.) 899 feet of comedy. The troubles of a married man and the wife's remedy.

"Muddled Millinery" (Yorkshire Cine Company). 870 feet of comedy. Unable to enlist, Bertie joins a milliner's staff with results disastrous, but immensely comic.

Other good comedies are "Who Were You with Last Night" (742 feet) and "Once Upon a Time" (690 feet), being handled by the Yorkshire Cine Company, and "Pimple's Willit, Wasit, Isit". (817 feet), a Piccadilly film, handled by Messrs. H. A. Browne & Co. FRED GRONBACK.

AGNES VERNON APPEARING IN UNIVERSAL SERIES

Agnes Vernon, recently selected by the officers of the Universal company to be featured in special productions is appearing at Universal City in the first of this series entitled, "The Girl of the Dance Hall." E. P. Evers, Ray Hanford and Malcolm Blevins constitute the supporting cast.

The scenes are laid in both a small Western town and in an Eastern city. The girl in question is saved from the unpleasant life of the dance hall by an Eastern mining engineer who induces her to go East where she is courted and married by the engineer's closest friend. Leon Kent is in charge of the production.

David Horsley Engages Three Stars for Mutual Plays

Myrtle Stedman, Leona Hutton and Margaret Gibson Sign Long Contracts with Producer for Appearance in Subjects of Various Length, Names of Dramas Announced Later

DAVID HORSLEY announces the engagement this week for a long period of Myrtle Stedman, Margaret Gibson and Leona Hutton to appear in the different length productions which Mr. Horsley is now making for release on the Mutual program.

MYRTLE STEDMAN LEONA HUTTON MARGARET GIBSON

Myrtle Stedman is a star of stellar magnitude and comes to Mr. Horsley's company after acquiring an enviable reputation by her work in many important productions. She is an unusually gifted actress with a wide range of expression. Fair, with large blue eyes, a wealth of golden hair, and exceptionally beautiful features, she is a most excellent photographic subject.

The Selig Polyscope Company first claimed her for pictures and she remained with this company for four years, working as leading woman under the direction of Otis Turner. She then was engaged by Bosworth, Inc., and appeared in that company's features and also in the productions of Oliver Morosco.

Among the subjects in which she appeared was "Hypocrites." She played one of the most important parts in that success. In "Wild Olive" she played the title part. She also played the leading feminine part in "It's No Laughing Matter," "In the Valley of the Moon," and was prominent in the cast of "Pretty Mrs. Smith."

Leona Hutton, whose services Mr. Horsley has also acquired, comes from the New York Motion Picture Company, where for three years she divided her time appearing in the Broncho, Domino and Kay-Bee releases made by that concern.

In practically all of these she was cast for the leading roles, playing in many instances opposite Walter Edwards. Her work is recognized as being of the highest order and has made her a host of admirers. By a coincidence Miss Hutton will be under the direction of Jay Hunt, who was her director with the NYMP and who is now also with Mr. Horsley .

Like Miss Hutton, Margaret Gibson is a former New York Motion Picture Company player. Aside from her well known ability as an actress Miss Gibson is noted for her striking beauty. She resembles Mary Pickford so closely that she is frequently mistaken for "Little Mary" when her picture is shown on the screen.

Miss Gibson began her motion picture career with the Thanhouser Company, later going to the Reliance studios on the coast as leading woman with their stock company. Following this she was engaged by the New York Motion Picture Company.

Miss Hutton and Miss Gibson will be prominent in the support of Crane Wilbur in Mr. Horsley's three-reel feature productions, another of Mr. Horsley's new brands, the first of which, "The Protest," will be released September 29 in the regular service of the Mutual program.

Announcement of the name of the brand in which Miss Stedman will appear, together with the release date of the first picture and of the people in the cast supporting her, will be made later.

Dailies to Act as Correspondents for U's "Animated"

Company Furnishes "Stills" of Events in the Weekly to Newspapers, and They Print List of Theatres Exhibiting the Topical Pictures in the Locality

JOE BRANDT has put over another big proposition for the Universal, which is being grabbed up enthusiastically by numerous newspapers throughout the country.

The Universal's "Animated Weekly," with the aid of the Otis F. Wood Company, has made arrangements with the newspapers to act as its agents or correspondents in their particular localities. Thus the weekly becomes the "Pittsburgh Press-Animated Weekly," or whatever paper links up with the weekly. Pictures of the weekly are exhibited at the usual theatres and in addition the newspaper prints a list of the theatres where the weekly is shown.

The film company, on the other hand, furnishes still pictures of the weekly to the newspapers and stories appertaining to the various events shown each week.

Among the newspapers which have already contracted with the Universal are the Omaha "Bee," Oklahoma "Oklahoman," Dallas "Times," Milwaukee "Evening Wisconsin," Fort Smith "Times-Record," Charlotte "Observer," Pittsburgh "Press," San Antonio "Light," New Orleans "Item," Houston "Post," Grand Rapids "News," Cleveland "Leader," Buffalo "Enquirer," Baltimore "News," Toledo "News-Bee," Indianapolis "Star," Muncie "Star," and Terre Haute "Star."

PATHE COMMISSIONS SEITZ TO WRITE "WHO'S GUILTY" SERIES

George Brackett Seitz, adapter of the "Exploits of Elaine," "The Galloper," and many other of Pathé's most successful releases, has been commissioned by the firm to write a series of photoplays under the general title of "Who's Guilty?" Following somewhat the same plan as Pathé's very successful series "Who Pays?" the stories will be series studies of life as it is and each will end with the query "Who is guilty for this social crime?"

Mr. Seitz has just completed the first of the series which is entitled "Grist of the Mill."

GLIMPSES OF "REGENERATION," OWEN KILDARE'S FAMOUS STORY, A CURRENT FOX RELEASE

ROCKCLIFFE FELLOWES AND ANNA Q. NILSON APPEAR IN THIS MULTIPLE REEL PRODUCTION

WARREN KERRIGAN NOW DIRECTS AT LAKE TAHOE FOR UNIVERSAL

J. Warren Kerrigan, whose work before the eye of the camera is at once work and play, has been stationed by the Universal Film Company at a branch of their Western studios, arranged for his own special benefit and placed on the shore of Lake Tahoe, poetically known as "The lake of the sky."

That the company has not been idle since the establishment of the Lake Tahoe studios is proved conclusively by a glance at the names of some of the productions which they have completed since occupying their new quarters. The first staged there was a two-reel story entitled "Payment Received." This was followed by another two reeler, "A Night in the Pines," and a three-reel feature, "The Code of the Mounted," in which Kerrigan is seen at his best, which more than amply tells of the class of the production. A two-reel story of the South, entitled "A Kentucky Idyll," completes the list of finished productions, and in addition to these the company has already started work on another three-reel feature, an Indian love story, "Son o' the Stars," in which he plays a dual role.

J. WARREN KERRIGAN

After this is completed he will start work on "The Troubador of El Dorado."

Metro's Rare Play Vintages for Modern Film Palates

Wallack Collection of Dramas Dating from Foundations of English Stage, the Fine Wine of Elder Generations Delighting Connoisseurs, Bought by Rowland as Vehicles for His Stars

THE entire collection of plays and manuscripts, which represent a lifetime of collecting by Lester Wallack, the noted actor and producer, has been purchased by the Metro Pictures Corporation. These manuscripts, many of them so rare as to be without the possibility of duplication, number more than one hundred, and they will be made into feature plays for the screen by the several companies contributing to the Metro program.

At the auction sale of the properties of the Lester Wallack estate, held at the time when Wallack's theatre at Broadway and Thirtieth street was sacrificed to the onmarch of office buildings, the manuscripts were bought by a private collector.

When President Richard A. Rowland learned of their whereabouts negotiations were begun and these were completed this week by the purchase of the entire collection.

Rare old plays by dramatists who contributed to the foundation work of the English drama, quaint plots as vigorous and as red-blooded as the most stirring of modern picture plays, and virile dramas that lend themselves admirably to the screen are included in the collection.

These will be adapted to the needs of today with such stars as Ethel Barrymore, William Faversham, Francis X. Bushman, Mme. Petrova, Mary Miles Minter, Edmund Breese, Hamilton Revelle, Lois Meredith, Emmy Wehlen, Valli Valli, Henry Kolker, Emily Stevens, Marguerite Snow and other great players now under contract with the Metro companies.

The purchase of the Wallack collection is notable also in that it indicates the appreciation of motion picture makers of the classic standards of the drama and of their desire to perpetuate for all time the great master plays that have made dramatic history. These will be given the advantage of skilled production, of which their authors could scarcely have dreamed, and will send down to posterity the modern contribution to the perpetuity of art.

The manuscripts have been given over into the charge of the Metro's scenario division, and they are being catalogued and copied for practical uses. Several of the rarer scripts of the plays have been so affected by the passing of the years that they had to be encased in vellum covers to avoid injury to the originals while the working copies were being made.

The list of dramatists included such well known names as Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Mrs. Charles Kemble, Dion Boucicault, J. Sterling Coyne, William Brough, John Brougham, Colley Cibber, James Sheridan Knowles and Samuel Foote.

1600 BROADWAY - - - - NEW YORK

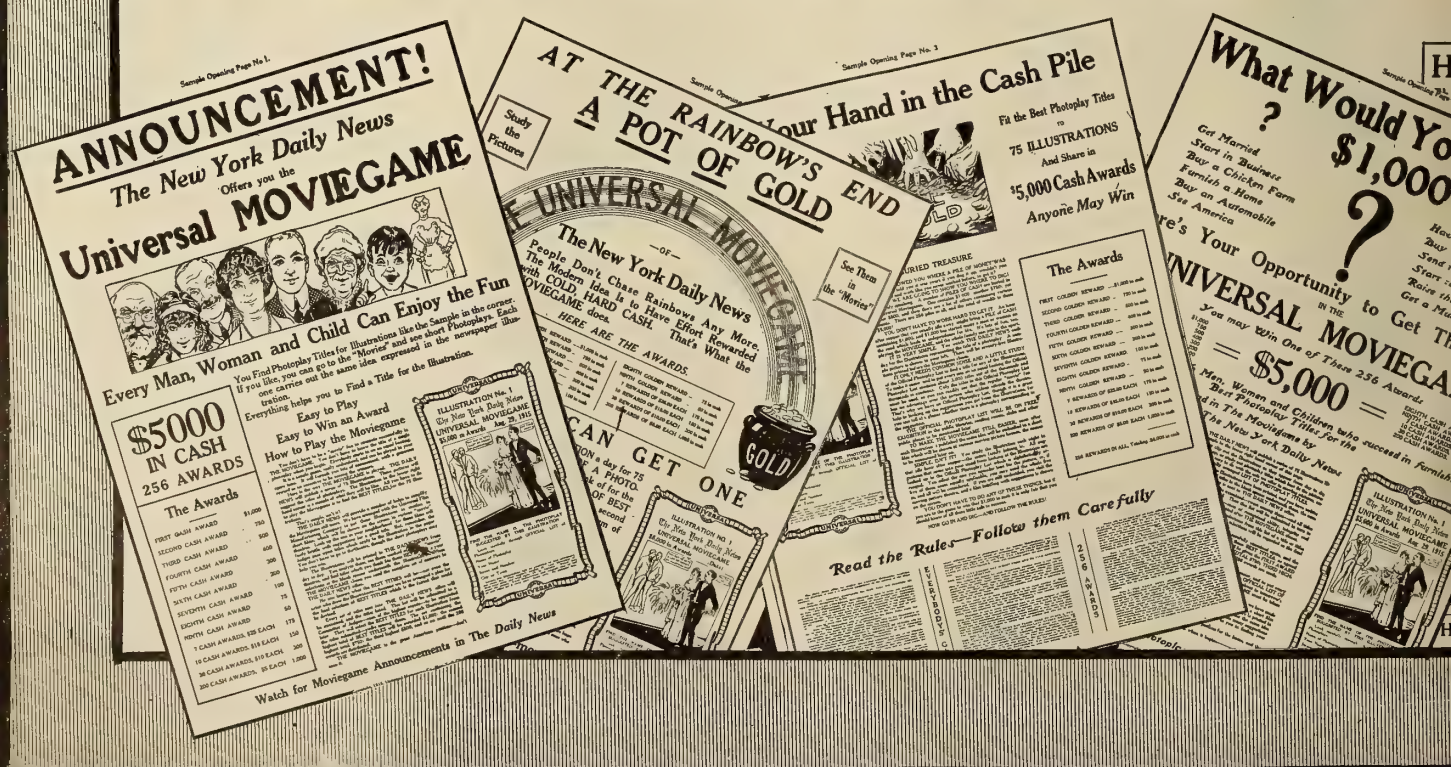
The wonderful UNIVERSAL
the Exhibitors of the en

THIS double page advertisement is published to explain the great UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME to Exhibitors, and to show how simple it is and why your patrons will become fascinated with it. The following explanation is just a general description which may be applied in any town where the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME is used. 1st—The Newspaper will publish, either every day—4 times, 3 times or twice a week, a pen and ink drawing, such as you see illustrated by figure No. 1 on the next page, which will suggest the title of a Photo-play, book-story or novel. This pen and ink drawing will be surrounded by a decorative film border and will contain spaces underneath the drawing for Name of the participant, address, etc. See figure No. 1.

Now then—the readers of the paper will try to suggest the best titles to fit the illustrations every day as they appear in the newspaper. For example. Note figure No. 1 again. This pen and ink illustration shows a man leading his bride. Sticking out of his pocket is a check. To the left stand two men who are commenting upon the luck of the bridegroom. Notice now that under the picture is the space left for your patrons to insert their suggestion as to the best title to fit the illustration, name, address, etc., etc.

Now—if the person who plays the MOVIEGAME desires to have assistance in getting the best titles for the different illustrations as they appear,—he may secure such assistance by purchasing a catalogue from the newspaper, which contains over 3,000 titles of stories, plays, photo-plays, books by popular authors, etc., etc. This catalogue will contain ALL of the best titles that will fit ALL the illustrations used in the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME. These titles will be mixed in with all the other titles. If the player wishes to secure more assistance in suggesting the best titles, he may do so by seeing short moving pictures in your theatre which will illustrate the pictures that appear in the newspaper daily.

It will not be necessary in either case to buy a catalogue nor to see the moving pictures to enter into this game, for anyone can suggest titles to every and all pictures as they appear in the newspaper. The publishing of the catalogue and the showing of the moving pictures in the theatre are done to assist patrons in suggesting the best titles for the illustrations as they appear in the newspaper. The catalogue will be placed for convenient reference and free for usage to all,—at the newspaper office—library—prominent news stands, etc., etc. Also the catalogues will be on sale at these same places, or purchasable direct from the newspaper that runs the MOVIEGAME.



Take a glance at the cuts below. These are miniature reproductions of entire full page ads that constitute the opening advertising campaign that the newspaper expects to conduct. These big full page ads will give every detail necessary to the public to cause them all to play the great UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME. Note the headings and matter. Then we have prepared a series of 5 column ads and 4 column ads, also 3 column ads to be used by the newspaper to keep the game going and growing each succeeding day.

Figure No. 1 shows you the style of the illustrations as they will appear either every day—4 times a week—3 times a week or twice a week as the different newspapers see fit to publish them. This is up to the newspaper. Each illustration will show a different picture every time. Under the picture is left a space for the best title to the picture. Also a space is left for name, address, etc. These are cut out of the newspaper and mailed in to the newspaper (after the game is all over). To the person who sends in the largest number of best titles for all of the illustrations published in the newspaper, that person will receive the largest award. The person sending in the second largest number of best titles will be awarded the next largest amount and so on down the line.

There is no restriction as to the number of titles to each picture sent in by one person. A person may send in one, five or a dozen titles to each single illustration. But each must be written on a picture clipped from the paper. No one can write more than one suggestion on one picture clipped from the paper. Each suggestion must have name, address, etc., etc., of the participant.

NOW—In each city where the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME is to be used, there will be exhibited in a theatre, the moving pictures in short strips of about 50 to 75 feet which will assist the participants in applying the best title to each illustration as it appears in the newspaper. The Theatre will announce through the aid of posters and by tacking on to the large full page ads of the newspaper that the titles to THE FASCINATING UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME PICTURES that appear daily in the _____ newspaper can easily be solved by seeing the moving pictures at the _____ Theatre every night, 4 times a week, 3 times a week, or twice a week as the plan might call for. Heralds are distributed broadcast that explain the rules of the game to all. On the back of each herald and in the newspaper ads appears this announcement, "SEE the illustration each day in the————paper." "Then see the moving pictures that will help you suggest the best titles,—every night at the————Theatre." That means sending the entire crowd of MOVIEGAME PLAYERS to the House that shows the strips of moving pictures. Heralds can be secured. Posters are all ready, and the big newspaper campaign will turn your town into a storm of moviegame fans. AND YOU can reap the harvest of this colossal plan by co-operating with the newspaper that runs the illustrations and by plugging the game yourself. Every night you announce on slides—Read the————then see the moving pictures that will help you suggest the best titles for the illustrations. On your posters you say —We show the fascinating moving pictures each night that will help you suggest the best titles to the illustrations that appear in the————on the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME. Come tonight. Come every night.

Figure 2 shows titles with pencil rings marked around them—showing how the titles can be found in the catalogue to help the participants. Notice that the titles marked read—"Such Is Life"—"Such Things Really Happen"—"Sue"—"The Fortunate Youth"—"A Fortune Hunter," etc., etc. These are examples of the suggestive titles as applied to the Illustration Fig. 1. The catalogues together with seeing the moving pictures at your Theatre will make the suggesting of the best titles very easy and simple to the participants. This plan is more huge than you have any idea. The possibilities are tremendous. It grows daily, and reaches colossal proportions. Everybody joins in the game sooner or later. All who join are prospective patrons of your house if you show the moving pictures. Your nearest Exchange will give you more facts and figures. Looking Ahead With The Producers

"SUNSHINE AND TEMPEST" YOUNG ACTRESSES, TO APPEAR IN RIALTO FEATURE BEARING THEIR NAMES

"SUNSHINE AND TEMPEST" will be the title of the three reel Rialto star feature picture which will be the important Mutual release for October 6. And in this play, full of the clouds and smiles of Tennessee skies written by Rev. Clarence J. Harris, will be featured "Sunshine and Tempest," the two dearly loved little actresses who since they were children together in the sunny Southland, have been associated together on the stage.

Florence Tempest and Marion Sunshine

TEMPEST AND SUNSHINE

were born in Louisville, Ky., some twenty odd years ago. When they were six, Lincoln J. Carter starred them in "Two Little Waifs" and offered a reward of $5,000 for any two children who could match them. During this engagement Robert Mantell saw them and engaged them for the roles of the two little princes in his production of "Richard III."

Since then, the success of the merry little "Sunshine and Tempest" combination have proved too numerous to mention. To New Yorkers their work in the "Follies" and the show at the Winter Garden was enough to make them unendingly popular. Last season "Sunshine" appeared with Raymond Hitchcock in "The Beauty Shop," while vivacious little "Tempest" went en tour in the successful vaudeville sketch "One of the Boys." "Sunshine and Tempest" are to be united again this season. They will both appear in the Dillingham production of "Stop! Look! and Listen!" at the Hippodrome.

As motion picture players the charming young actresses are great successes. Their clear cut beauty, their alertness and their ready intelligence give them more than the average screen value. "Sunshine and Tempest" will be the third three-reel feature made by the Gaumont company under the title of Rialto brand.

LION "RESCUES" KATHLYN WILLIAMS IN SELIG OCTOBER RELEASE

"A Sultana of the Desert," a Selig special in two reels, written by and featuring Kathlyn Williams, will be released in Selig regular service on Monday, October 4. Miss Williams will be seen making a pet of a gigantic African lioness and associating with other wild animals of the jungle.

"A Sultana of the Desert" deals with Oriental life, showing how the daughter of a wealthy Oriental escapes from captivity only to fall into the clutches of a bandit. How she is rescued by an African lion, and how later she is given into the arms of her faithful lover, furnish a succession of thrills. Thomas Santschi assumes the leading masculine role in the support of Miss Williams.

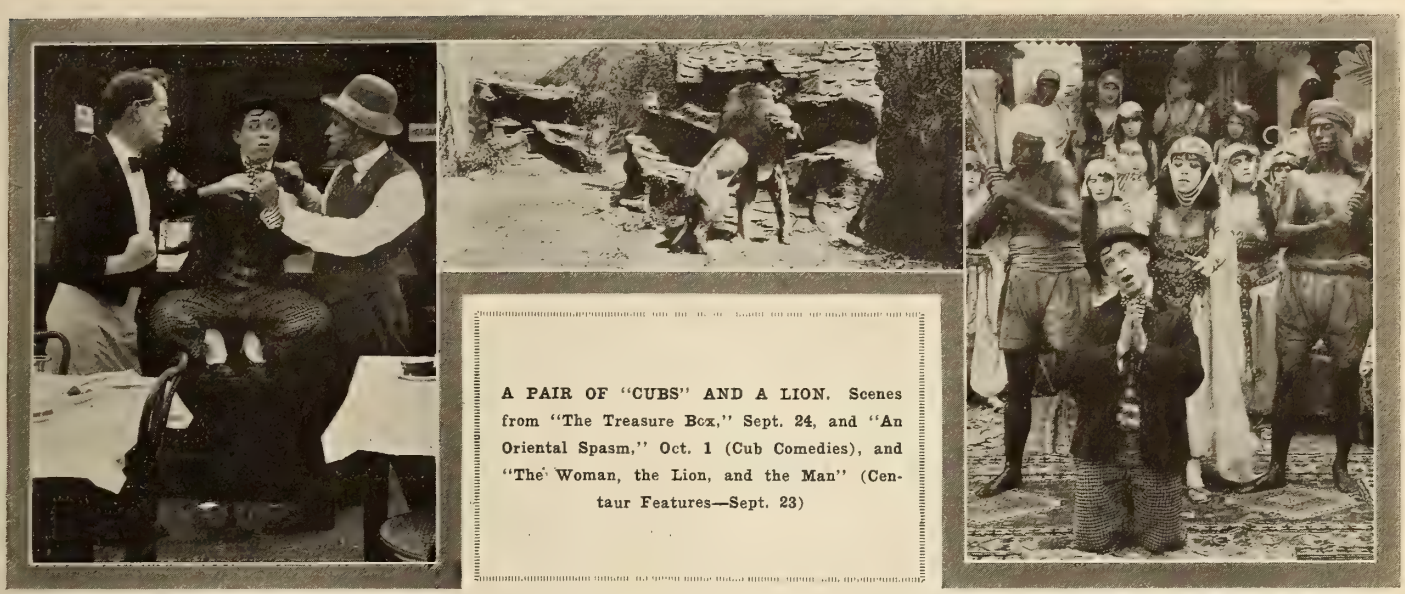
FIFTEEN CASKETS ARE USED IN HOYT COMEDY, "A MILK WHITE FLAG"

Fifteen caskets are used in a scene in the adaptation of the Hoyt comedy, "A Milk White Flag," which is being made into a Red Seal play at the Chicago studios of the Selig Polyscope Company. The frights which many of those about the studio are receiving are very humorous, for the caskets have given the practical jokers a long-waited opportunity.

QUALITY COMPANY SEEKING SNOW SCENES FOR "PENNINGTON"

The Quality Pictures Company headed by Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, and consisting of Lester Cuneo, Helen Dunbar, Frank Bacon and Director W. J. Bauman, are invading the snow-capped peaks and valleys of Mount Shasta, California, in search of North Canadian snow scenes for "Pennington's Choice." The company went to Sisson, California, and from there to the mountain by stage. It is expected that it will take them fully one week to make the exterior scenes necessary, during which time they will remain in the winter climate.

New records for production were made at the Quality studio in the filming of "A Corner on Cotton" featuring Marguerite Snow, the five reels being completed in less than thirteen days. Previous production required from five to seven weeks, and as a result of this added efficiency, Don Meany, manager of productions, has been receiving compliments from the principals of the organization.



HANDWORTH DIRECTS TWO FEATURES AT LAKE PLACID FOR VITAGRAPH

Vitagraph Director Harry Handworth has just returned from Lake Placid, New York, where he has been busy with two feature productions, "Anselo Lee" and "Gone to the Dogs."

The company assisting Director Handworth in these productions included Antonio Moreno, Naomi Childers, Helen Relyea, Donald Hall, Frankie Mann and Billie Billings.

"BOBBIE" THEW (in Fox Productions)

A PAIR OF "CUBS" AND A LION. Scenes from "The Treasure Box," Sept. 24, and "An Oriental Spasm," Oct. 1 (Cub Comedies), and "The Woman, the Lion, and the Man" (Centaur Features—Sept. 23)

"AN ORIENTAL SPASM" NOTABLE FOR MASSIVE SETS

Aside from its laugh-making powers, "An Oriental Spasm," one-reel comedy which is to be released October 1 on the Mutual program, is notable for its massive sets.

As the title implies the locale of the story is India, to which land Jerry, the character introduced and made famous by George Ovey, is carried for having in his possession a jewel stolen from the eye of an idol in the Hindoo temple. The Royal Kazabo sentences Jerry to become his slave, a position that involves work, which Jerry does not like. So Jerry endeavors to escape his servitude. He is on his way to success when he unsuspectingly enters the Royal Kazabo's harem. This is an especial attraction for Jerry, and he forgets all about the fact that he is an escaping slave until the guards recapture him. Then Jerry has to do his escaping all over again, but this trial is more successful than the first, and he finally lands back home.

Scenes are shown of Indian villages, the temple and the royal palace where the action takes place.

An exceptionally large cast, headed by George Ovey, and including Louis Fitzroy, Goldie Colwell, Janet Sully, Gordon MacGregor and Jefferson Osborne, appear in this picture, which is directed by Milton Fahrney.

REEDS FROM EVERGLADES FOR HUTS IN VITAGRAPH SET

Vitagraph Director Wally Van advanced a step in adding realism to motion pictures when he dispatched a hundred ton schooner to the Everglades of Florida for a shipload of reeds with which to build a village of thatched huts as a background for the majority of scenes in "The Sultan of Zoulon," a feature picture on which he is now at work.

The vessel under the command of Captain Ira Edwards docked at Miami, where they employed wagons and journeyed the fifteen miles inland for the necessary reeds. For good measure, Captain Edwards, brought back not only a shipload of the reels, but half dozen palm trees. As the trees were too long to go in the hold they were lashed to the deck and when the vessel reached Brooklyn on its return journey it was the center of attraction to a curious crowd who had never before seen a palm tree except in pictures.

LUBIN WAR PLAY, "THE PERIL," FILMED WITH NOTABLES AT NEWPORT

George W. Terwilliger, of the Lubin Company, has written a war play, entitled "The Peril," which he has almost completed at the Newport studio, and in which he utilized the Rhode Island city members of the "400," their palatial homes, and, incidentally, Secretary of the Navy Daniels, Admiral Fletcher, Governor Beeckman, Governor Walsh, Governor Whitman, Vice Admiral Mayo, Rear Admiral Fiske, Captain Hugh Willoughby, J. K. Sullivan, Captain J. K. Robison, Captain W. S. Sims, Lieutenant C. C. Davis, of the "Birmingham"; Captain J. H. Newton and Lieutenant S. S. Lewis, of the "Patterson"; Captain Fitch and Lieutenant Harlow, of the "Yankton"; Commander Watson, of the "Utah"; Captain Roger Welles, Lieutenant Commander Frank Taylor Evans, Lieutenant Ernest Durr, Lieutenant J. T. Everson, Lieutenant C. L. Foutz, of the Newport Training Station. The cast itself is headed by Ormi Hawley and Earl Metcalfe.

"The Peril" is the story of a foreign attack on America in 1918. A strange coincidence is the use of an aerial torpedo. Since Mr. Terwilliger invented this visionary weapon, an English inventor has evolved an actual torpedo of this type and it is said to have been used in warfare against Zeppelin airships.

"WHEN HUSBANDS GO TO WAR" IS MINA MIRTH-PRODUCER

"When Husbands Go to War," the MinA release of September 23, abounds in funny situations resulting from the decision of three rubes to go to the burlesque show in the city and the phony excuse to their wives —that they are going to enlist in the war.

This one-reeler will add one more to the list of MinA comedies with a plot. The company is endeavoring to strike a happy medium between slapsticks and polite comedies. "When Husbands Go to War" meets the desired end, it is said.

"TILLIE'S TOMATO SURPRISE" FOR RELEASE SEPTEMBER 27

Lubin of Philadelphia announces the release of Marie Dressler's five-act comedy "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" on September 27 through the V-L-S-E offices.

This new "Tillie" film was written by Acton Davies and staged by Howell Hansel. It required twelve weeks of hard work, an army of actors and actresses and thousands of dollars to film this riot of fun.

MARIE DRESSLER AND THE LUBIN MONKEY

In the company supporting Miss Dressler are Tom McNaughton, the co-star with Christie MacDonald in "The Spring Maid," and with José Collins in "Suzie"; Colin Campbell, the noted Scotch comedian; Sarah McVickar, Eleanor Fairbanks, Clara Lambert and James, the world famous Lubin monkey, who can talk the deaf and dumb language and eat peas with a knife.

AUTHORS FILM BUYS STATE RIGHTS TO FROHMAN PICTURE

The Authors Film Company has purchased the territorial rights for the states of New York and Pennsylvania for "Just Out of College," the Frohman Amusement Corporation's recent production.

A GROUP OF FEATURE FILM ILLUMINANTS

EQUITABLE'S FIRST QUARTER RELEASE PLAN IS ANNOUNCED, BEGINNING WITH "TRILBY" SEPT. 20

THE first quarter of Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation begins next Monday with the release of its first production, "Trilby," and ends the latter part of December with the presentation of Cyril Scott in one of his former stage successes, now in course of construction at the Triumph Film studio, a subsidiary of the Equitable.

Following "Trilby," which will be seen September 20, Helen Ware will be offered in her most recent stage success, "The Price," which was supplied by George Broadhurst, author of "Bought and Paid For," "The Man of the Hour" and other legitimate successes.

Julius Steger in his own unique romance, "The Master of the House," in which he appeared for a long season, will follow "The Price." Thomas A. Wise will make his screen debut on the Equitable program in Paul Armstrong's race track story, "Blue Grass." "Blue Grass" has been directed by Thomas Seay and was staged in the exact locale of the original script.

Kathryn Osterman, last seen in a big World Film production, will see the light of screen day with Equitable in "The Bludgeon," another powerful story from the pen of Paul Armstrong. "The Bludgeon" will feature the Equitable program about November 1.

Following Miss Osterman will come the irrepressible Cyril Scott. Mr. Scott is now at work in a play the title of which has not been made public.

Katharine Kaelred will make her first appearance on any screen in a big, serious play of moment, when she is seen following Cyril Scott. Work will begin on it at once under the direction of Webster Cullison at the Fifty-second street Equitable studio.

Charles Cherry will be seen November 7 in a famous novel, now one of the best sellers and soon to start work under the guidance of Director John Ince. Charles Cherry will be supported by Clara Whipple and the Equitable stock company.

Florence Reed, last seen with the Famous Players and Metro in two big plays, will be seen on the Equitable program about November 30 in "The Cowardly Way," which is now in the last stages under the direction of Cullison.

Lily Cahill and Henry Kolker will, in all probability, appear jointly in one of the forthcoming Equitable plays early in December.

Margarita Fischer, the American "Beauty" company star, now a permanent Equitable player, will be seen under the direction of her former director, Harry Pollard. General Manager Felix F. Feist has been dickering with Harriet Ford for the screen rights to "Polygamy," "The Argyle Case," "A Strange Woman" and others, and if he is successful, Miss Fischer will be seen in "Polygamy." Robert Edeson will be seen in a visualization of "The City of Numbered Days." Lenore Ulrich is now at work at the Triumph studio in "The Better Woman," while Katharine Kaelred will be seen about December 15 in William J. Locke's "Idols."

William Courtleigh, George Soule Spencer, Clara Whipple and other noted stars will be featured in Equitable releases during the following quarter, beginning January 1, 1916.

MUTUAL WILL PRESENT "DAMAGED GOODS" WITH ORIGINAL CAST, ON OCTOBER 4

THE Mutual Film Corporation announces that it will release "Damaged Goods" in seven reels, presenting Richard Bennett, and all his cast of coworkers from the famous stage production, on October 4.

The release date for this picture was decided upon at a meeting of the executives of the Mutual at the New York office, attended also by Samuel S. Hutchinson of the American Film Manufacturing Company, New York. The production was filmed by this company and will soon be released under the "Flying A" brand.

"This is probably the greatest thing we have done in motion pictures," said Mr. Hutchinson.

"Our 'Damaged Goods' is also a rare testimonial to the ability of the motion picture to carry over such a remarkable plot and its involved sex lesson in a clean way. None of the things that had to be said in the speaking stage production, with the inevitable mincing of words, come in to affect the film.

"The film tells the whole story of 'Damaged Goods' in such a way that it can give offense to nobody, without a tinge of the repulsive and yet it remains the most astonishingly powerful story I have ever seen on the screen."

Perhaps the most telling statement of all has come from Mr. Bennett himself, who has declared himself completely satisfied with the film version of this wonderful play.

The story of Bennett's discovery of the play and his subsequent winning battle to produce it is a remarkable one.

One night now some years past he was at dinner along in one of the cafes frequented by the literati of New York when he chanced to overhear a conversation about an astonishing play written by Eugene Brieux, entitled "Les Avares."

Bennett, deeply interested, proceeded forthwith to get a copy of the drama. How deeply he was affected by the play is indicated by the determination with which he set out to produce it.

Applications for bookings are now being received by wire from all sections, where the exhibitors have heard the gossip of the forthcoming release, and are anxious to secure it.

LEWIS AND ETHEL GRAY TERRY TO STAR IN "BOUGHT"

Frederick Lewis, one of the best known leading men on the American stage, and Ethel Gray Terry, who has won an enviable reputation as an ingenue, are to be featured in "Bought," the feature which Director Barry O'Neill is making at the World Film Studio.

New Laws And Court Decisions

This department is designed to keep the industry informed on all news concerning new or projected laws, Federal, State, County or Municipal, that may affect the business, and all events involving any branch of the trade with the authorities in all sections of the country

PHILADELPHIA AUTHORITIES, OVERZEALOUS FOR COLORED BROTHER'S SAFETY, FAIL IN COURT ATTEMPT TO SUPPRESS "NATION"

ALTHOUGH the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors passed the "Birth of a Nation" as a proper picture to be shown in the State, it was not allowed a normal and peaceful career. Both in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia authorities tried to stop the production, and in both cases were overruled by the courts.

The photoplay was scheduled for its Philadelphia opening on Saturday, September 4. After all arrangements were made and the sale of tickets well under way, Director of Public Safety Porter ordered the production stopped, claiming he feared serious disturbances if the play was allowed to go on.

The director said he had received overwhelming protests from many negroes, amongst them one representing 20,000 colored Knights of Pythias, and he had also learned that many negroes had purchased tickets for the opening performance. The director further said that at the request of Chief Censor Breitinger he had viewed the picture at Atlantic City and in his opinion it was not a proper subject for Philadelphia with a larger negro population than any other Northern city. The picture had also been condemned, said the director, by representative negroes, including several ministers.

As soon as the director's intentions were formulated, Nixon & Zimmerman, of the Forrest theatre, where the film was to be shown, applied to the courts for an injunction preventing Director Porter from interfering with the performance of the picture. Joseph McCullen, representing the theatre management, in asking for the injunction, quoted the decision of Judge Reed of Pittsburgh, on Friday, in which he refused to grant an injunction against the same production on the ground that the Legislature had given a Board of Censors to the State with full authority in such cases and he thought this body, unless it could be shown to have acted fraudulently, should be entitled to respect and its decisions supported.

Judge Ferguson, of Court Number Four in Philadelphia, promptly granted a preliminary injunction preventing the authorities from interfering with the performance for five days. Judge Ferguson said after the five days were over, either party to the proceeding could go before any Judge of Court Number Four with a motion to have the injunction vacated or made permanent.

The judge further said that he had seen the production in question and found it very interesting. While there might be some colored people inclined to be captious and critical, their judgment should not be the rule, as the same thing could be said of other plays reflecting on other races and nationalities. He saw no reason to anticipate disturbances or riots, hence his granting of the injunction.

The play was then allowed to proceed, but still fearful of trouble, Director Porter ordered a large force of police to be present at the performance. Many private detectives were also scattered through the theatre and patrolmen were stationed on the outside. Either the danger was magnified by the zealous director, or the precautions intimidated the prospective trouble makers, for the first performance of the "Birth of a Nation" was given to a crowded and enthusiastic audience which included a few colored people, who, it is said, applauded the thrilling scenes the same as the whites.

All the daily papers gave long and favorable criticisms of the picture. In this connection Dr. Charlotte Abbey, a noted social worker of Philadelphia, said among other things: "I am sorry to find that an historical play such as this, should be the cause of inciting race prejudice. The play teaches a mighty lesson to both white and colored, and it seems strange that lessons so plainly taught by the writer should need to be pointed out. Surely the results of Afro-American training as shown in the 'Birth of a Nation' by views of colored students at Hampton and other institutions, and the thorough exposure of unscrupulous white politicians and fake reformers should be enough to do away with any feeling of resentment by the negro race against the play."

Director Porter has announced his candidacy for mayor in the forthcoming election. In the opinion of many, this fact contributed in no small measure to the director's concern about the protests of some of the colored voters.

OMAHA THEATRE IS FOUND NOT GUILTY OF BLOCKING PASSAGEWAYS DURING PERFORMANCES

SAYING that an Omaha, Neb., city ordinance prohibiting the obstruction of "passageways" in any theatre during a performance is all right in itself, but that it does not apply to the Empress, Omaha's largest motion picture theatre, Police Judge Charles E. Foster, of that city, recently dismissed a complaint brought by the city against the amusement house.

This settled a question that threatened to work untold hardship on motion picture exhibitors. If the judge's ruling had been the other way, the police would have prevented anyone entering a motion picture theatre while a performance was in progress. This would have interfered with all the houses showing continuously and would have included most of them.

Judge Foster's decision may be summed up as follows:

"The evidence was agreed upon, with the defendant contending that the theatre in question does not come within the ordinance. The testimony showed that there are three openings in the front of the theatre, the main or center opening being used for an entrance only, and the opening on either side for exits only. The aisles are so constructed that they lead directly to the exits, and not to the entrance, so that persons leaving the building will not come in contact with any who may be standing in the entrance. I visited the theatre in question and carefully looked over the entrance and exits and other parts of the building. I do not think this is a case to come within the ordinance.

"I want it understood that I am not holding the ordinance invalid, nor determining any other case than the one at bar. There might be other moving picture theatres in the city which would, upon investigation, come within the ordinance."

Police Commissioner Kugel, at whose instigation the action against the Empress is understood to have been taken, grew quite excited when advised of the decision of the police judge. He immediately announced that he would ask the city commission to appeal the case to the higher courts. "The Empress blocked their entrance during practically every show," he declared with considerable heat. "If Judge Foster does not call an entrance a passageway, I'd like to know just what he does call it."

BEAUTY CONTEST INVESTIGATED

pany" and the "Exposition Tours Company," both of which operated in Columbus, Ohio. Five girls were declared the winners, but when it came to train time it developed that the girls were expected to pay their traveling expenses, as the only item furnished was transportation.

Columbus inspectors are looking into the contest to ascertain whether there was any violation of the postal laws in the alluring advertisements of the wonderful trips to the coast that would fall to the winners of the beauty contest. The advertisements mentioned the fact that every expense would be paid; that there would be special chaperons, plenty of amusements, physicians to care for the ailing and all other conveniences that make a de luxe tour.

When the train left only one beauty was aboard, while two of the others complained to the post office inspectors.

DALLAS MAYOR APPOINTS BOARD OF CENSORSHIP APPEALS

Mayor Lindsley, of Dallas, Texas, appointed three women and four men, a board of seven as a board of appeals to pass on moving pictures that have been censored by the censor. The appeal board will consist of Mrs. F. M. Smith, president Mothers' Club; Mrs. George K. Meyer, president Dallas Art Association; Mrs. Mary K. Craig, teacher of women; Claude McCallum, attorney; N. Nigro, wholesale fruit dealer; John S. Aldehoff, fire insurance agent, and Harry L. Seay, former police commissioner.

They are the members of the board of appeals under the new ordinance which became effective about a month ago. This board has the power to condemn a moving picture film or theatrical production and forbid its being shown in Dallas. While the decision of the board is final, the board of appeals will only be called upon when there is a disagreement between the censor and the manager showing the picture, when either side can appeal to the board for decision.

TEXARKANA, TEX., HAS SUNDAY OPENING FOR FIRST TIME

For the first time in its history, Texarkana, Texas, had moving picture shows open and running on Sunday, September 5, all three of the picture playhouses located on the Texas side opening their doors at 1 P. M., and continuing until after 8 in the evening.

It is estimated that about three thousand people attended the performances, which were free, no tickets being sold and no collection taken at the door.

Consequently no arrests were made by the police.

Petitions are being circulated and several thousand signatures have been secured asking for the opening of picture theatres to the public on Sundays. The measure is being supported by organized labor, and is being strenuously fought by the church people, who are bitterly opposed to the opening of picture shows on Sunday. A great deal of interest is being manifested in the matter, and it seems yet uncertain as to whether Sunday pictures are to prove a "go" in Texarkana.

TILT OF KANSAS CENSORS OVER FRANK FILMS SHOWS LAW'S WEAKNESS

S. M. BREWSTER, attorney general of Kansas, has issued an order that no moving pictures of the Frank lynching in Georgia shall be shown in the State of Kansas.

Back of the expulsion order is a story of unprecedented action on the part of the State censors. Two news weeklies were submitted for censorship at Topeka and both contained pictures of the Frank lynching. While Miss Carrie Simpson, was using the shears on the weekly that she was inspecting, the Rev. Festus Foster, the other censor, in another picture house, was also reviewing a weekly and allowed it to go as it was. Miss Simpson appealed to S. N. Hawkes, assistant attorney general, who said that Frank pictures would not be allowed to be shown until W. D. Ross, superintendent of public instruction and official film censor for the State of Kansas, passed upon them. He is now in California and will not return for some time. This is the first time in the history of Kansas censorship that the attorney general has had to be a censor.

"So long as I have anything to say there will be no Frank pictures shown in the State," declared Miss Simpson. "I will cut out every reference I see made to the Frank hanging. I can see no merit in such pictures."

"The picture which I passed did not show a rope, corpse, funeral or anything of that sort," stated the Rev. Mr. Foster in defense of his action. "The picture simply showed the crowd at the lynching of Frank. I could see nothing objectionable in it."

That is the way films are censored in Kansas. One of the censors will pass it and the other will object to it, simply because, as she states, "I can see no merit in it." She is not appointed to see merit in pictures. She is appointed to cut out anything that might be indecent or vulgar, yet she turns down a good news weekly that is made up of the news of the world, simply because she could see no merit in it.

PITTSBURGH SCREEN CLUB PLANS FIGHT ON CENSORSHIP—POLICE AND STATE OFFICIALS CLASH

THE Pittsburgh Screen Club recently held its get-together meeting at the Fort Pitt Hotel in Pittsburgh and more than 250 persons attended. It was a rousing meeting from start to finish, and when it was completed the members of the organization were complimented on all sides for the able way in which everything was handled.

The Pittsburgh Screen Club was organized almost a year ago. Under new officers the club has renewed its activities and the meeting Sunday was one of the best that has ever been held by any of the motion picture men in this section.

Candidates both for city and county offices attended the meeting and banquet, and told just where they stood in regard to the motion picture business. It was the desire of the members of the club to get the candidates on record and they responded cheerfully. As a result of the statements made by the various candidates the motion picture men will use their screens to advocate the election of the men who they feel sure will stand by them in their fight against the State censorship, but especially against the censorship ruled over by the police of Pittsburgh and towns close to this city.

The police have put the ban on many pictures that were passed by the censors, and as a result many of the exhibitors have been put to no end of trouble and expense to advertise the pictures and then get other to take the place of the pictures which the police will not permit to run.

The Screen Club has been given a big boost by the banquet and meeting, and it is probable that many of the motion picture men in this section will hold another meeting in the near future and select a place for a home for the club.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD PUTS PICTURES UNDER REGULATIONS COVERING EXPLOSIVES

MOTION picture films have been placed under regulation by the Pennsylvania Railroad for the transportation of "explosives and other dangerous articles" over its lines. Hereafter, passengers are prohibited from carrying films in cars any part of which is used for the accommodation of the traveling public. Station and train employees are instructed to see that this rule is enforced. Passengers found evading the regulation, says the notice posted by the Pennsylvania, will be fined for violation of the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission relative to the transportation of explosives.

The notice also contains an elaboration of the recently announced regulation put in force by the Pennsylvania Railroad requiring films to be packed for shipment in specially prescribed receptacles designed for safety, and sets forth that films will be accepted for transportation in "baggage cars, baggage apartment or express cars," or by freight, subject to the published rules, when the receptacles are properly marked with labels, facsimiles of which are printed on the posted notice.

REQUIRED TO INSTALL FIRE ALARM BOXES

Under two new ordinances adopted within the past thirty days, every minor theatre in Detroit, Mich. (those seating 400 or less), is required to install a fire alarm box system, the cost of which to maintain is $25 per year. The purpose of this system is to insure the quickest possible response by the fire department in case of fire. Many of the exhibitors have been paying the annual fire alarm box fee, which is $50 per year, although no ordinance was in effect covering same.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 13.

JESSE L. LASKY and Cecil B. de Mille of the Lasky Company, arrived home early this week from a stay of several weeks in the East, and announcement was immediately made regarding the future of the company with respect to new studio proposed, productions and general outlook. Perhaps the most important of these is the fact that the present studio will be retained and great improvements made including the addition of considerable ground, and the building of a laboratory modeled after those of the Eastman Company at Rochester, N. Y.

A most conspicuous feature of this new laboratory which will be of steel and concrete construction, approximately seventy-five by one hundred and fifty feet, and consisting of two floors, will be the fact that the dark rooms will be almost light as day. To accomplish this the walls and all fixtures will be white, and the employes will wear all white clothing. The lighting will be of the indirect system and filtered through glass of a soft orange color. It will be possible to read in the dark rooms and every attention will be given to making added conveniences.

ART. ACORD (Mustang-Mutual)

While on the trip Mr. de Mille visited practically all of the studios and laboratories in and about New York City, including that of the Eastman Company at Rochester, where he held several conferences with Prof. Mees, an authority on the subject of light in connection with matters photographic. It was from Prof. Mees that Mr. de Mille learned the cause of the abnormal sight of dark room workers to be looking directly at a light. After once looking at light it requires about fifteen minutes for the eye to again recover its normal condition. By an indirect lighting system the workers are not affected by the change of their vision and are thus better able to accomplish their work in an accurate manner.

The laboratory will be of sufficient capacity to accommodate the making of all Lasky prints, which will mean the laboratory will accommodate six hundred thousand feet of positive printing and finishing weekly. The laboratory will be located at the extreme eastern end of the present studio on a new plot of ground facing on Argyle street.

Lasky Not to Build New Studio

Prior to de Mille's departure it was the intention of the company to erect a new studio, but this they now find to be unnecessary, as the present plant was built as needed to meet the requirements of the company. "Nothing has ever been placed in our studio until we actually found a need for it," Mr. de Mille stated in speaking of conditions, "and I found that where studios were built from paper, and the needs later found, there was much unnecessary equipment, which would probably be the outcome if we built a new studio. After seeing all the principal ones of the East, I am very glad to get back and see this one. Originally the Lasky studio was a livery stable, but it has been transformed into a real studio that is efficient, and I believe it to be the most conveniently appointed of any that I have visited. I am very glad to get back home in the 'livery stable.'"

BLANCHE SWEET IN A SCENE FROM "THE SECRET SIN" (Lasky)

Plans and arrangements for the future completed by Mr. Lasky and Mr. de Mille while they were with Mr. Goldfish, will bring to the coast a number of former legitimate stage people who in some instances will be retained as permanent stars. Victor Moore has made a three year contract and first will be featured in a series in a part similar to that in "Chimmie Fadden," the first being "Chimmie Fadden Out West." Edna Goodrich has been contracted for one year to appear in Lasky productions, and arrived this week. Fannie Ward who was starred in "The Marriage of Kitty" will return accompanied by Jack Dean who will be her leading man. Charlotte Walker will arrive in the next two weeks for another engagement, her former productions being "Kindling" and "Out of the Darkness." Mae Murray, star of the "Ziegfield Follies" has placed her name to a long term contract and will appear in ingenue roles.

SYDNEY GRANT AND CHARLOTTE GREENWOOD IN "JANE," FORTHCOMING MOROSCO RELEASE

Perhaps the most important announcement is the fact that Harry Hatfield, legitimate stage producer, now engaged in staging "My Lady's Garter," has been engaged and after a tutorage of eight weeks under Mr. de Mille will become a director. Mr. Hatfield's most pronounced success was "At Bay" at the Thirty-Ninth street theatre. He also produced a number of Shubert and Brady productions.

Notable Showing of "Carmen"

While on the way to the coast Messrs. Lasky and de Mille attended the Paramount convention in Chicago and a very notable feature of the meeting was the showing of "Carmen" at Orchestra Hall on Michigan avenue, to exchangemen and users of Paramount pictures. Incidental musi was arranged from "Carmen" and was played by a forty piece symphony orchestra during the projection, and at the conclusion of the showing there was a riot of applause. All present were so insistent for a speech from producer Cecil de Mille, that he heeded their request and made probably the first screen speech of this kind.

George Stanley has been given charge of a Vitagraph company and began production this week of a one reel comedy, "He Got Himself a Wife." Webster Campbell and Mary Anderson play leads in this, and it will serve as their introduction in subjects from the California studio.

Production Manager R. S. Sturgeon has made a change in his plans and will next produce "Through the Wall" a detective story from the pen of Cleveland Moffett, author of a number of novels and magazine short stories. This is being prepared for release on the V-L-S-E program as a Blue Ribbon feature.

Between the double duties of supervising the business department of the Vitagraph studio at Santa Monica, and looking after the details with regard to the erection of the new studio at Hollywood, Business Manager W. S. Smith is a decidedly busy man. Work on the new studio is progressing very satisfactorily and it is expected the company will be located there within the next two weeks. Plans have already been made for the christening of the new stage which it is expected will be a very elaborate affair.

Douglas Brunston of the scenario department of the Pathé who adopted the scenario of "Neal of the Navy" from the Osborne story of the same name, is at the Balboa studio spending several weeks watching the filming of the last few episodes of this serial.

Balboa Plays Organize Team

Players of the Balboa studio have organized a baseball team and issue challenges to photoplayers at all studios. The Balboa boys have adopted the name of the "Ruth Roland" players, and so far have won all of the several games they have played.

Within the next few days the prints of the eight reel subject "Fenella," or "The Dumb Girl of Portici," featuring Mlle. Anna Pavlowa and her Russian ballet will be ready at Universal City. All who have been in touch with this production predict that it will be the masterpiece of this studio. Scenes for this are all laid in Naples in the early part of the seventeenth century and deals with the political actions of the Spanish viceroys who are sent to rule Italy. Because of the excessive taxation finally placed upon the food stuff for the natives, internal strife results in the overthrow of the rulers. Mlle. Pavlowa appears as the bewitching daughter of the poorer class with whom the son of the duke becomes infatuated. Ultimately the people become riotous, and when the duke's son heads the forces to quell the disturbance he is personally attacked by the brother of Fenella when recognized as her betrayer. The girl appears on the scene and saves the life of the man attacked, by sacrificing herself. All settings used in this production were especially made for the scenes. Supporting Mlle. Pavlowa are Rupert Julian, Douglas Gerrard, Wadsworth Harris, Edna Maison, Betty Schade, William Wolbert, John Holt, Hart Hoxie and Laura Oakley.

"Lon of Lone Mountain" or "A Mountain Clod" is being made under the direction of Joseph DeGrasse for the Rex brand, and deals with the efforts of a school master who came to an out-of-the-way village. The men of the village misunderstand his intentions when they are misinformed by a jealous local lover of the girl the teacher protected on several occasions, and they start to drive the new comer away, but all are brought to a realization of their error. The cast includes Arthur Shirley, Lon Chaney, George Berrell and Marcia Moore.

King Back With Universal

Joseph King, formerly of the Universal and since with Selig is again with the Big U appearing as leading man in the newly organized Cleo Madison Company. The first production is "The Cowboy Girl" in which Miss Madison is featured as the girl who started out disguised as a man, to avenge the murder of her brother, and in the end is successful in this, following a big saloon and gambling place fight. The others in the cast are Hoote Gibson, Billie Gettenger and Charles Brinley. A dramatic story of unusual power combining political and newspaper life, is being under the title of "Chivalry." This consists of three reels, and is being made under the direction of William Worthington for the Universal. The cast includes Herbert Rawlinson, Jean Taylor, Alfred Allen, Barney Furey and Scott Leslie.

"John Osborne's Triumph" is a story of Wall street finances and of the quiet simple life, wherein a once successful broker loses his power and even then is followed by his old enemies who seek to possess the only treasure he retains, his daughter. Fate plays a hand in this when a bolt of lightning revives the elderly man from a helpless condition caused by paralysis and he prevents the carrying out of the plan. Those in the cast are Murdock McQuarrie, Arthur Moon, Edna Payne and Albert McQuarrie.

The Allan Curtis Joker Company is making the tenth of the "Lady Baffles" comedy series, "The Lost Roll," wherein "Detective Duck" is again successful in preventing a robbery. The Joker comedies of the past week by the Al. Christie Company are "Almost a Knock-Out" and "Double Crossing the Dean," and the Horace Davies Company has completed "When a Man's Fickle" and "A One-Cylinder Courtship." Albert Vosburgh, late with the Vitagraph at Santa Monica, has gone to the American at Santa Barbara, where he will play opposite Vivian Rich.

Grace Cunard Undergoes Operation

Work has been delayed the past few days on the Universal "Broken Coin" series because of the illness of Grace Cunard who was taken to a local hospital to undergo a major operation due to an injury received more than a year ago while playing in the "Lucille Love" series.

J. P. McGowan with Helen Holmes who first produced the "Hazards of Helen" series for the Kalem company at Glendale, are now begining the production of a three reel subject "Helen's Hazard," which will be of the nature of a melodrama.

The filming of "The Diamond from the Sky" by the American Company will be completed within the next month. This has been a long but interesting grind for the company, as the serial consists of thirty episodes each of two reels. Following this Director William Taylor will take up the production of larger subjects.

The Fine Art Films subject featuring Helen Ware will be entitled "Cross Currents" from an original scenario by Mary H. O'Connor. Supporting Miss Ware will be Courtenay Foote and Teddy Sampson and the production is in charge of F. J. Grandin. This is a story of society and political life in Washington with Miss Ware impersonating the part of a wealthy and influential woman who takes a keen interest in politics, entertains lavishly, and is interested in philanthropic work for children, and thus the play answers some questions pertaining to child labor.

ROZSIKA DOLLY IN "THE LILY AND THE ROSE" (Griffith-Triangle)

Charles F. Lummis, author of several books and a historian, has been engaged to assist with the details of staging "The Penitents" which pertains to a religious society originating in Europe in the twelfth century and later very influential in Mexico in the sixteenth century. This play will portray the sacrifices made, a penalty inflicted by these religious fanatics. Orrin Johnson, who has just completed a long engagement with the NYMP where he played in three subjects will be starred in this production.

Lucille Brown a Policewoman

The "Jordan is a Hard Road" company which has been at Bear Lake Valley for the past two weeks arrived home this week after making most of the exterior scenes. Lucille Brown, in charge of Griffith studio employment department, has been appointed as a member of the police force of Los Angeles and her badge is number two hundred eleven. For some time she has been in charge of the extra players at the studio, and this added official capacity gives her more power to take care of the position.

William Furst, recently engaged by the Triangle Company as musical director of the New York Knickerbocker theatre, is in Los Angeles spending some time at the Fine Art Films, the Keystone and the NYMP studios getting acquainted with conditions that he may better take care of his duties at the theatre where the films from these studios are given their first showing. The cast which is to support DeWolf Hopper in the filming of "Don Quixote" has been announced at the Griffith studios as follows: Fay Tincher as Dulcinea; Max Davison, Sancho Panza; Julia Fay, Dorothea, and William Brown, innkeeper. The production is in charge of Edward Dillon.

Filming "Mansion of Despair"

The first subject for the Triangle program which will co-star Mae Marsh and Robert Harron, will be "The Trail of Blood," from a story by Granville Warwick. This portrays the life of a girl who after heroically saving a child chum from fire in an orphans' home, is adopted by wealthy parents. Later she meets the son of a newspaper man and a romance follows which is broken by an incident which threatens to wreck the life-happiness of the girl.

Work of filming a four reel adaptation from the story by Howard Irving Young, "The Mansion of Despair," was begun this week by Managing Director James Horne of the Kalem Glendale studio. Marin Sais, True Boardman and Tom Linghorn appear as principals of this cast. This will be Mr. Linghorn's first work since early in the spring when he was injured in a fall from a fifty foot bridge for the first episode of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel" series.

Number Forty-six of the "Hazards of Helen" series is now being made with Helen Gibson in the name part (name refers to Helen and not Hazards). One of the big punches for this will be the rescue of two children from a trestle when they are in danger of being killed by a fast approaching train.

In the making of "A Knight of Today"

GEORGE FAWCETT, THOMAS H. INCE, WILLIAM S. HART, FRANK KEENAN AND ORRIN JOHNSON AT INCEVILLE

from scenario by M. E. M. Gibson, Bud Duncan of the Kalem Comedy Company, featuring Ham and Bud, very nearly lost his life as the result of being weighted to the bottom of a lake in Hollenback Park. Bud wore a suit weighing more than a hundred pounds, and when he went down he stayed. The papier mache helmet he wore came to the top and then the players realized the predicament the comedian was in. The rescue was effected by William Beaudine.

Jack Pierce, assistant to Director William Worthington at Universal City, this week has been awarded the decision in an Eastern court which gave him the larger portion of an estate left by his parents. The portion to come to him is valued at $45,000. When Pierce learned of this, he made a bee-line for the publicity department and there told the glad tidings.

Volcanic Eruption in "Secret Valley"

"The Secret Valley" is a two reel spectacular subject that will be made in the very near future. One of the principal features of which will be the eruption of a volcano. The story deals with a recluse who, with his son, lived in secluded place in the mountains which had but one outlet. Following the death of the father, the son after many weary days finds the opening, but fails to make his exit owing to the way being barred by the eruption.

Hobart Bosworth and Company of players have gone to Bear Lake Valley to film exteriors for the five reel Hudson Bay story "Netawangan" in which Mr. Bosworth appears in the name part. A particular feature of this subject will be the sub-titles in the form of blank verse bordering on the style of Hiawatha. While the company was working near Bear Lake resort Saturday, a fire occurred at the hotel and the players all served as firemen with the exception of the cameraman who stayed with the crank, and secured some excellent views of the fire which will in all probability be used for the Universal or Animated Weekly.

The Kerrigan Company at Lake Tahoe Universal studio is now making the finishing scenes for "The Troubador of Aldarado" which features J. Warren Kerrigan. The production will be in three reels.

Dot Farley, who has been playing in Albuquerque comedies, is not to appear in subjects of this character produced by the National Film Corporation. She will play opposite Russ Powell, the three hundred and ten pound comedian who has been with the National since its organization. Prior to this engagement Miss Farley was with the Keystone and St. Louis companies.

Blanche Sweet on Vacation

Blanche Sweet, of the Lasky Company, is on a vacation which she is spending in the East, and will not be home for several weeks. Advice from Anita King, the Paramount-Lasky girl, touring across the continent, was to the effect that she had considerable tire trouble near Reno and was delayed a number of hours. She expected to drive all of last Saturday night and thus catch up with the schedule laid out for her. Miss King has been making very excelent time over the rough roads of the mountains, and over good stretches she is said to consider a gait slower than forty miles per hour sinful idleness.

Adele Farrington has been loaned by the Universal Company to the American Film Manufacturing Company at Santa Barbara for appearance in one subject, and went to the Northern film centre this week for the engagement.

The chorus girls of the Society Bud Company, which appeared at the Orpheum theatre last week and this, which is a Jesse L. Lasky production, spent several mornings at the studio where they took part in scenes for the Lasky film version of "The Chorus Lady" which featured Cleo Ridgeley as Patricia O'Brien and Marjorie Daw as her sister Nora. Wallace Reid is Danny the detective, and Mrs. Lewis McCord is the landlady.

Emma Bunting will arrive at Universal City within the next few weeks to play in the name part of an adaptation from the story "The Sun Baby" by Jack Lait. In this a woman is caused to commit suicide because a newspaper, "The Sun," made an error in referring to her as a "hotel crook" instead of a "hotel cook." Before jumping into the East river the woman left her baby on the steps of the newspaper office. It was adopted by the managing editor, and after the girl grows up she becomes a very successful newspaper woman. She prevents the rival paper from incriminating her foster father. There is a pretty romance throughout, and the production will be made in five reels.

Reliance Making Western Subject

The Reliance Company is making "As in Days of Old," an early day Western picture portraying the coming of the pioneers to the West. The Indian massacre of the whites is revived in this instance, at the instigation of the heavy who desires to steal all the valuables and get possession of the deed to a mine. Two children are the sole survivors, and one charms the Indians with his beautiful voice, making possible the escape from their camp. Later the boy becomes a great opera singer, while the girl is adopted by a rich miner. They meet years later at a reception given by the heavy who had brought about the death of their parents, and the heavy is recognized and receives his just due. The production is being filmed by Francis Powers, with a big cast which features Maxfield Stanley, Mary Higby, Wilbur Higby, Edwin Harley and Francis McDonald.

Billie Burke has reached Inceville, and the heart fluttering caused by expectancy has ceased. She came to Los Angeles over the Santa Fe and was met at the station by Producer Thomas H. Ince and escorted to the studio. Plans for the first subject in which she is to be starred were completed prior to the arrival of the actress, even to the securing of a great quantity of props including Scottish furniture from New York, and the building of several sets including one representing a Scottish street scene. The first subject gives Miss Burke the part of an American girl of a hoyden nature who visits Scotland and takes part in a romance. One member of the supporting cast announced for this production is William H. Thompson, one of the best known men from the legitimate stage. The contract for Miss Burke's engagement specifies that she shall be under the personal direction of Mr. Ince.

So large has become the producing staff at the NYMP studio that it has been found necessary to have an assistant to Mr. Ince, and Dave Hartford, legitimate stage actor and producer, especially well known on the Pacific Coast, has been engaged for this position. One of the innovations of the week at Inceville is a dancing school where players and extra people will be taught to do the popular dances of today with grace and ease. There will be classes on Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons in the new glass studio following the completion of the people's work for the day. These classes will be under the tutorage of a professional.

VIVIAN RICH IN "THE BARREN GAIN," A CURRENT AMERICAN RELEASE ON THE MUTUAL PROGRAM

Edwards Company to Grand Canyon

The company under the direction of Walter Edwards in which Mary Boland and Willard Mack will be starred left for the Grand Canyon where exterior scenes will be made for a coming production. A special car has been engaged for the company for this trip. The second Ince-Frank Keenan subject is to be a military drama in which the well known character actor supported by Enid Markey and Charles K. French will be starred. It has not been announced who will direct this picture, nor the title of it.

The Bessie Barriscale-Bruce McRae Triangle subject is being delayed in production owing to illness of the former who is suffering with neuralgia and has been at her Hollywood bungalow home for the past week. Her illness was made more acute because of her determination to aid her director in finishing scenes on a big set, against the advice of a physician.

The Glendale Company in the filming of the big gambling casino scenes used two hundred people in evening dress in the big set. This was projected under the supervision of Paul Hurst, and the draperies used represent six thousand dollars or more. A big punch will be added to this four reeler by the melodramatic scene which will be enacted at Hollenbeck Park where Thomas G. Lingham will drive an auto from the bridge which is seventy-five feet above the water.

General Manager Thomas Persons, who has been in Chicago for the past two weeks, has returned to his duties supervising the two Selig studios in Los Angeles.

"The Vengeance of Rannah"

"The Vengeance of Rannah" with many scenes laid in an East India military garrison, the principal character of which is a faithless wife, is being made under the direction of Tom Santchi with a cast including Marion Warner, Lafayette McKee and Leo Pearson. The story is by James Oliver Kirwood, and has numerous unique situations pertaining to the punishment of the wife and her lover.

The Robert Daly Selig Company is making "Unto Those Who Sin," a three reel Diamond S. special which will feature Fritzi Brunette as a heartless woman of the world who gives up everything to satisfy her lust for wealth and power. In this subject she will wear a dozen or more of the beautiful imported gowns, and will be supported by George Larkin and a strong cast.

An adaptation from the Richard Harding Davis short story of adventure, "The Buried Treasure of Cobre," is being filmed by Frank Beal and features Harry Mestayer. The scenes are laid in Central America with an American minister as the central feature. The picture will show his attempt to secure an extradition treaty.

Another Selig Diamond S. special being taken up this week is that being produced by George Nichols and entitled, "The Print of the Nails." This is a picturization of corrupt politics showing the numerous attempts of an unscrupulous gang to prevent an honest mayor in putting through legislation needed and governing a large city. Vivian Reid, Earl Fox, Edwin Wallock and Al. Filson appear in this together with Helen Wolcott, late of the Pallas-Morosco Stock Company.

Eighth "Bloom Center" Comedy

The fourth director is now working on the "Chronicles of Bloom Center" series of comedies, Burton King having resigned to accept a similar position with the new Kolb and Dill organization in San Francisco, and Sidney Smith who has been a comedian and with a Selig Company for a number of months has been placed in charge of the filming of these. The company is now making the eighth two-reel comedy.

"Stanley's Adventures in Africa" are to have a film version in the form of a series of two reel episodes which will be produced at the animal studio of the Bostock Jungle Film Company for the Mutual Program according to arrangements perfected this week by David Horsley. For this series Mr. Horsley has secured the services of Frank Dougherty, who has a nation wide reputation for his sensational Young and Old King Brady detective stories, who will write the scenarios.

Already production has been taken up on the filming of the first of these subjects, which has been given the title of "The Search for Livingston." This opens in the office of the "New York Herald" where arrangements are completed by James Gordon Bennett (played by G. W. Sherlock) and H. M. Stanley (Roy Watson) for the trip. In the Africa scenes Mr. Watson, Capt. Bonavita, Charles Gaye, Marie Manley, Mlle. Ottowa and Mona Darkfeather will appear in the principal parts.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

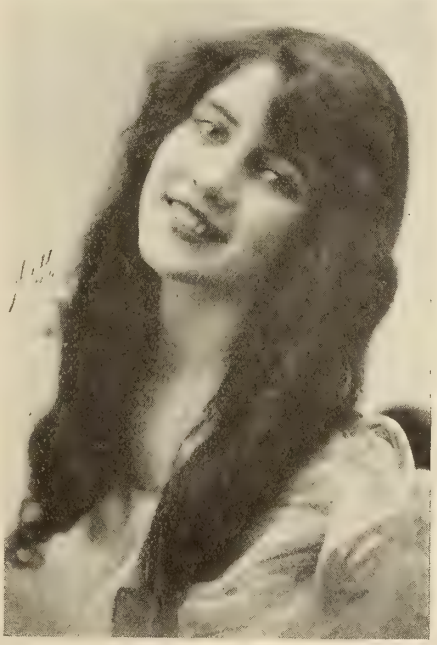
LOTS of happenings around Longacre Square in a single day. Fire gutted the building in West Twenty-sixth street containing the Famous Players studio, costing the Famous Players at least $500,000, and the Mutual Film Corporation caused the arrest of a former exchange manager on a charge of stealing 149,000 feet of film, including many Chaplins and Keystones, valued at more than $20,000.

It is deplorable that the motion picture industry, though considered a prosperous young giant, should always be the "goat" and the butt of undesired attentions.

Although it is believed that Saturday's fire started on the floors beneath the studio, it is too probable that the surveillance on all the metropolitan studios will be increased, and that they will either have to move outside the city limits or be subject to constant rectoring, a condition which will cause a whole lot of trouble.

The most fortunate thing about the fire, if any phase of it can be considered fortunate, is that it came on Saturday evening when the studio was practically empty. But consider the poor "extra people," whose three and five dollars a day is a Godsend, and who lost their effects in the blaze. Players like Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clarke, Jack Barrymore, Hazel Dawn and Pauline Frederick were heavy losers as they all had large wardrobes at the studio.

One director, James Durkin, had borrowed the entire outfit of costumes of "The Red Widow" from a friendly theatrical manager in Newark who refused to accept a cent of hire. The costumes were taken to the studio Saturday afternoon in special vans from Newark to be sorted. They arrived just in time to be burned.



One thing this fire will do will be to prove the dauntless courage of the Famous Players Film Company, Adolph Zukor, Edwin S. Porter and Daniel Frohman. For the Famous Players will rise Phoenix-like on its new site 'way uptown, and neither this fire nor any series of fires can put it out of business. It's too big a company, and manned by too big men for that. Which is something to be thankful for after all.

An extension is being built to the Lubin Philadelphia studio in anticipation of the arrival of Joseph W. Farnham, who takes several chairs over there on September 20. Joe will hold an executive position, and will also have charge of the advertising and publicity. (Free tip for ad solicitors.)

Edgar Lewis, the director, starts work the same day. Joe and Edgar can hunt up Tony Kelly and Jack Pratt, and start a Metropolitan club on the banks of the Schuykill far away.

Like Minerva who sprang full-fledged from the brow of Zeus, the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America has sprung into being from the progressive minds of the film industry.

The Motion Picture Board of Trade of America is a banding together of the component firms of the industry to fight hostile legislation (meaning censorship), conduct publicity campaigns in those states in which hostile legislation may arise, and to hold expositions and fairs. The charter list will soon be forwarded to Albany for incorporation.

The committee which drew up the working plans consisted of: Arthur James, of Metro; Walter W. Irwin, of V-L-S-E; John R. Freuler, of Mutual; S. M. Field, of Mutual; W. R. Sheehan, of Fox; J. W. Binder, of the censor board; L. J. Selznick, of World Film; J. Stuart Blackton, of Vitagraph; Carl H. Pierce, of Morosco; Nicholas Power; George K. Spoor, of Essanay; F. W. Singhi, of Lubin, S. L. Rothapfel, William A. Johnston, of Motion Picture News, and W. Stephen Bush, of "Moving Picture World."

Cyril Maude, the English actor, arrived in this country recently, bringing with him plans for the theatrical season, and some new color motion pictures for which he is the agent. These films are colored by super-imposing three layers of colored gelatine, red, blue and yellow. They can be shown on any projection machine, and are the result of seven years' work. Mr. Maude will try to exploit the process in this country.

The beauties are coming. The Ziegfeld Films Corporation has been formed.

Julian Reed, Edison character man, was married recently to Mrs. Mary Darcy Goodwin, of Washington, D. C.

Metro Pictures Corporation will soon issue a magazine regularly.

Harry Crandall, Jr., pitcher for the Pathé semi-pro. baseball team, has been signed by the Federal league, turning down a chance to go with the Boston Braves to accept the offer.

A company of Edison players, including Viola Dana, Robert Conness, Jessie Stevens, Pat O'Malley and Charles Suttin, is at Berlin, N. Y., taking pictures under the direction of John Collins.

It is a notable commentary on the present day production situation when W. H. Clune, who owns Clune's Broadway and leases Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles, one of the biggest exhibitors in the country, decides to make pictures himself to be sure of getting the right sort. He has taken over the old Famous Players studio in Los Angeles, and secured Donald Crisp as director and Lloyd Brown as general manager. "Ramona" will be the first picture.

Mr. Clune is a real, big man, and he feels that he is going to get pictures which are good enough to suit him, if he has to make them himself.

Saw "Trilby" recently at the Forty-fourth Street theatre; a wonderful production, wonderfully presented. Maurice L. Tourneur, who directed the production, and S. L. Rothapfel, who directed the presentation, have each done their share toward giving the public a screen version of one of the most famous plays of the century in a way which makes the superiority of the speaking stage over the screen seem ridiculously small even in the speaking stage's particular precinct, pure drama.

To Clara Kimball Young, Wilton Lackaye, Paul McAllister, Chester Barnett and other members of the cast, and to Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, the orchestra leader, goes considerable of the credit. They were the adaptable clay in the hands of the masters,

Miss Young's work being the best she has ever done.

But "Trilby" is a wonderful dramatic production, pure drama, with a continuous thread of story practically unbroken by cut-backs or close-ups, and with its dramatic value displayed to the utmost. It sets a high water mark which will be undisturbed for some time to come. Griffith or Tourneur are the two men most likely to surpass it.

A. H. Byrd, of Wyandoak, has opened the Celebrity studio at 28 West Thirty-eighth street, to take still pictures of stars and players. Byrd knows photography and the motion picture business. As an opener he has landed contracts to photograph all the stars of three big companies. Proofs of the pictures already taken are very artistic.

Horace Gordon Plimpton, Jr., has gone and got married, and in so doing has taken unto himself one of the prettiest of the pretty, as can be seen by the picture of Marie La Manna, the lady in question.

Mr. Plimpton is the son of Horace G. Plimpton, former general manager of Edison negative production. He was busy learning the business from the camera end up when he first saw Miss La Manna, that was. The marriage took place at the Church of the Ascension, Father Tye officiating.

Miss La Manna is only nineteen, and of French-Irish extraction, with Irish blue eye and French vivacity. She has been playing in the Viola Dana features.

"Dick" Edmondson, proprietor of the American Film Releases, of 118 Shaftesbury avenue, London, who has been convalescing on the Cornish coast after an illness of five months, will pay America a visit early in October. The result of this visit will probably lead to negotiations for the handling of the productions of one of the foremost American programs in Europe.

His indisposition did not deter his firm's activity in exploiting and purchasing American productions, through his representative, Albert B. Ladick, his recent acquisitions being "Reaping the Whirlwind," by Balboa Amusement Producing Co., and "The Littlest Rebel," purchased from the trustee in bankruptcy for the Photo Plays Production, Inc.

The Vitagraph Benevolent Association, which includes in its membership the complete personnel of the Vitagraph Company at Flatbush, will hold a dance at McLoughlin's Bayside Casino, Sheepshead Bay, on Wednesday night, October 27, in aid of the hospital and sick fund. Every person connected with this famous picture producing company, from the heads down to the office boy, will compete in making this the gala event of the early winter season. On that night the Casino will house individually and collectively the biggest assemblage of Vitagraphers ever seen together for an occasion of this kind. Already extensive preparations are under way to make of it a regal success. A. Victor Smith, the Vitagraph studio manager, will be master of ceremonies.

GEORGE BICKEL IN "HELLO, BILL"
A KLEINE-EDISON FEATURE

General Passenger Agent Fred Sniffen of the Delaware-Hudson Steamship Company, the proud owner of the Mandalay, is becoming hopelessly enamoured of the glittering satellites of the screen. He staged another little get-together affair on the Mandalay Wednesday evening, September 8, to which Vitagraph, Universal and World Film stars were invited.

The Vitagraph contingent was by all odds the most prominent, although John Hines capered about displaying a broad World Film grin. Representing the Flatbush studio were Dorothy Kelly, Hughie Mack, Donald MacBride, Ned Finley, Mae Halpin and Joseph M. Halpin, Alice Lake, Zeena Keefe, Marion Henry, Edward Elkas, Frank Bunny, Logan Paul, Dick Leslie and George Cooper. Little Lois Alexander from Universal gave an exhibition dance.

Dancing contests were resorted to, just to pass away the time. Hughie Mack and Dorothy Kelly were awarded first prizes for popularity, Ned Finley and Mae Halpin receiving second prizes and running close. Dainty Dorothy scored again when she captured first prize for skill.

Maurice Tourneur, producer of "Trilby," is engaged in the preparation of a book to would-be directors entitled "The Movies as They Should Not Be," in which he points out the commoner mistakes and overdone characters and situations.

Tom Torriss, who has been making feature pictures for the film company which bears his name at Yonkers, N. Y., has purchased a large plot of ground in Mount Vernon, N. Y., and will begin the building of a large motion picture manufacturing plant in the near future.

William Beaudine, heavy of Ham & Bud Kalem Company, is the father of a daughter, Helen Louise, born early last week. Mrs. Beaudine was formerly Prody Fleischer, who was with the Biograph for a long period as leading woman.

William N. ("Bill") Bailey, recently a member of the Imp-Universal stock company, and who played important roles with Essanay for several years, has just joined the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., forces, and will henceforth devote his talents to Metro pictures. Mr. Bailey is now assistant director to John W. Noble, who has staged many notable screen productions, and who recently finished the direction of "The Bridge, or the Bigger Man," by Rupert Hughes, an early release on the Metro program. In addition to his work as aid to Director Noble, Mr. Bradley will act in Rolfe-Metro productions. He is earnest and able in his screen work, and has a goodly following among movie fans.

Mr. Bailey is twenty-eight years, and began acting before the camera about five years ago. For three years he was with the Essanay stock company, and afterward was associated with Charles K. Harris, Fox, Peerless, Universal and other companies.

CHANGES OF THE WEEK

W. H. Clifford, scenario writer late with Tom Ince, joins Famous Players, succeeding Russell E. Smith, who goes to Equitable.

Marshall Farnum, director late of Fox forces, and Judson Langill, his assistant, are now with Equitable.

Stanner E. V. Taylor, whose wife is Marion Leonard, is back directing. His latest is "The Purple Night," with Florence Rockwell for Knickerbocker Star Features.

David L. Don, comedy star, goes to Lubin from the stage.

Jack Pickford, brother of Mary, has signed with Selig.

Spencer Gervaise Sladden, rotund publicity man, will assume charge of the Fox office in Dallas, Tex.

Truly Shattuck, a Broadway actress who disappeared mysteriously some time ago, has been located working in "The Iron Strain," a coming Ince-Triangle production.

Ashley Miller has been re-engaged to direct the film productions which Arnold Daly is making in addition to his theatrical work.

Jack Breslin, for many years manager of the Crescent theatre, Syracuse, and late of the Temple theatre in the same city, has resigned to accept a position as general manager of the Continental Film Company of Germantown, Pa. He was presented with a loving cup before leaving.

Sam Bernard is getting his courage up preparatory to joining the Keystone-Triangle forces on the Pacific Coast. Raymond Hitchcock is back in New York, but Weber and Fields are still at the studio.

YOUNGSTERS ARRIVE AT SELIG JUNGLE ZOO

The following youngsters have arrived at the Selig Jungle-Zoo during the past two months: Ten leopards, twelve lions, two tigers, one fallow deer, two laamas and an axis deer. Race suicide is an unknown quantity in the Selig Jungle-Zoo.

BURTON D. ALLEN, SELIG CAMERAMAN, DEAD

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 13.

Burton D. Allen, cameraman for the Selig Company, died suddenly last week from an operation. He was a member of the Static Club, and the members, almost to a man, attended the funeral held Wednesday.

The pall-bearers consisted of prominent members of the Selig organization, including Thomas Persons, the manager of the Selig Western Organization, and during the morning of the funeral all work of production ceased at the studio that all cameramen and others who desired might attend.

"Pop" Lubin Gets His Innings at San Diego Fair

Exposition at the "Gate Way of the Panama Canal" Sets Saturday, September 25 as "Lubin Day," in Honor of the Founder of the Company

THE San Diego Exposition has set aside Saturday, September 25, as Lubin Day, in honor of Siegmund Lubin, head of the great Lubin Manufacturing Company, pioneer producers of photoplays. Not only the city of San Diego and its officials, but the governor of the state will be there to welcome him and to extend the freedom of the city.

Mr. Lubin left Philadelphia on Wednesday, September 15, and will arrive in San Diego on Friday 24. The same evening the new Lubin studio at Coronado will be officially opened and dedicated by the mayor of San Diego and the city officials.

The next day, Saturday, Mr. Lubin will be escorted to the exposition by President Davidson and the members of his staff. Captain Rifenberick, military aide to the president of the exposition, will be Mr. Lubin's escort during his stay in San Diego.

On Mr. Lubin's arrival at the exposition grounds there will be a military parade in his honor and he will review the troops. Then will come a luncheon and Mr. Lubin will be escorted through the exposition grounds. Later in the afternoon Mr. Lubin will be the guest of honor at a dinner given by the exposition officials.

SIEGMUND LUBIN

Mr. Lubin, although born in Berlin, Germany, is essentially a Philadelphian, having lived in the city of Brotherly Love more than forty years. He arrived in that city with little money but plenty of courage and at once started a little optician store on Eighth street which still bears his name. More than twenty years ago he began to experiment with animated photography and soon Mr. Lubin's pictures became known throughout the length and breadth of the civilized world.

Besides the great plant and studios at Twentieth street and Indiana avenue the company bearing Mr. Lubin's name has studios at Sixteenth street and Glenwood avenue, a five hundred acre estate at Betzwood, Pa., and studios at Jacksonville, Fla.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Atlantic City, N. J.; Coronado, Cal.; Los Angeles, and Newport, R. I. Eleven directors and a host of assistant directors and cameramen and more than two hundred actors and actresses work incessantly. They produce at least two acts of photoplay a day, as well as three to five feature films a month.

Prison Inmate Wins Universal's $50 Title Contest

Picture Shown to Convicts at Sing Sing on Lincoln's Birthday Is Called "Folly's Crucible" by Winner from Thousands of Contestants All Over the World

THOMAS MOTT OSBORNE, Warden of Sing Sing Prison, presented last Sunday Oscar Cartaya, an inmate of the prison, with a check for $50 for suggesting the best title for the "Photoplay Without a Name," which was produced by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company several months ago.

This contest had been most successful and created a great deal of interest all over the civilized world. The Universal received about 20,000 suggestions for titles from all parts of America, Europe, South Africa, and even such a far country as Australia. They came from persons in all walks of life and included bank presidents, cashiers, corporation heads, as well as those in the humble walks of life.

The scenario was written by Stuart Paton and was a stirring dramatic story, in two reels, of an ex-convict's attempt to regain his position in society, with Hobart Henley and Dorothy Phillips playing the leads.

A committee, composed of Paul Gulick, publicity manager of the Universal; Eleanor Fried, and Adele Elsowitz, were kept busy for weeks considering the thousands of titles submitted, and it is interesting to note the large number of people who chose the same title. For example, there were 4,000 persons who chose "It's Never Too Late to Mend"; 2,100 people sent in the title "The Curse of Drink"; 1,500 sent in the title "The Hand of Fate."

The letter received from Oscar Cartaya was as follows:

354 Hunter St., Ossining, N. Y.
Feb. 13, 1915.

Universal Film Company,
1600 Broadway, New York City.

Gentlemen: The following is submitted in competition for the prize of fifty dollars offered for the best suggestion for a name to be given to the picture which was shown at Sing Sing Prison on Lincoln's Birthday, February 12, 1915, and for which the above amount is to be awarded to the person suggesting the title which you consider to be the most acceptable:

"Folly's Crucible"—This is the story of a brilliant, popular and wealthy surgeon who yielded to the habits of drinking, gambling and fast company. His skill and good heart composed the gold, and his sinful habits the dross. Through the fire of poverty, dissipation and imprisonment the precious metal is not destroyed, but purified, and thus refined he starts afresh in new lands.

Yours truly,
Sing Sing No. 65295,
Oscar Cartaya.

The check for the fifty dollars was signed by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, and P. A. Powers, treasurer of the company. Joe Brandt, the general manager of the company, took it to Sing Sing and turned it over to the Warden. The Warden then handed it to the prisoner.

CHICAGOANS BUY LOS ANGELES SUBURBAN THEATRE

The Victoria theatre on West Pico street, Los Angeles, owned by S. Stern, has been sold to Hetherington and Wise, who came to the Coast from Chicago where they have conducted theatres, and took possession of this house last week.

AT SAN DIEGO AND ABOUT THERE

By Allen H. Wright

A real Admiral of the United States Navy, in full uniform, was an actor in a scene of a photoplay being filmed at the Lubin studio at Coronado. It was Admiral Thomas Benton Howard, of the U. S. S. "Colorado." The scene was to have been put on in the Admiral's quarters on the cruiser, but it was found that the light would not do, and so arrangements were made for its enactment at the studio, and Admiral Howard consented to participate there. Included in the audience during the filming of the scene were Mrs. Howard, Mrs. Uriel Sebree, wife of Rear Admiral Sebree, retired; Mrs. Morton, daughter of Admiral and Mrs. Howard, and wife of Commander Morton, U. S. A.; Mrs. A. S. Cowan, wife of Capt. Cowan, of the U. S. Aero Corps; Lieut. and Mrs. Israel Kidd, U. S. N.

Miss Helen Eddy has closed her engagement with the Lubin company and returned to her home in Pasadena. L. C. Shumway, who was to have left the Lubin company last week, has arranged to continue his connection with it. Edward Sloman, formerly of New York, and lately with the Universal and National people as director, has taken a position in the same capacity with the Lubin company.

A private view of a motion picture film made by the Lubin company was given by Manager Wilfred Melville at the New Mexico state building at the San Diego Exposition. Cavalry from the camp near the exposition and marines from the barracks on the exposition grounds participated in the filming of the picture. Most of the guests present to see the presentation were officers of the army and marine corps and their ladies.

Virginia Hudson and Stagg Write for Thanhouser

Metropolitan Newspaper Woman Who Began Career Under Col. Watterson, "Covered" Three Presidential Inaugurations, and the Latter Is Contributor to Munsey and Street and Smith Publications

EDWIN THANHOUSER announces additions to his staff in the persons of Virginia Tyler Hudson and Clinton H. Stagg.

VIRGINIA TYLER HUDSON

Miss Hudson is from Kentucky, a graduate of Wesleyan College. She served with such distinction on the Louisville Courier-Journal under Col. Watterson that that famous editor advised her to go up to the big cities, where he took special interest to see that she was properly placed. In Chicago she worked with the McCutcheons, George Ade, Eugene Field and others.

In New York and Boston here services were so signal on the great dailies that she became known as "the only newspaper woman who is a newspaper man." She studied the political field and campaigned with Roosevelt and Wilson and covered three inaugurations. Then she became press agent; in this capacity she handled the great Brady production "Life," and also did the work on some Shubert plays.

Clinton H. Stagg is one of the few reasons why Jerseyites are proud of their State. Although a native of New Jersey, he has made his mark, and those who know him well say that no handicap could stop "Clint" Stagg. He seems to have developed a remarkable aptness for mystery stories, and the millions who read "Munsey's," "People's," "Popular," "Adventure," "Saturday Evening Post" and numerous other periodicals have been thrilled by his tales, written during the past five years.

CLINTON H. STAGG

His unique record is the sale of a million words a year to his publishers. One of his greatest works is the serial "Thornby Colton, Blind Detective," which gave the fiction world a new type of detective.

Atlas, Detroit Studio, to Release on Associated

Company, in Los Angeles After November, Maintains Stock Organization Headed by Roy Walling, and Formerly Released Its Pictures Under Brand Names of Other Concerns

LLOYD HAMMOND, of the Atlas Motion Picture Company, of Detroit, Mich., after two weeks' careful investigation, of the New York market, arrived at the conclusion that the best proposition of the field was offered by the Associated Film Sales Corporation, and has closed a contract with that corporation by which he will furnish one comedy a week.

The Atlas Motion Picture Company is incorporated under the laws of Michigan, with studios situated on Gratiot avenue between Rohms and Crane streets, Detroit, with down town offices in the Legitt Building. A stock company of exceptional ability is maintained featuring Roy Walling, stock star for the past five years.

The Atlas Motion Picture Company has supplied some of the largest and best programs with films, and its output has been disposed of entirely in this way. Its work has been known under the brand name of others who have attained glory on Atlas artistry and perfection.

The Atlas employs two directors, George Earle and Glen Lyons. Its executive staff consists of Charles Roos, president and general manager; Percy R. Upton, secretary and treasurer; Frank Schaeffer, vice-president and laboratory superintendent. Detroit offers very many natural and wonderful commercial advantages for making beautiful pictures, as the city is one of the finest on the American continent.

During the latter part of November the Atlas Motion Picture Company will, however, take up winter quarters in Los Angeles.

SELIG TO RE-ISSUE "CAPTAIN KATE" AND "LOST IN JUNGLE"

So popular were the Selig productions of "Captain Kate" and "Lost in the Jungle" and in response to many requests that they be revived, the Selig Company has decided to re-issue them.

George O. Nicholls is the director in charge and the cast will include Vivian Reed, Joe King and Thomas Bates. Lloyd B. Carleton is producing "Lost in the Jungle" with Bessie Eyton, Edward J. Peil and Edwin Wallock in the cast.

"BURIED TREASURE OF COBRE" ON THE STOCKS AT SELIG STUDIO

At the Selig Edendale studios, Producer Frank Beal has begun work on a three reel adaptation of Richard Harding Davis' short story, "The Buried Treasure of Cobre." The scenes are laid in Amapala, a Central American Republic, and the plot centers around the efforts of a young United States minister to secure the extradition treaty between his country and the President of Amapala.

REPLICA OF GREEK PALACE FOR "HOUSE OF A THOUSAND SCANDALS"

The interior of one of the most historic of Grecian palaces was copied in "The House of a Thousand Scandals," a Mutual Masterpicture produced by the American Film Company. To obtain the desired effects, special lighting and mechanical experts were added to the regular expert staff of the studio.

The costume of everyone in the great ensemble scenes was passed upon by the light experts before the wearer was permitted to enter the scene. As a result, there is a wonderful blending of femininity, garmentry and the elaborate decorative designs outlined against the severe Grecian architecture.

This expensive attention to detail does not prevent the wonderful scene from being demolished in an explosion, a pile of wreckage marking, as the picture's climax, the spot where once it stood.

Board of Trade Holds First Meeting in New York

Twenty-five Names Already Affixed to the Charter of the Organization—Over $3,500 in Initiation Fees and Annual Dues Paid in—Blackton Probably President

THE Motion Picture Board of Trade of America held its first meeting at the Hotel McAlpin, New York City, on September 9.

More than twenty-five names were affixed to the charter of the organization and approximately $3,500 in initiation fees and annual dues was paid in.

The meeting was presided over by the chairman of the organization, J. W. Binder. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, who has the backing of the organization committee, has consented to become president of the permanent organization.

The directors who will be elected at the next meeting on Thursday, September 16, will meet for organization and to elect a president and five vice-presidents, a secretary and a treasurer, and to appoint a finance committee, a membership committee, on Saturday morning.

The temporary headquarters of the Board of Trade will be in room 704, 18-20 East Forty-first street. Telephones are being connected and furniture installed in the offices.

The charter will be re-opened for additional signatures at the meeting Thursday afternoon, from 1 until 2:30.

A complete account of this important meeting held tomorrow will be published in the October 2 issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The charter members are: John R. Freuler, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York; Samuel M. Field, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York; J. W. Binder, 70 Fifth avenue, New York; Walter W. Irwin, 1600 Broadway, New York; Winfield R. Sheehan, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York; Arthur James, 1465 Broadway, New York; Ferdinand W. The name of the proposed corporation is to be The Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc.

The particular objects for which the corporation is to be created are stated to be as follows:

To foster trade and commerce among its members and to promote the business interests of such members; to reform trade abuses on behalf of its members; to secure freedom from unjust and unlawful exactions; to diffuse among its members, accurate and reliable information as to the standing and character of those engaged in any or all branches of said industry and to supply other information concerning said industry; to settle differences between its members and promote a more enlarged and friendly intercourse between them and to do and perform all such acts as may tend to promote the welfare of the industry at large.

Eastern and Southern Territory Sold for "Guarding Old Glory" in Less than Three Weeks

W. H. RUDOLPH, the Eastern representative for F. O. Neilsen, who has conducted the advertising and selling campaign in the East for "Guarding Old Glory," Mr. Nielsen's big Peace and Preparedness picture, reports the entire Eastern and Southern territory all disposed of, with the exception of New England, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. This territory has all been sold within less than three weeks, from the time of the first announcement that the picture would be released on a state rights basis.

The most remarkable thing of all, however, was the quick response of exhibitors all over the country, who wired in for immediate bookings, and in nearly every instance in which a state right was sold Mr. Rudolph was able to turn over to the buyer nearly fifty per cent. of the amount of the sale price in bookings.

Reese and Samios of Westminster, Maryland, purchased the rights for Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and the District of Columbia, and J. T. Howell, of Dover, N. J., bought Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, Negotiations are well under way for the disposal of Oklahoma, Kansas, Arkansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana, and from all indications they will be closed in the next day or two; leaving only a small portion of the United States still open. Namely: The New England States, Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Louisiana, Texas and New Mexico. These states, it is expected, will be closed soon.

Mr. Nielsen is disposing of his Kimball and Stevens theatres in Chicago this week, having already sold the Parkway. This will allow him to concentrate and give his entire time and attention to his film interests, which have grown to such proportions in the last year that he has twice been forced to increase his floor space in the Schiller Building, and is still cramped for room.

"Just Out of College" opens at the Fine Arts theatre, September 25, for an indefinite run.

From all indications this subject will have a large and successful run throughout the five states controlled by Mr. Nielsen, inasmuch as requests for bookings are pouring into the office daily from the largest and best houses.

PIONEER FEATURE ENLARGES ITS QUARTERS

Since making its initial bow in the film business six months ago, the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, with offices at 126-130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, has met with such rapid success that the offices were no longer adequate to their increasing business. Therefore, Nathan Hirsh, the president and executive head of the corporation, found it imperative to enlarge the offices and make extensive alterations, which enables him to do business on a larger scale.

Besides having the exclusive rights for greater New York and northern New Jersey to the product of the Great Northern Film Company, Mr. Hirsh has recently acquired the rights to "All for a Girl," featuring Renee Kelly, the Broadway star who appeared in "Daddy Long Legs" and "The Garden of Paradise." Mr. Hirsh is constantly adding to his list of features, and will shortly have an announcement to make, which will be of utmost interest to the exhibitors in his territory.

"THE FLASHLIGHT," SELIG, FEATURES BESIE EYTON

James Oliver Curwood has written a thrilling drama, "The Flashlight," which will soon be released by the Selig company. Scenes are laid in East India and Bessie Eyton will play the part of a young English girl.

A thrilling battle from howdahs on the backs of a number of elephants and an escape by means of a slender rope from a high tower are only two of the many sensational incidents in the plot.

Stars in All Knickerbocker's Features for Programs

The Company's Contribution to the General Service Includes Alice Brady, Ralph Stuart, Forbes Robertson, Mary Nash, Florence Rockwell—"Dragon's Claw" for Release on 19th

THREE months have now passed since the launching of Knickerbocker Star Features, the materialization of the idea of putting real stars in regular service. Many were the pessimists who prophesied a short life for this project; many were the skeptics who declared the impossible was being attempted. But in three months Knickerbocker Star Features have met with a success that assures them permanency and profit, according to a representative of the company.

"Everywhere I went," says that official, who has just returned from an extensive trip, "I found praise for our features. Of course the venture demanded an enormous outlay with but a limited return and, to succeed, we needed strong support. It took a very little while, however, for the exhibitors to see the advantages of booking our brand of features and Knickerbocker Star Features are now in demand."

A glance over the releases to date shows that the company has followed strictly the policies originally laid down. Some well known star has appeared in every subject the company has released. Such favorites as Ralph Stuart, the "Strongheart" star; Alice Brady; J. Forbes Roberston, of "Hamlet" fame; Mary Nash, leading lady of "The Lure" and "The Sinners"; Lenore Ulrich, late star in "The Bird of Paradise"; Florence Rockwell, leading lady in the all-star cast of "Fine Feathers," are a few of the Knickerbocker stars.

At the helm of the directing staff is Stanner E. V. Taylor. Taylor was originally scenario writer for the Biograph company, writing for Director D. W. Griffith. From the Biograph Taylor went to the Reliance as author-director and directed such stars as Arthur Johnson, James Kirkwood, Henry B. Walthall and Marion Leonard. For the last year Taylor has been directing independent feature productions, but is now working exclusively for Knickerbocker Star Features.

Taylor has just finished writing a three reel photodrama entitled "The Dragon's Claw." Preparations are now under way for its immediate production so that it may be released on September 29.

Featured in this production are Walter Hampden and Marion Leonard and the feature promises to even eclipse the Knickerbocker standard.

Walter Hampden is an old Broadway favorite and gained no little prominence from coast to coast as Manson in "The Servant in the House," a role which he created. Clyde Fitch's "The City" is another of Hampden's late successes. His appearance on the screen will be welcomed with anticipation and interest by all who remember his splendid work in these productions.

MARION LEONARD ALICE BRADY FLORENCE ROCKWELL

Marion Leonard's popularity as a screen star has been long established. Starting, some years ago, with the Biograph company, Miss Leonard now makes her reappearance on the General Film program in this Knickerbocker feature.

Miss Leonard left the Biograph to star in Reliance features. Later she was starred in Rex productions.

The policy of the Knickerbocker Star Feature is to release a star feature every other Wednesday on the regular program of the General Film Company.

BARSKY JOINS ASSOCIATED

The Associated's latest catch is Irving J. Barsky as publicity man. He is a man of varied experience who started at the bottom with Miles Bros. on Fourteenth street as a reel boy and has worked his way through with different concerns to his present position.

After leaving Miles Bros. he went to Canada with the Allens, later became one of the managers of the Canadian Film Company, and he also owned his own exchange and theatre in Western Canada. A couple of years ago Mr. Barsky came back to New York, and since then has made a host of friends in the business.

Since his return he has been manager of the Pee-El-Bee Films; as manager of the New York Gotham Film Exchange laboratory, and sales manager for the Gotham Film Co., and he is president of the Barsky Photo Play Co.

The Associated is rapidly perfecting a strong aggressive organization.

LASKY TO PRESENT LOU-TELLEGEN IN "EXPLORER" SEPT. 20

Lou-Tellegen, the international star and former leading man for Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, will make his photodramatic debut as a Paramount star of the Lasky Feature Play Company on September 20 in a most elaborate picturization of William Somerset-Maugham's play, "The Explorer."

This play in stage form has been presented with marked success in England, on the continent, in Canada and the United States. It is a piece that admirably suits Lou-Tellegen, who for the past two years has become a star of the English speaking stage. Lou-Tellegen created a sensation in the two trans-continental tours of Mme. Bernhardt when he played all the leading masculine roles in her productions, being at that time only twenty years old. He is now twenty-eight.

LOU-TELLEGEN IN "THE EXPLORER"
(Lasky—September 20)

James Neil, Dorothy Davenport, H. B. Carpenter, Tom Forman and others appear with Lou-Tellegen.

JACK PICKFORD JOINS SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY

Jack Pickford has joined the Selig Polyscope Company, and was in Chicago, Ill., recently en route to the Pacific Coast, where he will be engaged with the Selig Pacific Coast companies.

Although only nineteen years of age, Jack Pickford has been engaged as a motion picture actor for the past seven years. He started in the work when he was in knee breeches. He has played important roles with the stock companies of Biograph, Pathé, Reliance and Famous Players. Among the famous productions in which he has appeared can be named: "Wild Flower," "The Love Route," "The Pretty Sister of Jose," "Girl of Yesterday," etc.

"I am delighted to have the opportunity of appearing in Selig Polyscope Company productions," asserted Pickford while in Chicago. "The artistic aims of Mr. Selig are so well known, the artistic environments of the Selig Company so well understood and appreciated by motion picture actors, that there is a sense of personal gratification in being permitted to affiliate with the Selig Company."

TRIANGLE REVISES TITLES FOR KNICKERBOCKER RELEASES

The Triangle Film Corporation announces a revision in the titles for its Knickerbocker releases for the second and third weeks. The two releases for the second week will be "Her Painted Hero," with Hale Hamilton, Charlie Murray, Polly Moran and Slim Somerville; and "A Favorite Fool," with Eddie Foy, Seven Little Foys, Polly Moran, Mae Busch and Charles Arling. In the third week there will be "Fatty and Mabel Adrift," with Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle, and company; and "His Father's Footsteps," with Ford Sterling, May Emery and Guy Woodword Davenport. All of these are two-reel pictures.

As now announced, the first six Fine Arts pictures will be "The Lamb," "The Martyrs of the Alamo," "Old Heidelberg," "The Sable Lorcha," "The Lily and the Rose," and "Jordan Is a Hard Road." The first six Ince Features will be "The Iron Strain," "The Coward," "Matrimony," "The Golden Claw," "The Conqueror," and "The Winged Idol."

INCE COMPLETES "THE COUNTS" FOR VITAGRAPH

Ralph W. Ince has just completed a one-part comedy for the Vitagraph Company, entitled "The Counts." Anita Stewart and Earle Williams will be seen in the principal parts.

This will be the first short picture in which these favorite Vitagraph players have appeared in some time. They will be supported by Hughie Mack, Donald MacBride, Albert Roccardi and William Dangman.

State Rights Battle with Programs Lost, Says Cobe

Buyer of Territorial Concessions Finds Competition with Feature Program Service Ruinous, Is Opinion of Former Alliance President—"Very High-Grade Pictures" Not Affected

ANDREW J. COBE, former president of the Alliance Films Corporation, an observer of film conditions, whose views of the trend of the industry, particularly the distributing end, are always interesting because Mr. Cobe's experience and broad vision, recently returned from the Pacific Coast and a tour of the Western states, made with the idea of gathering enough data to appraise the conditions of the picture market with some degree of accuracy.

Mr. Cobe has summed up his views for the readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and they appear as follows:

"Rarely a day goes by that the morning papers do not announce the incorporation of a new film producing company. These announcements bring forth from the man familiar with present conditions in the picture industry the query, 'What is to become of the production of these new concerns after they are made?'

"The would-be producer or new producer when this matter is suggested to him says, 'state rights,' without knowing exactly what it means. There are few who will deny the fact that in the beginning of the manufacture of features, the state rights exchange did a good deal toward exploiting them and preparing the way for the better grade of picture productions; but to all correct observers the state rights principle has become a thing of the past.

"The reasons are very evident. The day of playing a big feature one day only is passing. The exhibitors are more and more unwilling to book a single feature.

"Theatres are also demanding that exchangemen furnish them with a list of their productions so that they may know for one or two months in advance the titles and nature of the attractions which they are to show upon their screen.

"With the possible exception of very high-grade pictures which command a large rental price the state rights man has found that his traveling expenses have made large and alarming inroads into the profits on films, and in many instances where five or six-thousand dollars have been paid for territorial rights, severe losses have ensued.

"He has also come into direct opposition to the feature program and in the battle for business both he and the program exchange have cut rental prices to such an extent that, it will, if continued, ultimately mean ruin not only to the exchange, but to the manufacturing as well.

"Because of the dwindling profits, the state rights exchange cannot afford to pay for new releases a price which will allow the manufacturer even a small profit, and the producer is facing the possibility of not being able to find a market for his output.

"It is impossible for an exchange to exist to-day upon such pictures as can be picked up in the open market. That is to say: while one picture may be very fine and a big money-getter, all the rest will be of the common sort and some even so bad that the exchanges will find that the theatre managers will refuse to play them.

"Another great source of loss is the over production of pictures. Under existing conditions a feature is made today, on the market tomorrow, played a month, then shelved and forgotten, when if it were not crowded out by newer releases it could be out still earning money. If a theatre plays a picture three days to crowded houses, then finds that its patrons still want to see it, the management ought to book it again for three days.

There is no reason why a good picture ought not to be played over and over again. Why not?

"That is what is done in the legitimate theatrical business, where the real money is made on "long runs." Under this test, pictures that do not possess merit and appeal would be discarded while those productions that are worthy would be given the opportunity to enjoy as much success as they deserve.

"A careful study of picture conditions today reveals the fact that in a short while the number of exchanges throughout the country will be materially lessened, the state rights proposition will be dead and those exchanges that may have survived will handle exclusively program releases.

"Promotion Manager" To Direct V-L-S-E Publicity

E. L. Masters, Newspaper Man with Extensive Advertising Experience, Formerly with R. H. Macy and Hearst, Now Directing Big Four Ad Service

AN important change in its publicity department is announced by the V-L-S-E. Charles J. Giegerich, who organized the department, and has been with the company since its opening last April, has severed his connection with the V-L-S-E to become interested in the operation of Weber's theatre, Broadway and Twenty-ninth street, New York, and will do special work for the "Morning Telegraph."

Mr. Giegerich is succeeded by E. Lanning Masters who assumes the position of director of advertising and publicity. Mr. Masters brings to the Big Four a well-rounded newspaper experience, plus an extensive advertising and merchandising training.

A graduate from the editorial rooms of some of the country's most representative papers, including the Philadelphia "Evening Telegraph," Los Angeles "Examiner," New York "World," and others, Mr. Masters entered the advertising field several years ago as promotion manager for the New York "Times."

His work there attracted the attention of R. H. Macy and Company, and he was made advertising manager of that establishment. Later he joined the Blackman-Ross Company, one of the most highly regarded advertising agencies in the field. For the past two years Mr. Masters has been promotion manager of the International Magazine Company, publishers of "Hearst's Magazine," "Cosmopolitan," "Good Housekeeping," and "Harper's Bazaar."

His affiliation with the V-L-S-E is in line with that organization's efforts to render the exhibitor maximum co-operation in every phase of his activities.

GREEK SIMPLICITY FOR GARB OF 40 ARTIST MODELS IN AMERICAN PLAY

Forty artists' models appear in the four-part Mutual Masterpicture, "The House of a Thousand Scandals," produced by the American Film Company. In this story, which centers around the activities of a Greek cult, these girls wear the flowing garb of the ancient Greeks—the same being the reason why artists' models were elected to do the wearing.

The result is one of the most beautiful scenes the screen has given the public. The wondrously musical dances of the Greeks, the graceful and delightful movements, all are shown in this picture making an intensely artistic setting for the dramatic action carried through the story in effective style, by Harold Lockwood and May Allison.

MYRTLE GONZALEZ GOES FROM VITAGRAPH TO UNIVERSAL

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 13.

Myrtle Gonzalez, for the past two years leading woman at the Vitagraph studio at Santa Monica, has been engaged by the Universal and will be featured first in a three-reel production entitled "The Pinnacle." Miss Gonzalez is a Los Angeles girl whose ability was recognized by Managing Director R. S. Sturgeon of the Vitagraph, and she played leads in a number of his productions, the most recent being "The Chalice of Courage."

Miss Gonzalez's debut on the Universal program will be in a production from a scenario written by F. McGrew Willis, and produced under the direction of Richard Stanton, late of the NYMP organization, who will play lead as well.

This photoplay portrays the effect of a woman in inspiring the man she loves to work for success which he accomplishes with the result that he neglects to properly conduct his home life.

METRO OFFICIALS MAKE RECORD AUTOMOBILE TRIP

A trip to Delaware Water Gap and back all in the same afternoon is something of a feat, even in these days of rapid locomotion, but breaking records is the specialty of Metro folk, and B. A. Rolfe, of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.; Maxwell Karger, his general manager, and Arthur James are no exception to this rule.

B. A. ROLFE, MAXWELL KARGER AND ARTHUR JAMES AT DELAWARE WATER GAP

It happened that Messrs. Rolfe and Karger wanted to confer on some important matters with Mary Miles Minter and Director William F. Nigh, who were just then making the exteriors for "The Stork's Nest," a forthcoming Columbia-Metro production, in the Pocono Mountain district. It was imperative that certain questions should be decided by the director and star that afternoon, and as they were just then far from their hotel, amid wild mountain scenery, the long-distance telephone was not available. But the Karger car was at the studio door and the Delaware Water Gap is only a hundred miles or so from West Sixty-first street, so the matter was easily arranged.

It was shortly after lunch that the trio (James went along for company) climbed into the car and they were all back on Broadway in time for dinner. In the meantime they had gone to the hotel at the Gap where "The Stork's Nest" company were stopping, from there to the location where the cast were at work, and back again to New York, all in the space of one short afternoon.

RAY PRODUCES FIRST FEDERAL SPECIAL

Al Ray, the young director-general of Federal Film has just completed the first of the new Federal Special Productions, which will be released on the Associated program. The title of the picture is "The Waiter Who Waited," written by Mr. Ray.

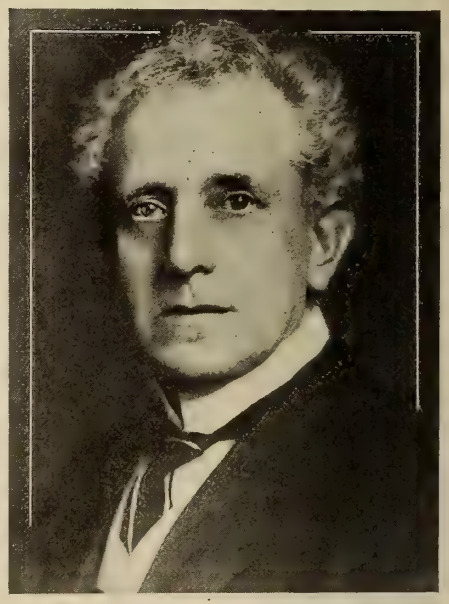
He secured an all star comedy cast for this picture, headed by Gertrude Bambrick, who played lead in "The Billionaire," and other Biograph features, and who is the wife of Marshall Neilan, and Harry La Pearl, who was the first to play leading roles in the MinA comedies, and formerly producing clown at the New York Hippodrome.

The other members of the cast include Margaret Burke, Wil Rex, Dick Cowan, and Dab Howard, the vaudeville favorite.

DOUGLAS SIBOLE NOW A MEMBER OF LIBERTY FORCES

Douglas Sibole, a well known Philadelphia actor, who has been associated with the Lubin Manufacturing Company for a considerable period, is now a member of the Liberty Motion Picture Company's forces.

Mr. Sibole is playing heavies in the Liberty productions, having taken one of the strongest parts in the recent filmized version of "An American Gentleman," in which William Bonelli starred.



DOUGLAS SIBOLE

Mr. Sibole also appears in another Liberty five reeler, called "For $5,000 a Year." He is now taking an important part in the Mary Mannering success, "The struggle," which the Liberty has on at present.

WANGEMANN, ACTOR DENIZEN IN CONTINENTAL CITIES, JOINS LUBIN

Richard Wangemann, who plays character parts in Lubin photoplays, is celebrating the ninth anniversary of his advent with Lubin of Philadelphia. Mr. Wangemann was born abroad, and began his stage career shortly after receiving an honorable discharge from the German army. During his career on the speaking stage Mr. Wangemann played in various cities in Switzerland, Austria, Russia, Italy and even in northern Africa.

RICHARD WANGEMANN

In 1888 he was stage director and manager of the principal theatre in Bremen and subsequently played with great success in various German and Austrian cities. Then he went to Cincinnati to the German Opera House, where he remained three years, going subsequently to Cleveland. Then he went to the German theatre in Philadelphia, from which he was graduated to the photoplays at Lubin's.

MARIE WAYNE, NOW WITH PATHE, WELL KNOWN IN VAUDEVILLE

Marie Wayne, who is supporting Richard Carle in Pathé's Gold Rooster play "Mary's Lamb," is new to pictures, but well known in vaudeville as one of the team Deeley and Wayne. Donald Mackenzie, who is producing the picture, saw her in her act and liked her so well that he felt sure she would make good in pictures, and so gave her her chance.

Miss Wayne was born in Tokio, Japan, of American parents, her father being in the United States Government service there and her grandfather a Methodist bishop in foreign service. She ran away from home when seventeen years old to go upon the stage, and secured an engagement in vaudeville with Lasky's "Pianophiends." An engagement with the Shuberts at the Winter Garden followed, and then she went into vaudeville again as a member of the team Deeley and Wayne. Miss Wayne has a charming personality which should appear to good advantage on the screen.

STAMFORD THEATRE "REPEATS" WITH SUCCESS

The Colonial theatre, Stamford, Conn., is one of the most enthusiastic converts to the V-L-S-E's platform of repeat runs.

This house recently showed "The Rosary" for three successive days. More people were turned away on the third day than on the first and second days. It is also stated by the management that there were more new faces in the audience on the third day than ever before in the history of the house.

Through its representatives, the V-L-S-E continues to hammer on the advantage of capitalizing on the good impression a feature has made by showing it several times.

Edna Mayo Divorces Stage for New Love, the Screen

Essanay Leading Woman, Who Starred in Such "Legitimate" Successes as "Help Wanted," "Excuse Me," and "Madame X," Finds Lasting Affection Aroused by Newer Entertainment

"HOW anyone can go back to the speaking stage after playing in motion pictures I cannot understand," declared Edna Mayo, leading woman with Essanay, who met with considerable success before the footlights before her advent in pictures, having played leads in "Help Wanted," "Excuse Me," "Madam X'" and other well known plays.

"The terrible and deadly monotony of playing the same piece night after night, week in and week out, almost drives one to madness at times. You rehearse for weeks and then you get the finished production. You have your first night and how you long to leave the play as it is. But no, it is gone and you have to go on doing the same thing over and over again.

"It sometimes gets on your nerves so that you hate the production. You want to run away and hide where you never can go through or see the play again.

EDNA MAYO

"The actor has none of the satisfaction of the artist who can hurl his brushes away after he has finished his picture and yet has the completed piece to live.

"In photoplays you feel when you have finished a play that you have accomplished something. It is there on the screen for all time, just as the painter's canvas, and you don't have to drill yourself to go through it all again. Instead, you turn to fresh fields and create a new character or piece. It is always something new. It refreshes one and never leaves the nerves tired and jaded from constant repetition.

"Neither is there a lack of inspiration because of the absence of an audience, as most persons think. You play to the director. He is the inspiration; he is the audience. His approval is the same as the applause of the audience.

"Also you have the satisfaction afterwards of seeing spectators enjoy your finished production on the screen. It gives one the same pleasure that I imagine a painter gets in having his picture appreciated and admired."

Although only twenty-two years of age Miss Mayo has had six years' experience on the stage and in photoplay work. She was graduated from a girls' school in Philadelphia when only sixteen, and her beauty and talent at once obtained her a place on the stage.

Adventure Begins to Haunt Trail of Paramount Girl

Anita King, Unable to Fascinate Mad Coyote Into Instant Submission, Fights Three Hours with the Varmint Before It Allows Itself to Be Killed

Salt Lake City, Sept. 4.

HAVING worked for eleven hours to free her car from the mud, successfully fought off a mad coyote and been rescued by two prospectors hearing her rifle shots, Anita King, the "Paramount Girl," after breaking the record between Los Angeles and San Francisco on the first lap of her coast to coast trip alone by automobile has safely crossed the great salt desert in which two men recently lost their lives and arrived here in safety.

News of the destruction of the Famous Players Film Company's studio in New York has just reached this city and she wired to this producer of Paramount pictures her expressions of sympathy and regret. Her departure from San Francisco was a great success it being Paramount Day at the fair. Driving onto the stage of the Imperial theatre in her coast to coast car and costume she was greeted enthusiastically by a packed house there to wish her Godspeed.

Mayor Rolfe's message to John Purroy Mitchel was handed to her. Amid the laughter and cheers of the multitude she set out on the second and most dangerous lap of her journey. She arrived here exhausted after a terrible trip. After a complete rest she gave the following description of her journey over the wastes:

"After leaving San Francisco," she said, "I stopped at Sacramento and the second day passed over the Sierra mountains stopping at Truckee. The third day I arrived at Reno where I was wonderfully received by the mayor and a large party. I took many pictures at Reno with the camera which is my only companion on my transcontinental trip.

"The mayor presented me with a key to Reno. I appeared at the Grand theatre. The house was packed and everybody was very enthusiastic. Leaving Reno on what is known as the Lovelock road, which is impassable in wet weather, ten miles from Lincoln highway, I got stuck in the mud.

"There had been a big cloudburst but I did not know it and I worked from 9 o'clock in the morning until 8 that night shoveling mud. I got the car out, drove fifty feet and was stuck again. It was impossible for me to go on and I had no food with me as I expected to make Fallon in four hours.

"I was exhausted, so I got blankets out to lie down. About midnight a mad coyote attacked me and after a terrible struggle I finally killed him and knew nothing more until I was picked up by prospectors who heard the shots of my gun. This was 3:30 a. m., so I must have fought with the coyote for three hours. The prospectors took me eighteen miles to a station house and gave me food.

"When I fully recovered I went back and got my car and followed the prospectors to Lovelocks. Then I continued on my journey."

Miss King was met by a large party which toured out from Salt Lake to greet her and escorted her to the American theatre where she appeared last night. The house was filled to the doors and everyone was very enthusiastic.

MARY FULLER AS SHE APPEARS IN "UNDER SOUTHERN SKIES" (Universal)

SPERO TO OPEN BOSTON BRANCH

J. A. Spero, representing the Greater New York Film Rental Company, is to open a branch exchange in Boston, handling the General and other programs. He is also to buy the Associated Program.

OVEY MISTAKES BOMB FOR TREASURE IN COMING CUB COMEDY

For the Cub Comedy release of Friday, September 24, on the Mutual program, David Horsley offers "The Treasure Box," a one-reel farce.

Jerry, played by George Ovey, has visions of sudden wealth upon picking up a cash box, discarded by two blackmailers with the arrival of the police, and makes away with the prize. Little did he know that instead of an array of watches, which because of the ticking he had reason to believe was his coup, he carried a box containing an infernal machine set to explode at 6 o'clock that evening and intended to destroy Col. Biff, who refused the blackmailers' demands for $1,000 in cash.

With his box under his arm, Jerry sets out on a mission of pleasure which in time becomes so boisterous that Jerry is taken to the police station, arriving there just as the two blackmailers are brought in. They catch sight of the box, look at the clock which shows but a few seconds of six, yell in terror and attempt to flee, but before they can escape the bomb goes off and the room's occupants are thrown in all directions. Jerry is last seen hanging suspended from the gas jet.

In the cast besides George Ovey are Louis Fitzroy, Gordon MacGregor, Jefferson Osborne, Ray Lincoln, Goldie Colwell and Janet Sully.

MRS. YOUNG SAILS TO VISIT HOME IN NORWAY

Mrs. Martha Hamilton Young, whose maiden name is Roegnerut, and who is an actress of many talents, after a stay in New York to study theatrical conditions in the United States has just sailed on the S. S. "Bergensfjord" back to Christiania to visit her mother, who is also prominent in theatrical circles in Norway.

Mrs. Young has so far only occasionally devoted her talents to the motion pictures, but it is her intention to return to the United States shortly and to take up active motion picture work, as has lately been done by many of the stars of the stage.

Mrs. Young is a distinct blond type, peculiar to her nativity, and is a young woman of many noted athletic accomplishments which should make her services of value in the motion picture field. She is a long distance swimmer, a splendid horsewoman. She is now the woman ski champion of the world, and has also held the world's tennis championship.

Massive Tropical Scene Is Constructed for "The Island of Surprise"

THE TROPICAL SCENE BUILT FOR "THE ISLAND OF SURPRISE" AND A TYPICAL SOUTH SEA ISLAND SCENE IN "THE SULTAN OF ZULON" (Vitagraph)

DIRECTOR CHARLES CHAPMAN, of the Vitagraph Company, has just completed one of the largest and most beautiful tropical scenes ever staged by the Vitagraph Company. This scene, which represents a cave with three compartments and a rocky approach, looks like a transplanted section from one of the South Sea Islands. It was built for the picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's "The Island of Surprise," on which Director Paul Scardon is now at work, assisted by Eleanor Woodruff, Julia Swayne Gordon, Zena Keefe, William Courtenay, Charles Kent and Anders Randolf.

Mr. Chapman and a corps of thirty workmen, including carpenters and expert workers in burlap and plaster of paris modeling, were engaged for four weeks on the construction of this mammoth set, which is forty feet high, one hundred feet wide and three hundred feet long. The burlap and plaster of paris was used in the construction of the sides and entrance of the cave and to reproduce huge rocks that weigh several tons apiece. Tropical plants, clinging vines, grass, shrubbery trees that mask in the opening of the cave and lend atmosphere to the scene were brought from nearby woods and florists. Special boats were hired that made many trips after sea plants, while automobile trucks were continually running to and from the beach transporting sea-weed, sand and other material necessary to give the scene the realism demanded. In the construction of the rocky approach to the cave, huge boulders had to be built to rest on a superstructure strong enough to stage a battle between the three island castaways in the Brady story and a band of two hundred cannibals that were intent on their capture. In the construction of these boulders alone a hundred and seventy-five barrels of plaster of paris were used.

The entire scene was first modeled in clay, then cast in plaster of paris, put up in pieces and joined together on a wooden frame. It took two tons of clay to fashion the original model.

ROLFE INGENUE HAS LONG LINE OF DRAMATIC FORBEARS

Helen Pollock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Channing Pollock (Anna Marble), who recently made her debut as a motion picture actress with the Rolfe-Metro forces, comes from a long line of theatrical ancestry.

Miss Pollock's grandfather, Edward Marble, was for many years leading support with "Lotta," and was the author of many farces and musical comedies, including "Tuxedo," in which he was associated with Thatcher, Primrose and West. Her great granduncle was William Warren, the famous comedian, and star of the Boston Museum. Her great grandfather was Danforth Marble, also a well known Yankee comedy star of a half century ago. The late Joseph Jefferson was another relative on her maternal side.

With such a number of dramatic forbears, it is small wonder that Miss Pollock should have succumbed to hereditary influence and a natural love of the theatre. Her latest picture was "When a Woman Loves," written by Charles T. Horan, and produced my Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., for the Metro program, in which she appeared as the leading ingenue. The directors of the Metro are unanimous in predicting a bright future for this ambitious young woman.

VITAGRAPH ARTIST PAINTS VIVID CHARACTER PICTURE OF ELKAS

In the Vitagraph production of "The Lesson of the Narrow Street," the character portrayed by Edward Elkas, Sheldon, King of Wall Street, so impressed Anders Randolf, artist and Vitagraph player, who has won fame as a painter of portraits, he requested a sitting. Mr. Randolf's enthusiasm increased as the painting progressed, until his whole heart and soul was wrapped up in the work, which, when completed, vividly typified what Wall Street will do to a man. Mr. Randolf prizes the picture as the best work of a career, that includes portraits of stage stars and prominent players of the Vitagraph Company, and he will show it at the Academy, during the Fall or Winter.

A SERIES OF AMUSING SCENES FROM "MY VALET," ONE OF THE TRIANGLE'S FIRST THREE RELEASES

Raymond Hitchcock is the master and Mack Sennett the man in this Triangle picture to be first shown at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York, September 23. Hitchcock has "wished" on him a fiancee he has never met, so he changes clothes with his servant Sennett. 1. Mabel Normand to Mack Sennett: "You are a funny looking gentleman!" 2. Mabel Normand looking at Hitchcock: "What a peculiar servant!" 3. Mabel Normand to Hitchcock: "Where did you get that awful waistcoat?" 4. Master and man back in their own characters.

EXCEPTIONAL PHOTOGRAPHY IN GAUMONT RELEASE

Richard Garrick, directing the three-reel Rialto Star Feature, "The House With Nobody In It," has introduced some splendid double and triple exposure in the photographing of this subject.

The close-up photograph of Miss Troutman, who takes the lead, was made from in back of her while she looked in a mirror. The other photograph, symbolic of a dream, necessitated double exposure on the

"still" plate, and triple exposure to obtain the same effect on the moving picture film.

This subject is released September 22 on the regular Mutual Program.

VITAGRAPH'S "GREEN STOCKINGS" SUPERVISED BY SMITH

Vitagraph Director Wilfrid North staged a battle scene in the forthcoming production of "Green Stockings" that employed besides the Vitagraph players in the enactment of the principal characters, one hundred and fifty negroes and two hundred and seventy-five extras made up as English soldiers.

Mr. North took his small army to the confines of Bayside, Long Island, where a battle raged for over half an hour.

While "Green Stockings" is essentially a comedy, it contains several scenes that for dramatic action and intense situations vies with big feature productions produced as straight dramas.

Albert E. Smith, one of the heads of the Vitagraph Company, has taken more than usual interest in the picture and has followed its development from the picturization of the original play manuscript, giving every detail of construction and production his personal attention and supervision.

"Green Stockings," Margaret Anglin's starring vehicle for three years, when finished by the Vitagraph Company as a screen story, will be in five parts and released as a Blue Ribbon feature through the V-L-S-E.

A special cast of Vitagraph players has been selected to enact the leading characters in A. E. W. Mason's comedy, that includes such well-known players as Stanley Dark, who was Miss Anglin's leading man during the comedy's run on the road, Lillian Walker, Louise Beaudet, Arline Pretty, Lillian Burns, Charles Brown, John T. Kelly, Denton Vane and Charles Wellesley.

BALBOA TAKES SCENES AT SAN DIEGO FOR "NEAL"

One of the big features on the official program of Moving Picture Day at the San Diego Exposition was the staging of a scene in "Neal of the Navy," by Balboa, in the presence of all the fair visitors. Director Harry Harvey arranged to be at the exposition with his company and made use of the 2,500 U. S. marines quartered there, as well as the battleships in the harbor. Lillian Lorraine, William Courtleigh, Jr., William Conklin, E. J. Brady, Lucy Blake and all the other well-known Balboans participated.

LIFE OF WILD BILL AND CALAMITY JANE TOLD ON SCREEN

A Western historical film in eight reels, reproducing the life of Wild Bill (J. B. Hicock) and Calamity Jane (Jane Cassidy), will shortly be released by The Black Hills Feature Film Company, Inc., recently organized at Chadron, Neb.

The production, which depicts the events leading up to the death of these noted Western characters, was staged on the prairies and in the Black Hills near Chadron, the approximate scene of Wild Bill's exploits. Several troops of cavalry and a hundred Sioux Indians from the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. D., were used in the play.

Calamity Jane is impersonated by Freda Hartzell Romine, an excellent horsewoman and rifle shot, while Wild Bill is played by Al Johnson, a well-known character in the West. Catherine Hartzell, who was personaly acquainted with Jane Cassidy and William Hicock, wrote the scenario.

The Hartman Brothers Film Manufacturers of Omaha will film all productions of the Black Hills Company. An up-to-date studio and laboratory will be established in the heart of the Black Hills where natural scenery is available.

SELIG STUDIOS MOURN DEATH OF CHANG

The personnel of the Selig Polyscope Company is in mourning. "Chang" is dead. Chang was a gigantic ourang outang, beloved by the Selig workers from Chicago to the Pacific coast. Chang's last appearance on any stage was in the title role "The Ourang Outang," recently released as a Selig pictureplay.

Then he quaffed the contents of a bucket of paint and despite the fact that high-priced specialists were engaged he soon passed away. Chang was considered one of the most valuable animals in captivity.

He came directly from Borneo a few months ago and was the center of attraction and the pet of all those who visited the Selig Jungle-Zoo at Los Angeles.

HARRY FISHER TO PLAY JUVENILE LEADS FOR MOROSCO

Harry Fisher, well known juvenile lead, has been engaged by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, and is now at work at the Los Angeles studios in support of Blanche Ring in a screen version of her greatest stage success, "The Yankee Girl."

Mr. Fisher, although young in years, has had wide experience on both the theatrical and screen stage. His first success was scored with Corse Payton's stock company in Brooklyn, and he subsequently owned a stock house in Duluth in partnership with Gus Forbes. With the Spooners he played at their houses in Jersey, Brooklyn, and finally at the Metropolis on Forty-third street. In motion pictures he has appeared with great success for many well known producing companies, including Lasky in support of Abeles, Breese, Ross and others.

In "The Yankee Girl" he is given a big field in which to demonstrate his ability in the role of Willie Fitzmaurice. Work on this production is rapidly progressing.

EUGENIE FORDE IS STRONG AS HAGAR IN "DIAMOND"

Eugenie Forde, the Hagar of "The Diamond from the Sky," will soon be seen again in the North American's $20,000 prize photoplay. The intricacies of the plot demanded that Miss Forde be rendered mentally irresponsible (in the picture) and the hard-hearted author has only permitted her recently to recover.

That Miss Forde's work in the earlier chapters of this great photoplay has endeared her to the vast audiences throughout the country is evidenced by the inquiries being made as to when she will return in the story.

In the role of Hagar, Miss Forde gave a dramatic strength to the picture and a character presentation absolutely unique in photoplay productions.

Miss Forde accomplishes all she sets out to do in "The Diamond from the Sky," and that is considerable, for, in the earlier stages of the story, the drama is woven around the bereft gypsy character which she portrays.

MUST MAKE EXTRA PRINTS FOR "ROSARY" DEMAND

"The Rosary," the seven-reel Selig Red Seal play released through V-L-S-E, is proving so popular that the Selig Polyscope Company has been forced to make many extra prints of the production.

Manager Irwin of the central V-L-S-E office had calls for extra prints from certain branch managers and wired other branches to see if they could spare enough to fill the want. The reply in every case was that the branch was itself short of "Rosary" prints and could make use of several more.

Mr. Irwin then took the matter up with the Selig Polyscope Company and this firm at once set its factory at work.

All over the country "The Rosary" is proving one of the biggest successes in recent years. Because of its beautiful theme and the artistic manner in which it is developed it appeals to all classes.

TO THE EXHIBITORS OF THE EAST

Pittsburgh, Sept. 13.

To take up the matter of organization with exhibitors in the East, I expect to make a tour of that section of the country beginning September 15 or 20. I should like to meet as many exhibitors as possible, and, in order to make this campaign effective, I ask exhibitors to arrange meetings in your home towns, notifying National Headquarters of your plans. Then I can arrange to meet you.

No business needs organization so badly as the business of exhibiting motion pictures. We exhibitors must defend our rights as business men. We cannot expect others to protect our business for us. Do not disregard this appeal, for it may be your turn to be attacked tomorrow.

As president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League I appeal to you to organize. Arrange your meetings, and don't fail to notify Headquarters. If there is any way in which I can help, call upon me.

FRED HERRINGTON, President,

ETHEL CORCORAN IS NEW LEADING WOMAN UNDER VAN DEUSEN FOR VITAGRAPH

Ethel Corcoran, daughter of Captain Corcoran, of the Sheepshead Bay, New York, fire company, has been selected as leading lady by the Vitagraph Company, to head a company under the direction of Courtlandt J. Van Deusen.

The first picture in which Miss Corcoran will be seen playing the lead will be a one-part comedy entitled "Benjamin Hunter, Book Agent." William Dangman, a new member of the Vitagraph Stock Company, will play opposite Miss Corcoran.

LIBERTY FILM ENLARGES STUDIO AT SAN MATEO

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 13.

A number of improvements are being made at the studio of the Liberty Film Company at San Mateo, including the enlargement of the stage to double the present capacity, the building of additional dressing rooms, a new laboratory, and a concrete vault for film storage. Sadie Lindbloom is president and manager of this company which will release on the Associated program.

MARY ANDERSON'S FIRST VITAGRAPH SUBJECT, "CAL MARVIN'S WIFE"

Mary Anderson, who recently joined the Western Vitagraph Company at Santa Monica, Cal., to play leads, is now working on her first picture, "Cal Marvin's Wife," an original story by Lulu Case Russell, being produced under the direction of Ulysses Davis.

Miss Anderson is creating the title role and has in her support William Duncan, Anne Schaefer, Otto Lederer and Carlton Weatherby.

BURKE SEES SUCCESS AHEAD FOR ASSOCIATED PROGRAM

D. L. Burke, of Los Angeles, Cal., owner and producer of the Deer Brand pictures, and vice-president of the Associated Film Manufacturers, Inc., strolled into the Associated Film Sales Corporation headquarters last week straight from the coast. After acquainting himself with the details of progress made by the new association at its headquarters in the World's Tower Build, Mr. Burke said:

"From the stock of unanswered letters I note on Mr. Bard's desk, inquiring for our products, I am convinced that the public is not only grasping for new things in films, but it is anxious to ally itself with new and better economic policies on the commercial side of the moving picture business; and from the contracts signed up by exchange men for both program and feature, I think the Associated will be a success from the very beginning.

"Our general manager, Arthur Bard, has done remarkably well in the short time he has been here. Our producers are all old timers in the picture game, and men who have made a success of business life, and I see no reason why they cannot put the moving picture business on a higher plane."

GAUMONT SECURES BRADLEY BARKER AS JUVENILE LEAD

Bradley Barker, who has achieved success in important roles in big productions with various prominent companies, has been secured by the Gaumont Company, as juvenile lead. Barker makes his first appearance as a Mutual player in "The House With Nobody In It," second of the three-reel Rialto Star Features produced by Gaumont for release in the regular program.

Mr. Barker's stage career covers nine years of successful work, most of which was spent in stock companies. Mr. Barker is by no means new to motion picture work, having at various times appeared in Lubin, Alco, Reliance, Universal, Peerless, Fox and Famous Players productions. He has appeared in support of such stars as Mary Fuller, Olga Petrova and several others equally prominent. His last engagement, previous to joining the Gaumont studios, was with the Fox Features Company.

NATIONAL FILM BUILDS REPLICA OF LEPER COLONY

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 13.

The National Film Corporation has caused the erection of a very elaborate set at Balboa Beach, fifty miles southwest of Los Angeles. This is a replica of the leper colony buildings at Molokai on Oahu Island, in the Philippines. This will be used in the coming production, "The Leper." The principal members of the cast will be Norma Talmadge, Lamar Johnstone, and Bruce Mitchell.

The past week has been taken up in securing three scenes of the California Limited, near San Bernardino. The camera, in the making of these, stood so close to the track that it was necessary for two men to hold it to prevent the suction from drawing it under the train.

JULIA DEAN IN THE LATEST UNIVERSAL BROADWAY FEATURE, "JUDGE NOT; OR, THE WOMAN OF MONA DIGGINGS"

ACTING IN SELF-DEFENSE RECOLLECTIONS HELD FOR MURDER

"JUDGE NOT; OR, THE WOMAN OF MONA DIGGINGS"

(Broadway Universal Feature—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

PETER B. KYNE'S story upon which this feature of Universal's is based makes a production of unusual strength. The central figure is familiar to every screen in the country, but beyond a doubt the very reason for this intimate acquaintance is because of the sympathetic characteristics embodied in her personality. The principal person is the woman with a past. But Mr. Kyne has developed his theme in such an effective style, and has flavored it with so many situations of originality, that the picture stands head and shoulders above the large number of productions that persistently dwell on this subject.

Julia Dean gives a striking performance as Molly, the woman in the case. Miss Dean is one of those who seem to have grasped the technique of picture work readily. The amount of expression which she instils into her difficult role creates the most exacting attention at all times. Miss Dean's Molly is a character that will long be remembered.

The original story was arranged for the screen by Harvey Gates and Robert Leonard and produced by Mr. Leonard. Their construction of the scenario is entirely adequate. The scenes have been so arranged as to create the highest tension, while none of the theme's originality has been discarded during the course of its transference to the screen.

Harry Carey playing opposite Miss Dean gives a concise interpretation of an attractive part, while Harry Carter as the heavy registers his usual good work. Marc Robbins and Olive Fuller Golden appear to good advantage.

The story relates how Molly is tricked into becoming the mistress of a western gambler by a mock marriage. In the course of time a young man separated from his father drifts into town. Molly encourages him and when the gambler has relieved him of all his money she furnishes him with funds and sends him on his way. The denouement arrives when five years later, the young man now a lawyer meets Molly, who has assumed another name. She tells him her husband is dead, believing he perished in a fire. But he had miraculously escaped. He follows Molly and enters her house. She kills him. Her lover defends her in court and she is acquitted and then she tells him all of her true relationship with the gambler, but the lawyer forgives everything.

The photography is very good and it might be mentioned that the bar room brawl and the subsequent destruction of the entire town by fire are two most sensational scenes.

"SIMON THE JESTER"

(Pathe Gold Rooster—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

A DIFFICULT task has been bravely approached, and as a whole, successfully handled in this third picture of the Gold Rooster Series. There is something fugitive about the plots of William J. Locke's novels, which makes it no easy matter to picturize them, and one is forced to the opinion that the scenario is not the best that might have been made from this story, all of which has added to the thorns in the path of Director Edward Jose, and one or two little slips are to be pardoned.

One of these slips is the scene in the gambling house. It carries the atmosphere of having been "staged" for the camera. Instead of the habitues being discovered when the scene is first flashed on the screen, they are seen wending their way into the rooms, and seating themselves at vacant tables, as a party, and as though they were merely coming in to be photographed—which, in fact, they were. Had these characters been "discovered" in the midst of active play, the realism of the scene, an important one, would have been intensified.

Surprises and uninterrupted flow of action make the film one of compelling interest, and no opportunity is allowed for the attention to wander. Edwin Arden's work is, of course, finished, and his breezy dignity, as Simon de Gex, screens admirably. He is capably supported by Irene Warfield and Alma Tell, while L. Gerry, as the insane dwarf, is so handled as to lessen the aversion such a character is apt to create.

Simon de Gex, member of parliament, is told by the doctor that he has six months to live. He immediately begins to get rid of his fortune, and so impresses Elenore, his fiancee, with the idea that he is insane that the engagement is broken. In aiding Lola, the Cat Queen of the Hippodrome, who has been deserted by her husband, he falls in love with her. The husband is later killed by the dwarf, who is also infatuated with Lola. Simon sends his friend, Dale, who has also been enamored of the Cat Queen, with a message to his former fiancee, in France, and Dale ends by falling in love with Elenore.

Simon is taken suddenly ill in a park. He is discovered by Lola, and removed to a hospital, where a remarkable operation restores him to health. Lola, who has stood by him through his illness, flees when Dale calls on Simon and tells him Lola is below his level. He pursues her, and finds her in the theatre, but as he is pleading with her to return to him, the dwarf crawls into the room and fires at the girl. In attempting to escape, he falls to death from a window.

Lola is blinded by the shot, but Simon devotes himself to her, and a second wonderful operation gives her back her sight.

"OUT OF DARKNESS"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WITH "Out of Darkness" Hector Turnbull steps into the ranks of feature photoplay authors. His theme rests on the familiar yet appealing struggle between capital and labor, but the conventionality of "Out of Darkness" gets no further than this point, for the plot has been almost totally disguised by original and clever development. The hypercritical may take exception to this broad statement on account of the utilization of the introduction of the shock, the subsequent loss of memory, and then another shock followed by the return of the mind. This sounds familiar, and so it is, but in this case it is as necessary to the progress of the story as is the film itself.

Mr. Turnbull evidently shaped his play with an eye to the especial attainments of Charlotte Walker, for the role of Helen Scott offers her opportunities manifold in which to exercise her slow and repressed yet significant histrionic ability. The conclusion of the play is somewhat obvious almost as soon as the body of the story has started, yet the realistic atmosphere and the many scenes containing the cheering heart interest action, the sort that makes everyone practically weep for joy, by far offset this minor defect.

The story pictures the miserable lives of the workers in a Southern cannery, where the thirty-cent wage and the thirteen-hour day prevail. Helen Scott, the owner of the cannery, refuses to listen to the pleas for improvements set forward by the manager. But one day Helen out sailing, is becalmed. Her little boat is rammed by a freighter, and from the shock she loses her mind. The boat's first port is the cannery town, and there Helen is landed, totally incognito.

THE VIGIL

There she is taken in by a kindly family, but she is merely one of the toilers. With her abused manager she falls in love, and saves his life by rescuing him from the office in the cannery where the strikers bound him and left him to burn to death. But the shock of the fire causes the return of memory and then—but why relate the rest? All that is necessary to know is that the romance which consumes the last reel is truly delightful.

Miss Walker's support is praiseworthy. Thomas Meighan makes a manly figure of the manager. Margery Daw scores a decided hit by her winsome and girlish manners, in the role of Jennie Sands, the little daughter of the poor Southern couple. Loyla O'Connor as her mother handles a touching role in a sympathetic fashion, while Tom Forman and Hal Clements appear in minor roles.

In a picture that provides such attractive entertainment as "Out of Darkness" it is to be regretted that one quite glaring inconsistency appears, namely, that Helen's male companion, with her when the boat was struck, is never actually accounted for. The natural conclusion is that he perished, but why not show it?

"THE FIXER"

(George Kleine—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MANY are familiar with the comedy style of George Bickel and Harry Watson, and although ancient and familiar that style still has a following—the old stage low comedy, winks that contort the entire visage, sly gesticulations at the audience and a seeming solid belief in their fun-making ability. Though unpolished according either to the rules of light comedy or slapstick, it is in a certain way productive of laughter.

BILL BIDS HIS WIFE A FOND FAREWELL

Besides the tenor of the entire picture corresponds almost to the last letter with the peculiar characteristc of the comedians. The story contains that much abused personality, the country constable, a familiar figure with a huge star and lengthily goateed. And that tuft of hay dangling from the chin is wiggled and pulled from time to time in the regular old burlesque fashion.

The stage play "Hello Bill," by Willis M. Goodhue, upon which "The Fixer" is founded is as reminiscent of other days as the featured players, Bickel and Watson. Its situations were conceived with no thought of their screen possibilities, yet the number of laughs embodied in them is of a creditable size, providing of course, that the style in which they are interpreted is approved of and enjoyed by the spectator.

As to detail the offering is consistently realistic save for one scene, supposed to take place at a late hour, in which a chicken is seen to be wandering across the road, while several figures move in the background, obviously oblivious to the fact that it is long past bed time.

The plot is quite involved and benefits little by a detailed synopsis. Suffice it is to say that The Fixer (George Bickel) succeeds in getting his friend, just married to a widow, into more comprising situations than the man would have encountered if left to his own resources. The married one (Harry Watson) is continually attempting to evade the uncomfortable presence of the constable and before he is through he travels all over America from Rye to Mexico.

The support furnished the leads is correspondingly good. John Nicholson is the constable, Ruby Hoffman plays Mrs. Dare, the trusting wife, while others are Ben L. Taggart, Alma Hanlon and Alfred Kepler. The photographic work is entirely commendable while the few settings that appear are very good.

"BRED IN THE BONE"

(Reliance-Mutual Masterpicture—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE story of this production is second-rate, but it has been elaborately staged, and is excellently acted, and the result well repays the labor of Paul Powell, the director. Moreover, the demure Dorothy Gish is the feature, and she is not only a pleasing figure, but her work is about the best she has yet done. Several tense situations she handles with real art.

That which is bred in the bone is the call of the stage. A little girl is abandoned by her parents, strolling actors, and is adopted by a childless Quaker couple. As she grows into girlhood she shocks her foster parents and her Quaker sweetheart by her leaning toward things theatrical, and when a musical show comes to town, Mercy is discovered drinking it in rapturously through an open window, and one of the actors takes her along.

She achieves success in New York, and the actor who brought her here, now her devoted slave, puts in most of his time proposing to her—and being refused. By a terrific stretch of coincidence, her mother is hired as Mercy's maid, although neither suspects the relationship. Mercy is also pursued by the manager who first gave her her chance, and in protecting the girl from these dangers, the mother-maid is shot. On her deathbed she learns that the actress is her daughter, and keeping the secret, she writes to the Quaker sweetheart to hurry to New York and rescue Mercy. He arrives just as the actor has shot and killed the manager, as the latter is attacking the girl in her apartment.

In the exceptionally capable cast are to be found William Hinckley, George A. Beranger, Margie Wilson, Alberta Lee, Richard Cummings, Seena Owen, W. E. Lawrence and Al. Filson.

"THE PLOUGHSHARE"

(Edison-General—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

SEVERAL strong scenes help in some measure to focus the interest of a rambling and unreal story. These scenes are needed, and certain of them show signs of having been lugged in by the director, desperately struggling to save something out of the wreck. Sudden bursts of passion, provoked as spontaneously as the flash of gunpowder, create situations without the necessary dramatic building-up to make them sincere.

There are, however, evidences of laborious and painstaking work on the part of the director, John H. Collins, and he has acquitted himself, as a whole, admirably. The story, placed in the antebellum South, calls for elaborate settings and a large cast, and Mr. Collins has extracted the most possible from his script.

The old master dies, and an heir takes his place. With his brutal half-brother, William takes possession of the plantation and later is elected Governor. His half-brother deserts a girl he has wronged and pays court to a girl, Helena, who is loved by the Governor. On his death-bed, Helena's father asks that she wed the Governor and the ceremony is performed at the bedside. Later the brother kills the brother of the first girl and she commits suicide. An innocent man is convicted of the murder, but the real criminal is led to confess. Helena aids him to escape to South America. Accused of conspiring in the escape the Governor is compelled to resign and later is indicted as accessory. Helena saves him by confessing her part in the escape and the Governor is freed of suspicion. The half-brother is drowned while canoeing in South America.

The work of Gertrude McCoy as Helena, and Robert Conness and Richard Peer as the Governor and his brother stands out, and there is also excellent work by Margaret Prussing and Bessie Learn. Others in the cast are William West, Augustus Phillips, Frank A. Lyon, Bigelow Cooper, Helen Strickland, Philip Quin and Bob Walker. The story is by Mary Imlay Taylor.

"AFFINITIES"

(Essanay—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

THE plot of this comedy, written by Mary Roberts Rhinehart, hinges upon the formation of an Affinity Club among the younger set of society. Frank Mitchell and Jack Thomas each ask the wife of the other to go on an "affinity picnic." The party to which Frank and Jack's wife, Alice, belong go to one island, while Jack and Frank's wife, Mary, go to another island in the same lake. Jack and Mary are left behind when the rest of the picnickers depart to catch the last train, so Jack is forced to swim to the other island to secure a boat and later steals an automobile which is the only conveyance procurable. It happens that both the boat and machine belong to Frank, who in turn has considerable difficulty in getting Alice home. In the early hours of the morning Jack and Alice are arrested, but Mary escapes and climbs in the window of her house. She is met by her husband who had arrived only a short time before and is trying to frame up an excuse for losing his car. Meantime Alice comes home and not finding Jack, decides to go over to Mary's house and arrives just as Mary is begging her husband's forgiveness. The police come in with Jack, entirely exposing the double plot and both couples decide that they had better call things even.

The cast of this picture includes Richard C. Travers, Lillian Drew, Betty Scott and E. H. Calvert. It was directed by the latter.

There are several bits of amusing comedy, but hardly enough action or plot to warrant a two-reel production.

"THE CASE OF BECKY"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

TO many "The Case of Becky" will prove exceptionally interesting because of its psychological theme and its clever treatment. But "The Case of Becky" does little more than highly interest. It refuses to thrill, entrance or absorb. It is as the Lasky company informs us before the start of the picture—a play based on proven theories. To be sure, the theories have been united by a well-constructed plot that at all times receives attention, but the theories, or the psychological facts, dominate the entire production.

David Belasco presented "The Case of Becky" on the stage with a great degree of success. Edward Locke is the author. It was prepared for screen use by Margaret Turnbull, who has made a clear and concise version of it. In the course of the story's relation there are introduced not a few really laughable scenes. It is Blanche Sweet as Becky who creates the comedy during the time in which her evil personality rules.

Miss Sweet first appears as the subject of a hypnotist, Balzamo, a willing and pleasant girl. But when her thoughts are ugly, her whole demeanor changes plainly revealing her inner soul. In this mood she runs away from the hypnotist, but soon after she becomes her good self again. Finally, after several experiences in the employ of others, where her evil self has been so pronounced that she has been discharged for lack of courtesy, she is employed as the companion to a spinster.

The good lady's brother is a physician in charge of a sanitarium. To subdue restless and violent patients he employs the services of a young hypnotist. Becky or Dorothy makes their acquaintance, and in time the young assistant completely vanquishes the bad Becky.

Then the hypnotist tracks the girl to the sanitarium and demands that he be allowed to take her away. Being refused, he brings into use his power of mental suggestion, but the mind of the young doctor is the stronger. He forces from his subject a confession of having stolen the head physician's wife and child many years ago and that Dorothy is really Dr. Emerson's daughter. Balzamo retires, vanquished, and Dr. Emerson is made happy over the thought of the marriage of his daughter and assistant.

Miss Sweet's widely different characterizations of the dual personality of Dorothy and Becky are done in a polished style. Theodore Roberts is exceedingly good as old Balzamo. Carlyle Blackwell is the young doctor, while James Neill plays the head physician.

The entertainment which "The Case of Becky" offers is quite original, and it seems to the writer that a Paramount audience, such as the patrons of the Strand theatre, should appreciate it, even though in breadth of appeal it fails to rank with other Lasky releases.

"PLAYING DEAD"

(V-L-S-E-Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature is founded on the novel bearing the same name by Richard Harding Davis. Mr. Davis has had many of his former works visualized recently and we are unable to recollect any that could not be called deserving features. "Playing Dead" is no exception to the rule. It is a drama with no slight smattering of farcical action.

Besides as a box office attraction the picture is of immense value and deservedly so, for Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are in the featured parts. And so to delve into the value of the comical situations of the story is little more than useless, for every exhibitor in the country ought to know if he already does not, that the Drews are comedians par excellence.

However, they have already proven themselves versatile in that they are just as capable to handle effectively a dramatic situation. They demonstrated this in "Between the Two of Them." And in "Playing Dead" they further demonstrate it. We consider Mr. Drew as funny as the funniest slapstick artist if not funnier, but if any of that species of comedians were to appear in a drama, we would laugh at him, remembering past performances. With Mr. Drew such is not the case. When entering a dramatic scene, he completely sheds his comedy manners. The same is applicable to Mrs. Drew.

"Playing Dead" is blessed in some instances with sarcastic subtitles that are bound to excite laughter while all of them have been intelligently chosen and placed. Credit for this should go to Mrs. Drew, who adapted the picture for screen production.

Doubtless the magnificent settings of "Mortmain" and other recent Blue Ribbon Features will be remembered. If so merely to say that the settings of this picture rival them in artistry and attractiveness is sufficient. The work of the camera men is also to be commended.

ALL IS PEACEFUL BEFORE THE APPEARANCE OF MADDOX

As for the story little justice can be done it here. James Blagwin has lived in married happiness for three years, when his wife comes under the influence of a variety of social scavenger calling himself a feminist and socialist. He expounds her some of his lofty ideals, which are merely lies, and finally she is desirous of leaving her husband for him.

Blagwin has, however, seen it all, and so great is his love for his wife that he wants her to do what she will. But he rebels at getting a divorce, so he suddenly disappears and everyone believes him dead. And not until then does his wife realize her love for him, and finally events so shape themselves that the two are reunited.

Donald Hall appears as Maddox, the feminist, while others are Harry English, Isador Marcil and Alice Lake.

"EVIDENCE"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HEREWITH is a melodramatic society number loaded to the edges with performances of the ultra-emotional sort. Its locale is rural England and the desired atmosphere has been successfully attained in most instances. Although the greater part of the action results from a series of incidents that seem quite strained, the picture will more than likely find a large following among those who delight in stories of extreme social intrigue.

As the picture advances, when it has left behind that melodramatic series of incidents already mentioned, in other words after the estrangement of the husband and wife, the action is convincing and most pleasing. In brief the rest of the films are employed in demonstrating the efforts of one Lushington, a life long friend of the separated couple, who is hopelessly in love with the lady in the case, to bring the two together again. He finally accomplishes his noble purpose by proving the innocence of Lady Una.

LUSHINGTON ACTS AS PEACEMAKER

Edwin August appears in the winning part of Lushington, while Lillian Tucker, playing Lady Una, troops melodramatically with varying sucess as to conveying the sincerity of her part. Richard Buhler is the easily influenced husband and he also effects the emotional style, Florence Hackett appears in the genial role of Lady Una's mother.

A deep dyed villain by the name of Pollock, is responsible for all the trouble. He loves Lady Una and loathes her husband, so he compromises the woman before the man and causes a separation. All of Lushington's efforts to effect a reconciliation are of no avail, until at last he procures Pollock's deathbed confession.

We had heard much from the far-famed Winter Garden chorus which was to appear in the picture. The debut of these charming maidens was effected during the course of the relating of a fairy tale. The fairy tale was very prettily told and equally well worked into the story, but the Winter Garden girls were rather inconspicuous. But at any rate "Evidence" will be accepted in all good faith by those who like the society story.

A FEATURE about whose praises we could sing much, but prefer to say little, for

THE PICTURE'S THE THING!

I am the advertisement writer who has been told to convey to motionpicturedom the merits of a feature believed in by its backers. I have written an advertisement which, by your leave, I have passed into the waste basket, because I find that everything which I have said seems reminiscent of almost everything else about any feature. "The punch, humor, pathos, love, excitement," it's all been said. And yet I'm going to omit it all, because I believe that here is a picture that doesn't need a single bit of praise—that is going to go over on pure seeing. I believe this feature has the real "screen-ability."

There is just one thing I want to do and that is to persuade you to ask to see

"THE IVORY SNUFF BOX"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WE have long wondered why some enterprising producer did not screen Arnold Kummer's thrilling and brilliant detective story, "The Ivory Snuff Box." Perhaps trouble was encountered in securing the motion picture rights, but here at last it is presented, and presented in a manner of which the World Film Corporation may justly be proud. It is full to the last scene of exciting, mysterious, rapid and logical action. In fact, "The Ivory Snuff Box" is a feature that any exhibitor may contract for with absolute confidence concerning its power to entertain and to make money.

Merely to mention the name of Director Maurice Tourneur should be guarantee sufficient of the picture's excellent quality, for Mr. Tourneur has never yet produced a "bloomer," if the use of the vernacular may be excused. His light effects, chiefly the back lighting that he has so successfully employed in this production, are nothing short of a revelation, while his studio settings never for one moment betray their artifice. In fact we see no opening for the slightest condemning criticism regarding the mechanical and artistic effects introduced throughout the five reels.

DUVALL TRICKED BY THE RUSE OF THE CONSPIRATORS

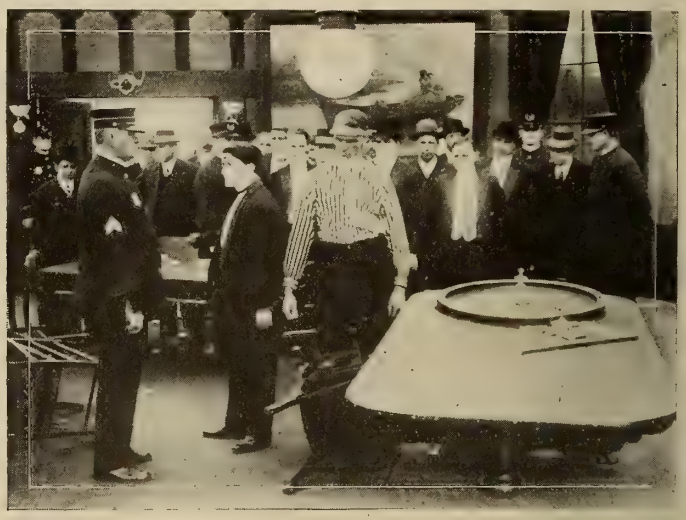
The story has lent itself to the screen with a remarkable degree of adaptability. It is one of those yarns, deplorably few in number, that plunge right into the midst of a baffling and thrilling situation immediately after the meagre introduction, and then go rapidly on their way introducing episode after episode of the most intensely thrilling variety. The conclusion is not surmised until the very last moment, the fate of the detective and his wife continually hangs in the balance. In other words, the story is full to brimming over with suspense.

Holbrook Blinn gives a clever and consistent performance as Richard Duvall, the detective, while Grace Ellicot, playing his wife and his assistant in pursuit of the criminals, is a most satisfying opposite. Norman Trevor, as the leading heavy, Dr. Hartman, carries his role in a polished style, while the supporting cast, including Robert Cummings as the Prefect of Police, does commendable work.

The story relates the adventures of an American detective in the employ of the French police. An ivory snuff box containing a most important secret code, belonging to the Ambassador to England, is stolen. How Duvall and his wife finally succeed in ruining the conspirators' hopes of procuring the secret code form a series of situations of the most thrilling and startling variety.



"HER ATONEMENT"

(Associated-Grand Prix Feature—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY, 2ND

THE Associated Film Sales Corporation has selected for its first feature release a Deer Brand melodrama with a moral. This drama is intended to show that there is some good in the worst of humanity. During the action of the piece, the laws of probability are somewhat stretched, and the regenerations are a bit sudden, but these things can be overlooked in the tenseness of the situations and the necessarily rapid development of the plot.

John De Forrest, owner of a gambling joint, employs Lil, a beautiful siren, to lure wealthy patrons to his establishment. One of her victims, Jack Bryce, after losing his fortune, leaves

THE RAID ON THE GAMBLING DEN

Phillis, his fiancee, and goes West. De Forrest tells the girl that Bryce has eloped with Lil, and finally prevails on her to marry him. Lil goes to the same town that Bryce has fled to, and meeting him in a dance hall, tells him of De Forrest's perfidity. She also causes the police to raid her former employer's gambling place. De Forrest flees, and Phillis also goes to the town where Jack and Lil have settled. There Jack recognizes her, and after he shows her a newspaper notice of De Forrest's death, she marries him.

A year later, De Forrest wanders into the town and sees Jack and Phillis with their new-born baby. He threatens to blackmail them, but Lil, who has become a charity worker, kills him. By preserving the happiness of the couple, she atones for her former wickedness.

Jack Bryce plays the weak-willed hero with considerable success; Lillian Williams, as Lil, shows occasional flashes of emotional power, while Phylis Gray makes an adequate heroine. Al Garcia, in the role of the gentleman gambler, deserves credit for his very commendable acting.

"THE CRY OF THE FIRST BORN"

(Laemmle-Universal—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture will long be remembered by all who see it because of its appeal. It is from a story by Olga Printzlau Clark and contains a most sympathetic theme that has been developed in a style that well befits its human interest nature.

A young Englishman goes to an island in the South Seas on business. He falls in love with a pretty native girl and after a time marries her. Subsequently he is called away to his home to take charge of his inherited estate. An enemy on the island writes to him and informs him that his wife has forgotten all about him, when in reality she is eagerly looking forward to his return.

Heartbroken, the man at last marries a girl of his own race. Later he takes her to the distant island and there learns that the poor girl died from the persecution of his enemy. He makes a complete confession to his wife, and they both go in search of the young boy—the child of the dead woman and the Englishman—believing that he should come into his birthright; but he, failing in his oath to avenge his mother's death, has killed himself.

The atmosphere of the production is adequately realistic, the photography very good, and the settings appropriate. Norman MacDonald took care of the directing. Wilfred Rogers plays the Englishman, while Yona Landowska appears as the Hawaiian.

"THE BLOOD SEEDLING"

(Selig—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

THIS picture, which is based on the short story of the same name by the late John Hay, has a distinguishing merit that a good many other screen productions do not have —it tells a genuinely dramatic story.

Allen Golyer, a well-to-do young farmer, in love with Susie, is cast aside by her when Bertie Leon, traveling salesman for a ribbon firm, happens along and wins the heart of the unsophisticated country girl. Allen is heart-broken. Just at this time he plants a sapling, presented to him by Colonel Blood, calling it "The Blood Seedling," in honor of the donor. Leon leaves the village and is heard of no more. Susie, finally convinced that Leon is fickle, marries Allen, and for twenty years they live happily together.

GERSHOM REVEALS ALLEN'S SECRET

On a neighboring farm Gershom Cheney achieves more than local reputation as a soothsayer. On the twentieth anniversary of the planting of "The Blood Seedling," Allen and his wife visit the Cheney home, where Gershom, in a trance, holding Allen's hand, writes: "A spade, a man you hated, a grave beneath an apple tree." Golyer breaks down and confesses that he killed Leon, burying him in the hole he had dug for "The Blood Seedling." Allen then rushes to "The Blood Seedling," while Gershom, again in a trance, writes hurriedly. When those present have read the paper, they rush to the Golyer farm to find Allen dead by his own hand. Thomas Santschi, who is also director, realizes all the possibilities of the part.

"AN UNWILLING THIEF"

(Edison-General—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

COLLEY CIBBER discovered that the theatre-going public had a taste all its own, and so the present reviewer would prefer to pass this picture along for the verdict of that public for which it is intended. There is so little to commend that the task of dissecting it presents no attraction.

THE DEATHBED CONFESSION

In the first place, the company has little opportunity to do anything. The story, credited to Mary Imlay Taylor, is hackneyed, and its lack of action is reinforced by trivial scenes which could easily have been edited out. It is the kind of a story which a free-lance writer would have been unable to sell, except by the rarest stroke of luck. A baby girl is kidnapped from her wealthy parents by a band of thieves, who plan to hold her for ransom. The shock kills her invalid mother, and the father institutes a thorough search, offering heavy rewards. Detectives trace the kidnappers, and there is a pursuit in which a police officer is shot, but the criminals escape, and without making any demand for the ransom, take the girl to Europe.

Fifteen years elapse, and the girl is being brought up as a thief. The band returns to this country, where the woman of the party, dying, tells the girl of her origin, but dies before she can tell her father's name. The girl escapes from the men who are directing her thieving energies, and goes to work as a kitchen maid. There she is found by a young lawyer friend of her father, and identification is established by a scar on her wrist. For his fee in reuniting the father and daughter, the lawyer asks nothing except the hand of the girl, whom he has known about twenty-four hours.

As Bab, the daughter, Loel Steuart is technically correct and pleasing to look at, but there is little feeling or artistry in her handling of the several situations. There is a big cast, and everybody does his or her best with what they have to work on. Herbert Prior, Marie Sasse, Harry Eytinge, Lillian Devere, Robert Harvey, George Romaine, Marjorie Ellison, Yale Benner, Lawrence White and James J. Gerson appear. The picture was directed by Langdon West.

"THE PURPLE NIGHT"

(Knickerbocker Star Feature—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IN this comedy-drama the beholder is introduced to Carol, an artist perched high in the ranks of society. She is terribly bored with the conventional existence that her position yields her. She seeks diversion, so, after a most boring tea, she takes a walk to cool her heated temper. In the park she is robbed, and one of the gang holds her while the other two escape. In her captor she sees what she believes to be a real man. She admires his strength and fearlessness, and so she invites him to come and pose for her.

The chance acquaintance ripens into a weird friendship. Carol accompanies her new-found companion, Billy, to all his vile haunts and sees vividly the wretched lives of the gangster, drug-fiend, street walker and murderer. In her innocence she glories in it. At last she begs to be allowed to witness a hold-up, so Billy and a few of his friends go to the park in search of prey. But before they are through they are forced to commit murder, and Carol thinks this is a little too much.

She forsakes her underworld companions and goes back to her old life. She meets a young inventor of high explosives and learns to love him. And then he tells her that if he ever catches the woman that was with the gang who killed his father, she will pay dearly for her associates' crime.

Then at last Carol realizes her foolish course. The inventor leaves her alone in his room for a minute, and before he returns a spy enters to steal a formula, and Carol, to save her lover's honor, and perhaps thinking it the easiest way out of the whole affair, touches a switch that blows the whole house, herself and the spy to ruins.

This story is unusual to be sure, but in some ways its unusualness is not pleasant. A society girl thinking it fun to associate with a gangster is rather an insincere proposition.

Florence Rockwell plays Carol. Miss Rockwell has the habit of gazing upwards when she desires to drive home any particular point. Noah Beery is Billy, Lionel Adams, a manly inventor, and Richard Carlyle the persistent suitor. Stanner E. V. Taylor directed.

"THE BARREN GAIN"

(American—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

PHILIP CAMERON, an author, through years of hard struggle has attained literary fame, but his close application to work has erected a barrier between him and his beautiful, pleasure-loving wife, Lois. Their child, Helen, a lovely girl of five, is about the only tie between them. At this crucial moment when Philip is longing for someone to share his dreams and ambitions, he receives a letter from an old friend asking him to look after his daughter, Meta, and develop whatever literary talent she has. He finds much pleasure in working with Meta and their similar tastes throw them almost constantly together. Their mutual attraction ripens into love, but for the sake of Helen they do not give in to their feelings. In the meantime the gulf between Philip and his wife is being widened by James Barr, who is persistently making love to Lois. Meta overhears Barr and Lois planning to elope and sacrificing her own love decides to stop this. Dr. Bainbridge, who as a frequent visitor to the Cameron home, has fallen in love with Meta, is taken into her confidence, and he administers a sleeping powder to Helen. Both Lois and Philip are summoned and told that Helen is seriously ill. Meta's ruse is successful.

HUSBAND AND WIFE ARE REUNITED

The cast which enacts this familiar theme includes Walter Spencer, Vivian Rich, Jack Richardson, Louise Lester, Nan Christy and Charles Bartlett.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR THE BUSY EXHIBITOR

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

"Love and Installments." (Federal. Week of Sept. 13.)—Smaltz and Fish, although roommates, are bitter rivals for the hand of Mabel. To make an impression, they both buy suits on the installment plan, and appear at a party given by Mabel. Fish knows that his friend is behind in his payments, and therefore telephones the tailor to take Smaltz's clothes away from him. But Smaltz overhears this, and surreptitiously exchanges installment cards with him. When the collector arrives he relieves Fish of his garments, and the denuded victim is forced to wrap a curtain around himself and flee out of the window.

One of the party believes the curtain-attired Fish to be a burglar, so a general chase ensues. Fish dives into the river, and Smaltz, losing his balance, also falls in. Al Ray and Will Rex play the principal roles.

"Fast and Furious." (Ramona. Two reels. Week of Sept. 13.)—Somewhat reminiscent of Chaplin's "The Champion" is this pugilistic comedy featuring Rube Miller. The world's heavyweight champion is made much of when he visits Boneville—even Rube's sweetheart is smitten by the fistic wonder. To humble the fighter, and to regain his girl's affections, Rube obtains a match with the champ., and while in training performs some superhuman feats of strength.

His unconventional methods in the ring, however, cause him to be called the loser on a foul. To retaliate, he turns a fire hose on the referee, seconds and fight fans, and amid the general discomfiture, takes his admiring girl back to his arms. Supporting Rube Miller are Alice Edwardes, Jack Clifford and Charles Newton.

"Curing Bill." (Banner. Week of Sept. 13.)—Bill is strong for eats and sleep, and his 300 pounds or more of avoirdupois prove that those things are good for him. But his unfeeling wife thinks that he should do some work occasionally—something that is throughly distasteful to Bill's nature. To escape her ire he feigns sickness, but when a doctor suggests operating he is galvanized into frantic action. From this time on he foreswears overdoses of Morpheus and pancakes. William Stringer is the corpulent husband, and Myrtle Pippin plays the role of the exacting wife.

"For His Wife's Sake." (Navajo. Two reels. Week of Sept. 13.)—The new cowboy on the Bar X ranch is considered a poor sport and a "tight-wad" by the other men because he saves his money and doesn't mix in the pay-day sprees. They do not know that he is saving every cent to pay for an operation on his invalid wife, whom he left in the East. When this fact is discovered everybody chips in and the necessary money is sent to the wife without the husband's knowledge.

He, in desperation, holds up a stage coach to get money, but discovering a letter in the mail bag, addressed to him, acknowledging the receipt of the doctor's fee, leaves the booty. The operation is successful, and the recovered wife joins her now popular husband. William Parsons, Charles K. French and Lucille Younge create the important roles.

"His Masterpiece." (Liberty. Two reels. Week of Sept. 13.)—Marvin, a playwright, has just finished his masterpiece, the production of which will enable him to marry Estelle, the girl he loves. Higgins, a supposed friend, reads the play, and to gain fame as a writer, as well as to win Estelle, hires thugs to shanghai Marvin. This crime is committed, and the author is reported as drowned. Estelle soon forgets him and gives her affections to Higgins, the much lauded author of the stolen play.

Marvin manages to escape from the vessel by swimming, and returning home discovers the shallowness of Estelle's love. He proves his right to his masterpiece, and marries Mary, the daughter of his landlady, who has loved him in silence. By chance, Higgins is shanghaied by the same foot-pads that he had paid to kidnap Marvin. True Boardman and Emory Johnson play the parts of Marvin and Higgins.

"The Price She Paid." (Santa Barbara. Two reels. Week of Sept. 13.)—When the employer discovers that his trusted clerk has forged his name, he promises to overlook the crime if the man's wife makes a settlement that compromises her honor. The husband tries to shoot the tempter, but is overpowered. The woman, desiring to save her husband from the penitentiary, drugs him, and goes to the man's house to pay the price. She finds him dead—shot down by a thief—and being discovered there, is found guilty of murder and is sentenced for life. The husband reads in his wife's absence her yielding to the other man, and so leaves for the West.

A lapse of ten years finds the woman pardoned and working as a nurse. The first case she attends is that of the real murderer. He writes a confession of his guilt. In the adjoining room the runaway husband is recognized by his wife and the situation is explained. John Prescott plays the husband, and Fritzie Brunette is the wife.

"A Shattered Romance." (Deer. Two reels. Week of Sept. 13.)—Lillian Wiggins, a society girl, becomes infatuated with Jack Bryce, an artist. While painting her portrait, he proposes and is accepted. Soon after the betrothal Lillian comes upon a little girl fighting with an eagle. The child explains that the bird has carried off her little brother. When Lillian takes the girl home she discovers that Bryce is the child's father. Lillian accuses Bryce of being married, and he, overcome with remorse, asks his wife's forgiveness.

The scenes showing the eagle making away with the baby and fighting with the girl are novel and exciting. Lillian Williams, Jack Bryce and Phylis Gray play the leads.

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"Behind the Mask." (Biograph. One reel. Mon., Sept. 20.)—This is a rather clever drama of mistaken identities. Mrs. Rathborne's maid, a crook in disguise, ascertains what costumes the daughter and her lover will wear at the masked ball. She then duplicates them for herself and an accomplice. By making love to the Rajah of Ramptura, she steals his famous ruby. Miss Rathborne's lover, who has seen the maid in the Rajah's arms, chances to be at the meeting place, and she gives him the ruby. Miss Rathborne, in the meantime, has seen the intoxicated accomplice, and believing him to be her fiance, is heartbroken; while her lover, deeming her false, is astounded to learn that she is also a thief. The tangle is finally unravelled and the crooks are captured.

Isabel Rea, Herbert Barrington, Edward Cecil, Claire McDowell, and Hector V. Sarno comprise the cast.

"And by These Deeds." (Biograph. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 21.)—Bill Hudges, a clever second-story worker, is packing his tools preparatory to "doing a job," when he hears a child crying downstairs. Investigating, he discovers that it is the Widow Callahan's crippled daughter. Bill's heart is touched, and he promises the child all the toys she wants. To make his promise good, he breaks into the Fifth avenue mansion of the millionaire, Stanley Biggins. While he is helping himself to some toys for the Callahan children, little Miss Biggins comes on the scene, and insists on going back with him to see the Callahans.

In mortal fear of the police, Bill complies, and they all have the time of their lives. Next morning, the burglar telephones the police that the child is safe, and following the clue, the detectives cause his arrest. Miss Biggins, however, makes her father square it with the police.

The cast consists of Ivan Christy, Zoe Bech, Laura La Varnie, Joseph McDermott, and Mary Malatesta. The directing is by Wray Physioc.

"A Kentucky Episode." (Biograph. One reel. Thurs., Sept. 23.)—Tom Theron kills the judge who sentenced his father to prison. Jack Benson, sweetheart of the judge's daughter, is a witness of the crime. The Theron gang warns him to leave the town, and in the next township he meets the judge's widow and daughter. The girl upbraids him for cowardice when she discovers his knowledge of the crime. Her information comes through a note sent by the Therons to Jack, telling him to move on. Stung by the girl's scorn, Benson returns and attacks the Therons. Badly wounded, he is about to be overwhelmed, when help, summoned by the girl, arrives.

Charles Perley, Jack Mulhall and Augusta Anderson form the cast.

"An Unseen Enemy." (Biograph. Fri., Sept. 24.)—A reissue of a picture made about three years ago, which has several features of especial interest. In the first place, it is a good film, and it is the first picture in which Lillian and Dorothy Gish appeared. It also shows the hand of Griffith in the direction. The story will be recalled as that of a brother and two young sisters, who place a small amount of money in the safe at home. In the brother's absence, the servant summons a crook friend, and the two cow the sisters with a revolver while they blow open the safe. The brother, warned by telephone, commandeers an automobile, which dashes to the house, running onto a moving drawbridge, and brushing aside the safety gates. Assisting the Gish girls is Elmer Booth, who was killed in an automobile accident last summer, Robert Harron, Harry Carey and Walter Miller.

"The Girl Who Didn't Forget." (Biograph. One reel. Sat., Sept. 25.)—The village grocery clerk is anxious to marry the girl he loves, but she declares that he must first achieve independence. She goes to the city and becomes a dramatic star. Her lover has also gone to the city, and becomes the trusted employee of a large firm. Through a mistake they lose track of each other, until he recognizes her in the theatre. He ventures behind the screens, and she greets him affectionately. This arouses the jealousy of his employer's son, who has lavished gifts on her, and when a shortage in the firm's accounts is discovered, he accuses his new rival. But the girl establishes her lover's innocence of the charge, and proves the other stole the money to buy her costly presents.

Helen Bray takes the part of the girl, Jack Mulhall is her lover, and Alan Hale is her suitor.

"Cartoons in a Seminary." (Edison. Wed., Sept. 22.)—One of those ridiculous comedies made solely to be laughed at, and entirely successful, as it will divert any audience. The locale is simply a means of introducing a series of Raoul Barre's animated cartoons. A young man climbs over the walls of a girls' seminary to call on his sweetheart, and is compelled to hide in a rainbarrel, leaving his book of cartoons behind. The preceptress finds and thoroughly enjoys the animated drawings.

"Her Happiness." (Edison. Three reels. Fri., Sept. 24.) Reviewed in the issue of September 18.

"A Mansion of Tragedy." (Essanay. Three reels. Mon., Sept. 13.)—A species of the modern love tangle—with variations. Mrs. Kelsey, made wealthy through the death of her husband, brings up her daughter, Nell, and her adopted daughter, Hester, in luxury. Price Oswald drops into the plot, more or less out of the sky, wins Hester's love, only to cast her aside when he finds out she is not the heiress. Mrs. Gelsey succeeds in getting the Prince married to Nell, and Hester married to Baldwin, a friend of the family. The Prince, however, keeps up his love-making to Hester, and is discovered by Baldwin, whereupon a struggle ensues in which an accidentally discharged revolver kills the Prince.

"Dreamy Dud, Cowbody." (Essanay. One reel. Wed., Sept. 15.)—Five hundred feet of scenic is included in this installment of living cartoons by Wallace A. Carlson. "Dreamy Dud" becomes a cowboy attired in a regulation "Broncho Billy" outfit. Hig dog "Wag" is transformed into a blooded steed, and Dreamy, racing over hill and dale, sees a fair maiden about to be tomahawked by an Indian. Dreamy performs the rescue act, but the Indian refuses to stay killed, and is just shaking the life out of Dreamy when the latter is told by his mother that it is time to get up.

"Broncho Billy and the Lumber King." (Essanay. One reel. Wed., Sept. 15.)—G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton are the principals in this Western melodrama, which does not differ greatly from the usual "Broncho Billy" thriller. This time Billy, a ranger, saves the girl from the cruelty of her father, leader of the lumber thieves. When Billy departs, the father follows him and, catching him unawares, forces him to go to the thieves' rendezvous. The thieves are about to shoot the ranger when the sheriff, summoned by the girl, rushes up with his aides and rescues him. Billy and the girl pledge their love.

"Mustaches and Bombs." (Essanay. One reel. Thurs., Sept. 16.)—There are plenty of chases in this farce, which is built on the following slender plot: Hubby, terrified by a supposed Black Hand placard in front of his house, remembers having seen some mustached men wandering about that morning. Every person with a package frightens him. A man with a mustache hands him a round object; Hubby hurls it back, and the race is on. A policeman breaks the object over Hubby's head. It is a cabbage. Hubby goes home only to find his wife ill, with a mustached doctor in attendance. Just as he is binding and gagging the stranger, a group of persons returns, asks for the placard, telling Hubby they are motion picture actors. Bud Jamison, Marjorie Reiger and Jack Pollard play the leads.

"The Scapegoat." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., Sept. 18.)—This is a typical melodrama of the underworld drawing-room variety, built for thrills. Virginia Dalmar, actress, weds Victor Thompson, banker, over the protest of Ezra, Victor's brother. Dick, Virginia's scapegoat brother, appeals to his sister for aid after a shooting affray in which he is the principal. Virginia meets Dick in a cafe, and just as she is leaving, Ezra happens in, and insists upon accompanying her home. Dick arrives just as Ezra attempts to kiss Virginia. A fight ensues and Ezra is killed. Virginia, on trial for the murder, is about to be found guilty, when Dick, fatally injured in a fight with a gambling opponent, is dragged into the courtroom, where he makes a dying confession. Bryant Washburn, Edna Mayo, Hugh E. Thompson and Mark J. Ellison make the most of the plot.

"The Circular Path." (Essanay. Three reels. Mon., Sept. 20.)—Will probably be reviewed in the issue of October 2.

"The Call of the Sea." (Essanay. Three reels. Tues., Sept. 21.)—This drama presents a hackneyed theme, atoned for by excellent photography in the shape of views of the sea. It was taken by Joseph Byron Totten on the Atlantic Coast. The girl weds a fisherman against her wealthy father's wishes, and is disowned. She becomes ill, and the father, relenting, sends his yacht after a noted surgeon who alone can save the girl's life. The yacht is lost for a time in a storm, but finally reaches port, and the girl's life is saved.

"The Fable of the Through Train." (Essanay. One Reel. Wed., Sept. 22.)—A George Ade comedy with this moral: When Wealth walks in at the Door, the Press Agent comes in through the Window. Two high school girls, Lib (Anna May Walthall) and Angie (Anizette Moore) wed Otis (Willie Belmont) and Wilbur (Eugene Acker) respectively. Otis makes a success financially; Wilbur does not. Thereupon it is up to Lib to console Angie. She does. And a well-preserved bachelor who happens along aids the scheme.

"Snakeville's Hen Medic." (Essanay. One reel. Thurs., Sept. 23.)—This slapstick will appeal to picture-goers who are not yet wearied of seeing victims locked in an office and smoked out by the old device of covering up the chimney. Of course, the constable arrives, and pokes his rifle through the window, only to have the shell extracted by one of the victims, who places it in the stove. The place is promptly blown up, whereupon the gentleman on the roof falls into a watering-trough, which serves as the scene of his arrest, and the victims climb out from under the wreckage.

"The Call of the Dance." (Kalem. Four reels. Mon., Sept. 20.)—Reviewed in the issue of Sept. 11.

"Double-Crossing Marmaduke." (Kalem. One reel. Tues., Sept. 21.)—In this startling comedy, Bud Duncan appears without his old side-partner, Ham. In protecting a wealthy young woman (Ethel Teare) he becomes involved with a bold, bad gang, but he outwits them. The gang steals the girl's jewel case, but after great tribulation Bud recovers it, to find it empty. The girl then shows him the rings had never left her fingers. Others in the cast are L. Trembly, Dave Morris and Margaret Keyes.

"The Wolf's Prey." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 22.)—This episode of the Mysteries of the Grand Hotel is ingenious but rambling, with a lot of wasted footage. Ollie Kirkby, as the giddy wife of a traveling man, is left alone in the hotel, and forms the acquaintance of Langdon, who occupies an adjoining room. A letter to her husband is intercepted by Langdon, who, using it as a blackmailing weapon, rifles her room and steals a necklace. She defies him, and notifies the hotel detective, but the necklace cannot be found. By clever strategy, the woman detective discovers the hiding place, and the necklace. In the cast are William H. West, Frank Jonasson and Marin Sais.

"A Daughter's Sacrifice." (Kalem. One reel. Fri., Sept. 24.)—Alice Joyce, in this re-issue, portrays the daughter of a drunkard, who in order to save her father, sacrifices her love for a young farmer and weds the landlord. Her husband plans to elope with another girl, but in the meantime discovers his wife gazing longingly at a photograph of her real love, and in a rage attacks her. The young farmer is close at hand, and interposes, and a shot, intended by the brutal husband for the intruder, strikes the husband and kills him. Others in the cast are Tom Moore, George Middleton, Stuart Holmes and Hazel Heason.

"A Matter of Seconds." (Kalem. One reel. Sept. 25.)—Helen Holmes does several feats of daring in this episode of the Hazards of Helen. A new fireman, who has made himself objectionable, and has been thrashed and discharged, attacks the engineer of a freight train, throws him out of his cab, and leaves the train to run wild. Notified by a lineman, Helen gallops alongside the train on horseback. With a lasso she catches a projecting beam on a lumber car, swings herself aboard, and making her way to the cab, stops the runaway. Helen Holmes is assisted by Robyn Adair and E. Z. Roberts.

"The Eternal Feminine." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 20.)—A story of politics and a strong man's love, this drama is well acted and will be welcomed by theatre patrons who love a good plot and vivid characterization. John Strong and Charles Phillips are rivals for the hand of Helen. Strong is an anti-suffragist candidate for governor, and Phillips is a social butterfly. Helen, though herself a suffragist, is attracted to Strong when she hears him deliver a speech. He is elected. Helen, at a reception given by a wealthy widow who secretly loves Strong, rejects Strong's proposal of marriage, but after a moonlight reverie which takes her back to the Stone Age and shows her a romance of Strong-arm, Queen Helen, the weakling and the widow, she reconsiders and accepts Governor-Elect Strong. The wealthy widow and Phillips exchange a glance of understanding, and softly steal away. Vivian Reed, Al Filson, Joe King, Earle Fox and Viola Albert are the cast.

"The Range Girl and the Cowboy." (Selig. One reel. Tues., Sept. 21.)—Tom Mix wrote and produced this Western drama, in which Buck, the foreman, loses his job because of his unwelcome attentions to Vicky, daughter of the ranch owner. Tom gets the position, and Buck, resolved to get even with his former employer, starts to "rustle" the latter's cattle. Vicky discovers Buck and the other outlaws at their nefarious work, is made prisoner by them and later rescued by Tom after an exciting revolver duel. Vicky and Tom pledge their love. The cast, headed by Tom Mix and Victoria Forde, make the most of this theme.

"The Auction Sale of Rundown Ranch." (Selig One reel. Sat., Sept. 25.)—Goldpate, prospecting for oil on the worthless land of Bill Herrick, spies oil scattered on the ground, and offers $5,000 for the property. He finds out too late that the oil was spilled from a broken demijohn. Goldpate starts for town to stop payment on the check, but Tom Hickey, the ranch foreman, forestalls him and gets the check cashed. Whereupon Herrick gives Tom and Vicky, Herrick's daughter, a thousand dollars each with which to start housekeeping. This comedy-drama was produced by Tom Mix, who also heads the cast.

"Willie Stayed Single." (Vitagraph. Mon., Sept. 20.)—A good comedy showing the adventures of a tramp who marries a widow for the sake of getting something to eat. But in one of his meals he gets soft soap instead of soup and so makes a hasty exit. This was made by the Western Vitagraph company and in the leading roles are George Stanley and Gretchen Lederer.

"Dorothy." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 21.)—A heart-interest drama with Maurice Costello and Leah Baird heading the cast. Dorothy's father has been robbed of an invention by her lover's father, who has become rich on his ill-gotten gains. Dorothy discovers this and denounces her father's betrayer. He dies of a stroke of apoplexy and Tom, the lover, pays his father's debt.

"Getting Rid of Aunt Kate." (Vitagraph. Wed., Sept. 22.)—Aunt Kate arrives and creates an uproar in what was before a peaceful home. Even Jones himself is unable to snatch a moment's rest, to say nothing of the domestic torture inflicted on his two daughters and their sweethearts, but at last they get rid of her by marrying her off to poor deluded Old Bill. Kate Price is in this laugh-maker, supported by Mary Anderson, Jewel Hunt, Harry Fisher, Frank Kingsley and Frank Bunny.

"The Lesson of Narrow Street." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Sept. 23.)—This is a most interesting and clever drama written by Catherine Carr. A young artist invests his funds in a bucket shop. Coming away from the office he meets Sheldon, known as the King of Wall Street. Sheldon is dressed in shabby clothes and the artist requests that he pose for a painting, "What Wall Street Does to a Man." Sheldon takes a liking to the artist and when his meagre pile is swept away he reimburses him, makes known to him his real identity and makes him promise never to dabble in the market again. S. Rankin Drew and Edward Elkas play the leads in this drama.

"Back to the Primitive." (Vitagraph. Fri., Sept. 24.)—What better stamp for a comedy than the name of Sidney Drew? Here he and Mrs. Drew appear in an uproarious picture by Agnes C. Johnston. They have recently married, and he believes in the "back to nature" theory; so back they go. But she dislikes it to such an extent that she soon cures her husband of his idea in a delightfully funny way. This is a real comedy like the other Drew pictures.

"From Out the Big Snows." (Vitagraph. Three reels. Sat., Sept. 26.)—Reviewed at length in issue of Aug. 21.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Twins of the G. L. Ranch." (Thanhouser. Sun., Sept. 19.)—This is an excellent vehicle for the work of the Fairbanks twins, for which purpose it was created. The two girls are exceedingly pretty, and their work has a dash and go which is well adapted to the western type of drama. In this picture they are seen in breakneck horseback rides, and races through the underbrush to save their crippled father's money from two bandits. The scenic effects add greatly to the beauty of the picture.

"The Doll House Mystery." (Reliance. Two reels. Sun., Sept. 19.)—A little girl's prank casts suspicion on an innocent man, who narrowly escapes death at the hands of a posse. A rich man's daughter takes a pile of bonds from the library table, and she and a boy playmate, the son of an ex-convict, use them to paper her doll's house. The girl gives some of the bonds to the boy, who carries them home. A detective, engaged when the owner misses the bonds, traces the boy home, and the ex-convict, although innocent, seizes the boy and flees. After a dramatic fight, he takes refuge in an abandoned house, which is surrounded, and firing begins, when the little girl reveals the whereabouts of the bonds. Her father hurries to the abandoned house just in time to save the besieged man's life. In the cast are Charles Gorman, Georgie Stone, Carmen de Rue, Jack Hull, Margaret Marsh and Ben Lewis.

"Simon's Swimming Soul Mate." (Falstaff. Mon., Sept. 20.)—Susie's only course to the altar lies in gluing father to a chair and eloping with Simon. The couple flee by motorcycle and carriage, and reach the office of the justice of the peace only to find that he has gone fishing. There is no time to lose, so they plunge into the surf and start for his boat, followed by life guards. The guards catch up with them as they are clinging to the boat, and are pressed into service as witnesses. The cast includes Carey Hastings and Riley Chamberlain.

"The Dead Man's Keys." (Thanhouser. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 21.)—This is another murder mystery, revolving around the old thumb-print, and that newer device, used in "Within the Law," a Maxim silencer on a pistol—which does not exist. A financier is found dead in his office, and a young clerk accused. He is freed from suspicion only in the court room, where thumb-prints on the wax impression of a key convict the chief clerk. Bert Delaney, Ernest Howard and Riley Chamberlain head the cast.

"Everyheart." (Beauty. Tues., Sept. 21.)—In this modern adaptation of the old morality play, common personal characteristics such as kindness, anger, jealousy, etc., are made personified abstractions. In the beginning Everyheart comes from the realm of Spirit. Upon entering the world, he gradually learns the ways of the world, and falling in love with Woman, they are married. Later he becomes neglectful, and grows unkind. This nearly causes Woman's death, but she is saved by the treatment of Kindness, and their vanished Happiness returns.

Webster Campbell is Everyheart, and Neva Gerber plays the Woman. Others in the cast are William Carroll and John Sheehan. Archer MacMackin is responsible for the directing.

"The Pool Sharks." Gaumont. Sun., Sept. 19.)—Not shown for review.

"The Lilliputian's Courtship." (Novelty. Mon., Sept. 20.)—Not shown for review.

"Con, the Car Conductor." (Falstaff. Thurs., Sept. 23.)—Not shown for review.

"Busy Izzie." (Gaumont. Fri., Sept. 24.)—Not shown for review.

"A Disciple of Nietzsche." (Thanhouser. Three reels. Sat., Sept. 25.—Not shown for review.

"Kidnapped at the Church." (Mutual. Sun., Sept. 26.)—Not shown for review.

"The Miracle." (Thanhouser. Sun., Sept. 26.)—Not shown for review.

"Never Again." (Kay-Bee. Wed., Sept. 22.)—We have in this a rather tense and active comedy. A society girl, invited to a week end in a Catskill camp, misses her train, and arrives later, to find the station deserted. She walks to the camp, where everybody has retired, and in trying to get in, is mistaken for a burglar, and fired at. She escapes and flees back to the station, arriving there coincidently with a bear who is pursued by hunters. Climbing to the station roof, she vows never again to leave the city. Leona Hutton, Harry Keenan, Jack Hamilton and Virginia Philly are in the cast.

"It Was Like This." (American. Sat., Sept. 24.)—Adams is hoping for a son on the same night that "Spider" Barlow plans to rob the Adams' house. "Spider" climbs in, but is cornered by the maid. Adams comes in and explains the need for quiet, and leaves the maid on guard with a gun. The burglar takes the gun away from her, gags her, and rifles the house. When the doctor comes the crook admits him, and removing the maid's gag long enough to kiss her several times, he departs in the doctor's limousine with the doctor's coat and bag.

Edward Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood are excellent in their interpretations of the leading roles. They are supported by George Field, Lizette Thorne and Robert Klein.

"Cats, Cash and a Cook Book." (Beauty. Thurs., Sept. 25.)—Through his wife's extravagance, Jeremiah Brown, a broker, needs $5,000 to tide him over a crisis. He asks his Aunt Clarinda for the money, but she has just endowed a home for stray cats. She promises to visit him and bring a jewel of great price. This gem turns out to be a cook book. Hearing of the jewel, a burglar tries to find it, but Aunt Clarinda captures him and gets the $5,000 reward, which she gives to her nephew.

John Stepling, Bessie Banks, Nan Christy and Dick Rosson all contribute to the fun of the comedy.

"Merely Players." (Reliance. Two reels. Sun., Sept. 26.)—A rambling plot which arrives nowhere in particular, and gets there late, is the feature of this comedy. A stranded theatrical troupe decides to stage a "fake" holdup of its leading lady, for the sake of publicity. The holdup is spoiled by a village swain, who adores Miss Limelight, and is not in the publicity secret. The village editor refuses to print the story, as agreed, unless the actress completes her rescue by marrying the swain. This she does, and immediately after is wired that a booking has been obtained for her in a New York theatre. She brings her husband along, and he is engaged for another part, that of protecting the heroine from the advances of the villain. As the villain is the man who obtained the booking for the actress, the husband has some real protecting to do. The cast includes "Billie" West, Charles West, Frank Bennett, Howard Gaye, Harry Moody and Wilbur Higby.

"The Treasure Box." (Cub. Fri., Sept. 24.)—Jerry again has an active afternoon, beginning with the discovery of a roll of bills and a reward of a quarter from the grateful owner. He tries to spend the quarter in a restaurant, but it is stolen, and he has to make a run for it. Hiding under a cafe table, he hears the plans of two blackmailers. The blackmailers, routed by the police, throw their infernal machine under the table, and Jerry seizes it. Later he is taken home by Colonel Biff, and put to work. The machine explodes, clearing the stage effectually. When the dust settles Jerry is seen hanging from a chandelier. Assisting George Ovey in the cast are Louis Fitzroy, Janet Sully, Goldie Colwell, Gordon MacGregor, Jefferson Osborne and Ray Lincoln.

"The Woman, the Lion and the Man." (Centaur. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 23.)—Extended review of this picture will appear in the issue of Oct. 2.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC.

"Neal of the Navy," No. 4. (Panama-Pathé.)—In this episode, entitled "The Tattered Parchment," we have Annette (Lillian Lorraine) rescued from her burning home and in the power of Hernandez and his fellow conspirators. A detachment of U. S. Marines appears and rescues Annette, chasing Hernandez to the roof of the Lonesome Cove Inn. By one of the most thrilling and sensational jumps ever reproduced by the camera, he escapes, and makes his way to the shore, where he and his companions get away in a motor boat. William Courtleigh, Jr., as Neal, Ed. Brady and Henry Stanley are also in the cast.

"Toilers of the Sea." (Pathé. Three reels.)—This is a dramatic story of love in a fishing village, which not only triumphed, but healed old sores, and ended a feud of years' standing. It has the charm of the salt air tang, and the characters are real, and the story logical. The cast, composed of Gordon Sackville, Dorothy Davenport, Fred Whitman, Philo McCollough and Joyce Moore, is capable and convincing.

Mildred Bruce is in love with George Scott, but the two families are at swords points, and the wedding is forbidden. Bruce desires that his daughter shall marry Capt. Dennison, and the latter conspires to make young Scott appear a thief. He is arrested, but released on bail, and, with his mother, kidnaps and marries Mildred. They return for forgiveness, but the elder Bruce will not relent, until he meets Scott, his ancient enemy, on the beach, where the old feud is patched up.

"Jocko the Lovesick Monk." (Pathé. Split Reel.)—This is a ludicrous cartoon comedy. The Pathé people announce that they even laughed at it themselves, and they had two excellent reasons: it is really funny, and looks like a money-getter. It is by J. R. Bray, and on the same reel is Part Seven of "An Intimate Study of Birds," showing carrier pigeons in flight, and in races.

"Pathé News," No. 72. (Pathé.)—New second level tracks built over Ninth Avenue "L" railroad, New York; relaying the famous steps to the Capitol at Washington; world's bicycle championship races at Newark; steamship rammed and partially sunk at Seattle pier; features of horse show at Rochester, N. Y.; classic barefoot dances by social leaders at Los Angeles; Pathé American fashions; Cartoon—Dr. Worsen Plumber concocts a new explosive.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

Animated Weekly, No. 184. (Wed., Sept. 15.)—Ex-Governor Slaton of Georgia at Universal City; the new national golf champion, Robert A. Gardner; Cardinal Gibbons leaing the White House after a conference with President Wilson; the surviors from the S. S. Arabic reach Queenstown; Italians departing for the war from Brooklyn, N. Y.; W. M. Johnston, the new national tennis champion, and Hy Mayer's cartoons are the most interesting events in this number. There are others, however, which make the entire reel very entertaining.

"Under Southern Skies." (Broadway Universal Feature. Five reels. Mon., Sept. 20.)—Reviewed at length in issue of August 28.

"It Almost Happened." (Nestor. Mon., Sept. 20.)—A four-cornered comedy laid in that convenient motion picture stage, the summer hotel. Both husbands and both wives are extremely jealous. Compromising positions are manufactured from innocent tete-a-tetes until finally they all get together and effect a reconciliation. It's quite a funny picture, although easily surmisable from the very first scenes. Lee Moran, Neal Burns and Billie Rhodes are the leads.

"The Tenor." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Sept. 21.)—This is a strong drama of unusual merit in practically every respect. It was written by F. McGrew Willis and produced by Leon Kent. Hobart Henley is featured in a dual role, a physician and a singer, twin brothers. The physician's wife drives him to drug by her extravagant demands. They separate and immediately the woman entrances the singer, but the ruined husband lays bare her true character to his brother and causes him to return to the girl he really loves.

Gretchen Lederer and Carmen Phillips appear to good advantage in their respective roles of the extravagant wife and the singer's helpmate. The three reels offer a wide variety of scenes from Italy's pretty country to the opera house in an American metropolis. Everything is good about the direction save for the appearance of a most plainly artificial back-drop.

"His Home Coming." (Imp. Tues., Sept. 21.)—This is the familiar story of the husband returning to find another family occupying his house, his wife having moved next door. George Lessey wrote and produced it, making a thoroughly enjoyable comedy from the hackneyed theme. King Baggot, always a favorite, is cast as the husband, Marie Wierman is his wife, while others are Ned Reardon and Miss Spencer.

"A Scandal in the Family." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 22.)—Several lovers, several sweethearts and several combats in this two-reel slapstick number. Contained in the cast are Hank Mann, Gertrude Selby, May Emory and Reggie Morris. It has some funny stuff in it and nothing deliberately vulgar, although we believe it would be kindlier received if Hank had been given more to do.

"Not a Lamb Shall Stray." (Victor. Wed., Sept. 22.)—A picture taken in a New York Hebrew Infant Asylum showing the care of infants and their amusements.

"The Cry of the First Born." (Laemmle. Three reels. Thurs., Sept. 23.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Ham Actors." (Powers. Thurs., Sept. 23.)—Another of the vaudeville sketches taken on the stage, showing the amusing antics of trained pigs. This should be of particular interest to children. The reel is closed with a subject entitled "Life of the Frog," a Ditmars educational.

"When the Call Came." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 24.)—This was produced by Sidney Goldin from one of Bruno Lessing's stories. Mr. Lessing has written an intense tale about the immovable barrier that stood between a Christian and a Jewess, greally in love with one another. It should appeal to both races, without giving offence to either. Produced with evident attention to detail and customs of both religious sects dealt with, the picture entertains at all times. Our only criticism of the picture is that the man in the case, who represents a minister, possesses pronounced Jewish features.

"When Lizzie Went to Sea." (Nestor. Fri., Sept. 24.)—Lizzie and Eddie have all sorts of ridiculous adventures in this while escaping from the avenging wrath of Tony, the wop. Here the old triple combination gets together—Eddie Lyons, Victoria Forde and Lee Moran—and the result is very good comedy.

"A Message for Help." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Sept. 25.)—This is an Indian drama of more than usual significance. It has the usual accoutrements of such a production—several realistic fights, fine expansive scenes and a true Western atmosphere. The story is notable for its heart-interest qualities. Richards, working for the Government in the West, betrays a pretty Indian girl. When her father discovers that the white man was merely playing with his daughter he attempts to kill him, but instead the arrow finds its resting place in the heart of the girl. If Indian dramas still retain their popularity this should score a success.

"Every Man's Money." (Powers. Sat., Sept. 25.)—The girl, spurred on by her aspiring guardian, marries a rich man for his money, but shortly afterwards discovers that his fortune has been swept away. Then, of course, she discovers that she really loves him and everything is satisfactory. This is from a scenario by Harvey Gates and features Sydney Ayres and Doris Pawn. It is a typical Ayres subject as presented under the direction of Lynn Reynolds.

"He Wouldn't Support His Wife." (Joker. Sat., Sept. 25.)—One of Allen Curtis' genuinely funny reels with William Franey, Gale Henry and Bob Vernon. The lazy husband is forced to work by his wife's former sweetheart, the chief of police. The closing scenes introduced several situations of the most humorous sort.

"The Fascination of the Fleur de Lis." (Rex. Three reels. Sun., Sept. 26.)—An effective drama written by Bess Meredith. The photographic work and scenes, all of which transpire in a mythical European country, are exceedingly good. Joe De Grasse produced it so the beautiful locations are easily accounted for. The story relates of the lofty ambitions of a peasant girl, how they were attained but with disgrace, and how she finally returns to the man she first loved. In the leading roles are Cleo Madison, Arthur Shirley, Lon Chaney and M. K. Wilson.

"Avenged By a Fish." (L-Ko. Sun., Sept. 26.)—A seaside comedy with Harry Gribbon, May Emory and Henry Bergman leading. It's a fairly good reel, although nothing uproariously funny is introduced.

To PRODUCERS and their PUBLICITY REPRESENTATIVES DIRECTORS PLAYERS CAMERA MEN

¶ Do not confuse the AUTHORIZED STUDIO DIRECTORY issue of Motion Picture News (to be published in October) with ordinary professional advertising.

¶ The prime purpose of this directory is to place your name, in connection with each picture, before the public—

—through the exhibitor who will use the material in this issue to give to his newspaper each week together with his advertising copy

—through the motion picture page editors of the leading newspapers who rely upon Motion Picture News for their daily or weekly news matter.

¶ This will be a permanent, complete, ready-reference number, the publicity result of which will be million-fold newspaper circulation for the picture, its maker and all those prominently concerned in its production.

"THE RUNT"

A Story of The Sea

Written & Directed by Colin Campbell

A Selig Special in 2 Reels released in regular service Monday Sept. 27th Features Edith Johnson and Wheeler Oakman

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO. CHICAGO S

The Story of an EXHIBITOR

SINCE the day when first a "moving picture" was thrown on the screen the exhibitor has been tossed about by scores of various forces intent on gaining supremacy in the infant industry of America. Giant monopolies have been fighting for their manufacturing leadership. The exhibitor has been the last consideration—the exhibitor who is the prime factor in the whole chain—the exhibitor who knows the ultimate public and is to decide what shall be given.

No business in all the history of the world has gone through such transformations. There have been developments, evolutions, changes of all sorts. And they have come so rapidly that we have had—none of us—scarcely time to realize just what was happening.

It might be said that we have been working in a sort of fog. But, men with the interests of the exhibitor in mind have been gradually clarifying all the problems and after years of investigation have rebuilt the whole structure with the exhibitor as the prime factor.

The Associated Service has chosen to make the exhibitor the leading element of its distributing plans because it believes that in so doing it has won the confidence of the controlling elements of the business so that the Associated Service is bound to win an immediate showing.

This is what the Associated Service has done for the exhibitor:

It has brought together a group of producers of exceeding excellence, each manufacturing varied types of pictures essential to a well rounded and finely balanced program. These manufacturers have thrown together their sales problems and have co-operated in a mutual distributing channel, retaining for the pictures the majority of the appropriation and cutting the overhead to a trifling fraction of what it was before.

The roster of

Associated Exchanges

New York City—Variety Films Corporation, 126-132 West 46th St.
Washington, D. C.—Electric Theatre Supply Co.
Atlanta, Ga.—C. E. Buchanan, 65 Walton St.
Philadelphia, Pa.—Electric Theatre Supply Co., 13th and Vine Sts.
San Francisco, Cal.—Kulla & Cohen.
Salt Lake City, Utah—Exhibitors Film Exchange, Judge Bldg.
Los Angeles, Cal.—Kulla & Cohen.
Toledo, Ohio—Detroit-Kriterion Film Service, Inc., 428 Huron St.
Chicago, Ill.—Union Film Company, 164-166 W. Washington St.
Buffalo, N. Y.—Variety Films Corporation.
Detroit, Mich.—Detroit-Kriterion Film Service, 183 Jefferson Ave.
Boston, Mass.—Exchange to be announced next week.
Baltimore, Md.—Electric Theatre Supply Co.
Seattle, Wash.—Kulla & Cohen.
Pittsburg, Pa.—H. B. Miller, 1014 Empire Bldg.
Cleveland, Ohio—Exchange to be announced next week.
Columbus, Ohio—Asso. Film Co., 212 N. High St.

If your theatre is not covered get in touch with us direct.

¶ Big exchange men have an opportunity to fill in here where territory is not yet covered, but the exchange to meet with our requirements must be up to all the points indicated in this advertisement. If you are interested and think you are up to the mark, we believe we have a proposition that is second to none in the field today.

Mr. Exhibitor, if your territory is not represented by the above exchanges get in touch with us direct. Note the releases on the opposite page.

RESULT—Better pictures at lower prices for the exhibitor

Furthermore, the Associated Film has so limited its program that the Exhibitor can use it as the basis and the leader for every week's showing. The exhibitor's hands are not tied. He is at liberty to select additional features from the great thousands of pictures being made. He is not forced to shelve parts of his program that he is paying for, in order to do this. ¶ The pictures of the Associated Program are not fillers in any sense of the word, because they can be shown at any time as headliners. This program was laid out along exhibitor lines, with the exhibitor in mind, and the program was not made as a sure dumping ground for any productions thrown into it.

Moreover, Associated Program is bound to retain a certain standard of quality, because every picture is censored by a committee of all manufacturers represented, who, jealous of the general quality, will not permit a black sheep to enter the fold.

Further, Associated Service owns no Exchange except its central office. This means that no picture is thrown to a manager who must accept anything that comes, but is passed on by an independent owner who has his own standards and his own exhibitors to satisfy and who has in addition his own business to maintain.

But not only on quality of the pictures does this new arrangement rest. The exhibitor again has been kept in mind. There are no overhead charges to enter into the prices of the film for the exhibitor—no rents, salaries, tremendous organization plans. The independent exchange buys for you at the best possible price. Associated Service is the rebuilded structure of the entire motion picture fabric—distribution, manufacturing, advertising is now made with the exhibitor first in mind, the producer second and the exchange last.

4 Acts of Action!

"The Ploughshare"

Scenario by the noted popular story writer, Mary Imlay Taylor

featuring

GERTRUDE McCOY

and

ROBERT CONNESS

A drama of the old South, surging with deep-seated intrigue and swift-blooded action—a real plot of mighty interesting people, moving into a genuinely gripping story.

Augustus Phillips is especially well cast, in good support. Direction, John Collins, whose features have "gone big." Friday, October 1st.

Raymond McKee in a real funny comedy, "The Parson's Horse Race." 1000 feet. Direction, Will Louis. Wednesday, September 29th.

William Wadsworth and Richard Tucker in "The Butler." 1000 feet. Director Ridgewell. Saturday, October 2nd.

NOTICE!

F. O. NIELSEN Announces that

JUST OUT OF COLLEGE

GEORGE ADE'S splendid (5-reel) comedy will open at THE FINE ARTS THEATRE, CHICAGO, for an indefinite run at 25-50 and $1.00 prices Sept. 25.

Exhibitors in town should see it before booking; others can safely take my word that this is a good, clean comedy, that will be greatly appreciated by any audience anywhere.
Written by GEORGE ADE : : Produced by THE FROHMAN AMUSEMENT CORPORATION

The cast is headed by EUGENE O'BRIEN, formerly with CHARLES FROHMAN in "THE CELEBRATED CASE"; BEN HENDRICKS, known the world over as the star in "YON YONSON," and "A YENUINE YENTLEMAN"; JACK SHERRILL, a versatile actor; CHARLOTTE LAMBERT, who played in "OFFICER 666," "STOP THIEF," and other COHAN & HARRIS productions; MARIE EDITH WELLS, WRIGHT KRAMER, AMELIA SUMMERVILLE, GLADYS SCHULTZ and KATE JEPSON, all well known in Broadway and CHARLES FROHMAN productions.

FOR $5000 A YEAR

SO here then is a simple story lifted from the limping lives of the many millions. Love leans on love lounging down the laggard lane to the very lips of disaster's abyss, while rags rub ruffles with riches and knaves conspire to wreck the kith of Kings.

And in and out the scampering shuttle sings its wondrous way with warp and woof of tangled lives and weaves a teeming tale of trickery, tears and triumphs.

Why pay a fancy price for a projector when you can buy a 1916 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH for considerably less than other highly advertised machines; considering that its quality and projection will outclass that of any other manufacture today.

Don't purchase the first machine that you see. Inspect them all. The MOTIOGRAPH will tell facts and appeals to the operator as well as exhibitor, especially when compared with the high priced machines.

If your Dealer does not have a MOTIOGRAPH on his floor, write us. We can give you valuable information in regard to projecting machines.

Motion Picture Projection Simplified

20 I—Define and illustrate a rheostat having a portion of its resistance fixed and the balance constructed so as to be adjustable and connected in series with a projector arc, and give an example how to calculate the amount of resistance required.

Ans.—A rheostat within which a part of the resistance is fixed and the balance is made adjustable is termed an adjustable rheostat, and is now generally furnished as part of a complete modern motion picture machine equipment. The adjustable rheostat is really a necessity in places where the voltage delivered by the electric light company is subject to fluctuations and also for traveling exhibits where the operator has to connect on circuits carrying different voltages and in some instances on A. C., and in others on D. C.

The amount of the resistance within the rheostat which should be fixed and the part which should be adjustable varies for different classes of work. Under normal condition a twenty per cent. adjustment ought to be sufficient, but there are cases which the operator will meet where a forty per cent. adjustment is necessary.

Fig. 19 illustrates in diagrammatic form a rheostat within which about two-thirds of the resistance is fixed and the balance one-third is adjustable. As a matter of fact, I have included 10 volts extra resistance to allow for excessive voltage rise on the line so that the rheostat illustrated in Fig. 19 is really large enough for 120 volt line with a capacity of 40 amperes when used in conjunction with a 50 volt, 40 ampere arc, as illustrated in Fig. 19.

The calculation of the fixed part of the resistance can be completed by use of the same formula given in the previous answer, namely:—

$$R = \frac{E}{C}$$

Putting this formula into use for calculating the problem illustrated in Fig. 19, we proceed as follows:—

Voltage drop across the fixed resistance, 45, which, divided by the amperes flowing through the circuit 40, equals 1.125 ohms.

Continuing the calculation we determine the resistance of each adjustment step on the rheostat which gives a drop of 5 volts divided by the amperes 40, equals .125 ohms, there being five such sections in the adjustable part of the rheostat which may be cut in or cut out by means of the contact lever on the rheostat.

To put the actual voltage range of the rheostat illustrated in Fig. 19 into plain figures we find the following results, allowing 40 amperes through the arc with a drop of 50 volts:—

Lever on	1st	button	for	95	volt	line
"	" 2nd	"	"	100	"	"
"	" 3rd	"	"	105	"	"
"	" 4th	"	"	110	"	"
"	" 5th	"	"	115	"	"
"	" 6th	"	"	120	"	"

It is evident that if the line voltage is 110 and the rheostat contact is on button No. 4 there will be 40 amperes flowing through the arc, but with this same line voltage if the lever is put on button No. 5 there will be included .125 additional ohms resistance in series with the arc which will reduce the amperes at the arc correspondingly.

For the same reason should the lever be put on contact No. 3, there will be .125 ohms less resistance in series with the arc which will increase the amperes flowing through the circuit.

It is in this manner that an adjustable rheostat not only is useful to secure a steady amperage on different voltages, but it may also be used on a circuit having steady voltage to increase or decrease the amperes by cutting out or cutting in a portion of the resistance within the rheostat in series with the arc.

SPEER CARBON COMPANY SATISFIED WITH TESTS FOR QUALITY

THE Speer Carbon Company, of St. Mary's, Pa., has begun the manufacture of carbon electrodes for projectors in its new plant. This company built its first plant at St. Mary's in 1899, and it has been devoted almost entirely to the manufacture of dynamo brushes.

The Speer company has always held a position in the front rank among American brush manufacturers.

J. S. Speer, president of the company, has been successfully manufacturing carbon products for twenty-five years, beginning this work in company with J. Partridge, another pioneer in the carbon business. G. P. Fryling has been closely associated with Mr. Speer for thirteen years as secretary and treasurer of the Speer Carbon Company.

J. S. SPEER
President Speer Carbon Co.

Recently H. R. Edgecomb, who was with the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company as research engineer for seven years and who has specialized on carbon products, has taken up the engineering work on the Speer Carbon Company as chief engineer.

In order that the manufacture of Speer projector carbons should not be in any way confused with the brush manufacturing plant and to prevent contamination and intermixing of materials, the Speer Carbon Company has erected a modern factory, 60 x 200 feet, built for perfect illumination and ventilation, and arranged as a complete unit for the highest efficiency in the manufacture of Speer projector carbons.

This factory has been equipped with entirely new machinery throughout, most of which has been specially designed for the particular processes required in this manufacture. As soon as the business warrants it, the Speer company is prepared to add further sections to this factory so that they may have sufficient equipment to enable them to keep up with the demand for Speer projector carbons.

The Speer projector carbons are being tested in the Temple theatre at St. Mary's, Pa., managed by J. S. Speer, and a number of samples have been sent to several distributors for the purpose of making them acquainted with this new product prior to its commercial introduction.

G. P. FRYLING
Sec. and Treas. Speer Carbon Co.

In the Temple theatre exhaustive tests are continually in progress. The Speer company has spared no expense to equip this division of their testing department with efficient apparatus. Tests are being made to cover ampere hour life, illumination, color, amount of flickering and such other characteristics as affect the efficiency of projector carbons. The tests have shown conclusively that the new product of the Speer company comes up to the expectations of the officers of the company. It is the purpose of the Speer Carbon Company to continue testing its product, to insure a continuation of the same excellent quality which is now being maintained in the manufacture of Speer projector carbons.

THE INVENTION OF DUCTILE TUNGSTEN

By Herbert W. Andem

DR. WILLIAM D. COOLIDGE, assistant director of the research laboratory of the General Electric Company, has been recently honored by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences with the Rumford Medal. This medal was awarded Dr. Coolidge for his invention of ductile tungsten and its application in the production of radiation.

There have been few inventions that have had such a spontaneous and far-reaching effect upon the electrical industry as has the invention of ductile tungsten.

Like most other great accomplishments in the scientific world, ductile tungsten was only finally arrived at after a long and carefully thought-out series of investigations had been made, and many blind alleys were followed before a consistent and persistent research led to the results sought.

The results accomplished in this particular case are especially illuminating as showing the excellent work that is being done, and the valuable contributions that are being made to our scientific knowledge, through the medium of the Industrial Research Laboratory. Many great accomplishments have been brought out through this medium which, it is hard to believe, would have been achieved in any other way.

Tungsten Saves $1,000,000 a Day

The outcome of this work has been a revolution in the electrical incandescent lamp. In America alone approximately one hundred million incandescent lamps were made last year, and it is surely one of the romances of modern science when we consider that this work has led to so great an increase in the efficiency of the incandescent lamp that it has been estimated to save the public in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 a day.

It is on account of the wonderful economy secured by the modern incandescent lamp that the work of producing ductile tungsten will, for many years to come, be looked upon as one of the mile-stones of progress in the electrical industry.

The production of ductile tungsten with its valuable physical properties led to a search for new applications. One of the first of these was the substitution of tungsten for platinum as the target or anti-cathode in X-ray tubes.

The advantages of tungsten for this purpose have been so marked that it is now practically universally used in all high power tubes. Its superiority is due to its higher melting point, lower vapor pressure, and greater heat conductivity and its use has led to a marked increase in the intensity of the X-rays which can be produced.

Another interesting and important application of wrought tungsten is as a metal for the contact points in electric make-and-break devices, such as are used in automobile ignition systems and in voltage regulators. Tungsten has already very largely supplanted the platinum metals for this new purpose.

Founder of Research Fund

It may be of interest to the reader to note that the founder of the Rumford fund was Benjamin Thompson, one of the many illustrious men who have made the name of Thompson so famous in scientific spheres.

Benjamin Thompson was born in Woburn, Mass., in 1753, and died in France in 1814. He left America for England at the time of the Revolutionary War, and soon afterwards entered the service of Prince Maximilian of Bavaria, whose army he reorganized.

SPECIAL PROGRAM FOR JEFFERSON

JACK DELMAR, manager of the Jefferson theatre, Philadelphia, at Twenty-ninth and Dauphin streets, has engaged Professor Hartranft, a well-known musician, to operate the new Pilcher organ, just installed.

"BUILT BY BRAINS"

To the Film Manufacturer:
Why should you spend thousands of dollars constantly improving the quality of your negatives and positives to make the best film possible, if the film is to be reeled off in a theatre where good projection is impossible?

To the Camera and Projector Maker:
Why strive for better lenses, smoother action and more light when you know that poor projection surfaces may absorb all the light, or flare it back in a blazing glare and thus destroy all the efforts of your experts?

To Directors and Authors:
Why cudgel your brains planning beautiful light and scenic effects, or plotting tense, gripping action, if the screen which receives the result of your artistic efforts buries them all in smudgy pictures?

To Actors and Actresses:
Why rehearse for days those swift emotional facial changes which stamp you as artists, and make the distinction between stars and supers, if these swift changes die on the screen, never reaching the audience who expect them when you appear?

To the Exhibitor:
Why waste the combined efforts of all these workers and defeat your own ends, denying to your audience the effects for which thousands of brains are working?

This advertisement having appeared in a former issue is reproduced at the request of hundreds of manufacturers directors, artists and exhibitors to all these questions is this: Acquaint yourself with the Minusa Gold Fibre screen. Knowing it, you will insist upon its use.

E. R. Anderson

It is the screen that is "BUILT BY BRAINS" to fit your theatre. Three grades, each the best of its kind, 75, 50 and 35 cents the square foot.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

MERITS OF FLAT SCREEN SURFACES

E. B. D., Lisbon, O.—Our screen is 20 x 15, with about a fifty-feet throw. I have the screen curvel; "it being made of muslin upon a wooden frame," and get better results in the focus. Now what I want to know is this. To get the most perfect results in your focus shouldn't the screen be shaped like a saucer? See sketch Fig. 1.

That is, shouldn't all points on the screen be the same distance from the lense.

Of course I can only curve my screen the one way, but it makes a big difference.

Ans.—The screen which you suggest being constructed in a form like a saucer was put on the market by a company in Chicago a few years ago, and great claims were made for it, but as far as I can learn there are not any of such concave screens in use at this time. I should imagine that your screen merely being a section of a cylinder of large diameter would be practically the same as the slightly concave screen.

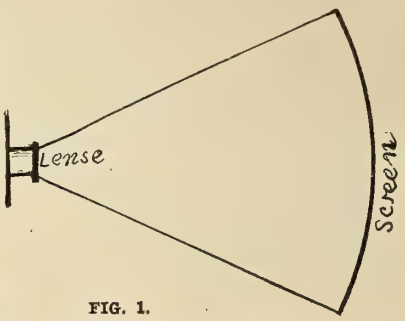

FIG. 1.

It is my personal opinion that when you use a perfect projector lense the flat screen surface, if it is placed at right angle relative to the line of projection will give perfect results and any surface which is not flat would under these circumstances be detrimental rather than beneficial.

It has been the aim of all lense manufacturers to produce photographic as well as projection lenses which will make a perfect image on a flat surface and a lense properly designed and corrected will do this. Therefore, I cannot see any advantage in the use of the concave or circular surface, such as you suggest. However, I should like to hear from others on this subject, and would like to hear from you again.

BAIRD, STANDARD AND EDISON MACHINES DESCRIBED

B. C., Minneapolis, Minn.—I have been reading your answers in the "Helps" department and therefore voice my queries.

Where can I secure an exact description of the mechanism of the Baird and Standard projectors; also of the new Edison Super Kinetoscope?

I have seen the Geneva intermittent advertised to have a ratio of movement of five to one. If the star envelops one-fourth of the cam, how can the ratio be greater than four to one? What is the exact width and diameter of the cam on the Motiograph and Simplex?

Ans.—For exact description of the Baird projector, write to Baird Motion Picture Machine Company, 24 East 23d street, New York City. For the Standard projector write to American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company, 110 West 40th street, New York City. For the Edison Super Kinetoscope write to Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Orange, N. J.

The Geneva intermittent movement, consisting of the star wheel and cam, or pin wheel, can be made in several ratios, not necessarily only four to one. The speed of the star wheel depends upon the distance from the center of the cam shaft to the pin on the cam which engages the star wheel and also upon the distance from the shaft of the star wheel to the surface on the star wheel which engages the circular portion of the cam.

The greater the distance from the center to the pin on the cam and the less the distance from the center of the star to the cam surface the higher the speed of the star shaft movement. The Geneva movement is practically the same as a large gear driving a smaller one, excepting that in the intermittent movement the small gear or star moves only a portion of the time while the cam representing the large gear is in motion all of the time.

Machines have been made and are in use where the ratio is six to one and the ratio in the various machines on the market varies between four to one and six to one.

The greater the ratio the higher the speed of the film while it is in motion, but the greater will also be the wear on the machine and the movement. From a theoretical point of view, it is desired to have the film movement as rapid as possible so as to be able to use a narrow shutter, which means greater illumination on account of longer exposure of the picture on the screen, but in practice there is a limit to this speed on account of increased wear and tear on the sprocket holes of the film and wear of the intermittent movement.

For specifications as to the exact width and diameter of the cam on the Motiograph and Simplex machines I advise you to write to the Enterprise Optical Company, 572 West Randolph street, Chicago, Ill., for the Motiograph and to the Precision Machine Company, 317 West 34th street, New York City, for the Simplex specifications. There are several models which have different measurements and therefore it would be best for you to communicate direct with the factories, giving the model of the machine number you refer to.

INSTALLING NEW OUTFIT

H. B., Glenville.—Following is a number of questions which I would like to have answered:

We have a small motion picture show which we bought from another person, and as the apparatus is not of the best, and as it was not installed the way it should have been, we are going to put in the best outfit possible. We have already put in a Fairbanks Morse D. C. dynamo of 115 V., 87 amperes, and 10 kilowatt capacity, which runs from a Fairbanks Morse gas engine.

We are now using an Edison Exhibition Model picture machine, but in answering these questions, keep in mind that we may put in a Power's No. 6-A soon.

Dimersions, from lens to screen, fifty-six feet. Room is nineteen feet wide, and fourteen feet high; from screen to first row of seats, ten feet. The lens is about seven feet from the bottom of the screen. The walls are painted with Artone.

Please give a diagram showing how to wire the picture machine and rheostat. The rheostat is made by the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, Chicago, Ill. It has five contact points for the switch. We don't know what size it is.

What combination of carbons should we use? What amperage should we have at the arc? We are using a six and one-half inch condenser at the back and a seven and one-half inch in front. Are these all right? What is the carrying capacity of No. 8 wire? How far should the arc be from the aperture?

The projecting lens we are using is marked four and five-eighths E. F. Is it the right size? What size stereopticon lense must we have? What kind of shutter should we have? Would a transparent shutter give us better results; if so, where can we get the material, and how is it made? What kind of screen is most adapted to our conditions? What size should the picture be on the screen?

Ans.—Your electric plant will certainly be large enough for your purpose and should give you good satisfaction.

The Edison Exhibition machine will give a good picture if it is properly adjusted and operated, but it can, of course, not compare with the more modern projectors.

Diagram Fig. 2 illustrates the connection for your machine with the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company's adjustable rheostat. This rheostat is adjustable from 20 to 40 amperes and I would start the arc with the contact lever in the middle position, then move it either way until you get the proper results.

I recommend a 5/8 inch soft cored carbon in the top and 1/2 inch solid in the bottom if you operate with about 30 to 35 amperes at the arc.

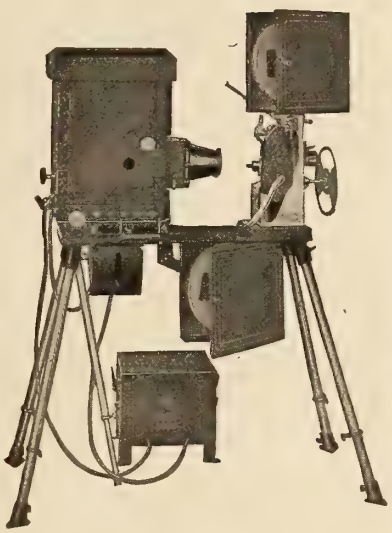
If you go up to 40 amperes at the arc I would recommend 3/4 inch cored carbon in the top and not larger than 5/8 inch solid in the bottom.

The condenser combination you speak of seems to me to be correct.

The capacity of a No. 8 wire, according to the rules of the Board of Fire Underwriters, is now 35 amperes. For moving picture machines you ought to use No. 6 wire minimum. The distance from the arc to the aperture is governed by the condenser combination and in some instances by the amperes maintained at the arc and the kind of current used. In all cases have the lamp house as close as you can have it to the aperture and the arc as close to the condenser as possible and to still secure a uniform field of light on the screen.

A 4 5/8-inch E. F. lens should make you a picture about seven feet ten inches high by 10 and one-half feet wide at a distance of fifty-six feet. If the room is fifty-six feet long the machine will stand about six feet from the rear wall, which would make the throw about fifty feet, in which case you would have a picture just about seven and one-half feet by ten feet.

The exact size lens for the stero would be one of 18 1/2 inches E. F.



For the time being I would not recommend any change in, or experiments with the shutter. You can do that later on after you have started up and if you will refer to past issues of the NEWS you will find complete description of how the transparent shutters can be made.

A metallic coated screen for your theatre can be used if you want a picture with great brilliancy and contrast. If you now, however, have a screen in position I recommend that you try that out first after giving it a good coat of white or very slightly bluish compound to give it a clean and clear surface. A good metallic coated screen costs thirty-five cents per square foot and goes up as high as over $1 per square foot.

Feaster No-Rewind Machine

Bulletin No. 6

On July 10th, 1915, the Plaza Theatre, 246 Broadway, Brooklyn, installed the FEASTER no-rewind machines.

Over two and one-half million feet of film have been projected since that time without rewinding.

The FEASTER system is making the above record in numberless theatres. You will some day use the FEASTER system in your theatre. Why not do it now?

The FEASTER is easily and quickly attached to Power and Simplex projectors, and the use of the same means less breaking of film and much better projection. Demonstration upon request.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, OPERATORS WIN PICKET PRIVILEGE IN BOYCOTT

JUDGE WILLIAM MASTERSON, of the Fifty-fifth District Court at Houston, Tex., has decided that the Houston Moving Picture Machine Operators' Protective Union may allow pickets to patrol the streets of Houston in protection of their body.

Judge Masterson so decided when he refused to make permanent the injunction he issued several weeks ago against that body, and which restrained them from picketing, from intimidating employees, and from parading the streets with the end in view of hurting the business of certain prominent theatres in Houston.

At a hearing upon the question, Judge Masterson amended his injunction and made it apply only to force, intimidation and violence. The labor unions, he decided, may station men on both sides of the alleged offending theatres and ask the public not to patronize them. Men have already been stationed as a result of Judge Masterson's decision.

This was the first time such a question has been decided by a district court in Texas. The suit was filed by John E. Davis, manager of the theatres, against L. M. Andler, president of the union, and seventeen other individuals.

CAILLE CATALOGUE LISTS COMPLETE THEATRE ACCESSORIES

THE Caille Brothers Company, of Detroit Michigan, has just issued a most attractive and complete catalog showing its various equipment for motion picture theatres.

This includes a detailed description of the company's new ticket vending machine, the method of installation and operation, also its various designs of ticket taking machines, as well as one for making change. In addition to this, illustrations of a full line of tickets are given, from which exhibitors may choose any style which they desire.

There is also illustrated a correct weight scales for the lobby, which has proven to be a great novelty.

WANTS PAY FOR THE TIME HE DOES NOT WORK

FOR the past week a police guard has been maintained around the Northwestern theatre, Grand River and Missouri avenues, Detroit, during the performances. This action followed repeated attacks on the property by men, who, the management claims, are friends of a discharged employe.

"The union took its operator out of my house about four weeks ago," said Manager Charles Seestedt, "because I would not pay him for Sunday afternoons when I do not give a performance on those afternoons during the summer months."

MINUSA INSTALLS SCREEN ON RUSH TIME

THE Minusa Cine Products Company made a rush installation of their famous Gold Fibre Screen at the Forty-fourth street theatre for a special two-weeks' showing of the feature film "Trilby," which is staged under the personal direction of S. L. Rothapfel.

Mr. Rothapfel personally sent in the exact specifications for the screen, and the results are most gratifying.

WILL SEND FEASTER MACHINE TO PANAMA

THE Antoinette theatre, 1473 Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn, has adopted the Feaster non-rewind system, and the operator's verdict is that they are absolutely satisfactory and that he can obtain better projection by the use of the same.

Byron Chandler, Inc., distributors of the Feaster non-rewind machine, with offices at 1482 Broadway, New York City, has this week consummated arrangements for the handling of their product throughout the Panama Canal Zone.

BENEFIT FOR OPERATOR IN BOSTON HOUSE

IN the Day Square theatre in East Boston, Mass., recently, a benefit was given for George Martin, formerly operator of the motion picture machine in that theatre. The patrons of the theatre turned out in large numbers. It is the only instance on record in New England where the patrons of a motion picture house contributed toward the assistance of an operator.

PRESIDENT OF OPERATORS LOCAL IN PHILADELPHIA UP FOR PUBLIC OFFICE

ALL members of the Moving Picture Operators' Local, No. 307, of Philadelphia, are much interested in the forthcoming election, because their president, Benjamin F. Bache, is a candidate for magistrate in the thirty-third ward. As Mr. Bache's name is endorsed by both Republican and Democratic parties, there is little doubt of his election.

The Union has changed its time of meeting from midnight on Saturday, to the second and fourth Sunday of each month, at two o'clock. This will be more convenient for out-of-town members, or any visiting brethren to attend meetings. The officers hope that any operator from other cities visiting Philadelphia at meeting time will try to attend on Sunday afternoons.

At the next meeting matters of importance will be taken up relating to the welfare of the local. A proposition to include all operators to membership, whatever their proficiency, will be thoroughly discussed.

The most prominent members of the local were loud in their praises of MOTION PICTURE NEWS as a live and exceedingly progressive trade paper, far ahead of its competitors. Particularly did they mention the "Hallberg Helps" as being of great benefit to many puzzled operators.

NOVELTY HAS 21,000 SLIDES READY FOR EXHIBITORS

ONE of the largest purchases ever consummated in the slide business has just taken place.

Over 21,000 slides, of world-wide interest and covering a large variety of subjects, have been purchased by the Novelty Slide Company, New York, from Hunton, Fell, Elliott, Inc., and will shortly be offered to the trade at below cost price.

The purchase of this large stock has made it necessary for the Novelty people to lease an additional floor in the present building, thus giving them three floors at 67 West Twenty-third street.

What is "LUNA-LITE"?

It is a screen which develops by the light of projecting the ultra-violet rays it contains. In picture presentations, these rays are essential to relieve eye-strain.

"Luna-Lite" corrects distortions. Hence presents natural looking human beings, settings, and scenarios.

"Luna-Lite" screens do not oxidize. Hence, do not cause blemishes in picture presentations annoying to observers as in case of screens having sheens or metallic surfaces.

Practical service of "Luna-Lite" has demonstrated it to be the "Peer of all Screens."

"Luna-Lite" will fill your front seats with satisfied patrons viewing the picture at any angle, without eyestrain.

"Luna-Lite" is covered by a Basic Patent and its name is its registered Trademark.

The Screen Problem Affecting Large and Small Theatres

By F. J. Rembush

THE editor of Motion Picture News invites me to write an article on the screen problem and at the same time limits me to five hundred words. It would be just as impossible to explain the screen question in that many words as to explain as briefly the doctrine of reincarnation or the fourth dimension. I can, however, take up a few fundamental principles.

The proposition is one of "comparison" more than anything else, and the difficulty in comparing screen surfaces arises from the fact that it is impossible to judge the relative efficiency of one screen over another unless you place both screens side by side, in the same "picture light," and then view these from every angle, having in mind which surface would be most appropriate for the particular theatre in which the screen is to installed.

No one can go from one theatre to another and carry in the eye alone the comparative difference of two screens. I wish I could make this point so strong that no exhibitor would ever forget it, because it is the cause of so much misapprehension. There are perhaps fifty equations that would have to be remembered in going from one theatre to another. For example, if one screen contains one hundred square feet and the other three hundred, and both use the same amount of light, the three-hundred-foot screen will only appear one-third as bright as the one-hundred-foot screen.

Furthermore, no two theatres use the same amount of light or have the same color value in their light. The difference in alternating and direct current is three to one. The difference in interfering light; in the decoration; in the contrast made by the shadow box; the lenses and focus; the length of the throw; and above all, the very great difference in the translucency of two different films which may be projected—all are equations so important and effective that I want to repeat again that it is absolutely impossible for anyone to judge whether a screen is doing good or bad work by simply going from one theatre to another to look at a screen. The only way to compare is to compare side by side with one and the same light.

Many Factors Enter Into Screen Problem

I once placed a glass mirror screen in a large theatre and received a wire that the screen was not giving nearly as good results as the first screen in the old theatre. In examining the conditions of the two theatres, I found that the illumination per square foot on the old screen had been eleven times more than on the new screen.

They had changed to a larger size; from direct current to alternating current; had a great deal of interfering light, and besides the new theatre was a wide house, therefore we had given the screen an entirely diffrent distribution of the light, causing it to flow at very wide angles. Furthermore, the first screen at a narrow angle in the narrow theatre was reflecting most of the light in that narrow angle, which would be a difference of 200 per cent. at least between a screen made for a wide house and one made especially for a narrow house.

A narrow angle screen placed in a narrow theatre always has an advantage of two to three hundred per cent. over the wide theatre, therefore the wide theatre must use more light to get as brilliant a picture.

When I began making screens, ten years ago, there were no wide theatres—all were narrow storeroom shows, and as a consequence I made nothing else but screens which reflected the maximum of the light straight back at a narrow angle. These I called smooth or satin finish screens. There are some exhibitors who still believe the mirror screen is only efficient in a narrow house. This is a great mistake, because I make every screen to reflect the light evenly over the viewing space. We have hundreds of screens, in very wide houses, which are doing excellent service. These we call rough or velvet finish screens. The glass mirror screen is made in nine different finishes.

I was in Youngstown, Ohio, recently, and in that city there are some fifteen "mirror screens," some of which have been there eight years, and are as good today as the day I shipped them from my factory.

Many exhibitors feel that they cannot afford a glass mirror screen, and this fact caused us to market all other kinds of screen surfaces. In our factory, which is devoted exclusively to the manufacture of projection screens, we make the glass mirror screen, the glass translucent screen for rear projection, the gold fibre screen, the silver fibre screen, mirror cloth, and I have lately invented a new white fibre screen that is particularly good for very large and very wide houses. This screen is expensive, but any one who knows how to appreciate the niceties of the projection screen would never begrudge the buying of a good screen at any time.

Made Over 5,000 Experiments

If I had all the money wasted every year by the exhibitors who try to make their own screens, I would find it the most profitable proposition in the moving picture industry. Over 300 different concerns have come and gone who tried to manufacture screens since the writer has been making screens. I have made over five thousand experiments in my own theatres and factory, a record of which I have kept.

I have used every kind of material in the way of cloth, glass, wood, paints, oils, chemicals, even made screens on water and on salt, and the knowledge that I have gained would be of immense value to exhibitors and prevent the losses incurred by those who try to make their own screens, or imagine they have made a new discovery, if they knew the facts.

A scientific explanation of what really occurs, as the light leaves the lens, strikes the screen and reflects into the eye; of the difference in the minute peaks and depressions of a screen surface, which causes the light to reflect at various angles; the absorption of light rays by the pigments of various surfaces; the reflection of light by regular and by diffuse reflection, and the evil results of a superimposition of regular over diffuse reflection, would require a great deal of space.

In closing, I am always ready to answer any question with reference to a screen surface or projection screens of any kind, through this magazine, so that many errors and faults which are often credited to the screen, light, or machine could be adjusted by knowing what causes the bad results. After all, we show good pictures only by a thorough knowledge of the finer details of projection and then putting this knowledge in practice.

NEW THEATRES IN MILWAUKEE AND VICINITY

PLANS have been completed by Architect A. C. Eschweiler, of Milwaukee, for the erection for a photoplay theatre and lodge building at Painsdale. The theatre is to have a seating capacity of about 325.

Bernard Rosenow opened his new theatre, The Jackson, Milwaukee, on August 21. It seats 900.

The Grand theatre at Green Bay, a new $75,000 motion picture house, recently opened its doors to the public.

EMPLOYEES IN NEAT UNIFORMS NECESSARY TO WELL-MANAGED THEATRE

THE present day exhibitor has done many things that deserve commendation from his patrons, but probably the most praiseworthy effort on his part has been directed to their comfort and convenience. All things being equal, size of theatre, projection, quality of pictures shown and so on, how much better is the chance of the exhibitor that takes the comfort and convenience of his patrons into consideration when building a theatre. Interior decorating and lighting effects, one exhibitor trying to go his competitor one better, and yet how many take into consideration the appearance of his employees?

Almost any program of any representative house has a notice on it, viz.: Any inattention or discourtesy on the part of any employee shall be immediately reported to the management," or words to that effect; yet how many exhibitors try to teach their ushers, doormen and so on just how to deport themselves.

To direct a patron to a seat by a shout of "Two seats on the left near the front," or "No more seats except the front row," and so on, might do in some localities, but the theatre that is going to be the "talk of the town" from a "recommendative" standpoint is the one that insists that all employees, from the doorman to the last usher, shall be polite to each and every patron, and not only to the younger of the fair sex.

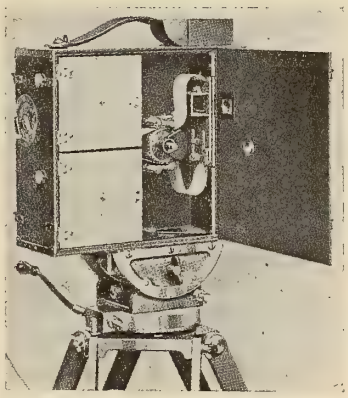
Probably the most essential thing, in addition to polite attendance, is a uniform in keeping with the general decorative scheme of the house. S. A. Rothapfel, the former director-manager of the Strand theatre, New York, than whom there is probably no greater authority, insisted upon clean, natty uniforms for all, white gloves for the hands that no clothes should be soiled while patrons are led to their seat, and an exact military deportment.

Neglect of Neat Appearance in Employees

Another point that Mr. Rothapfel was insistent on, small though it may seem, was that all uniform trousers should be supported by suspenders and not by belts. Belts were taboo, and as a consequence a neater appearing set of ushers than that which the Strand theatre boasted of would be hard to find.

How many theatres have spared no expense on the fittings of the front and the lobby, only to put a man at the door to take tickets in any kind of a nondescript getup. How much more in keeping with a beautiful entrance and lobby would a uniformed doorman be. How much more inviting to the passerby—and when it comes right down to it most theatres are dependent on that same passerby—to see a neat appearing, uniformed doorman, giving promise of attentive uniformed ushers inside.

There are some theatres that do not stop at putting uniforms on the ushers and doormen, but also equip the orchestra musicians, stage hands, and in fact any and all employees of the theatre, with distinguishing appointments to separate the different departments, such as the front from the rear of the house.



As long as an exhibitor has gone to the expense of spending his good money to make his house comfortable and inviting to his patrons, the little additional expense required to outfit the employees in uniforms would be a necessary and beneficial investment.

TWO THEATRES IN ST. LOUIS DECLARED FAVORABLE TO LABOR

ON the night of the opening of the Grand Opera House, at Broadway and Market streets, St. Louis, a squad of union pickets were stationed outside of the theatre passing out handbills declaring the house unfair to organized labor.

These same pickets, members of the Electrical Workers Union No. 1, distributed handbills in front of the New Grand Duchess when the house opened, stating that it was fair to organized labor, while members of other unions passed out circulars declaring the house unfair. The management of the Grand secured an injunction to prevent the pickets from handing out circulars in front of their theatre. On the circular was a statement that the Columbia, which was to open the next day, was also unfair.

REMBUSCH SCREENS

ANNOUNCEMENT!

I have invented a new screen of WHITE FABRIC, that is especially for large and wide houses.

It is the outcome of ten years of work and thousands of experiments. This screen is wonderfully brilliant at all angles; produces a picture without haze and of remarkable clearness and sharpness. IT IS NOT AN ALUMINUM OR GOLD BRONZE SCREEN.

Exhibitors who have been disappointed with metallized screens will be delighted and astounded with this new white surface.

Sold only to responsible parties and demonstration will be made in person, wherever possible, by Mr. Rembusch.

JUST THINK OF THIS!

Last week I was through Ohio on a trip and visited Youngstown where I have fifteen Glass "Mirror Screens" installed. The screens at the Rex, Luxor, Palace, Dome, Orpheum, Colonial, Bijou, Dream, have been in place from six to eight years and are as good today as the day they left my factory.

Mr. Christa Diebel, of the Dome, said to me, "F. J., I have for five years allowed every screen salesman who has come to Youngstown to put their sample against my Glass 'Mirror Screen,' and in every instance there was such a difference, why there was nothing to their screens. Sometimes when they found it was a Glass 'Mirror Screen' they wouldn't demonstrate."

Why experiment with concerns who are here today and gone tomorrow, when I am with you always?
In ten years I have never disappointed anyone. My guarantee is like a gold bond.

Directory of New Theatres

This department is designed to be a weekly guide to all sales, leases, construction and remodeling of photoplay theatres throughout the country. If you are building, selling, leasing or renovating, and this department fails to record the fact, kindly communicate it at once for publication.

ALABAMA

J. H. KING, manager of the Crown theatre, Mobile, has spent $12,000 in adding improvements to his theatre. The entire house has been renovated and improved in many ways, including the installation of a new pipe organ.

H. B. Cagle, of Decatur, has purchased the Star theatre and will overhaul and remodel it into a motion picture theatre.

CANADA

The Park theatre, Toronto, one of the largest north end houses, announces a complete change of policy under the new management of Mr. L. Solman. An entire change of program will be made twice weekly. Vaudeville of the better sort and first run photoplays will compose the bill. A $15,000 organ is in the course of construction. The Park seats 1,500 persons.

The Empire theatre, of Hamilton, Ontario, is being entirely renovated. Mr. Guest, the manager, reports that over $2,000 are being spent in re-decoration, lowering of floor and installation of gold fibre screen.

ILLINOIS

Manager E. T. Dolly has opened the Pattee opera house at Monmouth, showing vaudeville and motion pictures.

The Majestic motion picture theatre, at Rock Island, has been reopened after being remodelled. The lobby has been done in marble with mahogany finished woodwork, and the interior has been decorated with ivory, blue and gold. New seats have been installed and two additional exits provided. Two new projecting machines also have been added to the equipment.

Work on the new Orpheum theatre, South Kellogg Street, Galesburg, is being rushed by the Monmouth-Galesburg Construction Company, and it is anticipated that it will be opened in about one month.

IOWA

H. O. Peterson, an exhibitor of Red Oak, has taken over the Grand, at Waterloo, redecorated it and is planning to give the people of Waterloo something good in the line of motion pictures.

The Plaza, a new theatre seating 650 people, has been opened at Waterloo, with J. E. Bryant as manager. It has one of the best organs in the territory and is beautiful inside, with its thick carpets, liveried attendants, perfect ventilation and superb decorations. Sunday, September 5, opening day, automobiles were lined up for blocks around and 2,000 people attended during the one day. He charged 20 cents admission and will keep up that charge.

The Ford theatre, at Cedar Rapids, with A. J. DeBold as general manager, is in new hands.

The Majestic, at Waterloo, advertised as the house "built on the water," opened September 5 with prospects of an excellent season.

The Princess, at Cedar Rapids, has been remodeled, the back end extended forty feet to give more seating capacity.

Partly by mutual agreement the five theatres in Charles City decided to quit their deadly competition and all but the Hildreth, managed by William Waterhouse, and the Gem, with F. Wright as manager, closed. These two, with a territory covered with lively advertising and the people trained to attend motion picture shows, can not be bought at this time.

M. W. Appleby, manager of the Cresco theatre, Cresco, has repainted and remodeled his theatre during the last two months.

H. M. Baumgardner, manager of the Oak theatre, Osage, seen in Omaha, Neb., recently, said he has started showing features.

George Still, manager of the Allerton theatre, has built the Lyric, a new house in Independence, and will receive his films from the Omaha market.

Robert Miller has taken over the Centerville Orpheum, and will remodel and reopen it.

Carl Hodsen has taken over the Opera House at Adel, and says he is already well on the way to success.

A. D. Pettit has taken over the Majestic at Winterset, and will show features three times a week.

The Orpheum, at Marshalltown, has been remodeled for $3,000. Manager Frankel, a famous Des Moines figure, took charge and renamed it the Casino.

F. D. Fleming has taken the Star, at Tama, and has cut out the vaudeville. He declares business prospects were never better.

G. L. DeNune, manager of the Nemo, at Belle Plain, has taken on the World service, besides fixing up his theatre for a big fall rush.

Webster Brothers have opened a theatre at Waucoma, and are showing World features.

Landis & Slausen, of the Princess, Monticello, have ventured into the feature field for the season. They recently finished improving their house.

J. A. Knight, of Columbus Junction, has one of the best small town theatres in the state since remodeling and improving it.

M. Osmund, of the Olympic, Knoxville, in Omaha last week, said he had taken up World features.

Norman Samish, of Creston, is going to build a new theatre at Atlantic, the heart of Iowa.

C. B. DeVeny recently opened the Lyric, at New Hartford, and is making a rapid success of it.

H. G. Ludwig, of Merrill, has opened a new theatre.

Among the new theatres being built on the strength of middle western prospects for this season, is the Rohlff, at 2651-63 Leavenworth street. It opens in November.

Herbert and Lach, of Atlantic, have a force of men at work remodeling the interior of their theatre, which is also the opera house. The seating capacity will be enlarged, the entrance will be remodeled and the entire theatre redecorated.

Paul Sawyer, manager of the New Cecil theatre, at Mason City, has recently started features. He combines them with the regular service and says business is great.

Concrete work on the Boston theatre, at Dodge City, has been finished and the house will be finished in the near future.

A new building is to be erected at the corner of Oak and Front streets in Perry, by J. C. Stimes. The new building will house a picture show, skating rink and hall.

The Isis theatre, at Russell, is to be opened by C. A. Dodge and Walter Pratt.

The Opera House in Belleville, is being remodeled by Armstrong and Arduthnot.

The Electric theatre, at Burlington, formerly known as the Nightingale, has been sold by F. E. Turvey to C. F. Ferm, of Marion.

The Marshall theatre, at Manhattan, has been opened for the season.

KANSAS

The Variety theatre, at Lawrence, which was destroyed by fire some time ago, has been rebuilt and opened.

Gus Kubach is building a new theatre and airdome at Enterprise.

The fixtures for the new theatre at Douglas are on the ground and the show will open between now and the first of October.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Runkle, who formerly managed a picture show at Olathe, have gone to Los Angeles, California, to operate a new theatre that they purchased.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Staley are now connected with a picture show at Independence. They formerly managed the show at Atchison.

M. H. Ewing has traded his picture show property in Cherryvale for property in Mayo, Oklahoma.

Chas. H. Ashling has opened a new theatre in Hamilton.

A new theatre, at Wichita, to cost $80,000, is being erected. A name for it has not been selected. According to L. M. Miller, the show will be opened about the first week of the year.

Fred Frederick, formerly a picture show manager in Wichita, has gone to Chicago, where he is to build a theatre.

A new airdome has been built and opened at Houston, by J. W. Wendel.

Work on the Stoneback theatre, at Morganville, is finished and it is expected that the show will be open some time the latter part of this month.

M. A. Harris has assumed the management of the picture show at Wathena.

MISSOURI

The Russell theatre, on Broadway and Russell, St. Louis, an all picture house, opened for the fall season on September 7. Manager Richardson, who was forced to close his airdome on Michigan avenue in Carondelet, in the middle of August, on account of cool weather, spent the intervening time between the closing of the airdome and the opening of the theatre, in having the Russell thoroughly refurnished and redecorated.

Lloyd Lewis, of the Triangle Film Corporation, has announced that his company is planning to open a chain of theatres in St. Louis, some of which will show big features at prices ranging from 25 cents to $2. One large downtown theatre is practically taken over by the company now, and preparations are being made to begin operations under the new rule by October 1. The houses will not be ten-cent houses, but they will probably not all adhere strictly to the $2 limit. The general belief is that the Olympic, where the "Birth of a Nation" is now showing, will be the first theatre under the Triangle control to open under the new rule.

The Gravois theatre, on Jefferson and Gravois avenues, St. Louis, opened on September 4, under the management of the McKean Brothers, sons of G. W. McKean, manager of the Paramount exchange in St. Louis. All during the summer the Gravois gave performances on Saturday and Sunday nights. The Gravois is an all picture house.

North St. Louis is to have another large motion picture theatre in the near future. The George J. Wanstrath Real Estate Company, have closed deals for four of the five lots of the site that has been chosen, and until the fifth lot has been purchased, the names of the promoters will not be disclosed.

The Lindell theatre, Grand and Hebert, St. Louis, which was open only on Sunday during the hot weather, opened again with the regular daily program on September 12. The Lindell shows many features, with occasional vaudeville.

The King's theatre, on Kingshighway and Delmar, St. Louis, opened on September 12, with motion picture features and vaudeville, under the management of Harry Koplar, formerly connected with the Montgomery theatre, in 15th and Montgomery.

The Cabanne theatre, 5815 Suburban avenue, St. Louis, was robbed of several photographs of photoplayers, and all the nickels from the telephone box recently.

The Marquette theatre, 18th and Franklin, St. Louis, has been enlarged and improved to the extent of $10,000. Two years ago, when the Marquette opened, the seating capacity was only 400. Since the rebuilding the house seats 1,000. The Lears Theatre Supply Company installed entirely new equipment, including two new Powers 6A projection machines, before the Marquette opened on September 5.

John Betz has put a moving picture machine in his opera house at Liberal, and will conduct a picture show.

The opera house at Tipton, has been leased by P. F. Ross to the M. and H. Amusement Company. The new company will open it as a picture house.

Samuel Shurman will reopen the Fourth street theatre at Moberly, in the very near future.

F. W. Hudson, who has managed the airdome on South Cherry street, in Nevada, for several years, has closed for the season.

The Star theatre, at Columbia, is to be remodeled and opened in the near future by T. C. Hall, who has theatres in Moberly and Excelsior Springs.

James A. McDermit has sold the theatre on North Ninth street in Carthage, to Ben B. and Porter Blackford, of Paris.

The Rex theatre is to be opened at 312 West Commercial street, in Springfield.

H. M. Piper, H. C. Wood, and H. G. Weaver, all of Hannibal, are planning to open a picture theatre in New London, which is only a few miles from Hannibal.

The Princess theatre, at Bethany, has been opened.

The Lyric theatre, at Liberty, has been remodeled and is now open.

H. S. Jewell has purchased the Jefferson theatre, at Springfield, from Jacob C. Schweitzer.

The Belldorf, at Jefferson City, is to be opened in the near future by V. L. Wagner.

R. P. King and W. A. Lindsey, of Leeton, have leased the show of Galen Mohler, and will open shortly.

P. C. Schroeder has taken the management of the new Electric theatre, at St. Joseph.

A new show is to be put in at Bethany by Ed. Terry and Perry Carnagey.

The Magnet theatre, at Vandalia, has been leased to H. S. Topps.

The New Grand theatre, at Nevada, has been opened for the season.

Mrs. Ada Webb has opened the Elite theatre, at Trenton.

Improvements that will cost about $4,000 are to be made in the Jefferson theatre, at Springfield. S. E. Wilhoit is the manager.

Misses Carrie and Elberta Sproul have left Mexico for Salisbury, where they will run the Lyric treatre, having purchased it from Mrs. A. Hammond.

A new cement building is being erected on Main street in Kahoka, for a moving picture theatre by E. A. Crandell.

Paul White has purchased the moving picture show at Bolivar from Willard Killingsworth.

McMullin and Estes have opened a picture theatre at Richmond.

A new theatre is to be opened at Deepwater, by F. S. Snyder.

Oppenstein Brothers, owners of the Globe theatre, in Kansas City, have secured Cyrus Jacobs as manager.

Welch and Embres, of Charlton county, have secured Harlan's Hall, in Salisbury, and will open a picture show.

Possession of the picture show at Laclede is now in the hands of H. E. Mabee, he having purchased it from S. P. Myers.

The People's theatre has been opened in Trenton.

Lewis Eagon is having the Eagon building, at Kahoka, put in first class shape for a picture show, and will open in the near future.

Horace Thomas, former manager of the Jefferson theatre, in Springfield, has accepted the management of the Strand theatre, in Omaha, Nebraska.

The Majestic theatre, at Kingston, has been opened for the season.

NEBRASKA

The Strand, the largest and best equipped motion picture theatre in Nebraska, will open September 14, at Eighteenth and Douglas streets, Omaha, with H. M. Thomas as manager. Big features will be shown and the prices will be 5, 10 and 20 cents. The picture machine will be upon the first floor, throwing the picture directly upon the screen, instead of from above and at a slant. A $7,500 pipe organ has been installed.

J. Stewart, in opening the New Empress, at Central City, seating capacity 450, opened one of the best small theatres in the state. Fred C. Terry, of Fremont, has taken over the Lyric theatre there and will operate it as an exclusive picture house.

A big theatre is being considered for Thirty-sixth and Leavenwoth, Omaha, with others at Twenty-fourth and Farnam, Twenty-fourth and Cuming, and in Dundee, a suburb to Omaha.

Eugene Upstill is manager of a new theatre at Long Pine, seating 600, which will open October 1.

Nelson & Hansen have bought out the Jewel, at Beatrice.

W. L. Bennett has sold the Jewel theatre, at Beatrice, to I. C. Hansen, of Los Angeles, California, and A. G. Nelson, of Beatrice. Bennett was proprietor of the house three years.

Charles Lucas, of Genoa, has taken over the "Dime" theatre and named it the Grand.

Ted Fisher, of Grand Island, has taken over the Empress from F. D. Green, former manager. He has remodeled the theatre, redecorated it and is showing straight pictures to large houses.

NEW JERSEY

The opening of six big motion picture theatres in the immediate vicinity of Newark during the first week in September, is viewed by exhibitors and exchange men as indicative of unusually promising conditions for the winter season. The six new houses have an aggregate seating capacity of about 12,000, and represent expenditures totaling more than $125,000.

With the opening of the United States Playhouse and the United States Strand theatre, in Passaic, Labor Day, the circuit of the United States Theatres Company, of which Frank G. Hall is president, was increased to seven houses. The playhouse will be devoted to feature photo dramas and vaudeville, and the Strand, which is a new house, will run films exclusively.

The Paterson Opera House, Paterson, which was partially destroyed by fire two years ago, is to be a motion picture theatre seating 1,650. The new building will be of the most modern fireproof construction, and is expected to cost about $50,000. Adams Brothers, proprietors of the Paterson Show, have leased the new theatre.

W. F. Lesser, owner and manager of the Cranford theatre, has leased the playhouse for a term of ten years to J. Capcutt, of Cranford. Mr. Capcutt assumed charge of the theatre recently.

The increased interest of the public in motion pictures was demonstrated a few days ago when the residents of Linden, a borough of Elizabeth, signed a petition urging exhibitors to open a playhouse in that section. The appeal of the residents for another motion picture house was not long unanswered. Lewis Amolsk, of New York City, is Linden's new exhibitor, and has already succeeded in establishing himself in the good graces of the local public.

Proctor's Broad street playhouse, in Elizabeth, opened its doors Labor Day after being closed for two months in order to make necessary repairs and improvements.

OKLAHOMA

Herbert Cozy and F. Poors have sold the Majestic theatre, at Devol, to C. A. Toby.

The Electric theatre, at Claremore, has been leased by Miss Hazel Purcell to H. H. Humphrey.

Music and the Picture

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS *will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. PICTURE MAKING AND PICTURE MUSIC

WHILE there has been a great improvement in picture making and we do not suffer as years ago with pictures having from fifty to ninety interchanging scenes to every one thousand feet of film, yet there are many that lack concentration of thought development and tension relief.

I have never been able to fathom the idea of introducing new or foreign matter into a picture during the development of the important picture thought or moral, other than to give the subject length. Pictures that try to tell two or more stories at one time are always severely criticized.

In composition, whether it be music or literature, an abrupt interruption of thought or theme is considered an unpardonable fault. It is difficult for a player to give a picture a proper musical setting when the picture does not give him an opportunity for inspiration or concentration of thought.

The audience never enjoys a picture which requires that they should suffer temperamental changes every thirty seconds, not to mention the fact that it is far from entertaining to hear a continual interchanging of unfinished musical themes. In theatres where the audiences appreciate music equally with the pictures, an impossible task is often placed upon the musician. The musician is placed in the position of either killing the picture or the music.

If he is a thorough musician he will save the music to the detriment of the picture, unless instructed otherwise. Ninety per cent. of the inharmonic musical requirements in picture playing can be avoided in picture making or assembling. It is not only that many of the multiple reel features are mercilessly padded, but when the padding is accomplished by adding irrelevantly new or foreign matter, which is not even in temperamental harmony with the picture thought or theme, it constitutes little less than a crime.

Concentration Necessary for Finished Work

The art of picture making, as any other art, must show concentration to be appreciated as a finished and advanced work. To illustrate how music can go from the sublime to the ridiculous, without any possible way of avoiding it, I will cite a few of the thousand uncalled for instances that come to my notice.

In a well known picture after one and one-half reels of character and story development we are told that there is going to be a fancy dress reception in the home of a supposed millionaire. Some reception it is and every one is having a good time dancing.

The reason or only excuse for the picture occurs at this reception. It is impossible to conceive a better setting or line of action to lead up to the big scene, which is the death of the supposed millionaire and father of the girl giving the reception. Let us see how this director works out his big scene.

Everything is gay for some footage, the death occurs and is discovered by the daughter, whose life is entirely changed by this circumstance. Does the director immediately try to concentrate thought on this important death? Oh, no, he knows that he has got a fine set and he is going to get the limit of footage out of it. On this death scene he flashes it unnecessarily time and again. Now you tell me what is the music to play, a turkey trot or a plaintive number? The dancing action is only necessary to make the death scene stand out more prominently. After this purpose is accomplished, why kill it?

Another common occurrence in pictures is to interchange from a sickroom or death scene to a chase for a doctor. It has been said that the flashing of these scenes is necessary to keep the drift of the picture story from being lost. This is not true.

If the picture story is properly developed and the death scene is of any importance, no travel action mentioned can be so long that the audience would forget why this character is hurrying for a doctor. In such incidences, as in many others, the audience is not considered.

Audience Should Not Have Attention Divided

While the audience may be interested in the death or sickness of a character, when the action is shifted, they are just as much interested in knowing the reason for the shift and when you ask them to be interested in two thoughts at one time you are hoping for that which will not be. Concentration of thought is the success of every good picture and you cannot hope for concentration of thought when you deliberately destroy it.

What has this got to do with music? I'll tell you. I have been trying to find a way for six years to play five seconds' death scene, then twenty seconds' chase, then twenty seconds' death scene and five seconds' chase and I would like to have some one tell me how to do it without making good music positively impossible.

Picture making and picture music are brothers in a way, for the same misconceptions that make a picture impossible as picture theatre entertainment, make the musical entertainment just as impossible.

I am sure if there were some thought given to the musical possibilities of a picture when making it, we would not only improve picture theatre entertainment, but there would be a production of uniformly better pictures.

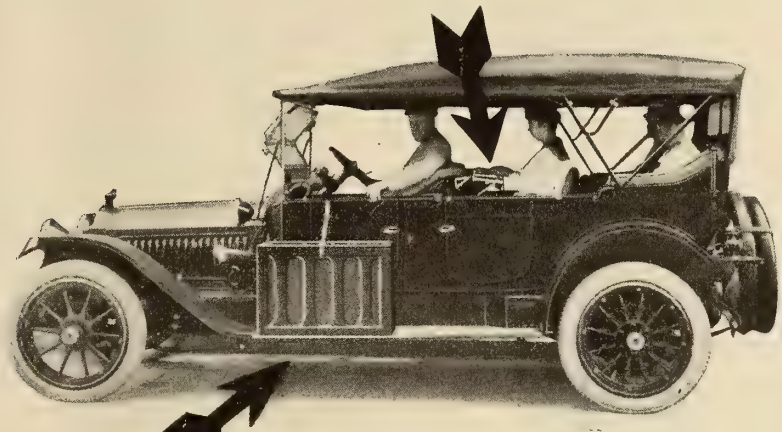
It may be true that a picture cannot be made to fit one or another musical composition, but there is no reason why each and every thought or climax cannot be worked out independently without a series of irrelevant and unnecessary cut-ins and close-ups, thereby retarding picture action, and making musical climaxes more difficult to accomplish.

No audience appreciates a picture wherein the situations are manufactured by new introductions, but demand that all situations be a natural consequence in the unfolding of the picture story. To have a good musical program each number must have some temperamental relation to the preceding or succeeding one.

In music a pathetic appeal is more impressively obtained when the preceding number is light or of lively tempo. Contrast is again the reason. Concentration and contrast are the making of a good picture, while good music is impossible without these two factors.

BARTOLA INSTRUMENTS IN DEMAND

CHRIS JACKSON, of Bloomington, Illinois, has just purchased a Bartola Grand for installation in his Scenic theatre in that city.



The Wonderland Theatre Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, has purchased a Bartola Junior.

C. J. Sherman, of Sullivan, Indiana, was in Chicago last week purchasing equipment for his new six-hundred seat theatre, which will open the latter part of November.

Mr. Sherman is a well-known business man of Sullivan, Indiana, and recently decided to go into the motion picture business. He is erecting a strictly modern theatre which will cater to the better class of people, with the best films procurable.

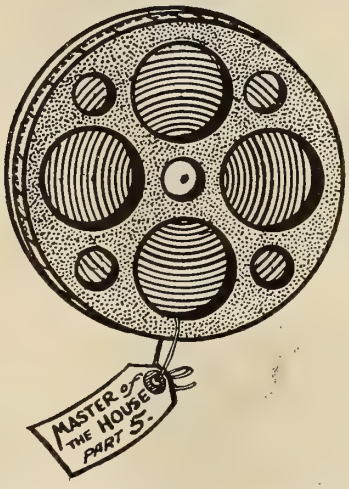
The LITTLE MADAMOISELLE

A SHUBERT FEATURE



A typically attractive little French miss who speaks no English is suddenly set down in a New England village where no French is spoken She is rescued by a young American who speaks French but who is "broke".
They start for Boston, walking by day and spending the nights where night overtakes them.
The interesting situations which arise are not difficult to imagine but they are situations which will hold an audience from the first to the last inch of the film.
Of course, the young couple were married when they reached Boston.

The remarkable girl actress

Leonie Flugrath, and Herbert Prior

In a 3-Act Feature of Heart Interest

"THE UNWILLING THIEF"

By Mary Imlay Taylor, Noted Author

THERE are little girls and little girls in motion pictures, but there are mighty few—if any—who have had the dramatic career of the little girl who stars in this feature—Leonie Flugrath.

Unlike the many, too, little Miss Flugrath has both beauty and a charming personality which wins all picture patrons. But linked with this, and binding them all into genuine dramatic excellence, is that this "school girl" actress is filled to the brim, so to speak, with theatrical experience.

Shortly from a country-wide tour in the title role of one of Broadway's greatest successes, this little lady makes much of her appearance in this sympathetic feature where she suggests the lily in a swamp of crime.

Stolen in babyhood, still possessing instinctively the refinement of her parents, she is brutally forced in a life of crime—to thievery. The film is fast with action of thrills, and is compellingly sympathetic.

Herbert Prior, as the father, gives the convincing support always to be expected from him. Direction, Langdon West. Friday, October 8th.

"Black Eyes," by Lee Arthur, dramatist, is full of laughs of genuine heartiness—the escapades of man and wife. Featuring Ray McKee and Jean Dumar. 1000 feet. Direction, Will Louis. Wednesday, October 6th.

"The Manufacture of Coin" satisfies the natural curiosity how our every-day coins are made in Uncle Sam's wonderful workshop. By permission of the U. S. Treasury Department. Saturday, October 9th.

A Revelation!

The Triangle "Bullseye"

BY this time you have heard of the bang with which the initial Triangle Plays went over at the Knickerbocker Theatre last Thursday.

Shortly you will hear other similar concussions in the vicinity of Philadelphia, Chicago and Boston.

A year from now you will look back and date the most important development of photoplay presentment from these Triangle Model Theatre openings.

Griffith — Ince — Sennett have sub-consciously been building up the Triangle organization for years. It remained for the Triangle Film Corporation to give them the opportunity to go their limit.

Now it is done. The greatest directors, the greatest stars, the best photographers, have been brought together to produce the best plays!

It is simply a question of values everywhere.

You know now what "TRIANGLE" means, even if you've only heard from those who have seen. And Triangle Quality is only at the apex of the TRIANGLE—the beginning.

Watch the plan grow in effectiveness, in value, in results!

There's thumps and throbs in "For Five Thousand Dollars a Year"; five reels of punch, pep and plot, pluck, perils and pitfalls.
The plodding pawns of penury cross and recross the primrose paths of plenty, plagued by pitiless perfidy, down, down, doggedly down to the defeating dusk of disaster's doom.
Then Fate, the fickle fiddler's fancy shifts and from out the tortured tangle love leaps and laughs and links the lucklorn lives with loops of gold.

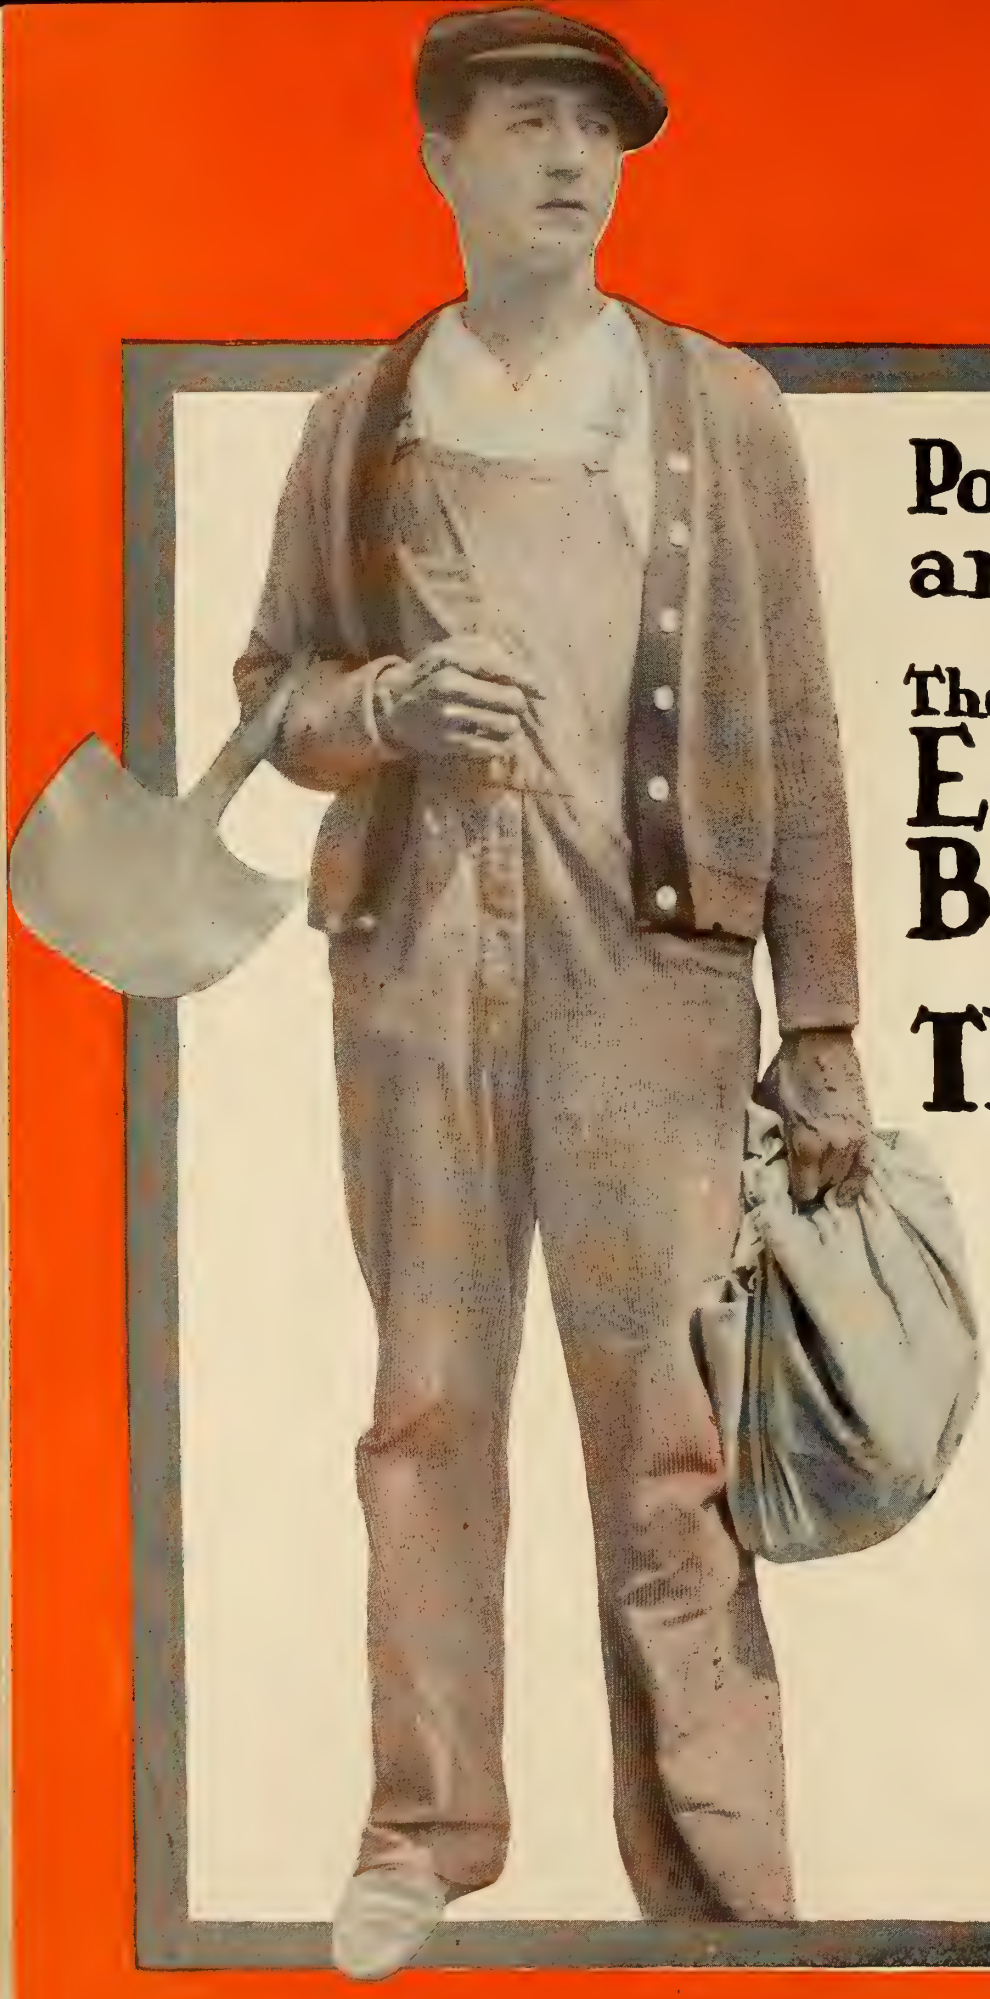
METRO Pictures are practical pictures made by showmen and for showmen.



Metro stars are real stars with established artistic reputations.

Metro costs are visible on the screen, in the pictures, and to this fact the rich scenic investiture of the scenes bears eloquent witness.

Metro vitality, the living, breathing strength of life, is the keynote of Metro's success because Metro pictures are not only artistic, they are alive.

We invite a critical comparison of our pictures with all the others in the field and suggest that you ask the exhibitors who are making our success theirs. We want you to make us prove it.

"In the Palace of the King"
A Thrilling Love Romance

Knights of old and ladies fair step out of the realm of dreams to appear in reality in Essanay's six act photoplay, "In the Palace of the King."

F. Marion Crawford wove a thrilling love romance around the reign of King Philip II of Spain.

Five thousand persons, including 1,000 horsemen, 1,000 foot soldiers, hundreds of peasants, royal personages, courtiers and officers, take part in this great spectacular photoplay.

It is the story of a great love between Don John, half brother of the King, and Dolores, daughter of a Spanish general. Royal plots and court intrigues separate the lovers and nearly cause the death of Don John. But love is triumphant.

The all star cast includes E. J. Ratcliffe, the noted stage star; Richard C. Travers, Essanay leading man; Arleen Hackett, leading woman for William Faversham; Lewis Edgard, Ernest Maupain, Nell Craig, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford. Directed by Fred E. Wright.

A Criticism and A Reply

TO depart, for a single issue, from our discussion of the picture and the press—a subject which seems to be waxing and widening in interest—I want to give prominence to another matter.

Through a producer and staunch friend of this publication a criticism reaches us.

It comes from "a certain well-informed exchange man and exhibitor" and follows herewith :

"THE motion picture trade paper should be different from trade papers as a class. It should be 'newsy' and not made up of press dope. . . .

"I wonder how many real reporters are employed on the trade papers. . . .

"They cater too much to the advertiser. . . .

"I buy films—or have—on the strength of a glowing review in a trade paper and when it reaches me C. O. D. and I book it I find I have been deceived."

This criticism certainly deserves answering—with the gloves off. MOTION PICTURE NEWS welcomes the opportunity of just such an answer.

TWO issues arise in this criticism: first, that of the trade news and, secondly, that of the reviews of pictures carried by the trade papers.

As to the first: the following facts will be of interest, and to some, I fancy, a matter of surprise.

To get the news each week of this very "newsy" trade, MOTION PICTURE NEWS maintains a staff of seventy reporters. Every member is on salary or space rates. Every member is a reporter. Every member serves first and altogether the interests of the reader of this publication.

IT takes sixty-four men to cover each week the production and exchange centers of the industry in this country, Canada and Europe. Practically every member of this staff is a newspaper man. Not only that, but they are of the highest grade of newspaper men, embracing city editors, motion picture page editors, desk men and star reporters. They are told to get the news, the straight news, the news of vital interest to the trade—and they get it, as every issue of this publication will testify.

Every single member of this field staff deserves special mention. His work is known for its individuality and "newsiness" and verity, to the exhibitors and exchanges and producers of his district. I want to speak especially, in this connection, of our Los Angeles department. Everyone in this important center and every reader of the paper knows the value of this news, as news and as advance news.

IN our New York editorial offices, in addition to our department editors, five men are engaged in rewriting editorial matter, in reviewing pictures, and in interviewing the manufacturer.

These men are also newspaper men. They are selected for their particular experience and ability. We want no other kind of editorial men.

They are not employed to write "dope." They have no connection with the business department. They devote their best efforts to rewriting and interviewing from the news angle and to reviewing pictures in the best interests of all exhibitors.

HERE in New York, the headquarters of the manufacturing end of the industry, we are up against quite the same sort of problem which faces the big metropolitan daily. It is utterly impossible for us to employ enough men to cover every office in the trade, just as it is economically impossible for the greatest of New York dailies to have a reporter at every outlet of news. We are forced, therefore, to rely, just as the New York daily does, upon the press representative.

And we are very glad to. The reader also should be glad of this service; without it, no journal could publish all the news. We ask only of the press representative that this news matter furnished to us be reliable, that it be given us in the interests of our readers as well as in the manufacturer's interest.

THE reader's interest and the manufacturer's interest are, as a matter of fact, identical here. The reader doesn't want "dope," either on the advertising or editorial pages, furthermore he does not swallow it.

He has eaten of the fruit and he knows its taste. He may be fooled once or twice, but not continuously. It is idle to scream at him and foolish to try and fool him. I wish that every manufacturer could appreciate this fact; eventually they must.

IT is equally foolish to try and fool the trade paper, with that species of false or inflated news matter commonly known as "bunk," and which the exhibitor knows as "bunk." It is possible; no paper ever published has always been proof against the news fakir. We, despite our best efforts, may at times admit matter to our columns of which afterward we are ashamed. In other words, the press representative "puts one over" on us.

But to what avail? To whose good? Certainly neither to the good of the press representative nor his employer.

The manufacturer loses the reader's confidence, the press representative loses ours. Ever afterward we will distrust every news item he sends in, just as the reader will distrust all further representations from that manufacturer.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, since its very inception, has striven to be a news medium, a genuine newspaper of the trade. That, indeed, is the very genius of this publication. We stand or fall upon our ability to print the news, all the news and only the news.

Our critic is right. This, unlike any other trade, is a business dominated by the news interest. The whole exhibitor business revolves completely every week; and the news of the picture is largely what makes it revolve.

SO the motion picture trade paper should be primarily a weekly news medium; and in this respect it is unlike a paper of a trade in which news is not of such vital interest. The motion picture trade paper is no medium for the essay, nor the long-winded, eulogistic write-up designed to catch advertising. Such a paper does not and cannot acquire circulation.

The reader wants news, business news, served up as news. I fancy we appreciate this fact better than anyone in the business, in particular the manufacturer who bases the value of editorial publicity by largeness of space and frequency of publication, not realizing that a single paragraph of real business news in a paper of real circulation is worth more to the reader and to him than whole pages of no news value in papers of no circulation.

AND now as to the reviews of pictures, a subject of at least equal importance.

By a coincidence, the very mail that brings us the foregoing criticism brings also a communication from a producer disgruntled because we reviewed adversely his latest release.

Our reply to this producer will, perhaps define best our policy in reviewing pictures.

Our reviews of pictures are honest appraisals written by men trained in this field of work. They are not affected by the fact that the producer does or does not advertise.

WE review pictures for the exhibitor, realizing that his business success depends importantly upon his bookings and that he looks to us for information. To deceive him is to lose his confidence and our circulation, in which case we are of no interest to the advertiser, and no value to ourselves.

To the producer's reply that he would rather have us say nothing about his pictures if we cannot say nice things, we have only to say that we must review all pictures. The reader wants this service. If we don't give it, some other paper will.

No paper in this field can acquire a circulation except by giving honest reviews of all releases. If it doesn't, it is just as worthless to the advertiser as it is to the reader. To roast a picture because its producer doesn't advertise, is quite as disastrous to a publication as to praise it because he does.

HERE again, let us give the reader credit for a little sense.

You cannot continue to fool the exhibitor with fake reviews, just as you cannot fool him with fake news. And why fool him once? If the producer could only realize it, it is just as good business for him to tell the truth about his pictures—in his advertising and in every way, as for the publication—in its reviews, and news.

If we were reviewing pictures for a single theatre or a distinct class of theatres whose needs we well knew, we could write a specific criticism and say, this picture is "good" or "bad" and "book it" or "don't book it."

But we are reviewing for exhibitors in every town and city in this broad land, the needs and tastes of whose people vary widely. The picture that may be "good" in New England may be "bad" in the Southwest. Even cities side by side differ widely in their amusement standards and requirements, and "book it" for one means "don't book it" for another.

RECENTLY I looked over a packet of postcard criticisms of a certain feature. The criticisms were made by exhibitors at the producer's request. Half of them said the feature was excellent and asked for more like it. Others said it was the worst ever and threatened to break contracts.

These exhibitors, undoubtedly, followed the feelings of their audiences. Some liked the feature; others didn't.

THE best we can do is to appraise each picture from each booking standard—to tell what kind of a picture it is in every way—and then let the exhibitor decide, whether or not it is suited to his particular clientele. This we do.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in the course of a year, publishes over seven thousand pages of editorial and advertising news matter. In policy and in fact and to the level best of our ability and income this service is a news service, in the readers interest.

The individual reader may find a review not specific enough for his requirements; that we cannot always help. Our editorial foot may slip up, occasionally on news; that is only human. But MOTION PICTURE NEWS is and will remain a news medium, written by newspaper men in the readers interest.

Board of Trade Declares War on Enemies of Industry

National Body, Organized by Representatives from Every Phase of Business, Will Seek to Invoke Spirit of Co-operation Among Members for Elevation of Picture Art and Invincible Resistance to Unwarranted Censorship Laws and Other Hostile Legislation—Binder, Executive Secretary, Outlines Purposes of Organization

THE Motion Picture Board of Trade is at last a reality. Herewith, in all its fine substantiality, is given the founding of the commendable organization, its officers, directors, committees and purposes. The leaders of the trade are united in its inception and future work. It is established solidly. It has practical ideals and is equipped to follow them out. It signalizes, more than any other one fact, the advance of this industry; it will do the industry more good than any other one possession.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS takes a natural pride in the final accomplishment of the body. The very name, "Board of Trade," was first mentioned by this publication; and this publication editorially supported and actively brought about the first movement toward a Board of Trade at the New York Convention of June 8, 1914. The movement was born again at the Dayton Convention in July of the same year. Both attempts failed, but both were steps to an end, and the good intentions and unselfish work of those concerned should not be forgotten. They failed principally through the lack of just what the present successful movement has had, namely, the individual efforts of a skilled organizer, J. W. Binder, who has builded into concrete form that which the best elements of the business want and will actively support.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.

THE organization of the Motion Picture Board of Trade was completed September 21 when the Board of Directors met at the offices of the Board at 18 East Forty-first street, New York. The personnel of the directorate had already been made up at the meeting of September 16.

The Constitution called for ten directors, who were elected in the following classes, to serve one year, or until the next election:

Class 1. — Manufacturers. — J. Stuart Blackton, Vitagraph; Carl Laemmle, Universal.

Class 2.—Supplies.—J. E. Brulatour and Schuyler Colfax.

Class 3.—Exchanges.—P. A. Powers and W. W. Irwin.

Class 4.—Exhibitors.—Max Stearne, Columbus, Ohio; S. L. Rothapfel, New York.

Class 6.—Miscellaneous.—J. W. Binder, William A. Johnston.

The business of the September 21 meeting was the election of officers and appointment of committees. The balloting resulted in the election of the following:

Blackton Elected President

President, J. Stuart Blackton; first vice-president, Carl Laemmle; second vice-president, Nicholas Power; third vice-president, John R. Freuler; fourth vice-president, Frank J. Rembusch; fifth vice-president, W. Stephen Bush; sixth vice-president, W. R. Rothacker; secretary, E. A. McManus; treasurer, Joseph W. Engel.

The committees were elected as follows:

Executive Committee—W. W. Irwin, Nicholas Power, P. A. Powers, William A. Johnston, E. A. McManus.

Membership Committee—J. Stuart Blackton, John R. Freuler, Richard A. Rowland, Siegmund Lubin, S. L. Rothapfel, Carl Laemmle.

Finance Committee—J. Stuart Blackton, R. H. Cochrane, Schuyler Colfax, John R. Freuler, Joseph W. Engel, Ferdinand Singhi.

Arbitration Committee—Samuel M. Field, W. W. Irwin, E. A. McManus, Paul Gulick, Arthur James, Will C. Smith.

Auditing Committee—Fred Hawley, L. W. Atwater, Carl H. Pierce.

Publicity Committee—Arthur James, Chester Beecroft, Sam Spedon, Paul Gulick, Carl H. Pierce, Arthur Leslie, William A. Johnston, W. Stephen Bush, Charles R. Condon.

Prior to the election of officers and committees, Carl Laemmle resigned as director, and his place was taken by R. H. Cochrane. In the same manner Schuyler Colfax resigned as director, to be succeeded by Nicholas Power.

Following the announcement of his election, President Blackton made a brief address of acknowledgment, in which he pledged himself to fulfill the duties placed upon him, and work for the growth and progress of the organization, no matter how great an expenditure of time it involved.

In conclusion, the Executive Committee tendered a vote of thanks to the organization committee for its successful labors.

Following the regular meeting of the Board, the newly appointed Executive Committee, which is charged with the duty of conducting the affairs of the Board, convened and elected Walter W. Irwin chairman of that committee. J. W. Binder was then elected executive secretary of the Board of Trade and William M. Seabury, of 52 Nassau street, was chosen general counsel. Mr. Binder is the man who has laid out the plan and scope of the Board and who was the chairman of the Organization Committee. Mr. Seabury is a prominent attorney not hitherto identified with any of the film interests. He is a brother of Judge Samuel Seabury of the Court of Appeals of New York.

Mr. Binder reported to the Board that nearly ten thousand dollars had already been paid into the treasury as initiation fees and annual dues, and that he was receiving applications for membership by mail and telegraph from all parts of the country.

Binder Outlines Purposes of Board

"It is not the intention of the Board to make a promiscuous campaign for the members," said Mr. Binder to the NEWS. "We propose, however, to devote every minute between now and the first of November to bringing into the organization every person, firm or corporation from Maine to California who has a legitimate right to claim membership, and who can convince the membership committee and two-thirds of the Board of Directors that he and his work will contribute to the permanent and substantial upbuilding of the industry as a whole. Men and concerns having these qualifications will be welcome; others will find it difficult to come in. It goes without saying, of course, that the applicant must pay in advance his initiation fee and annual dues in the class of membership to which he belongs. But, understand, he must have more than merely money. The question which the membership committee will keep to the front in its deliberations will largely have to do with the ideas and ideals that animate the work of the man or company applying for membership. Do these tend to elevate and make permanent the motion picture art? Well and good. Is the reverse true? Nothing doing. Is there a doubt? Investigate.

"You can readily see, can you not," Mr. Binder continued, "that the effect of such a policy will be to make membership in the Board a thing to be desired, sought for; indeed striven for. And it will bind together those who come in as members in a bond that is closer than any legal or corporate union—the bond of mutual service for the general welfare of the industry.

"And that, of course, is the end and aim of the Board. The motion picture industry —today the fifth in the country in point of money invested—has hitherto been entirely unorganized as a trade. Those who make a business of preying upon the body corporate have been quick to note this condition. As a result, the industry has been a mark for all kinds of attacks which have cost it many millions of dollars. It is our purpose as an organization to fight these conditions, whether they exist in the halls of the National or State Legislatures; in the town council chamber, or in the back room of the ward heeler's club. We will fight them by dragging them out in the open; by bringing them into the fierce light of 'pitiless publicity.' We will fight them while they are being considered as bills. If any of them get by and are made laws, we will fight these in the courts. Hitherto this work has been done sporadically and spasmodically, if at all, by individuals or individual concerns standing alone. We propose to fight as a united industry—one that has at its command the mightiest media of thought expression in the world, the motion picture screen—and we will use this to create that still mightier force which when once aroused speaks in thunder tones —Public Opinion. The motion picture screen speaks to more than ten million people in this country daily. It speaks a language that convinces.

To Use Public Prints in Battle

"But, in addition to this, we shall use the public prints to tell our story. We shall, through the daily press, the trade papers, the weekly and monthly magazines, tell the story of the motion picture—the wonderful fairy tale of its growth in a decade; the untold power of the screen as a propaganda medium and the consequent importance of keeping such a medium free from the trammels of political, partisan or religious pre-publicity censorship; the almost unbelievable stories of the rise from penury and poverty to affluence of the men who had the vision of the present day a decade ago and staked their pitiful all on the chance that their vision was true; these and hundreds of stories of like kind and character, written by the greatest writers in the land, many of whom have been enriched by the motion picture, will be read by the millions and when the legislative 'uplifter' in Passamaquoddy or Pumpkintown rises to introduce his thinly disguised bill to create a censor board, or to limit the days on which pictures may be shown or to add an inch to the areaway about the theatres, or to specify a new system of ventilation, or to provide for compulsory free admission for all legislators to the theatres of his State or municipality, the aroused public sentiment, educated to know and understand the mainsprings which animate his action, will either 'laugh him to scorn' or tear his bill to tatters.

"Then, there is the broad commercial side of our activity at which I can only hint. In this there will be numerous and varied activities, each having for its object putting the business on a solid, permanent basis. The securing of fair railroad-carrying conditions for films; adjusting and working out the vexed insurance conditions which surround the industry; arranging to supply members with credit information carefully gathered and kept for their information only; to create a body of men respected by all in the trade to whom members having honest differences may bring them for arbitration before rushing into litigation. These and many other features will be worked out.

"Now I am going to anticipate the objection you are going to make. You are going to say that all this is very pretty, but that it cannot be done in the film industry. You are going to say that the men in this industry hate each other, and distrust each other, that they will not work together. I am going to tell you that you are wrong. I had some of the oldest and most successful men in the industry tell me that same tale more than a year ago when I started out to get broader support for the National Board of Censorship. I proved they were wrong then, I am going to prove them wrong now. And in saying this I will at once admit that there are men in the industry today who will not play on the level. There always will be. But I do say this: that the great majority of the men in the film industry today—in all branches of it want to play on the level; want to build a business of which they can be proud; want to conduct their business so that it will be clean, high-grade and enduring. And I am only telling you what has been proven in every other business in the land that is today strong and prosperous, stable and profitable, that it will be the same in the film industry—those who play the game according to the age-old principles that at base govern all successful enterprise are the men who will win in the long run. And these men will work together for the common good in a Trade Association such as we will build and it is because this is true that this Motion Picture Board of Trade will in a few years be one of the most important factors in the industry. What the American Bankers' Association is to the banking business; what the National Canners' Association is to the fruit canning industry; what the wholesale and retail grocers associations are to the great business of making and selling of food stuffs; what the American Society of Civil Engineers is to the profession of Engineering—that, and more, will this organization be to the great art and industry of making, distributing and showing motion pictures. That is my profound conviction.

ANNA Q. NILSSON AS SHE APPEARS IN THE FOX FEATURE, "REGENERATION"

Financial Boon to the Industry

"But, you say, 'all this is going to cost a lot of money.' I hate to demolish your arguments; but, really, you are a poor guesser. The annual budget of the Motion Picture Trade Board for the first year aggregates the huge sum of $49,563. That's a lot, isn't it? Well, if the State censor bills in the 13 States in which they were introduced last year had become laws, they would have cost the industry in censor fees alone, more than $288,000. Motion picture men pay every year in insurance premiums more than they should, upwards of $400,000. I am told that there is outstanding on the books of the film exchanges of the country in uncollectable accounts upwards of a million dollars. I guess, perhaps, Mr. News man, you have some accounts yourself that are much—very much —past due that would not have been on your books if you had had proper credit information. What! Well, the Trade Board will save some of this money.

"How did this Trade Board come to be organized? Just about a year and a half ago I made an address to an assemblage of moving picture men in Grand Central Palace at the invitation of the News. What I said then, in the light of what has happened since, is prophetic. I said at that time:

"'All the problems which harass and hinder the motion picture industry today can be solved by a national trade organization made up of representatives from the three great divisions of the industry—the producer, exchangeman and exhibitor.'

History of the Board's Formation

"That was the first public announcement. But sometime about the middle of last February a luncheon was given by my friend McGuire, of the National Board of Censorship and myself at Rectors, to some seventeen of the largest manufacturers of pictures. In response to a plain statement I made to them concerning the necessity of fighting the censorship bills which were pending in ten States, a sum of money was subscribed for that purpose. In order to prevent heart failure on the part of the political and other grafters in the States in question at their not getting any of this huge sum, I will say that the exact amount of the fund was $2,900. With it certain results were accomplished and about the middle of June, it was thought best to call the same men together who had contributed, and tell them what had been done with their money. They met in the projection room of the recently organized V-L-S-E. The same man who presided at the Rector luncheon, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, presided at the latter meeting. After making the report I took occasion to say that in my judgment this work should not be done by the National Board of Censorship, and suggested that it ought to be done by the whole industry through a Trade Board. This suggestion was heartily and eloquently seconded by Walter W. Irwin, who told what other industries did in the way of organized effort to protect themselves against similar oppression. In the discussion which ensued, every man present agreed that the time was here for action. A volunteer committee was called for to draft a plan and map out a program for the formation of such a Trade Board. I was asked to do the work. I did it. The committee met, enlarged the plan and approved it after a series of meetings during August. On the first of September I resigned my position as director of finance and publicity of the National Board of Censorship and since then have devoted all my time to launching the new Board."

Battle Lines in Ohio Censor Fight Tighten

Exhibitors Present Pugnacious Front—Sam Bullock, Who Refused to Obey Order of Board Which Cries Out Painfully for His Arrest, Walks into Custody, as if He Would Rather Be Arrested Than Eat—Carl Pierce, Also Eager for the Fray, Prays for the Censors to Take "Hypocrites" into Court

Special to Motion Picture News

Cleveland, Sept. 22.

NOT getting any satisfaction from Mayor Baker, the Cleveland police prosecutors and the police themselves, Chairman Charles G. Williams, of the Ohio Board of Censorship, came to Cleveland all enraged over the fact that Sam Bullock, manager of the Columbia theatre, 2465 St. Clair avenue, had not been placed under arrest. Mr. Williams then went to Squire S. N. Schwartz, of East Cleveland, which is a separate municipality, and swore out a warrant for the arrest of Mr. Bullock.

As soon as he heard of the action of the chairman of the Censorship Board, Mr. Bullock surrendered himself and demanded a jury trial on charges that he had violated the censorship laws. His case was set for September 30, and it promises to be a hotly-fought issue.

Considerable comment was heard in Cleveland over the fact that Mr. Williams had to go outside of the city of Cleveland to get a warrant. Mayor Baker refused to take action on the ground that the right of free speech is accorded to citizens of the United States and they are entitled to express their opinion on any law. The police prosecutors did not take any action, although the case was submitted to them by Mayor Baker.

Mr. Williams charges that Mr. Bullock, on August 25, exhibited a film entitled "The Third Annual West End Business Men's Picnic" before it was passed by the censors. The board, when it did pass on the picture, cut out one sub-title reading: "Censorship was conceived in iniquity, born in sin and is dying in disgrace."

This sentence was an extract from an address made by Fred. J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, who attended the picnic as the guest of picture theatre managers who are members of the business men's organization.

Mr. Williams made this comment regarding the picture after the warrant had been issued:

Williams Does Not Like Criticism

"The sub-title was an insult to Ohio legislators and officials trying to uphold the law.

"The board of censors will stop defiance of the censorship law in Cleveland, as well as any other place. Certain Cleveland motion picture managers have been tantalizing us."

At first it appeared that Cleveland would be the storm center over the film play "Hypocrites," but for the present no Sixth City exhibitor will have an opportunity to gaze out upon the world through prison bars by defying the Ohio censors, who have rejected the play on two occasions. The state industrial board also declined to go contrary to the order of the censors on the ground that their overruling of the state board would be a bad precedent.

A few favored Clevelanders got a private view of the film at the Metropolitan theatre in company with Mayor Baker, city officials, newspaper men and others. The almost universal opinion was that the film was not so bad as it had been painted. Those who expected to see a picture out of the ordinary voiced their disappointment.

Carl H. Pierce, representing the producers, took the film with him to Columbus, where it will be shown at a private performance. According to Mr. Pierce, one of the members of the censorship board told him that the nude figure of truth should have been a man, anyhow, as "women do not stand for truth." This is on the same plane with the attitude on "The Devil's Daughter," that as the devil never had a daughter, the title was misleading.

Aching to Get Into the Courts

"This film has been passed and shown in every state in the Union except Ohio," said Mr. Pierce. "I confidently expect it will be shown all over Ohio if the board lives up to its threat to arrest us and give us a chance to get into court."

Ohio will be the next battleground of the fight over "The Birth of a Nation," and the stir caused by "Hypocrites" is regarded as the opening wedge of the fight against the censors. So far the Ohio board has not taken official action on the play. Individual members have been quoted as saying that they will overrule the National Board of Censorship and reject the film.

In view of past developments it can be assumed, with the greatest amount of assurance, that the Ohio board will move contrary to the action of the National Board of Censorship on any film. One Ohio exhibitor suggested that if the exhibitors want to have the Ohio censors pass any film is to make announcement that the National Board has rejected it.

"The Birth of a Nation" is booked for a two-weeks' run at the opera house.

Exhibitors are beginning to realize that they have been butting their heads against a wall when they thought that they could have censorship abolished. The State of Ohio wants the revenue that comes from censorship and will fight any attempt to have it put aside. The hope of Ohio exhibitors now is to secure a censorship board that will give unbiased verdicts on films and not announce in advance that they will reject a film.

Paul Alwyn Platz.

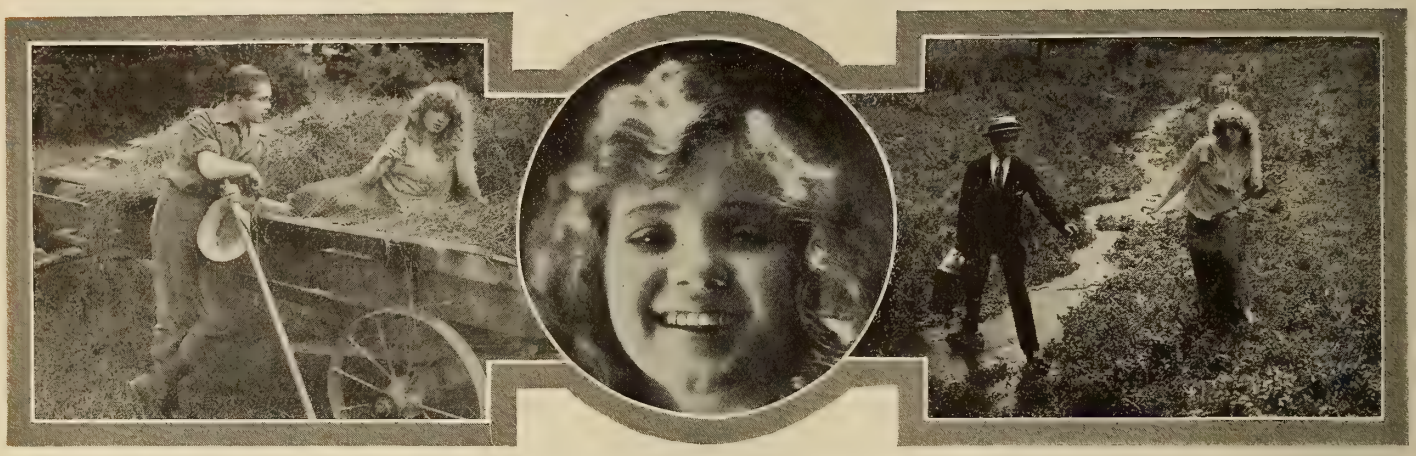
Essanay Will Release 181 Reels in October, November and December—New Series of Cartoons, Entitled "Canimated Nooz Pictorial, Burlesque and Current Events"

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, announces that the company has arranged for an unusual number of strong releases for the next three months, or the balance of the year 1915.

Essanay will release 181 reels in October, November and December. There will be produced 58 reels in October, 61 in November and 62 in December.

The photoplays will include works by the greatest writers of the period, as well as dramatizations of the older authors. Such writers as Edgar Allan Poe, F. Marion Crawford, Henry Oyen, Clinton Dangerfield, George Ade and H. S. Sheldon are among those whose creations will be put into photoplay form.

Among the best of the multiple reel photoplays which will be released are "In the Palace of the King," by F. Marion Crawford, and in which E. J. Ratcliffe, Richard C. Travers and Arline Hackett star; "The Raven," by Edgar Allan Poe, in which Henry B. Walthall takes the lead; "Tides That Meet," by Clinton Dangerfield, Bryant Washburn leading; "The Family Divided," taken from H. S. Sheldon's play, "The House Divided," featuring Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn; "The Village Homestead," by Joseph Byron Totten and featuring Darwin Karr; "The Old Sin," by H. Tipton Steck, presenting John Lorenz and June Keith, and "The Great Deceit," written by Edward T. Lowe, Jr., and featuring Warda Howard and John Lorenz.



There also will be forthcoming the George Ade Fables in Slang, the "Dreamy Dud" cartoons and scenic pictures, the Western dramas by G. M. Anderson, the Western comedies as well as Essanay-Chaplin photocomedies.

A new series of cartoons also will be introduced under the title of Essanay's "Canimated Nooz Pictorial." This series, drawn by Wallace A. Carlson, author of the "Dreamy Dud" pictures, will be a burlesque on current topics of the day. They will be five hundred feet in length and coupled with five hundred feet of scenic. These are scenes taken in the Rockies of the Canadian Northwest.

Essanay is planning for a great spurt in putting out its releases and completing them far ahead for the convenience of exhibitors. Owing to the great demand for Essanay plays its directors have been working day and night the past few weeks to keep up to the call for pictures of the Indian Head brand.

There are a score of directors now at work, six more having been added to the company roll. Because of the magnitude of many of its productions, particularly "In the Palace of the King," for which both Chicago studios were utilized as well as a large outdoor temporary palace, eight assistants working all the time to aid Director Fred E. Wright, other directors were kept busy taking out-of-door scenes and working during the night on the various indoor settings.

The new Essanay studio, which will be 350 feet long and 175 feet wide, with a floor space of 61,250 square feet, is being pushed as rapidly as possible in order to give plenty of room for the production of plays. This is one of the largest indoor studios, lighted by artificial lamps, ever built, and it will accommodate a dozen directors working at the same time.

GLAZE NEW GENERAL MANAGER FOR E. AND R. JUNGLE COMPANY

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Sept. 20.

T. H. Glaze, formerly with the Lubin company at Philadelphia, has been named general manager for the E. & R. Jungle Film Company, and has arrived at the Coast to take up the preliminary work of this new position. Later Mr. Glaze will take care of the Eastern end for the company, but at the present time is aiding in the production work.

A two-reel subject, "The Jungle's Toll," from scenario by J. A. Neitz, formerly of the NYMP scenario department, is being made under the direction of Louis Chaudet. This features Sallie, the educated chimpanzee. She kidnaps a baby child and takes it to the jungle where she mothers the infant. The majority of scenes are laid in African jungles, and a number of E. & R. trained animals will take part. Supporting Sallie are Edward Alexander, Ann Kroman, Josephine West and others. The baby part is taken by Lucille Smith, age three years, the daughter of the caretaker of the zoo. Little Lucille has played with Sallie since she was a mere baby, and the chimpanzee fondles her as if she were her own daughter.

"TRAIL OF THE BLOOD," TRIANGLE, POSTPONED

The Triangle Film Corporation has been forced to postpone the Griffith production, "The Trail of Blood," because of the illness of Mae Marsh, from pleurisy.

Winner of Universal Beauty Contest Becomes Actress

Ruth Maria Purcell, Likened to Pauline Bush in Pulchritude, Decides to Accept Offer to Appear Before the Screen and Goes to Imp Studio for First Play

RUTH MARIA PURCELL, who was chosen as the most beautiful girl in America at the close of the Universal's National Beauty Contest a couple of months ago, has finally decided to enter the realm of moving pictures.

This contest originated with Joe Brandt, "the Universal's man of ideas," and was carried to a successful end by H. H. Van Loan, who brought it to a close by marrying one of the contestants, Gertrude Cameron, on board the battleship New York, while the fleet was lying in the Hudson waiting to be reviewed by President Wilson.

RUTH PURCELL

Miss Purcell comes from Washington, and was chosen by a committee consisting of Mrs. Christian D. Hemmick, Paul Bartlett, sculptor; Henri de Sibour, architect; Mme. Ali Kuli Kahn, wife of the Persian Ambassador; Hazel Mackaye and Ruth Jones, society editor of the Washington "Times," as the most beautiful girl in the Nation's capital and the District of Columbia.

She made the journey across the continent, with forty-seven other beautiful girls, and, on the big stage at Universal City, on June 17, was chosen as the most beautiful girl in America. The committee which selected her on points, included H. O. Davis, director of the Panama-California Exposition, at San Diego; Chairman Max Wierozeck, A. S. Kestllyi, Mrs. Antonia Melville and Mrs. Maud Davis Baker, all well known artists in Los Angeles.

Before going to California, Miss Purcell was employed in the office of Samuel Gompers, in the Federation of Labor offices in Washington. Upon her return she was offered a position as star by the Universal, but she requested that she be given time to consider the offer, as she was not certain whether she cared to leave the city wherein she was born, and had lived ever since.

But now she has decided to go to the screen and she is due to arrive in New York within a few days and will be given a position at the Imp studio, where she will remain until she has become used to the camera, when she will be sent to Universal City, where she will probably be put at the head of her own company.

She is a type similar to Pauline Bush, and is what is known as true Southern, willowy, with eyes that are clear hazel, registering instantly every change of emotion; wide set like the Harrison Fisher conception of beauty.

EDNA MAYO NOT DAUNTED BY ACCIDENT

Edna Mayo, leading woman for Essanay, slipped and sprained her ankle during the filming of one of the first scenes in "The Scapegoat," Essanay's three-act photoplay, but, although urged by her physician and director to rest for several days, the plucky little actress insisted that there be no delay because of her injury.

She played throughout the remaining scenes of the photoplay, although her ankle pained her and she walked with difficulty. As a result, the play was gotten out on time, but Miss Mayo was laid up for a few days as a result of her pluck. She stars with Bryant Washburn in "The Scapegoat."

Jamaica Officials Receive Fox Companies Royally

Although the Island Is Under Martial Law and Consequently Entangled with Red Tape, the Authorities Endeavor to Prevent Delay to the Players—Owner of Immense Plantations Offers His Property for Backgrounds—Preparations for Filming the Annette Kellermann Subject Are Under Way on a Large Scale

WITH THE FOX-BRENON-KELLERMANN FEATURE COMPANY IN JAMAICA—Left to right: THE CARPENTER SHOP; REAR END OF MAIN BUILDING; TECHNICAL DIRECTOR'S OFFICE ON THE GROUND; IN THE SCENE-PAINTER'S ROOM.

THE second week's report from the William Fox companies at Kingston, Jamaica, where they are making the photospectacle starring Annette Kellermann, in whose support appears William E. Shay, teems with interest and shows that the hustle and progressive spirit of Director General Herbert Brenon have infected the somewhat phlegmatic residents of the tropic islands with a spirit of vim and vigor.

On Wednesday, September 1, within two days after the companies had landed, a lease was signed on Rose Gardens, one of the largest plots in town. Estimates asked on lumber, on the supplies ordered and the printing of a voucher system to fit the conditions in the island, which is a British possession, and at present, of course, under martial law.

The military authorities on the island, however, have combined with the civil dignitaries to extend every courtesy to the Fox companies, and the name of the motion picture magnate, who selected Jamaica for the gigantic Kellermann enterprise is already one to conjure with.

The cold-storage plant at the Myrtlebank hotel will be utilized for making tests as the taking of the pictures develops, but the negative itself will be sent north for development, as the climatic conditions of Jamaica do not allow the very best work in this line.

The first rehearsal was called for September 2, and Director Brenon, assisted by Director Morrissey, read the script to the company. Although rain fell heavily, work went forward and more than one hundred horses were purchased during the day. The stores open at 8 a. m. and close at 4 p. m., except on Wednesday, which is a half holiday, and this caused some inconvenience until the Americans learned the ropes.

British Red Tape Cut for Fox

Like most colonial British possessions, Jamaica is loaded down with red tape. The William Fox organization, however, succeeded in smoothing out much of the delay due to this source, and is meeting with nothing but courtesy and helpful advice from all quarters. Sir John Pringle, who owns numerous plantations on the island and represents the aristocracy, called on Director General Brenon and offered his estate and assistance in the way of making the Kellermann picture.

As some of the most beautiful scenery on the island is on Sir John's property, his offer was promptly accepted. Several entertainments have been given to the company, among them a dance in honor of Miss Kellermann, given by the naval and military officers stationed at Jamaica.

On Friday, September 3, seven hundred negroes, natives of the island, were set to work at one dollar and a half a day in a drenching rain. Arrangements were made to installate water, electric lighting power and telephones. The police department showed its desire to co-operate with William Fox's plant by issuing cards, instructing officers and constables to render all assistance to the William Fox organization.

Despite the drenching rain, four machines scoured the island, looking for locations. A system of bookkeeping, made necessary by the use of English currency, was installed by the auditing department. The Myrtlebank hotel is constantly besieged by armies of would-be motion picture actors, showing that the fever to appear on the screen is as strong in the tropics as in the north. The average hours of work for the William Fox staff are from 7 a. m. to 11 p. m.

Annette Kellermann, whose dog, it will be recalled, was not allowed to land on Jamaica soil, and was carried off to Colon on the S. S. Carillo, was returned on Saturday, September 4, and quartered on board an oil steamer lying in the harbor. Miss Kellermann immediately set off for the oil steamer, accompanied by an imposing procession consisting of the chief officer of the United Fruit Company, James Sullivan, the deputy inspector-general of police, two constables in white coats and helmets, the captain of the ship and three reporters. Miss Kellermann insisted on taking up her quarters on board the oil ship, if her dog was not allowed to land.

Dressing Rooms for One Thousand

Dressing rooms for one thousand persons have been completed, and a wardrobe room containing six thousand costumes, in charge of Mrs. Irene Lee, erected. Besides the main studio, three large open-air studios are being put up. As it is necessary to use revolvers in the course of the picture, notice was served on the authorities to issue licenses, for in Jamaica, it is the gun and not the carrier that is licensed.

The first pay-day of the company on foreign soil involves some amusing complications, as the American gold taken down by order of William Fox, had been used up, and payment had to be made in pounds, shillings and pence, giving rise to endless confusion and snarling up the auditor's department in a beautiful tangle. In fact, matters were not straightened out until after midnight.

On Tuesday, September 7, S. S. Santa Marta arrived from New York at Kingston, bringing more American gold, several additional actors, cameramen, mechanics and supplies, in addition to four hundred suits of armor, spears and helmets. At last advices, Miss Kellermann, finding that she could not bring her dog ashore, has persuaded the captain of the tank steamer, the Lucerna, to fit up quarters for her on board, until such time as the quarantine restrictions on her pet have been lifted.

CHICAGO AUDIENCE SEES "TRILBY"

The World Film Corporation on Thursday, September 16, gave a special invitation showing of "Trilby," the initial release of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, at the LaSalle theatre in Chicago. This production was well received by the large and enthusiastic audience.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

N. Y. CONCERN NEGOTIATES FOR POINT BREEZE, MASS.

Special to Motion Picture News

Boston, Sept. 22.

Negotiations are under way for the transfer of Point Breeze, Webster Lake, Mass., to a New York motion picture concern. The land is owned by Michael Commons. The property consists of dancing pavilion, dining hall, bowling alley, pool parlors, and eight acres of land. Mr. Commons expects the deal to be closed in six weeks, until which time he will not divulge the name of the company interested.

World Film Treats Itself to First Birthday Dinner

Equitable, Releasing Through the Corporation, Also Comes in on "The Eats," Served at the Hotel Astor to Officers and Directors and Members of Trade Press

THE World Film Corporation celebrated its first anniversary on Monday, September 20, with a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, New York. At the same time, in the same manner and at the same place the first birthday of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation was honored by the same luncheon, which was, it might be remarked in passing, plenty large enough for the two celebrations. Officers and directors of both corporations were present, while members of the press attended as special guests of honor.

The growth of the World Film Corporation and the promising outlook of the Equitable organization were the main topics of the speeches.

Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the year-old concern, referred to its phenomenal growth since its commencement.

"I would like to call your attention," he said, "to the busy calamity howlers of a year ago who predicted that World Film would never make good in an almost untouched field. To refute these statements at the present time is unnecessary. 'The Dollar Mark,' our first release, netted $80,000 for us, so you can see that we plunged right in at the start and made good—we didn't let a moment pass."

William A. Brady, whose past stage successes have furnished much material for World features, spoke of the motion picture business in general. "The interest that the public of this country is manifesting for the silent drama is the most startling thing that I have ever encountered in my thirty-five years' theatrical experience," Mr. Brady said. "The inroads that the pictures are making upon the legitimate stage," he continued," are almost terrifying, yet without a doubt their highest possibilities have not yet been attained."

Mr. Brady spoke highly of D. W. Griffith, and in conclusion dwelt on the rapid growth of the World Film Corporation, the aggressiveness of Mr. Selznick and the future of World Film and the Equitable.

Joseph L. Rhinock, representing the Shubert interests, voiced many of Mr. Brady's sentiments and spoke highly of Mr. Selznick and his associates. Felix Feist, general manager of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, spoke in behalf of that organization, saying that already many exhibitors throughout the country were ready to show every release turned out by the Equitable, as the excellent character of "Trilby" and several of its followers already completed was proof sufficient of the program's quality.

Other speakers were Milton C. Work and Harry Reichenbach, manager of publicity for the Equitable corporation, this last gentleman punctuating his glittering speech with several examples of his humorous lines.

Those present were: L. J. Selznick, M. Selznick, Fred L. Stine, B. L. Busch, Leo J. Feist, William A. Brady, Milton C. Work, Joseph L. Rhinock, Jacob Wilk, Harry Reichenbach, Henry F. MacNamara, N. Winick, Harry L. Brock, George W. Lederer, Wiley F. Newman, G. W. Newgason, C. O. Kracht, P. B. Newman, A. S. Aronson, M. E. Hoffman, Harry C. Drum, Stewart N. Lake, Tracy Lewis, Harry Ennis, John W. Semler, Lynde Denig, J. L. Hoff, Fred Beecroft, Charles R. Condon and Peter Milne.

Associated Film Sales Plans Publicity in Dailies

Company Intends to Make Known Its Activities in 600 Newspapers Through Campaign Launched By Chicago Agency Next Month—"Advertising to Know the Truth," Says Bard

A MOST important step toward acquainting the fans throughout the country with the quality and merits of its productions, was taken by the Associated Film Sales Corporation last week when it completed the details of a nation-wide newspaper advertising campaign that will carry the announcements of its activities into every important daily newspaper in America.

Lee-Jones, Inc., a well known Chicago advertising agency, will launch this campaign for the Associated early next month.

"Advertising to learn the truth," is the rather unique expression used by Arthur Bard, general manager of the Associated, in explaining his ideas. "Primarily, of course, we are advertising for the benefit of all those in any way connected with Associated service, whether that connection be as theatre-goer theatre manager, exchange manager, or manufacturer.

"Our advertising will be based on absolute truth. We do not intend to interest the public or the theatre manager with extravagant claims and then trust to kind fate that they will be satisfied with a small per cent. of such claims. This will be no hit-or-miss campaign with an allowance for ignorance on the part of the public to carry us through.

"The moving picture has become a necessity and the public is now thoroughly familiar with screen values; in fact, the theatre-goer is now the most hypercritical of all our critics and it behooves the motion picture manufacturer to take that fact into consideration. We, of the Associated service, are so convinced of this that we will make no claims of merit or quality for our pictures unless we will at all times be able to more than substantiate such claims in every way."

The Associated has also extracted a promise from Myron C. Fagan, editor-in-chief of the National Newspaper Publishers' Drama Service Bureau, that he would personally review their productions every week.

Mr. Fagan is the official New York dramatic critic for a number of America's newspapers and this promise on his part carries with it an assurance that his criticisms of Associated pictures will be seen in many newspapers throughout the country.

Norma Talmadge for Two-Reel Dramas on Kriterion

William Parsons Has Arranged to Release Pictures Starring Actress Through This Program Regularly—Cartoonist Engaged for Weekly Split Reel Featuring Artist's Personality

THE Kriterion Film Sales Corporation, now completing plans for organization, announces that Norma Talmadge, whose work in "The Battle Cry of Peace" has elicited widespread approval, will be regularly featured in two-reel dramas on the Kriterion program.

This arrangement was brought about through a visit to New York of William Parsons, head of the National Film Corporation. Mr. Parsons satisfied himself as to the stability of the Kriterion organization, and closed an agreement by which productions of his company starring Miss Talmadge will be regularly released through Kriterion.

A well-known vaudeville cartoonist and artist will also contribute drawings for a split reel which Kriterion will release weekly. One part of this feature will consist of pictures in which the personality of the artist himself will be exploited in connection with playlets appealing to the sentiments of old and young.

Preceding each picture of this nature will be an illustrated interview—prominent personages as they appear in real life and the artist's impression of them.

Other stars who will be seen on the Kriterion program are: Dot Farley, Constance Talmadge, Hazel Buckham, Rena Rogers, William Parsons and Harry Fisher.

S. L. Newman, of Kriterion, discussing the plans of the corporation, said: "We are incorporating for $500,000 under the laws of the State of New York. Quality and permanence will be the watchword of the organization, and an evidence of the class of productions which we shall offer is shown in the fact that we shall release eighteen reels a week. The company has opened an office in London, at 62 Great Russell street, with Charles Hauff in charge.

Martha Hedman With Metro for "Turmoil"

Actress Who Is Now Starring in "The Boomerang," a Belasco Broadway Success, Is Cast for a Screen Version of a "Best Seller," by Booth Tarkington—Lionel Barrymore Added to List of Metro Stars by B. A. Rolfe—William Nigh Will Direct Plays Featuring the Actor

THE policy of the Metro Pictures Corporation of sparing neither expense nor effort in offering the public the foremost stars of the stage and screen in vehicles worthy of their highest artistic talents, was given concrete expression this week in the announcement that Metro had closed a contract with Martha Hedman, one of the most magnificent and popular of the younger stars of the American stage, under the terms of which this charming and accomplished actress will be featured in an elaborate picturization of Booth Tarkington's powerful novel, "The Turmoil," the rights on which were secured by the Metro Pictures Corporation a few weeks ago.

When the Metro first secured the motion picture rights to "The Turmoil," the problem of finding an actress worthy of the stellar role in this picturization of one of the greatest novels of the decade, at once became of supreme importance.

Miss Hedman was chosen because she, of all the stellar artists of the stage and screen who were considered, alone had the sympathetic qualities and bewitching personality demanded by the part in supreme degree.

LIONEL BARRYMORE

Miss Hedman is now playing the leading role in "The Boomerang" at the Belasco theatre, a Belasco masterpiece, and by far the most successful of all the plays of the present season, which have yet come to Broadway. Last season she was featured with John Drew in "The Prodigal Husband," and scored an individual triumph. Miss Hedman has a long list of successful engagements to her credit, and Mr. Belasco has said to her, that she is, perhaps, the most intelligent actress he ever starred and the quickest to sense the possibilities of her part. Her wonderful versatility and magnetic personality will be given unlimited opportunities for expression in the role of Mary Ventrees.

LeGuere as Temperamental Youth

Next in importance to the part of Mary Ventrees in "The Turmoil," is that of Bibbs Sheridan, a youth of many moods, and therefore with unlimited possibilities for a juvenile lead. George LeGuere, who was featured with Emily Stevens in "Destiny; or, the Soul of a Woman," a recent Metro production from the studios of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., has been selected for this part. So excellent was his work, that LeGuere will be featured with the star in the coming screen production of the Tarkington masterpiece.

Although LeGuere was admirably suited for his part in "Destiny; or, the Soul of a Woman," in "The Turmoil" he will portray a character which gives him still greater opportunities.

"The Turmoil," first ran as a serial in Harpers', meeting with wonderful success, and when it was brought out in book form, it enjoyed a great popularity. For more than a year it has headed the list of the "six best sellers," prepared and published monthly by the Bookman Magazine.

Edwin Carewe, who directed "Destiny; or, the Soul of a Woman," will produce "The Turmoil" at the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., studios, his selection as director of this important production by Metro officials being directly due to the tremendous success he achieved in the first named picture.

Work will begin on "The Turmoil" immediately after Mr. Carewe finishes "The Final Judgment," the new name selected for the play in which Ethel Barrymore is starring, which is scheduled for early release in the Metro program.

Another notable addition to the list of Metro stars during the present week is Lionel Barrymore, long one of the most versatile and popular actors of the speaking stage. Early this week B. A. Rolfe, head of the Rolfe Photoplayers, Inc., signed Mr. Barrymore for the stellar role in a photo-drama of unusual quality, the title of which will be announced later.

It is probable also, that in addition to the contemplated production Mr. Barrymore will be starred in other Metro pictures of similar distinctive character. The play selected for Mr. Barrymore is of a vital type, brimful of strong action and unusual situations and gives the fullest scope to his notable dramatic gifts.

William Nigh, who recently added fresh laurels to his reputation as a director of really big motion pictures, in "Emmy of Stork's Nest," the latest Columbia-Metro feature in which Mary Miles Minter is starred, will direct the Barrymore play.

In addition to Mr. Barrymore, Metro has also engaged Hamilton Revelle, the eminent English actor, for a series of pictures to be produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., for release in the Metro program.

Mr. Revelle won a notable success in "An

MARTHA HEDMAN

Enemy of Society," in which he shared stellar honors with Lois Meredith, and his engagement for other future Metro pictures was a logical sequence. In drawing-room and polite heroic roles, Mr. Revelle is conceded to be among those who are at the head of their profession.

Before coming to Metro, in addition to many notable plays on the speaking stage, both in England and America, he appeared in pictures produced by Ambrosio in Italy, where he won signal success. Early announcement will be made of the next feature in which he will appear on the Metro program.

SCREEN CLUB ELECTION SET FOR OCTOBER 2

The fourth annual election of the Screen Club will be held at the club house, 165 West 47th street, New York City, on Saturday, October 2. A spirited contest is expected. Last year's battle of the ballots created considerable interest in the motion picture trade, as the five hundred members of the Screen Club are drawn from all walks of the industry. Arthur Leslie was campaign manager for James Kirkwood, the winning candidate, and this year is campaign manager for Billy Quirk, who is running against Paul Scardon for the presidency.

PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT OF TRIANGLE MOVES

The publicity and promotion departments of Triangle Film Corporation have removed to larger quarters, and now occupy Rooms 405, 406 and 410 of the Longacre building, at Broadway and Forty-second street, New York. Even these rooms have been found too small for the increasing demands of these departments and will be occupied only until larger accommodations can be obtained.

The Triangle Corporation is already negotiating for an entire floor of a building in the Broadway-Forty-second street district to house its entire executive offices. The various departments, which are now temporarily located in different buildings in New York City will remove within a few weeks to this new address, which will be announced as soon as the negotiations are completed.

Three Directors for 2 American Comedy Companies

Plan Consists of Rotating Plays So That No One Studio Manager Will Be Obliged to Complete a Production, Thus Putting Three Fingers in a "Beauty" Pie

A NOVEL plan for the production of comedy films has been inaugurated at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, according to a statement made by Samuel S. Hutchinson, president.

The idea consists of the use of three directors for two producing companies, rotating the direction of each of the two companies among the three directors. It is said that the novel comedy situations thus developed have resulted in remarkably better farce films than have been produced under the old scheme.

The revelation of this novel plan of direction was made by Mr. Hutchinson, while in New York recently. Mr. Hutchinson said: "I have always believed that novel situations were vitally essential to good comic productions. In order to produce really unique situations you must have great diversity.

"Formerly I followed the plan used by other film manufacturers of using only one director to a company. The Beauty comedies gained considerable recognition under that scheme, but I was not satisfied. When we recently increased the production of Beauty comedies to two a week instead of one a week for the new Mutual program, I conceived the idea that it would probably result in much better work to have three directors for the two companies, rotating the productions among the three directors. This means that a company producing Beauty comedies this week would be directed by one director; the following week the same company would be directed by another director, and the third week the same company would be directed by a third director.

"In order to work out this plan smoothly I have arranged two companies to produce Beauty comedies. The leads in company No. 1 are: Frank Borzage, Neva Gerber, Mrs. Lucille Ward and William Carroll. The leads in company No 2, are: John Sheehan, John Steppling and Miss Holloway.

"These two companies are directed by the following three directors: James Douglas, Archer MacMackin and John Dillon. There will be an interchange of direction on all Beauty comedies hereafter. Mr. Douglas directing company No. 1 this week, Mr. MacMackin directing company No. 1 next week, and Mr. Dillon directing company No. 1 the third week, and rotating similarly with company No. 2.

"You will observe that this gives the directors sufficient leisure to create comedy situations. It gives them ample time to read and reread the scenario and to seek locations and to create situations. This consequently must result in a higher quality production, and I am looking forward to a new high standard of production in Beauty comedies.

"I have recently reviewed the first ten Beauty comedies made under this new plan and I am confident that the plan is already a remarkable success. 'Cash, Cats, and a Cook Book,' a Beauty comedy directed by Mr. Dillon, is exceptionally good. Clever use of Carroll's comedy character will be found in 'Love, Bumps and Mumps,' a Beauty comedy directed by Mr. MacMackin. 'Mixed Mails,' is another Beauty comedy which displays the stage technique of Mr. Douglas. 'Curing Father' is full of comic situations and was directed by Mr. Dillon. 'Mother's Busy Week' is another Beauty laugh-provoker which was directed by Mr. MacMackin. 'Alias James—Chauffeur,' demonstrates Mr. Douglas' ability as a screen director.

"All of the above productions will be released on the Mutual program within the next few weeks and I am confident that exhibitors everywhere will see in the quality of these Beauty comedies the success of the new plan of direction."

David Horsley Engages Four More Stars for His Plays

Mabel Van Buren, Donald Bowles, Grace Gibson and Marvel Spencer Join Ranks of Producer for Mutual Program—Carl M. Le Viness, Director, Also With His Organization

MARVELL SPENCER DONALD BOWLES MABEL VAN BUREN

DAVID HORSLEY continues to add the names of many stars to his already long list. The latest to enter into contracts with him are Mabel Van Buren, Donald Bowles, Grace Gibson and Marvell Spencer, all photoplayers, and Carl M. LeViness, the director.

Mabel Van Buren comes to Mr. Horsley from the Jesse L. Lasky studios, where she had been engaged for some time playing leading parts in the Lasky features released on the Paramount program. Perhaps her greatest picture success was scored in the role of The Girl, in "The Girl of the Golden West." In this release she attained great dramatic heights, playing the difficult part with so thorough an understanding and finish that critics proclaimed her unsurpassable in the character. Besides the girl, she played leading feminine roles in other Lasky productions.

Miss Van Buren's leading man is Donald Bowles, a great stock favorite in Los Angeles, where he appeared with the Burbank theatre organization. He has had much experience on the speaking stage. He began his career when he was seventeen at the Herald Square theatre.

After the San Francisco fire Oliver Morosco engaged him for his Burbank theatre stock company in Los Angeles. Here Mr. Bowles remained four years and it is this company he leaves to join Mr. Horsley.

Grace Gibson, another of Mr. Horsley's new players, was formerly with the Vitagraph company, but later went into vaudeville, which she leaves to return to pictures, this time through the medium of Mr. Horsley's company.

Marvell Spencer, the fourth of this week's acquisitions, was formerly with the Eclair company. She played the leads in "The Beginning of the End," and was featured with George Larkins in "Red Tape," and "The Unpardonable Sin."

Carl M. LeViness, the latest director to join Mr. Horsley's organization, is an old Reliance man. Mr. LeViness started in with Thanhouser at New Rochelle, and then went to the Reliance studio in New York. When D. W. Griffith took charge of the Reliance Mr. LeViness was one of the few directors to remain. Later Mr. LeViness joined the Eclair company, with whom he remained until his connection with Mr. Horsley.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

BRONSTON, PATHE SCENARIO MAN, WRITES A SONG HIT

Douglas Bronston, of the Pathé scenario department, is a versatile genius. He wrote a song for "Neal of the Navy," the big serial success, that was so good Pathé has had it published by Berlin, Watterson and Snyder. The song is making good.

Metro Pictures Will Have Musical Accompaniment

S. M. Berg Is Delegated to Prepare Music for the Special Needs of Each Release—"The Silent Voice" Is First Subject with Music Under New Plan

THE Metro Picture Corporation is to provide a novelty for its exhibitors in the musical scores which will be especially prepared for each feature picture prior to its date of release. The Metro plan, which will become effective with the current releases, is to select from the classics in music, melodies of popular appeal, which will give suitable atmosphere and a harmonious accompaniment to the theme of the screen play.

When the classics fail to provide material that supply the precise needs, the best American composers will be called upon to write original music suited to the picture. In this connection President Richard A. Rowland, of the Metro, said:

"The spoken drama has had the advantages of music written exclusively for the individual production and certainly our feature pictures, which entail a cost in many cases greater than the cost of producing a play for the speaking stage, are entitled to as careful attention.

"If Beethoven, Mozart, Grieg and Chopin can give us better than we can have made to order, then I'll be glad to see the music of these distinguished men utilized for the great good of Metro pictures. They, all of them, would undoubtedly have been glad to have their music accompany Metro pictures, and I feel we are not trifling with art when we give the best in music a chance with what we believe is the best in pictures.

"If, on the other hand, none of these great composers have written music which fits our features to a nicety, we shall have compositions that do.

"Metro has waited on the musical accompaniment plan until we could satisfy ourselves that we were in a position to offer only the best.

"I have instructed Nicholas Devore, general manager of G. Schirmer, Inc., 3 West Forty-third street, New York City, to provide nothing but supreme music, suitable in every detail and particular for each Metro picture, and he begins his work while the picture is in the making. S. M. Berg, one of the ablest musicians on the Schirmer staff, has been delegated to study each Metro picture with a view to writing a musical program which shall exactly fit it in every particular.

"The first musical program to be issued will be with the release of "The Silent Voice."

Selig Finishes Elaborate Plant for Laboratories and Technical Departments at Cost of Many Thousands

A NEW addition to the Selip Polyscope Company's great plant in Chicago has just been completed for the purpose of housing the laboratories and technical departments. This addition makes the Selig studios in Chicago among the largest and most modernly equipped in the world.

The new addition, built of steel, brick and stone, is three stories high, and new machinery installed in this addition aggregates in cost many thousands of dollars. The new addition includes the negative, assembling, developing, printing and perforating departments, drying rooms, machine shop, and a film inspection department. There is also a job printing office in the new addition.

The film editorial department, with modernly equipped projecting rooms, is also located in the new addition, as are the editorial rooms of the "Hearst-Selig News Pictorial."

Were it possible for all the friends of the Selig company to make a tour of inspection of the new departments they would gain a new conception of the manifold details essential to the work of preparing and releasing the Selig pictureplay program.

Laboratory experts are continually engaged in the dark rooms, the drying rooms and the developing rooms, and the power which runs the delicate machinery is furnished by dynamos. The interior of the new building is finished in concrete in order to guard against fire, and contains the vaults for films, etc.

VIOLA DANA, THE LITTLE EDISON STAR, IN A POSE FOR THE FORTHCOMING FEATURE, "GLADIOLA"

HORSLEY ENGAGES C. M. PECK AS BOSTOCK SCENARIO DIRECTOR

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 20.

Charles Mortimer Peck, formerly vice-president of the Balboa Company, and prior to that manager of the advertising department of the William Fox Company, has been engaged by David Horsley to have charge of the scenario department of the Bostock Jungle and Film Company, and took up this work this week.

Mr. Peck has completed a series of pictures, each subject of two or three reels.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

HELEN WARE'S GOOD NATURE MAKES FOR SUCCESS OF "LOWRIES"

It is indeed a good-natured star who will not only stand for being "jollied" by her director, but will join in the laugh as heartily as any one, even though that laugh be directed at herself and the make-up which her part demands.

That, however, is the sort of "regular fellow" that Helen Ware is. Far from taking an offense at a good-natured, well-meant "ragging," she is ready with repartee as bright and witty as any ever delivered by one of her forefathers, who, rumor hints, had in their veins a few drops of the blood of old Erin.

When Miss Ware arrived at Universal City for her initiation into the picture game, she frankly acknowledged that she had much to learn about the new branch of the old profession. The result was that everyone in the company, from Director "Bob" Leonard down to the least known of the extramen, became possessed of an almost insane desire to do all within their power to help the willing star over the hard places.

Nor did her demeanor change as she learned more and more of the new work. On the contrary, as she learned, she came to realize even better than before just what her new-found friends had been doing for her, and she became all the more willing to accede to that hardest of all "stunts" for the average novice, "taking direction." And that very fact—the fact that she had absolute confidence in the judgment of her director—has made work with her a pleasure, and more than any other one thing, has assured the ultimate success of "That Lass o' Lowries," one of the most difficult pictures Leonard has ever attempted and one that is said to be peculiarly suited to Helen Ware's personality.

"Zaza," Famous, Found Intact in Vault After Fire

Feature, Scheduled for Release on October 4, Vehicle for Pauline Frederick, Is Only One of 11 Completed Productions to Wholly Escape Effects of Conflagration

PAULINE FREDERICK IN "ZAZA" (Famous Players—Paramount—October 4)

THE opening of the huge film vault, which hung on the walls of the Famous Players Film Company's studio after the total destruction of the building by the disastrous fire of September 11, revealed the fact that the negative of that company's film adaptation of "Zaza," in which Pauline Frederick is the star, was the only one of eleven completed feature productions to escape wholly the ravages of the flames.

It was the fate of this picture that caused the officials of the company the greatest concern, as it represented the outlay of many thousands of dollars, and had consumed six weeks in the making.

When notified of the saving of "Zaza," Miss Frederick was jubilant.

"I cannot tell you how glad I am to hear the news," she declared to Mr. Zukor, president of the Famous Players Company, when he telephoned her the facts. "Never in my life have I felt so utterly miserable as when I arrived at the fire and realized that 'Zaza' was in that building. I had put my whole heart and soul into the enactment of the great character, and I am sure that if it had been necessary to repeat the entire production, I should never have done as well again.

"Only a person who has gone through the terrible emotional stress which is necessary in acting such a powerful impersonation as 'Zaza' can realize with what dismay I faced the prospect of repeating the whole performance.

"'Zaza' is to me the most marvelous character that has appeared on the stage in years. I looked forward to playing the role with the keenest anticipation, and when we began the filming of the play for the first time I had worked myself up to a nervous tension that enabled me to put all my force into the role. But with this tension gone, as it inevitably would be, it would have been practically impossible for me to have put the same spirit into a repetition of 'Zaza' which I did before."

The miraculous escape of "Zaza" from the flames preserves for the motion picture public the record of Pauline Frederick's greatest histrionic achievement, as it was into the portrayal of the French music hall singer that she had put her whole soul. "Zaza" had been considered the heart-breaking kind of role that only a Rejane or a Bernhardt could adequately interpret.

That Miss Frederick was the one person fitted by temperament and artistry to give this great character the most resplendent presentation on the screen, everyone will be quick to affirm who has seen her in "The Eternal City" or "Sold," in both of which she startled the motion picture public by her wonderful emotional acting.

"Zaza" was produced under the joint direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, who also collaborated in the production of the Famous Players masterpiece, "The Eternal City," in which Miss Frederick made her screen debut. Prior to the outbreak of the fire they were at work on the picturization of Robert Hichens' famous novel and play, "Bella Donna," the continuation of which has already been resumed.

WALTHALL GUEST OF REEL FELLOWS IN CHICAGO

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Chicago, Sept. 20.

Henry B. Walthall was the guest of honor at the September dinner of the Reel Fellows Club, held at the Movie Inn Wednesday evening, September 15. Mr. Walthall delivered an interesting talk on the making of a photoplay, and was elected an active member of the Reel Fellows Club.

It was decided to rent the floor above the Movie Inn for club rooms, and dues were raised to $10 a year.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City

BRINGING THE PEOPLE TO THE PICTURE THROUGH NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

HOW can a motion picture theatre attract continuously to its performances the largest possible number of patrons?

This is an A B C statement of the perennial problem that confronts exhibitors. Every issue of Motion Picture News contains stories and cuts setting forth a variety of "live wire" ideas that show the ingenuity of exhibitors the country over. Attractive fronts, lobby displays, well planned house organs and heralds, decorated floats—even advertising on the top of milk bottles—constitute recognized methods of bringing the picture to the people and the people to the picture. All of these are excellent. None of them could be spared. But there is another medium coming more and more to be used by picture men—which has the virtue of cementing all advertising methods into one.

It is the newspaper advertisement. Whereas a comparatively small number of prospective patrons can be reached by a mailing list, and a smaller number by the employment of the house itself as an advertising medium, a far greater audience is at the command of the newspaper advertiser. This fact is so well known to progressive exhibitors that the mere statement of it is all that is necessary. What exhibitors are not so well acquainted with, however, is how newspaper space can be used most effectively. In the bewildering array of pictures produced today, the simple announcement that you have pictures to show will not bring crowds. Neither will a mass of adjectives describing a picture as "marvelous," "stupendous," "magnificent," and the like, any longer impress the theatre public. People want to know why and how a picture is "marvelous," and the newspaper column is an excellent place to tell them.

Unless an exhibitor is able to buy newspaper space in large quantities, he must necessarily confine himself pretty much to an announcement of the name of his theatre, titles of pictures and names of stars, and hours of performances. He is at a disadvantage when he cannot tell in concise, clear and vivid language what the picture really is—a hint of the plot as well as of the ability of the players in unfolding the plot, which is what picture goers are eager to know. But if the exhibitor must confine himself to small space, there is a way in which he can still make his newspaper ads appealing. It is by giving the ad a good typographical dress; by selecting one style of type and sticking to it; by learning the value of white space; by steering clear of heavy, black face type; and finally, by making use of lay-outs and electros furnished him by the manufacturer.

This last is the thing we have especially in mind now. Many manufacturers supply free, or at nominal cost, electros or mats of advertisements of their pictures. These advertisements are supplied in several sizes, with neat borders and suggestions for ad writing. In many cases all the exhibitor has to do is to insert titles of pictures and the name of his theatre.

For example, the Paramount Pictures Corporation has recently issued a publicity book, containing reproductions of electros supplied free to exhibitors of Paramount pictures. The lay outs in the book are well designed, in good taste, and calculated to impress the newspaper reader very favorably. To be sure, Paramount Pictures are emphasized in all the ads, but this is no drawback to the use of them, as the exhibitor is thereby tying himself up to Paramount's national advertising campaign. What is true of the Paramount publicity is true also of the publicity of several other large picture producers. Exhibitors will do well to study the value of the advertising supplied by the manufacturers, and adapt it to their individual needs.

ELEVATOR TAKES PATRONS UP TO SECOND BALCONY

The Columbia theatre, Sixth and St. Charles street, St. Louis, has a novel innovation in the form of an elevator to take the patrons up to the second balcony. Instead of climbing two flights of stairs and getting all out of breath, the thankful patron who comes too late to get a seat downstairs or in the first balcony, is gently wafted towards the elevator, which takes him up and deposits him near his seat without any effort at all on his part and in a few seconds' time.

Although the Columbia is primarily a vaudeville house, there are always from one to three reels of pictures shown at every performance, and this year Manager Harry D. Buckley shows pictures mostly in color.

RENTS THEATRE; INVITES FRIENDS TO SEE KALEM DRAMA

What is probably the first event of its kind occurred at the Arc theatre, Delphi, Ind., the other day, when Mrs. Henry R. Wilson rented the theatre for the afternoon and entertained her friends at a special presentation of "Prejudice," a three-act Kalem drama.

As the leader of Delphi society, Mrs. Wilson's movements are naturally of interest to the community and the function was therefore given generous space in the local papers. This, of course, was of tremendous benefit to the Arc theatre, and, as mentioned by Mrs. Belle B. Gardner, secretary and treasurer of that photoplay house, the effects of this publicity are still being felt. Mrs. Gardner forwarded one of the clippings to Kalem.

An attractive four-page program, printed on a white sunburst stock and 4¾ x 6 inches in size, was gotten up specially for the occasion. According to Mrs. Gardner in her letter to the Kalem Company, the affair was one of the biggest social successes Delphi has ever known. Mrs. Gardner then goes on to say:

"The inclosed clipping and program speak for themselves. The picture 'Prejudice' is one of the best ever shown in this theatre. The ladies who were entertained sent the members of their families to see it that night, and we did a big business because of it.

"We also show a Kalem three-act subject every alternate Wednesday, and they surely are fine! We find the Hazards of Helen Railroad Series constantly increasing in popularity, while "Ham" and "Bud" draw big houses every Thursday. Keep up with the good work. You are putting out pictures that help exhibitors get the crowds. Incidentally, the society function of which I have spoken might contain a suggestion for exhibitors all over the country. Why not acquaint them with it? It was a big thing for us."

GIRL USHERS TO LEAD SPELLBOUND MALES TO THEIR SEATS

Girl ushers only are now employed in the Majestic theatre, in Dallas, Tex.

Last season three young women were employed as ushers on the orchestra floor of the playhouse. Their employment was an experiment, leaving two young men ushers in the balcony. The experiment was a huge success, and in the future nothing but pretty girls will be employed as ushers at the Majestic.

"KU KLUX," ADVERTISING "NATION," ATTACKED BY GANG

The Ku Klux Klan was given a taste of real battle during the Spokane, Wash., engagement of "The Birth of a Nation." The "night riders" came out second best.

While the film was running, H. S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer theatre, at which it was being shown, engaged ten riders to don the garb of the clan and ride through the streets each day and evening. One night during the third week of the run a gang of men on First avenue, armed with clubs and bricks, set upon the party. Not until screams came from the first six riders did the attacking party learn that some of the persons in the grotesque costumes were women. They then turned their attention to the men. Rocks and sticks flew, yells were given and frightened horses bolted.

One of the riders, Mabel Bruner, aged 18, had a narrow escape from serious injury when her mount, struck with a fence paling, reared and fell with her. Henry Kline, a clansman, went to her rescue and was severely beaten.

The police made three arrests.

In its 40 performances, "The Birth of a Nation" played to approximately 38,000 persons. The capacity of the Clemmer is 1,000.

THE WEEK'S BEST LIVE WIRE STUNT

One of the most original motion picture advertisers in New England is George I. Appleby, of the Empire theatre, Portland, Maine. When Mr. Appleby, formerly of the Mutual in Portland, took over the Empire, it was doing little or no business. Now it is one of the busiest theatres in the state.

His latest advertising stunt has to do with milk bottles. Appleby called on W. H. Bradley, of the Triangle, in Boston, recently and announced:

"Say, I've signed up the top of every milk bottle in Portland to do my advertising. Each bottle-top carries my ad. The Empire goes into every home where they drink milk. And—I'm getting the results."

MAKES MEDALLION PLAQUES OF PHOTOPLAY STARS

P. J. Prosser, a New Orleans exhibitor, owner of the Keystone theatre, is indulging in a series of "by-product" activities that promise to net him a considerable sum. Mr. Prosser, before he was lured by the pictures, was quite a sculptor. At present he has taken up his old business again, and is turning out some excellent medallion-plaques of celebrated motion picture players.

Mr. Prosser's work has received considerable attention in New Orleans. His plaque of Theda Bara has been prominently displayed in the lobby of the Tudor theatre in Canal street, and in New Orleans exchanges others of his plaques occupy prominent positions on the walls. Heretofore Mr. Prosser has sculptored simply for the love of it, and his plaques so far have all been presented to exhibitors and exchange men with his compliments.

BUFFALO MOTORISTS SEE THEMSELVES IN PICTURES

An interesting exhibition was presented at the Majestic theatre by the Automobile Club of Buffalo, N. Y., nearly 16,000 feet of film was used to portray the social and industrial pursuits of the Buffalo motoring fraternity. The pictures show many of the events held at the Automobile Club during the current season, the process of manufacture and sale in many plants identified with the automobile industry here, hundreds of motorists prominent in Buffalo and other interesting views.

WHAT LIVE EXHIBITORS EVERYWHERE ARE DOING

Royce Fairchilds and L. E. Paine, proprietors of the Royal, Red Oak, Iowa, have a successful plan for inducing the farmers of the surrounding territory to attend their theatre. They sell tickets to the merchants and the merchants, as a trade inducement, give a ticket with every dollar's worth of purchases. The prize tickets are given only to farmers. The Royal also has an ice cream parlor and a comfort station in the lobby.

The Omaha theatre, Omaha, is one of an increasing number of houses that issue weekly organs containing no advertising but their own.

Dr. Denko, manager of the Shenandoah, St. Louis, has discovered from close observation that his Sunday audiences show a marked preference for light subjects and comedies. Denko's program for that day, therefore, consists of a romantic drama in three or four parts, with one reel dramas or comedies. Problem plays do not appeal to his Sunday crowds.

An Ovey-Chaplin contest was a live wire idea put into effect last week by Manager Celler, of the Decatur theatre, Brooklyn. Celler ran an Ovey comedy and a Chaplain comedy in succession, permitting his patrons to judge which of the two comedians was funniest. Printed slips were passed to each patron for the recording of votes. The result was announced on the screen before the show ended.

Still another exhibitor has found a Charlie Chaplin contest profitable. This time it was Manager Frank Miller, Mojeska theatre, Augusta, Ga. Miller offered prizes for boys who could give the best imitations of the famous screen comedian. A crowded house, with hundreds standing outside unable to gain admission, witnessed the contest. Rather than disappoint those who failed to see the first contest, Miller put on a second, from which winners in the first were barred. In both contests the first prize was four dollars and the second and third a dollar and a half each. Augustin Dorr and Thomas Grier were the youngsters who took first money in the two competitions.

The Symphony theatre, 612 South Broadway, Los Angeles, has instituted a new policy, with change of prices and service, and is now showing five reels of Universal program for ten, fifteen and twenty cents. This is the only downtown Los Angeles theatre, besides the Clune Broadway, which uses General regular program, that is showing a regular program for more than five cents. The Clune theatre is using first run Essanay-Chaplin subjects as its features, and the Symphony the Billie Ritchie—L Ko—Universal comedies as a special attraction.

DUNCAN SUCCEEDS HUTTON AT DETROIT FOR V-L-S-E

J. M. Duncan has been appointed manager of the Detroit office of the V-L-S-E, to succeed R. R. Hutton, who has been transferred to the Cleveland exchange. Mr. Duncan for a number of months has been associated with the Cleveland end of the business.

The Detroit office will continue in the Peter Smith building. Later, Detroit will be made a regular exchange, so it is reported. V-L-S-E pictures are going big in Michigan. Detroit's finest theatre, the Majestic, has the first-run rights, following which they play the Family theatre on the Campus. All of the large theatres are running V-L-S-E pictures from one to three days each week, and the best houses throughout the State are reported to be contracting for V-L-S-E features.

DETROIT KRITERION APPOINTS SALES DIRECTOR

Ray Branch has been appointed director of sales of the Detroit Kriterion Film Company, Detroit, Mich., which operates branches in Toledo, Grand Rapids and Columbus. Branch for the past two years has been associated with the Universal Film Exchange as assistant manager.

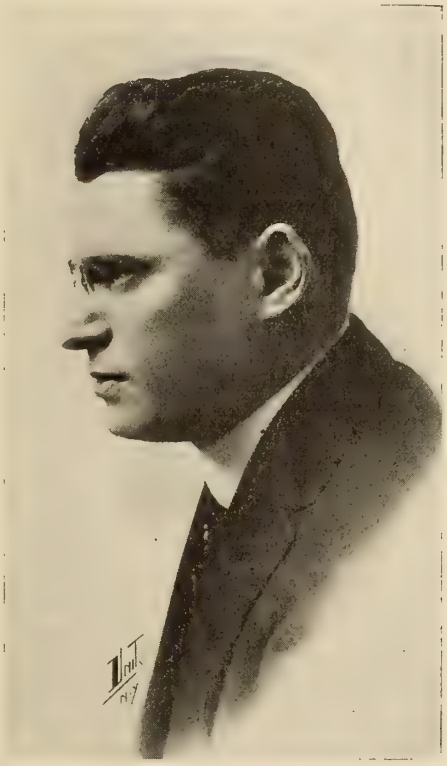
The Detroit Kriterion Company reports very successful business with the new Associated and Standard Programs. Ralph P. Peckham is the general manager of this company.

WEEKS APPOINTED MANAGER FOR MICHIGAN METRO

A. Arthur Caille, who recently purchased a large amount of stock in the Michigan Metro Film Corporation, announces the appointment of George W. Weeks as manager. The Detroit office is now occupying new quarters at 159 West Jefferson avenue.

Mr. Weeks also retains his position with the Universal Film Exchange, which is located on the first floor of the same building.

TRIANGLE DOING BIG BUSINESS IN NEW ENGLAND



W. H. Bradley, New England Triangle manager, is doing a big business at his offices in the Kimball building, on Tremont street, Boston. Plans for a Triangle building are still being discussed; no definite site has been selected.

NEW QUARTERS FOR LOS ANGELES BOARD OF TRADE

The offices of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of Los Angeles, have been moved to suite 317 and 318, Superba theatre building, 518 South Broadway.

AVERAGE EXHIBITOR AGAINST FEATURE PROGRAM, SAYS HOFFMAN, BACK FROM NATION WIDE TOUR

AFTER a tour lasting six weeks, during which time he visited every Universal exchange in the United States and Canada, with a view to studying the conditions and finding out what was needed in the various territories, Exchange Manager M. H. Hoffman has returned to his desk at the Universal headquarters. During his trip he felt the pulse of the public, through the exchangemen, and he says there is no need of any apprehension on the part of a concern which is seeking to cater to the demands of its audiences.

Although Mr. Hoffman has held the position of exchange manager for the Universal but a few months, during that short time he has proved to the seventy-two exchangemen throughout the country that he knows what he is talking about. His "pep" letters to the exchanges have already instilled greater enthusiasm, with the result that the exchangemen have gone out and got more business, and in some cases he has actually gone and got new business himself.

During his trip he visited Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Denver, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Toledo, New Orleans, Atlanta, Louisville, Charlotte and Memphis. At New Orleans he attended the convention of the Southern exchangemen and at Denver he spoke at the Western exchangemen's convention.

"I was particularly interested in the spread of the feature bookings," he said to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, the other day. "I was impressed with the number of exhibitors who didn't have feature programs. The average exhibitor today doesn't want a feature program because his business doesn't permit or warrant it. He is content to accept the Universal program, with a weekly feature; but for him to run daily big five- and six-reel productions, is beyond the question.

"The average exhibitor was interested in the feature when it first came out, and it is safe to say that the first two-reeler, which was released by one of our companies, did more business than any feature that has been released since. The exhibitor and the public liked it because it was something new, but they have grown so common since then that they are not fully appreciated by the public, even though they are good.

"The result is that the exhibitor has found it necessary to go back to his program and be satisfied with running a Broadway Universal feature once a week. His audience will stand for that, but the moment he tries to put over three or four features a week, he finds his receipts slump accordingly. This is the consensus of opinion, from the reports of the many exchangemen I met on my trip.

"During my trip I tried to show the exhibitor how to advertise his product, and I have placed an expert publicity man at the disposal of exhibitors, free of charge, to help him expand. Most of our exchanges have had to increase their staffs, and they have been given more facilities, more help and more room. Within the past few months a good many of the Universal exchanges have had to move into larger quarters.

This is true of Detroit, St. Louis, Denver, Indianapolis, and Toronto, in which cities we have been increasing our business tremendously in the last few weeks.

"I also found in certain parts of the country, West and South, the exchanges lacked film enough to handle the big amount of business, and so I established additional buying offices in those places. Most of the exchanges have increased their output, due to increased demand for our service, and many of the exchanges have had to purchase additional prints in order to take care of the influx of business."

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

TWO V-L-S-E HOUSE ORGANS PUT OUT BY EXCHANGES, SHOW SNAP IN CONTENTS

"The V-L-S-E Pals," issued from the Seattle office, under the direction of Tom North, in charge of the V-L-S-E exchange in that city, is a bright, snappy house organ designed for circulation among the exhibitors of the States of Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho, who take the V-L-S-E service.

Already the publication has become quite a factor in the promotion of a "get-together" spirit among the managers booking the pictures of the releasing company.

Impressed with the success of the Northwest publication, now in its second volume, the office of the V-L-S-E in Kansas City has brought out a pamphlet somewhat on the same order, designed for circulation in Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Arkansas and Indiana. "The Big Four Clansman," as it is called, will doubtless prove helpful in promoting a fraternal spirit among the exhibitors in the Southwest using the V-L-S-E service.

HENRY B. ROTBERG JOINS ASSOCIATED

The Associated Film Sales Corporation has secured the services of Henry B. Rotberg as their general office man. Although only 25 years of age, Rotberg has had a very wide experience in this line. He started in the film business as an errand and rewind boy, and from then on worked in film laboratories, and in the meantime attended and graduated from Pierce's Business College and Temple University in Philadelphia. He then secured a position with the National Film Company, of Philadelphia, as their bookkeeper, and systematized their entire office.

When the Kriterion Film Corporation was formed, he was called to New York to systematize the exchange office. Mr. Keen, of the Associated, has now secured his services, and he is busy starting a system for the home office and will later take a trip through the country.

STRIKING EXAMPLE OF PARAMOUNT POPULARITY

A striking example of the popularity of the Paramount Pictures in Los Angeles is shown in the recent various bookings, all of which are on long term contracts made by Manager M. L. Lewis, of the Los Angeles Progressive exchange. Beginning Monday of this week four of the eight larger down-town theatres were using Paramount. The Garrick adopted the policy of showing one year old subjects, opening with the Pickford film of "Tess of the Storm Country" and will use each subject one week, thus having the choice of the two releases.

Clune's Broadway theatre, which since its opening several years ago has used regular General film service almost continually, is using the Thursday release of the Paramount, the Monday release continuing at Tally's Broadway. Clune's theatre has always charged ten, fifteen and twenty cents, and begining with this new program they increased the price to ten, twenty and thirty cents.

OFFICE RULE No. 1: READ MOTION PICTURE NEWS EVERY WEEK

When A. Chapman, formerly assistant manager of the Warner's Feature Film exchange, at Kansas City, and assistant manager under Ph. Goldstone, at Des Moines, came to Omaha to be under Mr. Goldstone in the World exchange, he was not looking for the first bit of instruction handed him.

"Get Motion Picture News and read it over," said Manager Goldstone. "We all do. It's a rule of the office. Do it every week." Then he went ahead and gave other instructions.

Growth of the business out of the Omaha exchange made it necessary to get another man, and knowing Mr. Chapman's ability from past experience, Manager Goldstone secured him.

PACIFIC COMEDY EXCHANGE MOVES TO NEW QUARTERS

The Pacific Comedy Film Exchange, which was opened recently for business on an upper floor of Film Exchange Building, at Golden Gate avenue and Jones street, San Francisco, has been moved to the fourth floor of the Mechanics' Bank Building on Market street. Manager Palmer has gone East to secure additional film.

Nick Turner, one of the leading exhibitors of Northern California, for some time connected with the Majestic Theatre at Chico, has disposed of his interests in this house to his former partners and has joined the traveling force of the Golden Gate Film Exchange.

ESTABLISHES NEW V-L-S-E OFFICE IN WASHINGTON

J. S. Hebrew, manager of V-L-S-E interests in the Quaker City spent a few days in Washington last week, having got there to establish another V-L-S-E headquarters.

The new office will be in charge of Frank B. Spurrier and situated 8 E street N. W.

FORMER MANAGER FOR UNITED OPENS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGE IN WASHINGTON

SIDNEY B. LUST, who has been Washington manager of the United Film Service for the past several years, has purchased the stock and holdings of that office in Washington and Baltimore and has established an independent exchange. In this Mr. Lust holds an unique place in Washington and believes he will supply a need that has been felt by many exhibitors. His stock is exceptionally large, numbering one thousand reels, which will be added to weekly. These include dramas, comedies, westerns, features and scenics, from many manufacturers. He has a large stock of the Chaplin single re-issues, which are being sought by many houses as a relaxation between long features, and he is also handling the new Kriterion Film Service. His stock includes several Ella Wheeler Wilcox features and many of the substantial pictures which will always bear repeating. Mr. Lust has always been very generous to the exhibitors with paper, slides and photos, and this will be continued.

In speaking of his new and independent relation with the exhibitor Mr. Lust had this to say: "During the years that I have held office as exchange manager, I have realized too often that the exhibitor does not receive a service to suit his individual needs. No exchange manager can give such service when he is controlled from the main office and limited with minimum prices quoted by corporation officers who are too often ignorant of the conditions existing in the territory which the branch manager must serve: I know my territory and the exhibitors know me and I am now in a position to give each an individual service. I have always wanted to do this or that for the exhibitor, but have been hampered by the head office. Now I can act as I see fit, making my own prices to suit the individual exhibitor. Just to show how well my ideas in this line are working, I might add that I have already increased my business several hundred dollars a week during the short period I have had a free hand to use my own judgment in the matter. An open exchange is a good thing in this territory."

V-L-S-E ADDS TWO NEW MEMBERS TO SALES FORCE

Two new members have been added to the sales force of the V-L-S-E, Inc. They are P. B. Elliott, who will be attached to the Cincinnati office, and E. B. Shaw, who joins the Cleveland branch.

Mr. Elliott recently resigned as manager of the Boston branch of the World Film Corporation. Previous to that, he was connected with their New York and Indianapolis exchanges. He obtained his first picture experience with the Empress Feature Film company, and the Union Feature Film company in the Hoosier State. In going to Cincinnati, Mr. Elliott resumes his association with R. S. Shrader, the manager of that branch, with whom he worked when both were World Film men.

Mr. Shaw, who is to be stationed at Cleveland, has for some time been connected with the Mutual Film Corp., in the Buffalo office.

C. M. HILL REPRESENTS PATHE IN WESTERN WASHINGTON

Clarence M. Hill, who has been connected with the World and Fox Film companies on the Coast for the past two years, is now representing Pathé in western Washington.

Mr. Hill has the distinction of having secured second place on the World's solicitor's list for one month, and advises that he expects to head the Pathé solicitor's list within a very short time. Mr. Hill reports bookings on "Neal of the Navy" and Gold Rooster Plays as very good.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

HEAVY DEMAND NECESSITATES PATHE OFFICE IN SPOKANE

Pursuant to heavy demand for its subjects in the Spokane territory, Pathé has found it advisable to open an office in Spokane, for convenience of exhibitors in that territory. The Spokane office will be fully equipped with a print of all Pathé releases, together with a complete line of advertising matter.

The Spokane office will be in charge of P. L. Carroll, who has been associated with the General and Fox Film companies in that territory for the past two years. The new office is located at 412 First avenue, in the heart of the business district.

ADDITIONAL SPACE FOR TWO OMAHA EXCHANGES

Unable to wait longer in his search for a more suitable location, Manager Joe Levy of the Fox exchange in Omaha, was forced by growing demands last week to give up and order his present headquarters enlarged. A large warehouse room has been added to the office and film suites.

The Laemmle Film Exchange in Omaha has also been rearranged and enlarged. "Bigger business" was the reason given by Manager Van Husan.

SCOTT, OF KLEINE, GOES TO PHILADELPHIA

Harry Scott, that genial and popular Kleine representative who has successively handled the Cleveland and Dallas offices, is now in charge of the Kleine branch at Philadelphia. H. A. Bugie, formerly of Philadelphia, is transferred to Cincinnati, where it is planned to open a new Kleine office.

OUIMET SEES CROWDS AT CANADIAN EXPOSITION FILMED FOR PATHE

Mr. Ouimet, general manager for Canada of Pathé Frères, was in Toronto last week, visiting the Canadian National Exhibition. This fair is the largest annual exposition in the world, and Mr. Ouimet and his cameramen made several interesting films of the vast crowds that throng the grounds from morning till night.

CHANGES IN DES MOINES PATHE OFFICE

W. C. Buskirk has left the Pathé exchange in Omaha to represent the General throughout Nebraska, and C. L. Frankenberger has left the Pathé to join the Mutual forces out of Des Moines. M. Fox, of Sioux City, Ia., and A. S. Stein, of Sioux Falls, S. D., have joined the Pathé force in their stead.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN OFFICE OPENED BY METRO

The Metro Film Corporation, through the Detroit office, has opened an office at Escanaba, Mich., to handle the business in the northern part of the state. H. W. Smith is the manager of the new branch. He was for nearly a year manager of the Empire theatre, Detroit.

INCREASING BUSINESS MARKS ACTIVITY OF NEW ORLEANS OFFICES

THE Kleine-Edison Feature Service was formally launched in New Orleans last week. They have offices in the Nola building, Carondelet street. Howard Gale is the manager. Carpenters and decorators have been busy for three weeks putting the finishing touches. The office is in the heart of the exchange district, and has attracted favorable comment from the rest of the craft in New Orleans.

W. C. Jones, who managed the motion picture department of the New Orleans Item, and incidentally during his regime with the paper edited one of the best motion picture pages in the South, succeeds T. W. Chatman, Jr., as representative of World in Film in Southern territory. Mr. Jones as a newsgatherer is well known to the New Orleans exchange men and exhibitors, and his connection is a valuable acquisition to the staff of Maurice F. Barr.

Ross Hardenbrook, of Memphis, will shortly take charge of the New Orleans branch of Mutual, it is announced, relieving Mr. Eberle, who will depart for new fields, but still with Mutual. P. F. Blankenship, formerly connected with the Pearce interests, is new owner of the new Isis theatre, in Dryades street. Metro features installed by Karl Bugbee are an asset of the new suburban house, as is a sprinkler system and other appliances for the safety and comfort of his patrons. D. P. Reed, executive on Metro's staff, was a New Orleans visitor last week. He reviewed the situation there and pronounced it excellent.

Employees of the Peerless Feature Film Company, and her other film friends in the Crescent City, presented Miss Maude Davis, stenographer in the Peerless office, with a handsome silver loving cup on the occasion of her nineteenth birthday last week. J. Nicoll, formerly the manager of Pathé in New Orleans, was appointed special representative of the Mutual's New Orleans branch on September 10. He will handle Mutual Masterpieces. Cecil A. Gibson, formerly of Dallas, Texas, is a new salesman for Southern Paramount Pictures Corporation of New Orleans. E. C. Kirkpatrick, manager of the Southern Paramount Pictures Corporation, has returned from the meeting at Chicago the early part of this month. He is enthusiastic over the results of the convention and of business in his territory.

The Pearce interests of New Orleans have signed up with S. T. Stephens, manager of the Fox Film Corporation, for Fox pictures six days a week for the Tudor, in Canal street. The first Fox picture under these arrangements was "The Two Orphans," on September 9. Twenty-seven suburban houses in the past few weeks have signed up with Mr. Stephens for Fox features. On September 15 the Fox offices were removed from the Weis building to 832 Common street. Here Mr. Stephens and his augmented force have much more space to handle increasing Fox business in the Crescent City region.

C. McTier, a special from V-L-S-E headquarters, passed through the city rerently, and his visit gave credence to rumors that V-L-S-E would soon gain a foothold in the New Orleans territory.

The Peerless Feature Film company, of 832 Common street, New Orleans, is in the market to purchase state rights to any smashing features, Paul L. Ford, its president, states.

SOUTHWESTERN EXCHANGEMEN READY FOR BANNER FALL BUSINESS

THE colors under which a few of the exchange managers in Dallas have been working have changed somewhat within the past week.

C. C. Ezell is back at his old desk at the General Film Company, after an absence of several months, during which time he handled the affairs of the Texas Paromount Pictures Company. Mr. Ezell is one of the most popular exchangemen in the Southwestern territory.

C. E. Hudson, who has been managing the General office in Dallas, has returned to the East, where he has assumed a similar position with the same organization.

LeRoy Bickel, who has been handling the affairs of the Famous Players Film Company at Oklahoma City, is now installed as manager of the Texas Paramount exchange. Mr. Bickel is succeeded at Oklahoma City by R. D. Lewis, who has been traveling for that exchange.

W. M. Byrd, who was recently appointed manager of the World Film Corporation office in Dallas, after being a traveling representative for many months, did not stay with them long. He is now installed behind the mahogany manager's desk at the Box Office Attraction Company in Dallas, handling Fox productions. At the present time, the World office in Dallas is being managed by C. R. McHenry, recently appointed assistant manager from the traveling ranks.

N. R. Spitzer, special Fox representative, will remain in Dallas for a week or two, getting Mr. Byrd "on" to the office and the work of the organization, when he will return to New York. After the resignation of R. B. Morris from the supply department of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, in Dallas, A. B. Salles, who has been Mr. Morris' assistant for some months, was installed in the swivel chair.

The exchanges in the Southwestern territory are expecting business to take a big leap, growing even much larger than in the past sixty days. In the last month or so, numerous exchangemen report business about 40 per cent. to 50 per cent. higher than in the past four months. One exchange, in particular, has been forced to add a few men to care for their increase.

Within the past two weeks, various reports show a total of about twenty new theatres in Oklahoma, ten or twelve in Arkansas and about thirty in Texas, with others projected.

FILM NEWS FROM FOREIGN PARTS

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

London, Sept. 15.

THE decision of H. A. Spoor, who controls all the Essanay, including Chaplin productions in Great Britain, to rent direct to the exhibitor, has not been favorably received by exhibitors. Last week, the Scottish exhibitors resolved that they "agree jointly, and severally, to abstain from showing any of the Essanay productions under their scheme of direct renting."

Spoor Replies to Attacks

Our English correspondent has approached Mr. Spoor on the subject, and he makes an exclusive statement to readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. "When I consider," he said, "that we are doing nothing more nor less than seven or eight other manufacturers and agents have previously done, and in one instance where another manufacturers' entire product has been placed on this market and handled exclusively since our announcement of doing the same, without the least adverse comment or criticism being made by either the Press or the Exhibitors Association, I feel I have good cause to believe that there must be some motive behind the movement to reject our films, which I cannot discover. I may be mistaken in this, however, and the movement may be a genuine one, which, if it is, surely they are conducting it under a misapprehension of some kind, as I have declared my intention to conduct my Essanay Renting Service along established and legitimate lines, in keeping with the customs of the Exclusive Renting business in Great Britain."

Complaining of misrepresentation in the Press, he continued: "My statements in the Press have been misquoted generally and used against me. Ultimately, however, when we commence dealing with the exhibitors, I have not the least fear but that we will be able to overcome what is apparently an unfortunate situation, but it has been necessary to build up an entirely new organization for our renting business. We have been handicapped in having to do this in the fact that we could not start dealing with the exhibitors, and we will be in this position for two or three weeks more only, when you will see the situation changed in our favor."

"Regarding the likelihood of Chaplin films continuing," he concluded, "there seems to be a general impression that owing to his extreme popularity at the present time, his success will not be lasting. I, personally, anticipate that Chaplin is only beginning, and when the present publicity boom settles down, it will leave him in a very strong position. The Essanay Company are not releasing his films oftener than every three or four weeks, which fact in itself will avoid surfeiting the market with them."

Soldier Regains Speech at Show

While viewing the L--KO Film, "The Fatal Note" (Trans-Atlantic) at a Liverpool picturehouse a soldier belonging to the Army Service Corps had a wonderful experience. Corporal Beck during his sojourn on the battlefield became deaf and dumb, and his condition was certified to by a medical man at one of the military institutions. Going to a motion picture theatre, he witnessed "The Fatal Note" and while in a state of convulsive laughter made a gurgling noise which he recognized as his own voice. Since his voice has recovered wonderfully. Medical evidence affirms that Beck's nervous organs must have become deranged and his recovery under the circumstances is quite accounted for. I understand that Mr. Tippett, Geneal Manager of the Trans-Atlantic Co. has congratulated Beck upon the recovery of his hearing and speech and in remembrance of the event has made him a presentation of a small cheque. Before the war, Beck resided at Chicago, where he was a police motorcyclist. He was wounded in Flanders while serving as a despatch rider.

Every American acquainted with the English film trade must be aware of the unsatisfactory basis of censorship of films. The police authorities ignore the certificates issued by the British Board of Film Censors, with the result that the police in the various centers regard themselves as the self-constituted censors. Their latest adventure has been at Preston where they have banned "Five Nights," a version of Victoria Cross's famous novel. The film was passed for universal exhibition, and has been shown at numerous halls up and down the country.

Mr. Redfern, the censor, expressed surprise that exception had been taken to the film. "I consider it a very narrow minded view to take," he said, "and do not hesitate to express in strong words that view, for the Chief Constable's action is a reflection on myself." Having read the book the censor affirms that there is no suggestive scene in that film, while the dressing of the characters is quite different from the original. The chairman of the International company, renters of the film, and one of the directors of the Barker Motion Photography Ltd., were amazed at the decision. Libel is now alleged against the Chief Constable by the proprietors of the film, and the Preston Watch Committee have given instructions for the action to be defended.

Big Merger of German-Danish Firms

Announcement is made in a Copenhagen dispatch of the amalgamation of two of the greatest moving picture production companies in Germany and Denmark respectively. The capital of the combined enterprise will be nearly $8,000,000. A number of German producers have already arrived in Copenhagen to arrange the details of the alliance. The effect may be far reaching, as the Danish firm sells its films mostly in England, France and Italy. There is a prospect, therefore, that German films, produced in Denmark, may be shown during the coming season in London, Paris and Rome.

United California and Arizona Managers Possible

Letters Calling for a Meeting of Exhibitors in Los Angeles Sent Out by Sam McIntire and Quick Responses Indicate Fusion Chances

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Sept. 20.

ANOTHER attempt to perfect an organization among motion picture exhibitors of southern California and Arizona was made this week, when circular letters calling all exhibitors to a meeting to be held in the parlors of the Lankersham hotel, Los Angeles, were mailed by Sam McIntire, owner of Photoplay Theatre No. 3, at Jefferson street and Vermont avenue.

Between thirty and forty exhibitors of Los Angeles, and nearby points responded to the letters and preliminary plans including the selection of temporary officers to have charge of perfecting an organization were made. Judge A. P. Tugwell was named chairman, Mr. McIntire secretary, and Mike Gore, treasurer.

A brief review of the organizations of this kind in the past was made by Judge Tugwell, who suggested that inasmuch as the Exhibitors' League of Southern California, which has not been active since the national and state convention at San Francisco in July, had a charter with the national organization, it might be well to organize under that charter.

This suggestion met with the approval of the meeting and the matter of completing plans within a week was put up to the officers and it was decided to meet one week later and old members of the League would be reinstated and new members added. At the coming meeting permanent officers will be elected and further plans for the progress of the organization will be taken up.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

SCENES THAT TYPIFY THREE OF THE FORTHCOMING RELEASES FROM THE GAUMONT STUDIOS THROUGH MUTUAL

"SUNSHINE AND TEMPEST" (3 Reel Rialto—Oct. 6) "POOL SHARKS" (Casino—Sept. 19) "THE HOUSE WITH NOBODY IN IT" (3 Reel Rialto—Sept. 22)

VAUDEVILLE SHOW AND DANCE FOR VITAGRAPH BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION, OCTOBER 27

The dance which the Vitagraph Benevolent Association is to give on the evening of Wednesday, October 27, at McLoughlin's Bayside Casino, Sheepshead Bay, proceeds of which are to go in aid of the Hospital and Sick Fund, is assuming proportions which the committee did not at first anticipate.

So many orders have been received from the actors and actresses of the Vitagraph Players that not only will the dance be held, but a vaudeville show is being arranged also.

This show will give the film thespians a chance to speak their lines for a change, and will afford the public opportunity to see whether the players are as beautiful and as clever as they appear on the screen. The famous Vitagraph Quartet may be the headliners.

With this added attraction, the committee, which is headed by A. Victor Smith, Vitagraph studio manager, is preparing for an immense crowd. Practically every person connected with the picture producing company will be on hand, competing in the dance contest for the championship of the company.

HARLAN QUITS STAGE TO DEVOTE TALENTS TO SCREEN

After a distinguished career in the spoken drama, extending from 1888, Otis Harlan has announced his permanent retirement from the stage. Hereafter, Mr. Harlan expects to devote his talents exclusively to motion picture work. He will shortly make his initial bow to picture fans in the Selig Red Seal play, "A Black Sheep."

Harlan has had a notable career on the legitimate stage. He has starred in most of the Hoyt comedies, both at home and abroad, and has acted as principal funmaker for such stars as Anna Held, Ethel Levy, Elsie Janis, Thomas Q. Seabrook, and others. He also staged the original production of "Baby Mine." He aided in the organization and was prominently identified with the Bijou Circuit for years, and is reputed to be among the wealthiest of American actors.

Henrietta Crosman's Heart Is with Film Drama

Star of Innumerable Stage Successes, Now Working Under Edward Le Saint for "The Faddist," Universal, Will Return to Screen After Completing Legitimate Season

"IT is an experience I wouldn't have missed for the world," said Henrietta Crosman to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative at Universal City one day this week while she was resting from the day's work.

"I think the motion picture a most interesting institution and one that is doing a lot of good in the world. It is performing a great service to mankind and it is keeping the people throughout the world entertained in a most inexpensive manner.

"The pictures showing how the various industries are conducted, how the necessaries of life are prepared for the table, and the pictures showing life in foreign lands and those presenting scenes as well known to the globe-trotter, are all extremely interesting. They are a liberal education and too many of these pictures, in my opinion, cannot be shown on the screen.

"In these days when we all live so fast, when we all seem to be constantly moving at high speed, the poor man especially, has but little time for reading, and particularly the reading of books. He considers himself fortunate if he is able to find time to peruse the daily newspaper in order to keep himself informed of what's what and who's who.

"An hour or two with his family several times a week in the photoplay theatre, results in his viewing educational subjects that would take him many days to uncover in books. In addition to this educational material he enjoys several dramatic and comedy offerings, all of which are his at a comparatively inexpensive outlay—an amount so small that he willingly parts with it for the enjoyment he is certain to be afforded.

"The speaking stage has been good to me all during my long career. I have been exceptionally fortunate in appearing in attractive vehicles whether on the dramatic stage or in vaudeville, and after the completion of this picture I shall go back to the speaking stage, returning again to filmdom, probably, after another season or two.

"I am accustomed to the spoken drama and think that the voice must be heard to make the play satisfactorily effective. Acting alone, to my way of thinking, is not sufficient. We must have the voice to give us a better idea of what the story is about.

HENRIETTA CROSMAN

"Have I developed any ideas in connection with the making of photoplays? Yes, indeed, I have. I'm 'chock full' of them and some day I hope to be able to see them carried to a successful fruition. Oh, no, I cannot impart to you what these ideas are like, but I'm certain they are feasible and would result in revolutionizing the motion picture business to a considerable extent."

This famous star is now being filmed in "The Faddist," which is being produced under the direction of Edward Le Saint.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

CLASSIC SCENES AND CLASSIC FACES TO ADORN TWO VITAGRAPH PRODUCTIONS

SCENES FROM "MY LADY'S SLIPPER" AND "THOU ART THE MAN," COMING VITAGRAPH PRODUCTIONS

THE Vitagraph Company has produced a number of Cyrus Townsend Brady's stories for the screen, every one of which has been a decided success, but in "My Lady's Slipper," now in course of production under the direction of Ralph W. Ince, has what in all probability will be the most interesting of this author's stories yet released. When completed, it will be a feature picture in every sense of the word—a feature cast being employed in its enactment, including Anita Stewart and Earle Williams, Julia Swayne Gordon, Joseph Kilgour, Harry Northrup, William Shea, George Stevens and George O'Donnell, the well-known operatic star, a scenic production that will rival in beauty and accuracy of detail anything yet attempted by the Vitagraph Company and a richness in costuming that will appeal to lovers of sartorial adornment.

The scenes in "My Lady's Slipper" are laid in the Eighteenth Century, and the action takes place in and near Paris, during the time of Louis XVI. The story tells of Francis Burnham, an American naval officer, who escapes from a British convict ship and is on his way to Paris to see his country's Minister. While walking just outside of the city limits, he rescues a beautiful girl from highwaymen. It is a case of love at first sight. While waiting for the Minister, Burnham gives way to his restless nature and makes a round of the gambling houses. He loses all he has and further becomes indebted to a stranger. The next morning the stranger calls on Burnham and frightens him by showing notes signed by the American, the night before. The stranger, who finally introduces himself as the Marquis du Tremigon, laughs away Burnham's fears and tells him he can wipe out all of his obligations by procuring some article of wearing apparel of the Countess Villars, with whom he is in love, so that he might overcome the objections of her grandfather with evidence of her affection. Burnham does not like the job, but makes his way into the Countess' apartments, where he is discovered by her as he is about to leave with one of her slippers. They recognize each other. She is the lady he rescued from the highwaymen. Crushed and humiliated, he tells his story and she believes it. Burnham returns to the Marquis, denounces him and is arrested. Word is carried to the Countess of his plight and through her influence with Marie Antoinette, Burnham is released and the Marquis humiliated. Later, Burnham and the Countess are happily married.

6 RELEASES FOR FAMOUS IN MONTH NEW PARAMOUNT RECORD

As a result of the disastrous fire which destroyed the studios of the Famous Players Film Company, and which necessitated the revision of the Paramount Program for the next three months, due to unavoidable changes in the Famous Players release dates, that concern will have six releases on the Paramount Program in November in order to regain the dates it lost in September and October through the necessity of having to re-take scenes in subjects scheduled for earlier release, which were partly destroyed, in the fire. This is the first time since the organization of the Paramount Pictures Corporation that one producer has had six releases in one month.

The November program of the Famous Players includes Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters," by Edith Barnard Delano, scheduled for November 4; Mary Pickford in the much-discussed screen version of John Luther Long's great classic, "Madame Butterfly," November 8; John Barrymore in "The Red Widow," November 11; Marguerite Clark in an elaborate picturization of Mark Twain's master-work, "The Prince and the Pauper," the first work of the great American humorist to be filmed, November 15; Charles Cherry, in the international dramatic triumph, "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," November 18; and Pauline Frederick in a photo-production of "Bella Donna," November 29.

SELIG SETS OCTOBER 14 AS RELEASE DATE FOR FIRST OF "BLOOM CENTER" SERIES

ON Thursday, October 14, the first of a series of twelve two-reel picture plays, "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," will be released by the Selig Polyscope Company. The first release will be a Selig Diamond Special, in three reels, entitled "Landing the Hose Reel." Following the first release, in three reels, "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" will be released as two-reel comedies every other Monday in regular service. The second in "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" will be released Monday, October 25.

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center" promise to achieve another record to compare very favorably with that other great serial put forth by the Selig company, namely, "The Adventures of Kathlyn." A special company of character artists were engaged to play the rural types, and Mr. Selig caused to be erected a rube village in Los Angeles which was named "Bloom Center."

The new Selig series is something different, as is shown by the fact that while the characters and the same environment are utilized in all twelve comedies, yet every story is complete in itself and has a well-defined plot. In this method there is a connecting link in the "Bloom Center" series and interest is sustained, but at the same time every release does not necessarily have to be seen in order to keep in touch with the entire series.

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center," according to the Selig company, is going to set a new record in screen comedy. There is no vulgarity, but at the same time true American rural life is presented in a comical way.

GEORGE DUNCAN, NEW SCREEN STAR, TO CAPER FOR MINA

The peculiar antics of an erratic hotel proprietor make some very amusing situations in the Mina release of September 30, "Why the Boarders Left." George Duncan, who takes the leading part, is a new figure on the screen, but his work is marked with originality and he possesses a line of comic caperings that are entirely his own.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

VIVACIOUS ELSIE JANIS IN A VARIETY OF SCENES FROM THE COMING BOSWORTH, INC., RELEASE, "'TWAS EVER THUS"

HORSLEY OFFERS "THE PROTEST" FOR FIRST 3-REELER FOR MUTUAL

For his first three reel feature release on the Mutual program David Horsley offers "The Protest," a drama of everyday life enacted by Crane Wilbur, the popular photoplay star, supported by a big cast which includes Leona Hutton, Margaret Gibson, Robert Newcombe and Joseph Von Meter.

The picture will be released through the Mutual program on September 29.

In theme "The Protest" is sociological in nature, treating a profound problem suggested by a situation in everyday life—the necessity of some women, especially in the lower strata of life, being compelled to make extreme sacrifices for every favor in life they receive. In its treatment it reaches fine dramatic heights capped with a climax that is startling in its effectiveness.

Crane Wilbur plays a district attorney who lends a helping hand to the girl who protested, a part interpreted by Leona Hutton.

"The Protest" is a splendid drama and an excellent subject for the first release of the new brand. Jay Hunt directed.

FOUR VITAGRAPH STARS HEAD CAST IN CAMERON PLAY

Virginia Pearson, S. Rankin Drew, Joseph Kilgour and George Cooper, assisted by a cast of well-known Vitagraph players, are appearing in George Cameron's "Thou Art the Man," an original drama founded on the Biblical story of "Uriah."

ELSIE JANIS, AUTHOR AND STAR, IN BOSWORTH PLAY OF THREE LOVES

AS its latest release, Bosworth, Inc., announces Elsie Janis, the international favorite of the stage and screen in her fourth film subject, "'Twas Ever Thus," a novel photoplay presenting a triple love story from the prehistoric age up to the present.

The play opens with the stone age, when a lithe, bare-limbed girl, in a panther skin, is wooed in the fashion of those days. The film shows how the early lover gained his ends, and then carries the audience up to 1865, when in graceful ringlets and fetching poke bonnet, silk shawl and flounced crinoline, pretty Prudence Allen, of Boston, ventures down into battle-torn Dixie to nurse her wounded brother. A pretty romance follows and the sedate lovers of the Civil War period finally win out over all obstacles in an interesting series of events bringing the story to a fitting close and introducing the third episode presenting a startling love story of present-day life.

In this production the star appears at her best and in the different episodes of the story her varied talents are given a wide field. Supporting Miss Janis, Bosworth, Inc., have selected an exceptional cast, including such able players as Owen Moore, Myrtle Stedman, Hobart Bosworth, Harry Ham, Helen Wolcott and Joe Ray.

The producers, in staging this play, which was also written by Elsie Janis, were called upon to secure an unusual variety of scenes, and in this respect have gone to particular pains to give the subject the desired backgrounds. A striking contrast is offered when the film turns from the cave-man period, when animal skins were used both for furnishings and clothing, to the overdressed Civil War age, with its imposing Southern homes and quaint interiors, and thence up to present metropolitan settings, with their developments of city life.

TWO SCENES FROM "THE PROTEST," FIRST OF HORSLEY'S NEW THREE REEL FEATURES (Mutual—Sept. 29) WITH CRANE WILBUR, LEONA HUTTON, AND MARGARET GIBSON

MUTUAL STUDIOS BUSY ON SEVERAL SUBJECTS

Director Donald McDonald of the Mustang Brand is completing a two reel Western feature called "Breezy Bill—Outcast," by Edward A. Kaufman. Jack Rickardson, Helen Rosson and William Stowell will have the leads. Charles Bartlett has been given the direction of the company headed by Winifred Greenwood and Ed. Coxen and will make one and two reel American features. Director William Bertram has begun work on the second of the Charles E. Pan Loan "Buck" Parvin stories. As in the first one, Anna Little and Art Acord play the principal roles, with E. Forrest Taylor and "Larry" Peyton.

"A Bungalow Bungle" is the title of the Beauty comedy just completed by Director Archer McMackin and soon to be released. In this story, replete with humorous situations, the milk-fed youth type predominates, ably played by Richard Rosson. Others in the cast are Carol Holloway, John Steppling and John Sheehan.

TOURNEUR DIRECTING "BUTTERFLY" FOR WORLD FILM

Maurice Tourneur, who has directed so many distinguished features for the World Film Corporation, is at work on "A Butterfly on the Wheel." Heading the cast is Holbrook Blinn, who as a sterling actor is known throughout the world. He has already proved himself one of the best screen actors in three of the World Film releases, namely, "The Boss," "The Ivory Snuff Box," and "The Family Cupboard." Vivian Martin will portroy the feminine lead.

John Hines, comedian of the World's Film forces, will have a prominent part and Miss June Elvidge, will portray the second feminine lead.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

EDISON TO MAKE HUBBARD'S "A MESSAGE TO GARCIA"

The Edison company announces that it has obtained the film rights to Elbert Hubbard's "A Message to Garcia," that extraordinary essay which in pamphlet form alone obtained a circulation of more than forty million copies.

Immediately after its issue orders for extra copies began to come in for a dozen, fifty, a hundred and a thousand. George H. Daniels, of the New York Central Railroad, ordered two million. Prince Hilakoff, director of Russian Railways, had the matter translated into Russian and supplied a copy to every railroad employe in Russia. This example was emulated by Germany, France, Spain, Turkey, Hindustan and China. Soldiers in both the Russian and Japanese armies were provided with copies of the little book.

"A Message to Garcia" will be released by the Edison company through the Kleine-Edison Feature service.

JOSE COLLINS, LATE OF "FOLLIES," BECOMES EQUITABLE STAR

Another recruit to the Equitable roster of noted stars is Jose Collins, late star of Ziegfeld's Follies, and leading player in last year's Winter Garden show. Miss Collins recently appeared in a screen production of "The Impostor" on the World Film program, and scored an instantaneous hit. Her work so appealed to Mr. Selznick and Messrs. Speigel and Feist, of Equitable, that arrangements were entered into by which Miss Collins becomes an Equitable star. She will begin work within a fortnight.

Miss Collins was engaged for appearance in a forthcoming legitimate attraction under the direction of Messrs. Shuberts and was to have begun rehearsals this week, but the production was put forward several months, thus giving the bright star an opportunity to work before the camera.

Marc Edmond Jones, of the Equitable scenario staff, has been assigned to procure a suitable vehicle and arrange a scenario for Miss Collins.

NEW BARRYMORE PLAY RENAMED "THE FINAL JUDGMENT"

The original photoplay by George Scarborough, author of "The Lure" and other successful plays on Broadway, in which Ethel Barrymore is being starred by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., for release on the Metro program, has been changed from the title previously announced as "Her Honor" to "The Final Judgment." The screen version of the Scarborough play has been undergoing production for several weeks and is now nearly finished. Miss Barrymore has a supporting company of exceptionally high quality, that includes many actors and actresses well known on the screen and speaking stage.

"The Final Judgment" is one of the most elaborate pictures that have yet come from Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., and is being produced under the direction of Edwin Carewe. The stellar role affords Miss Barrymore unusual opportunities for the display of her distinctive dramatic talents, and it is not too much to say, promises to be one of the sensations of the current season.

DONALD BRIAN TO MAKE SCREEN DEBUT IN LASKY PRODUCTION "THE VOICE IN THE FOG"

DONALD BRIAN, one of the most popular young stars of the American stage, will make his debut as a photodramatic player on September 27, in the Paramount Picture, "The Voice in the Fog," produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and adapted for the screen from the novel of the same name by Harold MacGrath.

"The Voice in the Fog" is by the author of "The Goose Girl," and "The Puppet Crown," both picturizations of which by the Lasky Feature Film Play Company have met with universal success wherever shown. Harold MacGrath is an imaginative writer of fiction whose work never fails to meet the popular demand.

In "The Voice in the Fog," Mr. Brian will appear as Thomas Webb, a young Englishman who inherits a title, but who transfers its use to a professional crook for three months, in payment of a gambling debt. Webb becomes a steward on a liner and meets a young American girl from whom the professional crook previously had stolen a valuable necklace. The theft occurred in a London fog and the girl recognizes Webb's voice, as having heard it the night the necklace was stolen. Webb did not know of the theft, however. In order to keep watch on the young man, the girl employs him as a private secretary. As the climax of a melodramatic situation, Webb is able to explain himself and claim the love of the girl when he reveals his true identity at the expiration of the three months' period. Among the famous Lasky artists with Mr. Brian are Ernest Joy, Florence Smith, George Gebhardt and others.

"The Final Judgment" will be produced on the speaking stage in a Broadway theatre late in December, and its presentation on the screen, scheduled for release on the Metro program more than a month before that time, will mark a reversal in the usual order of procedure.

HARRY MESTAYER TO BE FEATURED IN "BRIDGE OF TIME," SELIG

"The Bridge of Time," a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, written by Roy L. McCardell, will be released in regular service by the Selig Polyscope company, Thursday, October 7. Harry Mestayer is featured and is supported by such artists as Guy Oliver, Virginia Kirtley and Eugenie Besserer.

The story of "The Bridge of Time" is a most unusual one. Ralph Kennard, the last of a noble English family, falls in love with a girl in humble station. Kennard, with his best friend, plans her downfall. The girl's brother seriously wounds Kennard, who, in his delirium, is carried back across the bridge of time into the Elizabethan period. There he becomes Sir Ralph Kennard, a royster, and is wounded by a yoeman. How the yoeman and his sister save Sir Ralph from disgrace, how the girl finally marries him, and how a plot against the queen's life is circumvented are details in a most exciting series of events constituting a story of unusual interest.

"HOUSE DIVIDED," ESSANAY, IS A STUDY IN SUSPICION

"The House Divided," a three-act Essanay drama by H. S. Sheldon, teaches a forceful lesson to all husbands and wives not to bear idle suspicions against each other and shows vividly the unhappiness that results when one or the other lacks faith.

Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn, in the leading roles of "The House Divided," are the ones who finally bring the couple together and reunite a family divided by a wife's groundless fears. The story depicts a well-to-do business man and his wife, much in love with each other.

They have two pretty children. One day a poor woman goes to the husband for aid, and he accompanied her to her home. The wife sees them, and a separation results. The wife gets the daughter and the husband the son. The children grow up, and the son, lacking a mother's influence, becomes wayward, and his father, twelve years after the separation, decided to send him to Panama.

He writes to his wife that their son is going and arranges to have her say goodbye to the youth at the office of a mutual friend, a young lawyer in love with the couple's daughter. The husband and wife meet there unexpectedly, and a reconciliation is effected when matters are explained. The film will be released October 2 through the General Film Company.

EXHIBITORS DENOUNCE AS UNFAIR NEW RULES OF JERSEY RAILROADS ON CARRIAGE OF FILMS

MOVING picture theatre proprietors in Newark and vicinity are up in arms over a ruling of the railroads, made effective last week, governing the carrying of films for use in their show houses. Complaints seem to be directed principally against the Lackawanna Railroad, which has always been used by persons carrying films, as they were allowed to bring the metal cases containing them into the regular passenger coaches.

Under the new ruling, moving picture films must be carried as baggage, and are only accepted by freight agents when encased in metal carriers. The rule was agreed to at a meeting of the traffic managers of the various railroads, held a few weeks ago in Jersey City. The ruling relative to films was made with the "safety first" rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The enforcement of the new regulation, however, will put an end to the practice of allowing persons to carry films in passenger coaches, no matter how well they may be enclosed and protected against catching fire. The charge made by the railroads for carrying films is twenty-five cents for each fifty pounds or fraction thereof. If the films are valued at more than twenty-five dollars each an excess baggage rate is charged, and this charge the motion picture men assert is an unfair tax on their business.

Henry C. Brown, proprietor of the Lyric theatre, in Summit, feels that the new ruling is decidedly unfair. In discussing the matter, he said: "This ruling relative to films is likely to put some of the moving-picture houses out of business. Each theatre used at least four films a week, and the payment of an excess baggage charge when films are worth more than twenty-five dollars, is a hardship to us all. Even some of the cheaper films cost about eight hundred dollars, and you can see that the baggage charge is going to be a heavy one for motion picture house managers.

"An effort will be made to organize proprietors of picture houses along the Lackawanna Railroad, between Newark and Dover, to make a test case in court to determine whether or not the railroads have a right to charge us so much for the carrying of films," said Mr. Brown. "Under existing conditions the baggage charges will prove ruinous, to say nothing of the inconveniences we will be forced to suffer."

"Charging twenty-five cents for each fifty pounds on the railroad is likely to put several small film houses out of business," said Oscar A. Morgan, resident manager of the Paramount theatre. "A great many small houses in New Jersey are just about making expenses. This added expense is probably a knockout blow, not only because of the extra charge, but because nearly all of the small houses change their pictures every day, while the larger houses can keep them for three days, necessitating only two trips to New York a week. It is this delay that is causing the most harm to exhibitors in Newark and other towns in New Jersey—the films in iron cases have to be checked through the baggage room. At the present time, with the tremendous amount of business at the film exchanges in New York, messengers are frequently half an hour to an hour late in getting back to Newark with their shows. Thus you can see where the loss is—sometimes the loss of a whole afternoon's receipts."

In discussing a recent published statement that films rarely weigh more than thirty-five or forty pounds, Mr. Morgan said that a better average would be from seventy-five to eighty pounds. In addition to car fare and railroad fare, it now costs Mr. Morgan's messenger fifty-three cents excess baggage for each trip he makes to New York. According to motion-picture men, the railroads will reap a substantial harvest from the new regulations. There are more than fifty motion picture houses in the immediate vicinity of Newark, nine-tenths of which send to New York for film every day. Every town has its quota of messengers, Asbury Park, for instance, sending twenty to twenty-five a day.

In the offices of the Lackawanna Railroad it was stated that the new rule went into effect last Thursday and that prior to that time films were not allowed as baggage at all. It is generally understood, however, that moving picture men were in the habit of riding on the Lackawanna when bringing films from New York. They were not molested, but now, it is understood, passengers will not be allowed to carry film cases, even empty, in the passenger coaches.

SUNDAY SHOW CASES DISMISSED

Sunday picture show cases that were filed in the County Court at Dallas, Tex., in June, prior to the trial of the test case before Judge W. L. Crawford, Jr., were dismissed September 14, when they were reached on the docket of the court.

METRO TO RESIST BANNING OF FILMS IN PORTLAND

Pernicious activity on the part of local censors has again been evidenced by the action of the local censors of Portland, Ore., in refusing to sanction the exhibition of "The Soul of a Woman," the Metro picture in which Emily Stevens is the star.

When this picture was shown to the National Board of Censors in New York, at a special showing at the Strand theatre, not a single objection was registered, and the picture was passed unanimously. It was pointed out at the time that the picture was far from being objectionable in any particular, and that on the contrary it preached a more powerful sermon against a life of evil than any pulpit master could hope to utter.

When word was received at the Metro offices that the picture had been refused by the local censors of Portland, arrangements were immediately effected to resist the Portland censors, and if necessary carry the matter to court. The Metro Pictures Corporation, working in harmony with the National Board of Censors, will endeavor to secure a change of front from the Portland authorities, and failing in this an injunction will be asked for.

"The Soul of a Woman" was made at the Rolfe studios in New York City, and Edwin Carewe directed it. The picture's popularity in New York has been such that return bookings have been asked for by the New York Theatre and others.

Why a picture which is distinctly encouraging to morality and which paints the other course black and unlovely, should be objected to by the keepers of the public morals, Metro Pictures Corporation officials were unable to understand.

CINCINNATI EXHIBITORS TO FIGHT "WATCHMAN" ORDINANCE

Exhibitors of Cincinnati are preparing to oppose an ordinance introduced recently in the city council providing for the employment in every motion picture theatre of a man to be placed behind the screen to guard against accidents and otherwise preserve an atmosphere of "safety." The salary fixed for this watchman is $21 a week. Cincinnati exhibitors declare this is an unnecessary expense and that there is no urgent need for any person except the manager to watch the screen. The Cincinnati exhibitors' league is affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce there and will bring every influence to bear in opposing the measure which they deem unwarranted.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

By J. C. Jessen
Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 20.

THE fifth big stage at Universal City is this week nearing completion, and already has been put to use for several sets, regardless of the fact that the diffusing system has not been completed except on the sides. The most recent addition is one hundred and twenty-five by three hundred feet, and brings the total of stage space up to more than one hundred and fifty thousand square feet, or the equivalent of nearly four acres.

For the past several weeks the officers of Universal City have been having tests made with a new diffusing system which they find satisfactory in every way. This permits a quicker change than the old system used, and also makes arrangements for changing a studio from one depending entirely upon the sunlight to one where artificial lights are used. This is made possible by an extra structure above the diffusing system which will support a roof that darkens the enclosure, thus preventing any cross lights. This new system will be added to all the exterior stages, making it possible for all companies to work during the rainy season, which lasts from December to April each year, and which in the past has caused much delay in production because companies were not prepared to produce under rainy weather conditions.

Activities at Lasky Studios

In the absence of Jesse L. Lasky and Cecil de Mille, who are spending a week at their mountain ranch, forty-nine miles inland from San Diego, and William de Mille, who is in New York, activities at the Lasky studio are not as brisk as usual. Edna Goodrich, who arrived during the past week, has been at the studio making tests, and the latter part of this week the filming of the first subject in which she appears was taken up. This was from an original scenario by Margaret Turnbull, and the production will be in the hands of George Melford, who, during the past ten months, has completed eleven Lasky productions.

L. C. SHUMWAY (Lubin)

The E. Phillips Oppenheim story which appeared in the "Saturday Evening Post" entitled "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo," is to be filmed by the Lasky company, and the scenario is now being prepared. Theodore Roberts is to play the name part of this, and Carlyle Blackwell will appear as the young American of the story. This subject will be filmed by Frank Reicher.

Among the interesting visitors at Universal City during the past week were Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, who were shown over the big motion picture plant by officers of the city, and personally introduced to many of the Universal stars.

Congratulations for Bushman and Bayne

Francis X. Bushman and leading woman of the Bushman Quality Pictures company, Miss Beverly Bayne, are being generally congratulated on their victory in the contest conducted by officials of the California Panama Exposition at San Diego, in connection with Los Angeles and San Diego newspapers when they received the greatest number of votes of any Southern California photoplayer, and were elected king and queen respectively of "Motion Picture Day," at San Diego Exposition.

BEVERLY BAYNE AS "QUEEN BEVERLY" AT THE SAN DIEGO EXPOSITION

The program for "Motion Picture Day" began at two o'clock, when all screen people assembled at the Spreckles theatre and were taken to the exposition grounds in handsomely decorated automobiles. Arriving there they were led by the Thirteenth Artillery band to the Spreckles Organ pavilion, where the coronation of Mr. Bushman as King Francis X., and Miss Bayne as Queen Beverly, was conducted by President G. Audrey Davidson of the Exposition, aided by other officers. The King and Queen were then presented with large golden keys of the Exposition. In the evening an open air dance was given on Plaza de Panama. This was led by the King and Queen, following which they were presented with handsome silver loving cups and escorted to Cafe Cristobal, where a dinner was given in their honor.

During the day the Universal Joker company filmed a one-reel comedy entitled "King for a Day," the principals in which were Max Asher, Gale Henry, Lillian Peacock, William Franey, Milburn Moranti, Wilbur Plaquette and Joseph Murphy. Others from Universal City present were H. P. Caulfield, Otis Turner and M. G. Jonus.

Those present from the Keystone studio were Mr. and Mrs. Harry Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Bryan, and Mr. and Mrs. Jean Swartz.

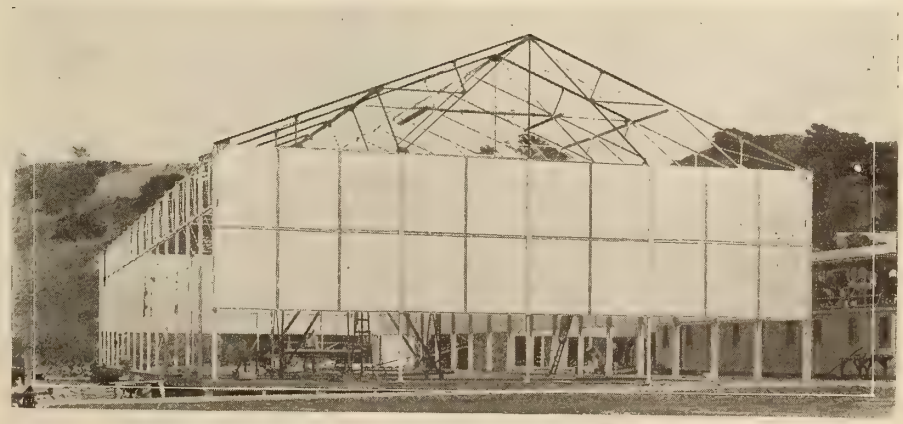
Mexico's Natal Day Celebrated

The biggest event since the opening of the Selig Jungle zoo was that of Thursday of this week when the Los Angeles and Southern California Mexicans celebrated Mexico's Independence day, September 16. The program for the day included parades, music by bands and big choruses, and a number of dancing contests in which the Spanish dances were most conspicuous. The Hearst-Selig cameraman was on the job and made a number of scenes. William Howard Taft was the principal speaker of the day.

A one-reel adaptation from the Charles Belmont Davis short story entitled "The White Light of Publicity," is being filmed by Lloyd B. Carleton at the Selig zoo. This is a story of a New York society man who befriends an actress, and in return her publicity man "dopes" up a scandal implicating the society man's name. Bessie Eyton appears as the newspaper reporter; Edward Piel, society man, and Richard Morris plays the character lead. Director Colin Campbell is making a two-reel present-day drama, "Just As I Am," in which Edith Johnson and Wheeler Oakman are featured in the principal parts.

The fire which destroyed the Famous Players' studio and laboratory in New York, Sunday, has caused unusual activity at the laboratory of the Jesse L. Lasky company, Hollywood, in that it will mean all positive prints must be made here for future releases. "The Chorus Lady," to be released on October 11, and "Blackbirds," dated for October 21, are now being printed, and will be shipped direct to the Paramount exchanges. The Lasky company had decided to make all their own prints here, and just at this time they are building a mammoth laboratory to take care of this work, but the change necessitated by the fire means that the present small laboratory of the Lasky company must be kept in operation day and night in order to get out the prints on time.

New Vitagraph Player Introduced



"The Hoyden," is the title of a one-reel subject being staged by Dave Smith at the Vitagraph Santa Monica studio, and will serve to introduce a new player, Edith Reeves. Other principals in the cast will be Mary Anderson and Webster Campbell, who, although they have only played in one picture together, have already become known as "that charming young couple." It has already been decided to make the stage at the new Vitagraph studio larger than at first planned, and it will be one hundred by one hundred and fifty feet. Plans are made for a large stone wall to enclose the studio and buildings, and the dressing rooms will be models of completeness for the comforts of the players.

Production Manager Rollin S. Sturgeon has been spending the past week in selecting locations for his next Blue Ribbon V-L-S-E subject. Now with the scenario completed, the cast selected and locations picked, work will be taken up within the next few days. For "The Chalice of Courage" Mr. Sturgeon traveled more than fifteen hundred miles in picking locations for exterior scenes.

John Emerson is leaving here the latter part of this week for New York City where he will take up productions of Griffith contributions to the Triangle program. The location of the studio has not been decided upon. This will probably be completed after Mr. Emerson reaches New York. He will be accompanied by George Hill, who will be in charge of the camera work, and Douglas Fairbanks, now playing in "Double Trouble," will leave in a few days to star in productions filmed by Mr. Emerson. It has been definitely decided that Alan Dwan will be the other director at the Eastern studio, and as soon as he completes his present production he will leave for New York, accompanied by Owen Moore and Dorothy Gish, who will be his leading people. It is very probable the Eastern studio will be located at Fort Lee.

"The Queen of the Band" Produced

"The Queen of the Band," a two-reel subject written by Tod Browning, has just been produced by Director Ray Myers. George Walsh, last season with the Brooklyn National League team, played the important part in this. Many of the interior scenes for this subject were made at the Brock jewelry store,

THE NEW SPECIAL FEATURE STAGE, 125 x 300 FEET, FIFTH STAGE TO BE BUILT AT U CITY

perhaps the largest in Los Angeles. A truck load of lamps were used, and the company worked inside the store three evenings. This subject will be released as a Reliance on the Mutual program.

The cast for the Pallas Pictures production of "The Gentleman from Indiana," adapted from the Booth Tarkington novel, was announced this week. The leads, John Harkless and Helen Sherwood, are played by Dustin Farnum and Winifred Kingston. The part of Joe Fisbee is taken by Herbert Standing; Tom Meredith by Signor De La Cruz; Judge Briscoe, Norman Hammond; Rodney McCune, Howard Davies; Lige Willets, Page Peters; Skillet, Joe Ray, and Skillet's girl, Elsie Court. The direction is in charge of Frank Lloyd, and Fred Dobson is doing the camera work.

Joe Weber and Lew Fields had their first motion picture thrill this week when the antiquated taxicab in which they were riding in a scene was accidentally hit by Managing Director Mack Sennett's one hundred and twenty horsepower Fiat racer. The accident was wholly unintentional, the driver of the racing car having been instructed to j-u-s-t miss it, but he lost his head, and incidentally control of the machine, and there were two really scared comedians rolling on the pavement for a few minutes. All of the scene was caught by the cameraman, and in the midst of the excitement the familiar voice of Weber piped out:

"My God, is these Keystone Pictures, vot?"

The comedian was in earnest. He was ready to cancel his contract, and it took several minutes of persuasion on the part of Mr. Sennett and Frank Griffin to induce the comedians to continue their work. They now have a motto over their door, "This life is just one d—— unexpected thrill after another."

Fairbanks Subject to Be Made in East

"His Picture in the Paper" is the title given the third Triangle picture in which Douglas Fairbanks will be featured. This was written by Anita Loos and John Emerson, and will be produced by the latter in the East. Scenes for this are laid in New York, Atlantic City, and Bridgeport, Conn., and the work of filming it will be done in the East. Mr. Fairbanks this week appeared in the last scenes of the film version of Herbert Quick's story, "Double Trouble," filmed by Director William Christy Cabanne. In several scenes for this a very large number of extra people were used in support of the star and cast. The total number is stated to be about four thousand.

Ruth St. Denis, well-known vaudeville stage dancer, assisted by her husband, Ted Shaw, have been engaged to teach players of the Griffith studio the new dances as well as fancy stage acts, and is giving three lessons a week. Rhea Mitchell, late with the Ince forces, has been engaged to appear in support of De Wolfe Hopper in "Don Quixote," and will appear in the part of Lucinda. Viola Barry, recent star of "The Landslide," has been engaged by the Griffith studio for an important part in support of John Emerson in "The Scarlet Band," or "In 1921."

Director Jack O'Brien of the Griffith forces assembled a very remarkable number of men in a set representing the President's room of the White House this week for the topical subject "The Scarlet Band," or "In 1921." This body represented the new board of directors of the Navy Department, and was composed of Thomas Edison, John Hayes Hammond, Jr., Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz, Hudson Maxim, Orville Wright, Henry Ford, Thomas Nixon, and Alexander Bell, impersonated by Ralph Lewis, Alfred Paget, James Gibson, Charles I. Pearce, Bert Hadley, "Curly" Baldwin, Elliott Griffin and Charles Gill, respectively.

Comedy Lives Up to Its Name

In the making of the Kalem Ham comedy, which has a working title of "Spike's Jonah Day," the subject has proven up to its name. Owen Evans was accidentally dropped from a painters scaffold to the sidewalk some twenty feet below and is now finishing the picture with four broken toes. During the past week this company, under the direction of Reub Miller, former producing clown for Ringling Brothers and the Barnum & Bailey circuses, where one of his best acts was that of an educated goose, was making a farmyard scene, and Miller discovered an infant pig, scarcely two weeks old, which he purchased from the farmer. It is now being trained, and already will come when called and follow its trainer. About the studio it is said this pig will become the mascot of the Ham comedy company, but just now it is causing much ill feeling because of the desire of every member to hold the bottle when it takes its three or more meals each day.

LILLIAN LORRAINE AND WM. COURTLEIGH, JR., STARS OF THE PATHE "NEAL OF THE NAVY," MADE BY BALBOA, AT THE SAN DIEGO EXPOSITION, SEPT. 11

Business Manager J. C. Epping, of the Griffith studio, found himself in a distressing condition Thursday, September 9, when all banks in the city were closed on account of Admission day, which is a legal holiday in California, and he could not get funds to pay off the army of extra people employed that day at the studio. In his mad rush from one bank to another, thinking it might be possible to find one where the vaults were open, he met G. A. Hoppe, Jr., traveling passenger agent of the Santa Fe Railway, and together they went from one store to another, getting five here, ten there, etc., giving checks until they raised the necessary amount, something near three thousand dollars.

The "Alden Besse," a Chinese sailing ship, built more than four hundred years ago, and which has been in almost constant use since that time, has been purchased by the Griffith studio and will be used in sea scenes. For several years this boat has been anchored in Pacific Coast harbors, where an admission fee was charged to inspect it. Every piece of timber in the boat was hewn out, which consists of heavy pieces. For a number of years this boat was used by pirates because of its exceptional speed. Later it served as a prison ship, and for a time plied between Portland, Ore., and Chinese points.

At Chatsworth Park, north of Los Angeles, a Mexican village has been erected by Mexican workmen for scenes in "The Penitentes," the Fine Art subject which has Orrin Johnson, Seeno Owen and Paul Gilmore as co-stars, supported by Irene Hunt, Charles Clary and F. A. Turner. The village will represent one built by a band of religious workers who sought to worship as they pleased, and for this reason formed their own colony.

Pavlowa Completes Work for Universal

Mlle. Pavlowa and her Russian ballet, having completed scenes for the Universal subject, departed for New York the latter part of the week, and the members of the company went to Santa Barbara, where a number of scenes were made. Tom Chatterton, who for two years was with the NYMP organization in capacity of leading man and director, has been signed by the Universal to play leads in the Cleo Madison organization. The Ray Clement company, featuring Victor Potel, is filming "By Return Mail," which will in all probability become a Joker release.

Director Francis Ford of "The Broken Coin" company, owing to the absence of Grace Cunard, who has been at a local hospital for the past two weeks, is making a two-reel subject entitled "Guilty or Not." Many scenes for this will be made at San Francisco. Fortunately, "The Broken Coin" company is far ahead on its releases, and the illness of Miss Cunard will not interfere with releases of this serial. It is expected she will be able to resume work within the next two weeks.

The five-reel subject being filmed by Hobart Bosworth originally known as

KING "FRANCIS X." ADDRESSING THE CROWDS

"Na-Ta-Nan-Gan" (Indian, meaning "a great trapper"), has been given the title "The White Scar." The locale of this picture is in the Hudson Bay country, and the story is of the nature of "The Call of the North" by Stewart Edward White. The supporting cast includes Anna Lehr, Norval McGregor, Jane Novak, Frank Newberg and Ronald Bradbury.

"No Babies Allowed" is an Allen Curtiss one-reel Joker being filmed this week, which depicts the troubles of a couple in finding a home in a city where all apartment and flat houses will not permit the entrance of babies. The cast includes Milburn Moranti, Gale Henry, Max Asher and William Farney.

Rex Filming Three-Reel Drama

The Rex company, under the direction of Joseph De Grasse, is making a three-reel drama entitled "Fate's a Fiddler." This shows the intentions of two mothers to bring about a marriage between their children, and the intentions of the children to disregard the wishes of the parents in matters matrimonial, but Fate takes a hand and the couple are united. The cast includes Grace Thompson, Gretchen Lederer, Arthur Shirley, Mill Wilmer, Marcia Moore, Millard K. Wilson and Lon Chaney.

Director William C. Dowlan is back at Universal City after a vacation of two weeks, and has been given "The Devil and Idle Hands," a one-reel drama, for filming. Mr. Dowlan will play the lead in this, supported by William Quinn, William Canfield and Gloria Fonda. Miss Fonda was the Washington candidate in the Universal beauty contest in June, and has just come to the studio to begin her engagement in pictures.

The Victor-Kerrigan Company, which has been at Lake Tahoe for the past three months, is expected back at Universal City within the next week or two. The company is now filming "Son o' the Star," in two or three reels, the name part being taken by Jack Kerrigan. It is an Indian legend wherein the child of pioneers was taken by Indians following the death of his parents, and ever afterwards was thought of as a half-breed. This prevented the parents of the girl he loved from giving their consent to marriage until he proved his birth, which he finally succeeds in doing by the aid of old Indians. The supporting cast for Mr. Kerrigan in this subject consists of Norbert A. Myles, Ethel Phillips, Helen Leslie, Buck Connor, T. D. Crittenden and Will E. Lloyd.

Jack Jaccard, who has been directing the Kerrigan company at Lake Tahoe together with Helen Leslie, who in private life is Mrs. Jaccard, has returned to Universal City and taken up the direction of the second Victor company. Peggy Corday and Ray Russel are the principals in the new company.

"Public Approval" a Political Story

The fickleness of the public with respect to showing its approval or disapproval will be forcibly brought out in the three-reel subject "Public Approval," written by Harvey Gates, and being produced by Leon Kent with cast composed of Ray Hanford, E. Devers, H. Bliven, Agnes Vernon and Marguerite Gibson. The story is one concerning politics in a big city, and shows the effects of success ofttimes becoming intoxicated by public approval. In this is a pretty love theme.

"His Best Pal" is a two-reel subject of the mining camp day of the West, written and being produced by Lynn Reynolds. The discovery of gold by a couple of young miners, and their battle for possession with crooks of the camp make an interesting melodrama.

The Hobart Henley company, under the direction of Henry Apfel, is still engaged in the filming of "The Measure of Leon Dubray."

The Joseph Franz Universal company is now filming the three-reel adaptation from the Peter B. Kyne story, "The Spell of Hassayampa." Scenes for this are laid in Arizona and deal with the Indian legend of the Hassayampa river, which is to the effect that anyone drinking of its waters will not in the future be able to tell the truth.

Rupert Julian, who has been playing in the Pavlowa subject, has been assigned a company, and this week began the filming of "The White Feather," with Elsie Jane Wilson playing opposite Mr. Julian.

"The Tiger Woman" is a two-reel animal story being made under the joint direction of Norval McGregor and Paul Bourgeous, animal trainer of the Universal zoo. The script for this calls for a number of very sensational animal scenes, one being a fight in the water between a man and tiger, another with two Sumatra lions, and another scene that of two lions and two tigers fighting. Mr. and Mrs. Bourgeous, Marie Walcamp and Fred Wilson play the principal parts in this. "The Man from Panama," recently completed at Universal City by the Lynn Reynolds company, has been changed to "The Man from Argentina."

Patriotic Theme for Big U Picture

The Murdock MacQuarrie Big U company is filming "In the Folds of the Flag," a patriotic story in which granddaughter first finds employment at a picture studio when the family is in distress for want of funds, and she secures grandfather a place to play in a Civil war picture. With Mr. MacQuarrie in this are Edna Payne, Mother Benson, Arthur Moon and Will White.

George Hall, who has been with the scenario department of the Universal company in the East, and for the past six months at Universal City, has resigned to accept a similar posiiton at the L-Ko studio, comedies of which are released on the Universal program. Al. E. Christie this week took up the filming of a five-reel subject featuring Edna Aug, which will be a burlesque on melodrama. Miss Aug appears as the simple country girl; Lee Moran will be there in his portrayal of the part of Detective Potts, and Eddie Lyons will appear as Jim, the reporter.

The George Fawcett Universal Broadway feature, "The Frame-Up," has been completed under the direction of Otis Turner, and within the next few days the Henrietta Crosman subject, "The Faddist," will be cut and forwarded to the New York laboratory. The latter was produced by E. J. LeSaint, from story by L. V. Jefferson, and adapted by Harvey Gates.

Jerry Storms, playing juvenile and character parts at the NYMP studio, played the hero in a real fire at the Inceville garage last week and saved the probable total destruction of the plant.

Fox Directors at Work on Important Releases

Jersey City Studios Complete Subject Featuring Mantell and Genevieve Hamper—Grantwood Stages the Scene of Activity in Preparation of Picture Directed by W. S. Davis

THE one-a-week policy of William Fox, which has been inaugurated by such record breaking successes as "The Two Orphans" and "The Song of Hate," is calling for unusual activity and bustle on the part of the various directors and stars now enlisted under the Fox banners. The productions now in preparation are being made in accordance with the William Fox slogan, "Make Each Picture Better and Stronger than the Last."

RAOUL WALSH

At the Jersey City studios of the Fox company, J. Gordon Edwards, assisted by Clifford P. Saum, has just completed a pretentious modern production of great dramatic power starring Robert B. Mantell and the beautiful and beloved Genevive Hamper. This photoplay is an original screen drama by Rex Ingram, named "The Blindness of Devotion," and deals with a vexed problem of modern society. Mr. Mantell and Miss Hamper are seen to splendid advantage in it, she as an adventuress of beauty and fascination, he as a man-about-town frantically in love with her.

On the open stage in Jersey City several massive scenes have been screened for another original photodrama the title of which has not yet been announced, but which will abound in dramatic situations and powerful climaxes.

At the William Fox Grantwood studio, W. S. Davis, assisted by Arthur Vaughn, is hard at work on a dramatic production which will excel "Dr. Rameau," the celebrated screen success made by Mr. Davis for William Fox. Mr. Davis brings into play in this production all his marked skill as a director and is aided in making his latest work a success by a powerful company.

The Fort Lee studios are housing three William Fox companies—namely, those directed by Oscar Apfel, Raoul A. Walsh and Frederick Thompson. William Farnum, in a new romantic drama, is the star whom Mr. Apfel is directing, and he is supported by Dorothy Bernard, who scored so heavily in "The Song of Hate," "The Princess Romanoff" and other William Fox successes.

Mr. Walsh is directing a production starring the famous Theda Bara, who once more is cast in a vampire role after having temporarily deserted siren roles to star in William Fox's production of "The Two Orphans." The part is one especially written to fit Miss Bara's exotic temperament. The photodrama itself is a spectacular production involving the erection of four open air sets costing about $15,000 each, besides employing the services of hundreds of supernumeraries. Mr. Walsh, who is assisted by Marcel Morange and a staff of deputy assistants, declares that the new Bara picture is the triumph of his directorial career.

Frederick Thompson is working with an especially selected company, headed by Dorothy Green, on a photoplay of diversified incident and highly original plot. It deals with dwellers by the sea, and how tragedy and love were brought into their lives from the outside world. Mr. Thompson made many of the scenes on the rugged coast of Maine, including a scene in which a large vessel is blown to splinters by an explosion.

Frank Powell, yet another of the William Fox directorial staff, is handling a new modern photodrama starring Nance O'Neil, who made such a memorable motion picture triumph in the Fox production of "Kreutzer Sonata" and "Princess Romanoff."

Miss O'Neil is supported by a company of noted Broadway players, including Alfred Hickman, who will be recalled as the original Little Billie of the stage production of "Trilby." The role for which Miss O'Neil is cast is that of a famous authoress who rises to the height of her ambition after many bitter struggles.

An interesting production in which William Farnum is to be starred is in active course of preparation by Frank Kugler and his assistant, Thomas O'Brien. Mr. Kugler, who is the latest director to join the Fox forces, is busy casting for the new photoplay and revising his manuscript. He will work at the Jersey City studios.

Alexandra Carlisle Signs Contract with Equitable

Actress, Who Will Make Her Screen Debut Under Direction of Marshall Farnum in Photo-Play Version of "Creeping Tides," Insists Upon Odd Clause

ONE of the strangest contracts ever entered into by a stage celebrity and an engaging corporation, was that consummated this week between the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and the famous legitimate stage beauty, Alexandra Carlisle.

Miss Carlisle, who attained fame in England seven years ago, stepped into prominence in this country by reason of her unusual beauty and her ability in "The Marriage Game," and recently as leading woman opposite John Drew in the Empire theatre production of "Rosemary." Miss Carlisle, through her contract engagements with Equitable, makes her debut on the screen under the guidance of Director Marshall Farnum, in Russell Edward Smith's scenario of Kate Jordan's novel, "Creeping Tides."

ALEXANDRA CARLISLE

In the contract with Equitable, Miss Carlisle, who, by option, following her first effort, if desirable to Equitable, becomes an exclusive Equitable star, demanded the insertion of a most curious clause. It reads thus:

The Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation hereby grants to said Alexandra Carlisle the rights to refuse to appear in any role, characterizing evil women or indiscreet females. If the part apportioned her calls for the portrayal of an adventuress, evil creature, woman of the world or unfaithful wife, said Alexandra Carlisle will have the right to refuse to portray said role.

This clause is the first of its kind to appear in a motion picture contract and bears out the statement of Miss Carlisle's manager that within the past two months she refused to appear in the star parts of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," for Klaw and Erlanger, in which she portrayed the role of the mother of an illegitimate child, and in "The Married Mistress," for William Elliott, both of which plays held unbounded opportunities for the delightful actress.

Miss Carlisle will start work at the Equitable Flushing studio next Monday. Her first vehicle, "Creeping Tides," will be released through the World Film early in December.

SENNETT SIGNS JOE JACKSON AND BERT CLARKE

Mack Sennett has rounded out his corner on comedians by making contracts with Joe Jackson, the Winter Garden and vaudeville headliner, and Bert Clarke, who has also been successful in the same fields of endeavor as the tramp cyclist.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

NOW comes the opening of the first two dollar moving picture theatre with a weekly change of program. The Knickerbocker theatre, New York City, long the home of the most celebrated stars of the speaking stage, was scheduled to open Thursday, September 23, with the initial bill offered by the Triangle Film Corporation, the Griffith-Ince-Sennett combine.

On this first bill are offered "The Iron Strain," with Dustin Farnum; "The Lamb," with Douglas Fairbanks and Seena Owen, and "My Valet," with Raymond Hitchcock, Fred Mace, Mack Sennett and Mabel Normand.

D. W. Griffith was scheduled to be present in person, as were Hitchcock, Farnum and Miss Normand.

This is an opening which really means more to the trade all over the country than has any other metropolitan presentation up to this time.

When "Cabiria" was presented, when Birth of a Nation" was presented, when any highly exploited pictures have been presented in New York they have always been pictures which the exhibitor in the smaller cities and towns would not have a chance to show because the exploiters wanted, and with perfect good right, to exhaust the possibilities of the big cities before sending them out in the woods.

But the Triangle plans, as announced, make it possible for the one or two exhibitors in each city or town who are real showmen to get Triangle pictures and get them exclusively for release at the same time as the largest cities. So it much behooves the bold exhibitor to keep an eye on how Triangle films go at their first presentation.

Remember, Ince, Griffith and Sennett are the producers.

The nominating committee of the Screen Club has prepared the regular ticket to be voted upon at the coming election on October 2. It runs: President, Billy Quirk; first vice-president, Harry Myers; second vice-president, Adam Kessel, Jr.; third vice-president, William Farnum; corresponding secretary, Harry Ennis; recording secretary, George D. Proctor; treasurer, John F. Race; members of board of governors, C. A. Willat, William Garwood, and Harry Morey. Other tickets will be nominated by petition.

Unsigned communications only reach the waste basket.

Frank Bannon is leaving Edison. That is real news. For Frank has been publicity manager and special representative at the studio so long that he has seemed a fixture and his resignation is a distinct shock. In addition to being a natural gentleman, Frank was an exhibitor for three years and knows the business thoroughly. He has been prominent at all trade gatherings, expositions and conventions all over the country. He is the man who introduced "Edison nights" at many theatres. He was assistant to General Manager Horace G. Plimpton, who resigned a few weeks ago. In addition, Frank is considerable of an oarsman. Future plans are not announced, but he wears a smile.

FRANK BANNON

The new Universal studio at Coytesville, N. J., will soon be occupied by the big U's Eastern producing companies. About all that remains to be done is to hire some trucks and move.

Paramount Pictures Corporation will soon issue a travel weekly composed exclusively of American scenes. Fred Beck is in charge.

Reports from that dear old Lunnon say that Charlie Chaplin is getting more popular every day there. He is 'way ahead of everybody else in popularity, with Billie Ritchie, of Universal, and Lloyd Hamilton, of the Ham and Bud Klems, next in line.

H. H. Van Loan, of the Universal press department, who has caused considerable trouble by breaking into press more than the polite number of times in the past few weeks, comes to the bat again. This time he says that Joe Brandt is going to spring a new stunt which is a sure hum-dinger. Whether it's a new hat or a chain of new exchanges H. H. neglects to say. 'S all right, Bert.

Famous Players did not take long to rise —Phoenix-like—from the flames. Bright and early the next working day James Kirkwood was taking scenes with Hazel Dawn. Temporary executive offices have been opened at 507 Fifth avenue.

In a communication printed in the New York "World," Bert Adler, manager of the Universal Coytesville studio, rises ably to the defense of film companies in re fires. It is all too often that the film company is blamed for a fire for which it is not responsible.

Bert calls attention to the fact that neither the recent fire, nor one some time ago in the old Commercial laboratories, nor the one at the Edison Orange, N. J., plant, were moving picture fires.

Bert concludes by saying:

"There is practically no fire danger from a picture studio. In the film factory, true, large quantities of film and chemicals are stored. But the average studio carries little of chemicals and only enough film for the camera man to 'shoot' from day to day. I know of only one strictly studio fire in the history of the industry."

It seems good to see some one take up the cudgels.

Marriages are plentiful this week. They include: Wellington Wales, auditor for Lasky on the Coast, and Ethel Powell, formerly in charge of the Lasky employment department; David Spurlin, a Los Angeles contractor, and Camille Astor, a Lasky actress; Edwin J. Brady and Lillian West, both Balboa players; William Courtleigh, Jr., and Ethel Fleming, also both Balboa players; Chester Withey, of the Triangle scenario ranks, and Virginia Philley, of Los Angeles, and Billy Gilbert and Norma Felicia, both of Keystone.

Motion picture days are in order at the San Diego Exposition in California. Motion Picture Day came September 11 with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, leads in Quality-Metro pictures, as the King and Queen. Siegmund "Pop" Lubin will be king all alone on September 25, which will be Lubin Day. There will be queens ad lib.

Edgar Lewis has celebrated his advent with the Lubin forces by announcing that he is writing a book for private distribution entitled "Advice to Actors." Ed's brightest words are, "Don't act off stage, but try to on." Harry Spingler has subscribed in advance for a copy.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

Life of a Film Is 2 Years, Says Sennett, Triangle

Demand for Subjects, Particularly Comedy, Keeps Studios on Constant Hunt for New Material—"Speed Cannot Diminish, Neither Can Quality"

MACK SENNETT, one of the directors of the Triangle Film Corporation, was recently asked for his views on the future of the comedy film, and he expressed impatience over the absurd supposition that entertainment of this character is in danger of becoming obsolete. Mr. Sennett said:

"The final shot in the interrogatory volley with which the average interviewer bombards me is, 'Do you think that film comedies will continue to be popular—is their future assured—will audiences tire of them?' or words to that effect. These queries appeal to me as being about as rational as to ask, 'Will humor last—will people continue to laugh—is the world tiring of fun?'

"To speak of the passing of the comedy motion pictures is equivalent to prophesying the elimination of laughter from the world, and laughter is as necessary to continued existence as light; when either ceases to be the world will die.

"Broadly speaking, then, let me say that not only is the motion picture industry not on the wane, but the possibilities for its future are so vast that it may be truthfully said to be still in its infancy. Little more than a decade ago the motion picture machine was a toy in the class with the magic lantern and the phonograph. Now it is the greatest existing factor in the progress of education and civilization.

"In less than twenty years the production of motion pictures has grown to its present position—the fifth industry in the United States. Most of its growth has taken place in ten years. What then of the next ten years? We are constantly striving for, and gradually gaining, more perfect photography and projection. These and kindred mechanical details widen the field upon which the producers and writers may work.

"The most difficult branch of this growth has been comedy. The comedy of the stage relied upon the spoken word to a greater extent than the drama, therefore the breach between the stage comedy and the screen comedy is greater than between the same two forms of drama. A drama that has been a success on the speaking stage may gain in strength and vital force when filmed, owing to the removal of the necessary limitations of the stage.

"A comedy, on the other hand, that has been a huge stage success, when shorn of the brilliance of dialogue, relies upon a quality of action that is much more difficult of attainment. The future of film comedy rests on the efforts of the best writers and producers and the task is far more arduous than that of the writers and producers of dramatic subjects.

SNITZ EDWARDS JOINS KLEINE

The first of the eccentric German character comedians to popularize the style of German dialect so prevalent today in musical comedies and shows of a like nature, was Snitz Edwards, whose engagement with the Kleine forces marks his first appearance in pictures.

Edwards is recognized as a straight, light comedian of exceptional ability. Years ago at a rehearsal of the "Seven Suabians," he was overheard by the stage manager telling a story in dialect. As the part that Snitz was cast for was not a particularly good one, the stage manager asked him if he could elaborate upon it so that it would stand out more prominently. Snitz carried the play by storm and was acclaimed the creator of a new idea in Teutonic comedy.

Several years ago Edwards decided to retire from the stage, and, with that end in view, purchased a farm in Orange county, N. Y. Managerial inducements proved potent and he "came back" in the part of Schmaltz, a Viennese wig-maker, in "The Rollicking Girl."

WELCH PLAYED OPPOSITE MISS MINTER IN "STORK'S NEST"

Niles Welch, who played opposite Little Mary Miles Minter in "Emmy, of Stork's Nest," a five part photoplay just completed by the Columbia Pictures Corporation for the Metro program, scored so notably in the part assigned him that arrangements were at once made for Mr. Welch to play similar parts in future productions in which Miss Minter will be featured.

Mr. Welch is by no means a newcomer in motion pictures. His first work was with the Vitagraph stock company, where he was engaged for a year. Later he joined the

NILES WELCH

Kalem stock, playing lead juvenile roles for four months. His first work with Metro was in a small part in "Always in the Way."

He made so much of the role that William Nigh, the director of the production, wrote him a part in "A Royal Family," which was being produced at that time. From that he stepped in the lead male part in "Emmy, of Stork's Nest."

Mr. Welch is a graduate of Columbia University, and before entering that institution took a special course at Yale. He is an enthusiastic college man in every sense of the word, and an all around athlete of considerable ability. He made his "theatrical debut" while a freshman at Columbia, playing the leading role in the annual Varsity show.

EDISON FINISHES "THE MAGIC SKIN"

"The Magic Skin," the second Edison release on the Kleine-Edison program scheduled for October 13, was given its finishing touches last week at the Edison studios in Bronx Park.

Everett Butterfield, a newcomer in the ranks of picture players, will be seen in the role of the idealist and dreamer. Butterfield is now playing the juvenile lead in "The Last Laugh," at the Thirty-ninth street theatre.

HERRINGTON WILL HEAD "REVIVAL" CONVENTION IN OHIO

Fred J. Herrington, national president of the Exhibitors' League, during his four-days' visit to New York City, from September 21 to 25, announced that he has sent out a call to "all bona fide exhibitors" in the State of Ohio to attend a two-day convention that will be held in the city of Cleveland on October 19 and 20, for the purpose, as he put it, of "organizing them into a branch of the national league that will take a positive stand against censorship."

It is understood that many prominent exhibitors who are interested in fighting censorship in Ohio have urged Mr. Herrington to call the meeting for the purpose mentioned above.

While Mr. Herrington steadfastly refused to discuss the Ohio situation, he said that there is no doubt in his mind that after the Cleveland convention the Ohio organization will be solid against censorship and that its allegiance with the national body will be on a firm basis.

It is understood that the Cleveland local, which is probably the strongest in the State of Ohio, favors fighting censorship to the limit, and Mr. Herrington expressed the firm conviction that the whole State organization, at the Cleveland meeting, will go on record as opposed to censorship.

Musical Program for Its Pictures Is Paramount Plan

George W. Beynon Will Arrange Orchestral Settings for Productions of Famous Players, Lasky and Morosco, Supplied to Theatres Showing Releases of This Service

THROUGH America's first practical and systematically developed movement for the raising of the standard of music for motion picture theatres, the aesthetic days of the ancient Greek drama and the material age represented by the year of our Lord 1915 are linked.

The idea of the moderns is to educate the great photoplay public to a better appreciation of good music. The genius of the movement lay in the agreement just made by a prominent musician with a leading music publisher and three allied film companies. The musician is George V. Beynon, the publisher, G. Schirmer, Inc., and the photoplay producers, the Famous Players Film Company, the Lasky Feature Play Company, and the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, producers of Paramount Pictures, the first of which to receive the musical honor being "Peer Gynt," made at Mr. Morosco's California studio with the international star, Cyril Maude, in the title role.

Here is the plan adopted: Mr. Benyon and his assistants are to put together orchestral settings for the feature pictures produced by the Famous Players, Lasky and Morosco; these orchestral scores are to be published by the Schirmers, and they are to be supplied to the motion picture theatres by the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

The manner of arranging music for the Paramount pictures is as follows: Some two months before a film is released to the exhibitors, it is run over for the inspection of Mr. Beynon and his aides in the New York projecting room of the Paramount. They make notes of such music as they think will suit the spirit of the various scenes, and their memories are amplified by a consultation of the vast orchestral library in the Schirmer department.

"We then put together the music as it accompanies the picture," stated Mr. Beynon, "carefully timing each part so that it is synchronized exactly with the scene which it illustrates.

"I have observed the rate at which the pictures are run in most houses and our timing is based on this.

"We do not use any of the cut-and-dried 'hurries' such as are usually published for use with motion pictures, but instead employ real music—Beethoven, Bach, Mozart and Wagner. We don't bother about little details, but follow the broad sweep of the action, making the music heighten the atmosphere—that is the important thing."

Just how widely the movement will benefit both general public and musicians was outlined by Mr. Beynon. "At present, whether or not an orchestra leader gets a job depends upon his 'library'; our system will give him the great resources of the Schirmer company.

"We are going to give trial orchestral showings of our settings, and when the managers hear these they will no longer be satisfied with only the piano, but will install a small orchestra. This orchestra will sound pretty good to them at first, but in time they will see the wisdom of raising their prices from fifteen to twenty-five cents and putting in a large orchestra. I believe this movement is going to mean the general adoption of orchestras in picture houses.

"Thus, these theatres will give employment not only to better musicians, as I pointed out before, but to many more musicians.

"Once more, this movement will be a big help to young American composers who have difficulty in getting a hearing, and—who knows—it may result in bringing out a distinctive American style of composition."

One of the American composers whose work Mr. Beynon has utilized in one of the settings is William Stickles, the well known pianist and teacher, whom he describes as his "right hand man" in the work. In the score for "Peer Gynt" are incorporated two numbers by Mr. Stickles.

Another American work, Victor Herbert's "Dagger Dance," from "Natoma," is employed in the scenes in which the scenario writer has brought Peer among the Indians of America, but aside from the exceptions here noted, the score is chiefly made up of Grieg, including the original "Peer Gynt" music.

V-L-S-E Makes Lobby Sets of Five Original Oil Paintings for Exhibitors

THE sales force of the V-L-S-E are earnestly spreading broadcast the doctrine that the proper place for lithographs, is on the billboard, and that an artistic, dignified lobby makes the greatest appeal to the largest number of the most desirable patrons.

This propaganda is in line with the unceasing efforts of the Big Four organization, to increase the prestige of the photodrama and thereby aid the exhibitor in attracting the better paying class of patronage.

Backing up their declaration that the exhibitor should look not only for good features, but good features accompanied by the best material to exploit them, the V-L-S-E has had built a number of sample lobby sets on the Vitagraph feature, "Playing Dead," which will be displayed in the various branches of the organization as examples of the most effective type of lobby display.

These sets consist of five pieces, each of which is an original oil painting. There are no reprints.

They are made in two ways: Some of the pieces are distinct and individual scenes from the play, while others provide artistic frames in which to set "stills." In the latter case, the space on the board not occupied by photographs, bears impressionistic decorations, suggestive of the theme of the feature.

The display on "Playing Dead" is only the forerunner of a similar series to be prepared for the other V-L-S-E releases. The C. J. Dryden Company, which was so successful with this first issue, has also been engaged by the Selig Company to visualize the main incidents in "The Circular Staircase," in a like manner, and by the Essanay Company to prepare the display for "The Man Trail."

Features to follow from these manufacturers' studios will be treated likewise, and the Lubin Company has signified its intention to adopt the advanced idea.

It is interesting to note that this move of the V-L-S-E is not only commercially sound, but that it is in line with the agitation in many cities to prohibit the use of mounted paper in any form in the lobbies of moving picture theatres.

Boise, Idaho, is one of the cities to adopt an ordinance against this kind of display, on the ground that nothing is more inflammable than paper mounted on canvass.

The State of Michigan has also taken cognizance of this danger.

THE STAR OF PATHE'S "THE GALLOPER," FANIA MARINOFF, IN TWO NEW POSES

Knickerbocker Retakes Explosion Scene Many Times

First Time Blast Is Set Off for "The Purple Night" Stage Hands Failed to Co-Operate—Set Reconstructed and Scene Snapped Over Again by Camera

NOW that its work is completed and the product ready for exhibitors, the producer of "The Purple Night," the new Knickerbocker Star feature, has allowed it to become known that the making of this subject has written several new chapters in the troubles of directors. As is usual in the staging of big scenes, calling for immense crowds, rapid action and striking effects, the directors encountered difficulties all their own, but in this case the worries extended even to the star of the production, Florence Rockwell, who had a forceful object lesson in the difference between acting on the stage and before the motion picture camera.

According to R. E. Shanahan, of the Knickerbocker Star Features, the task of staging some of the big scenes was so immense that Miss Rockwell and the entire company were obliged to work eighteen hours a day for several days in succession, and on one occasion the star was kept at work at the studio until three o'clock in the morning.

"This was the night we staged the big explosion scene in the house," said Mr. Shanahan. "The explosion occurs in the room, in full view of the spectators, and its work in wrecking the building is assisted by a number of stage hands, who pull down the walls at the moment of explosion.

"The first time the blast was set off several of the men were tardy, and the walls did not fly to pieces as they should, thus leaving enough of the effect to spoil the scene. It was necessary to reconstruct the entire set, then do the explosion all over. The second time it failed to wreck the mantelpiece, an important feature, and a third explosion was imperative. This delay held the whole company at the studios, and it was well after three o'clock before Miss Rockwell, so weary she could hardly walk, was able to go home.

"In this same picture, 'The Purple Night,' there is a scene in which a great crowd becomes involved in a free-for-all fight. In staging this Stanner E. V. Taylor, the director, used about 180 supers. The nondescript crowd collected at the studio, in Classon avenue, Brooklyn, attracted gangs of toughs, and when the supers began to file into the studio, the toughs joined them. It was necessary to call squads of police to keep out the outsiders, and they succeeded only after a lively scrimmage.

"Furthermore, the fight was so realistic that after the cameras had caught all that was necessary, the crowd had become so interested in its fight that it was impossible to stop it. Tables, chairs and pieces of scenery were smashed, and many persons narrowly escaped being hurt before quiet was restored.

"Not only did these incidents make trouble and wear out the nerves of directors and actors, but they have been very expensive. In retaking these big scenes, hundreds of feet of film has been wasted, and valuable time has gone for nothing.

"We have found that it is more expensive to use a star from the legitimate stage than a regular motion picture actor, anyway, for the former is so unaccustomed to acting in such restricted limits, and to the methods of direction, that much film and valuable time is wasted in every scene."

In connection with its forthcoming features, the Knickerbocker announces an unique policy. Marion Leonard, the noted actress, and star of numerous productions, has been signed to appear in a series of feature pictures, with a different male star playing opposite in each subject. The first of these, "The Dragon's Claw," will be released September 29.

"Appearing with Miss Leonard will be Walter Hampden, known all over the country for his work on the "legitimate" stage. His best known characters were created in Clyde Fitch's last play, "The City," and in "The Servant in the House." This will be Mr. Hampden's first screen appearance.

PAVLOWA IN CHICAGO, AFTER COMPLETING "DUMB GIRL"

Anna Pavlowa has arrived in Chicago from Universal City, where she spent a month making the great film spectacle, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," which will soon be released by the Universal.

She will now start rehearsing her ballets and divertissements for her regular tour, and it is interesting to note that she will include in her program this season Auber's famous opera, "Masaniello," which was picturized by Lois Weber for Pavlowa's screen debut.

MLLE. PAVLOWA AT HER COAST VILLA

Pavlowa will start on a short tour of some of the Eastern cities in a few weeks and afterwards will come into New York, where she is due to fill an engagement of about four weeks, beginning October 24. This will set back the date of the release for "The Dumb Girl of Portici," as her contract with the Universal states that the picture cannot be shown in any city until Pavlowa and her company have filled their regular engagement in that city.

While in California, she leased a beautiful bungalow in Hollywood, not far from Universal City, which she called "Holly Villa" and it was the mecca for her many friends while she was on the coast.

LOUISE, SISTER OF JUSTINA HUFF, IS WITH LIBERTY'S "$5,000 A YEAR"

Louise Huff, who is playing leads with the Liberty Motion Picture Company, at its studio in Germantown, Philadelphia, is counted one of the most beautiful women in the cinematographic world. She was long with the Lubin Manufacturing Company in Philadelphia, later with the Metro Picture Company, and from time to time has appeared in the productions of other companies.

Miss Huff is a twin sister of Justina Huff, the two girls having recently passed their nineteenth birthday. They come from Columbus, Ga., and are members of one of the old Georgia families.

Miss Huff has just finished a five-reel domestic drama for the Liberty folk, entitled "For Five Thousand Dollars a Year," for release on October 6.

"THE FASHION SHOP" IS NEXT KLEINE RELEASE

"The Fashion Shop," the Kleine two reel release through the General Film company, October 4, featuring Ethel Grandin, contains a story of much heart interest.

Arnold and his wife struggle valiantly against poverty, the former cherishing the ambition to become a playwright. His brave little wife obtains employment in a fashion shop, where the astute proprietor, to better parade his gowns, introduces her into society as the countess. She sends home to Arnold only the wages of a seamstress, reserving the bigger part of her income to surprise him when he should come to New York. In the meantime one of his plays is accepted and he visits New York, where he finds his wife receiving the attentions of a notorious man-about-town. The network of incriminating circumstances is very cleverly wound around the innocent girl. How the skeins of the story are finally unraveled and the couple reunited, makes a splendid subject.

THREE SCENES FROM "THE SONG OF A WAGE SLAVE," IN WHICH METRO IS STARRING EDMUND BREESE

"HELEN'S BABIES"

(Thanhouser-Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

ONE of those moments when all things seem to work together for good evidently was seized upon for the production of this picture. It stands out from the common herd of short pictures like a broken bottle on the beach. With John Habberton's story, in an attractive and logical setting, told by a company which includes Lorraine Huling, little Helen Badgeley and Baby Stewart, and Harry Benham, a charming result has been arrived at.

The children are charming in their roguish naturalness. Their "business" is the business of real live youthful mischief-makers, and they have been allowed to do it their own way. Lorraine Huling is a ray of sunshine on the slopes of Sicily—if you know what that is. She flashes a smile which has every spectator unconsciously smiling with her, and anyone who can do that is pretty sure of a following.

Harry Benham, as "Uncle Harry," gets a note from his sister, asking him to take charge of the babies during her vacation. He consents after he learns that the girl he met last summer is staying at the nearby hotel. The babies take up all his time, and drive him distracted, and he breathes in several thousand gallons of relief when their parents return. Their crowning achievement, however, is to steal up behind Uncle Harry, as he is sparring for wind, and attempting to propose to the girl—unsuccessfully. Says one of them:

"When I love anybody, I kiss them."

"That's a good idea," replies Uncle Harry; and he is right. The past performances of the babies are immediately forgiven.

"THE SONG OF A WAGE SLAVE"

(Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY, 2ND

THOSE who love the virile power of Robert W. Service's verses of the Yukon will perhaps wonder how any one of his poems could furnish a plot for a five reel production. The theme of "The Song of a Wage Slave" has been successfully amplified and elaborated until the action is sufficient for the film footage. Edmund Breese as the Wage Slave creates a real Service character. He is rough-hewn, childlike, primordial. He carries an atmosphere of the crudity, the vastness, and the freedom of the Alaskan northwest.

The settings for the story, although not in the region that Service wrote about, are well chosen. The frequent sub-title quotations from the poem add greatly to the interest of the drama. Only one unfortunate slip in the directing occurs. In one scene, where a factory is supposed to be dynamited, the building is plainly only a front, which topples over quite tamely. Mr. Breese's support is commendable, Helen Martin, especially, making an appealing heroine.

Frank Dawson, son of Robert Dawson, a rich pulp-mill owner, loves Mildred, the foreman's daughter. The father forbids the match, hoping for a marriage that will be advantageous to him in a business way. Mildred is in a dilemma, for her expected child will be without a father. The "wage slave," a humble mill-worker, knowing the circumstances and loving her, offers to marry her. After they are married a few months, the elder Dawson dies, leaving his son free to marry Mildred. The slave, his duty done, leaves his wife to the man she loves, and becomes a hard-living, hard-drinking laborer. In a barroom brawl he is shot, and given up for dead. The newspapers report his demise, and Mildred, believing herself to be free, marries Dawson.

But when he recovers, the slave decides to change his name, and win for himself a place in the world. He becomes a labor agitator in Dawson's factories, and Dawson, not knowing who he is, makes overtures of capitulation. The slave refuses his offers, and devotes himself to alleviating the misery among the factory workers. In the slums he meets Mildred and her daughter, who are bound on an errand of mercy. When he discovers that some of the starving workmen have placed a bomb in the Dawson home, he rushes there and gets the infernal machine out of the house, but it explodes in his hands. In his dying breath, he asks Dawson to better conditions in the factories, and this the mill owner does.

Others in the cast are J. Cyrnes, Fraunie Fraunholz, Albert Froom, George MacIntyre, Wallace Scott, Mabel Wright, Claire Hillier, Kitty Reichert and William Morse. The adaptation from the poem was made by Aaron Hoffman and Herbert Blache.

"THE GUILT"

(Kalem—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2d

THIS three-act drama featuring Jeanette Horton is technically a melodrama. The story, ordinary enough in itself, is unfolded somewhat in the manner of "On Trial," and this novel treatment, plus the ability of the producer, Hamilton Smith, intensifies the interest until the final, unexpected denouement.

Roland, private secretary of Gordon, a grafting contractor, asks his employer for the hand of his daughter, Eleanor. Gordon refuses, and a quarrel ensues; so, when the contractor is shot dead, Roland is convicted of the crime and sentenced to the chair. Gordon was really killed during a dispute with his daughter, in which a revolver in the man's hand was accidentally discharged. Although Roland knows the truth, he keeps silence to save the girl, while she selfishly says nothing.

On the morning set for the execution, Eleanor goes to the prison and confesses her part in the affair just in time to save her lover. A "trusty" who overhears her confession, steps forward and testifies that he, not the girl, is the murderer, since he shot at Gordon with a silencer-equipped revolver, just as the dead man's own pistol was discharged. Roland, by his heroic devotion to the girl, wins her love.

Supporting Miss Horton are Ralph Locke, Harland Moore, Edward Nannery, and Robert Vaughn.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

"THE HOUSE OF A THOUSAND SCANDALS"

(American-Mutual Masterpicture—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS picture is a pleasing and surprising deviation from beaten paths. The story takes a course entirely unexpected at the start, and the interest is thereby increased several fold. It is in reality a serious preachment in favor of the application of the classical Greek idea to modern conditions and modern industry. But convincing and true as the story is, it does not convince us that young men and maidens in Arcadian costumes, and piping the tunes to goat-footed Pan, which the militarism of Rome found it necessary to eliminate, are applicable to the life of the most military age the world has yet seen. The industries of 1915 may well beware of Greeks bearing such gifts.

This much for the propaganda. As a picture it is pleasing, interesting and dramatic. It is moreover, true, and tells an intense story of the narrow bigotry of the free and untrammeled rural community. A young millionaire takes possession of his newly-inherited etsate, and one of his first acts is to interpose between a farmer's daughter and the drudgery imposed upon her by her father's theory of life. He then begins to investigate the sources of his income, with the result that tenement rookeries are wiped out, factory conditions remedied, and finally an exponent of Greek culture is engaged, and a large colony of young working people transported to the country estate, where they do their work as a community, their dress, recreation and labors being modeled after the classical Greek style which made Isadora Duncan and Anita Stewart prosperous.

THE GLORIFICATION OF TOIL

Of course the villagers get word of what is going on behind the high spiked fence, and they are scandalized. When Farmer Hobbs learns that his missing daughter is one of the participants in the carryin's-on, the protest takes form, and led by the local minister, a mob, armed with clubs, scythes, torches and dynamite descends upon the place. They force an entrance, and while the mob is smashing windows and applying the torch, a young farmer who was to have married the girl who turned Greek, plants a quantity of dynamite in the house. It blows the place to pieces, and he himself is killed. The sight of his mangled body sobers the mob, and they retire awed.

The young millionaire thereupon consults with the Greek preceptress, and out of the ruins rises a collection of buildings, colonnades, pergolas and porticoes of the true Greek style.

The cast is capable throughout. It includes Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Josephine Ditt, William Ehfe, Hal Clements, Bessie Banks and Perry Banks.

"PEER GYNT"

(Morosco-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

WERE we a director, even one of the standing and accomplishments of Oscar C. Apfel, Peer Gynt is the last thing we would approach. The ways in which the peculiar brain of Ibsen may be spread on the screen are so limited that scenario writer and director are apt to flounder about for awhile and then strike out for shore. But as both scenario writer and director, Mr. Apfel has found a way to make almost a continuous, coherent story out of Peer Gynt's allegorical vagaries, and an impressive picture is the result.

Cyril Maude has seldom had opportunity to show the marvelous scope of his powers. His mastery of make-up, combined with Mr. Apfel's mastery of dramatic technique, makes a sure foundation on which a monument of pantomimic art is erected. From the wild, irresponsible youth of the mountains, through the changes of middle age, in conditions of both wealth and poverty, he reaches doddering and decrepit old age without once failing to convince. If one didn't know better, one might think Ibsen had Cyril Maude in mind.

The director has not attempted to make much more than a series of "romantic episodes" out of the tale. In some cases allegory is dragged in so unexpectedly that the spectators wonder what has become of the story, and a little trimming in other places would let the public more into the actors' confidence, but the locations have been so carefully selected, the lighting and time arranged with such expert knowledge of photography, that every foot of the film is enjoyable.

And now enters the ancient mystery: Why do directors of this class do some of the things they do? A duel is fought at sunrise, yet the shadows tell us it is within ten minutes of noon; Peer Gynt is abandoned on a desert shore, where he wanders alone "for months." But at the end of all his wandering his flannel trousers are still carefully creased. They tell us there is a way of pressing pants like this under a mattress, but no mattress is introduced on the desert shore.

PEER BREAKS UP THE WEDDING PARTY

The five types of feminine beauty which cross Peer's path fully live up to their advertising. Than Myrtle Stedman, Mary Reubens, Mary Ruby, Winifred Bryson and Evelyn Duncan, there are few more charming faces on any screen.

At the private showing at the Broadway theatre, New York, Thursday, September 16, a large orchestra supplied a music accompaniment to the picture, the score of which is furnished with the film, for the first time with a program release. The score is admirably adapted to the spirit of the film, and ranges from the heavy harmony of Grieg to Southern plantation melodies. It seems to us a gross mistake, however, to introduce a vocal solo just as the picture approaches one of its most dramatic situations.

Besides those mentioned above, the cast includes Fanny Y. Stockbridge, Kitty Stevens, Herbert Standing, Charles Ruggles, William Desmond, and Juan de la Cruz.

"THE SONG OF HATE"

(Fox Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is the most tragic piece of dramatic art that the the writer has ever laid eyes on. There is not one faint glimmer of happiness in it, not even the slightest suggestion of a pleasant ending.

But inasmuch as the picture is a deep tragedy, as such it can be spoken of in only terms of praise, when it is taken as a whole. In structure the play is obviously the work of a master. A succession of dramatic episodes, each one worthy to be considered alone, leads to a series of highly wrought and grippingly powerful scenes that form the climax.

The principal characters are two lovers, one an artist and the other an opera singer, and a third one of equal importance is a souless Baron. The man Maurice measures everything by the sharp standard of honor, the woman puts love before all else, and so to save her lover from the excruciating torture of the vice, she betrays the whereabouts of their friend, a spy in the Baron's country, Italy. For this she is denounced by Maurice, who now must die a traitor's death.

THE BARON CONTINUES HIS PERSECUTION

The Baron bargains with the woman, tells her that both she and Maurice may go free if she will sacrifice her honor. She consents, but when the Baron attempts to embrace her, she stabs him to the heart. But the Baron's orders were false, her lover is shot, and later she pays the penalty of her justified vengeance.

Added to this by killing the spy the Baron brings tragedy into the life of his sister, while earlier in the picture he ruins a pretty romance in an equally despicable manner.

All this action extremely powerful in itself, is intensified by some of the most expressive acting on the screen. Betty Nansen as the opera singer plays her role down to the last degree of dramatic skill. The scene in which her lover is being tortured and she is being goaded on to confession by the Baron is one of the most striking and powerful in the picture.

Dorothy Bernard goes most successfully through a trying scene with the Baron, he persuading her to submit to his plans that her lover may go free. The Baron's thankless role is carried in a polished manner by Arthur Hoops. Claire Whitney is the sister of the spy and makes the most of this sympathetic part. The rest of the cast, including the men who assume the roles of the artist and the spy do most capable work.

In such a good picture it is too bad to see the artist wearing a sport shirt with a cutaway coat and a high hat, especially as the action is in Italy. The sport shirt may be all right in a few places, but certainly not for correct afternoon wear. And perhaps the love affair of the artist and the singer culminates in an engagement too quickly, as the two decide to marry with little outward display of affection.

But when considered as a whole these two points mean little. "The Song of Hate" is immensely strong, and if an exhibitor is looking for a tragedy that has realism, acting, and a story with a liberal display of "punch" in every scene, then this latest of William Fox's offerings should amply fill the bill.

"THE EXPLORER"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE man who is willing to sacrifice his love for a woman to maintain his honor and integrity is always enshrouded with romance as well as being the recipient of great admiration. Such a character has been awarded the interpretation of Lou-Tellegen, in a picturization of William Somerset-Maugham's romantic novel "The Explorer." Lou-Tellegen is a fitting type for this romantic role, and even if at times he displays the slightest inclination to overdo his part, his clean cut figure, his manly appearance and the firm character of Alec McKenzie, the explorer, serve to make light of this incident.

As for the plot itself, it is full of suspense once it gets under way, somewhere along in the second reel. The situations in which the various characters become entangled are of the most precarious sort, and the resulting suspense and excitement can be measured by no small standard. William C. De Mille in the course of adapting the original work to the screen has deftly managed to get the full benefit of Mr. Somerset-Maugham's novel. In fact, Mr. De Mille has done admirably well with material not particularly adaptable for screen purposes.

The action carries the characters to the heart of African jungles, and the illusion of reality conveyed to the spectator by the exteriors used in the picture is entirely convincing. Everything is there from dense underbrush to gloriously decorated natives. Many will be glad to learn that at the end of the trip the apparel of the explorers looks as if it had actually been worn for several weeks.

McKenzie is an explorer in the employ of his majesty's service. On one of his trips he takes with him George Allerton, the brother of his fiancee. Allerton is what is popularly known as a cad and McKenzie's reasons for taking him on the trip is to instill into him some manliness. But Allerton gets the whole party into trouble. Resenting a black's interference with him in his affair with a native girl, he shoots him in the back.

The negroes demand that the murderer be turned over to them. McKenzie forces a confession from Allerton, who at last wakes up to his unmanly ways. He volunteers to stay in camp and cover the retreat of the exploring party. He does so successfully but is finally killed by the enraged natives.

ALEC PREPARES TO MEET THE ANGRY CHIEF

Arriving back in England McKenzie refuses to tell how Allerton died and consequently he suffers the scorn of his fiancee. But the doctor of the party tells the girl everything, including the fact that McKenzie attempted to hide her brother's dishonor, and then she realizes her mistake.

Tom Forman appears as the weak-willed Allerton and makes the most of his role. Dorothy Davenport is his sister and although having little to do does that little well. James Neil completes the cast of principals with a fine performance in the role of the doctor.

"The Explorer" played at the Strand in New York and although the producers seem to have been handicapped with a slow moving plot, the success of the production is by no means uncertain.

"A DISCIPLE OF NIETZSCHE"

(Thanhouser-Mutual—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE Spartan philosophy which some people say brought on the great war; the eternal struggle between the just and the criminal; the appeal of the weak to the strong—all sink into the hazy background before the four dimples of Lorraine Huling.

If the author intended this piece to carry a great moral lesson he should have issued a fraud order against the dimples, for they break the thread of the story into a series of dots that scurry for shelter like geese flying south in the fall.

It is intended to prove by actual experience that Nietzsche's theory "That the lifting up of the weak is an unprofitable and useless business," is false. One can easily see a thousand ways in which this is disproved, and one can also see four dimples. The daughter of the professor insists on assisting a factory girl, and her father, follower of the stern teaching, turns the working girl out. The daughter, a settlement worker, falls in love with the leader of a criminal band, and plans to marry him, despite her father, but the "weaker" girl saves her benefactor by setting a trap which exposes the true character of the gang leader.

There are two on each side—dimples, that is—but you do not see the inner two until the smile is turned on to the third speed ahead. There is always the feeling that two more may appear, but they never do; hence the sustained interest and dramatic suspense of the picture. It would be over-enthusiastic to refer to Miss Huling as an eminent actress, but she is more interesting than either the story or any other character in it. She is as valuable a screen asset as the Thanhouser people possess.

The work of Florence La Badie, as the factory girl, is good, but Marshall Welch, as the professor, is stultified and stiff. Harris Gordon, as the gangster, is strong, and a good conception of such a character, with which the screen is somewhat overburdened just now. Boyd Marshall, as the factory foreman, is pleasing and convincing in a juvenile role.

Note: A careless observer may see only two dimples, but there really are four.

"THE DUST OF EGYPT"

(Vitagraph Blue Ribbon—V-L-S-E—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THERE are three kinds of comedies abroad on the screen—good, bad, and slapstick. Good comedies are draped around amusing situations; bad comedies are filled with situations, intended to be amusing, which never get beyond the point of good intentions; and slapstick comedies are—well, physical violence lightly put into play. None of these ever measures up to comedy as it should be. Where they fall short of the mark, "The Dust of Egypt," supplying the missing element of success, scores brilliantly—and why? Simply because it contains the one essential of comedy in its true form: a genuinely humorous situation brought about naturally through the interplay of the characters themselves, and acted with real artistry.

AMENSET DECIDES TO SUMMON THE WISE MAN

This last quality—the acting of comedy as it ought to be acted—the Vitagraph people made perfectly sure of when they selected Edith Storey for the role of an Egyptian Princess who, through the potency of a drug administered in the long ago, awakens to the twentieth century scenes of London society. Miss Storey had never done anything finer than this interpretation of an ancient beauty in modern surroundings. In every scene in which she appears, she shows absolute mastery of subtle, refined, sure-fire comedy. Not once does she step outside the part. Always she suggests Cleopatra, but a Cleopatra of lighter hours, a Cleopatra whose brilliance is not marred by tragic happenings.

And this achievement has been realized by means of a story not at all new: Geoffrey Lascelles, a little the worse for liquor, arrives home at 3 o'clock in the morning, after a banquet at which he has announced his engagement to Violet Manning. Enter Simpson, a friend of his, who leaves an Egyptian mummy in Lascelles' apartment for the night. Lascelles falls asleep in a chair, and scenes that follow are enacted in a dream.

The mummy yields up its body in the form of a beautiful Egyptian Princess of three thousand years ago. Lascelles, after giving his unexpected guest a lodging for the night, takes her to the home of his fiancee. Her attempts at understanding modern customs furnish a variety of amusing situations. She governs the household with a high hand, always ready with her dagger for anyone who crosses her imperial will. When things are just beginning to look serious, because of the Princess's jealousy toward Violet, Lascelles takes her back to his apartment. When he is about to yield to her charms, he awakens to find it all a dream.

The cast is of uniform excellence. Antonio Moreno makes Geoffrey Lascelles pleasing throughout; Hughey Mack, as Billings the butler, furnishes comedy perfectly in keeping with the spirit of the story; Cissy Fitzgerald (Mrs. Manning) maintains her well-known reputation in character parts; Naomi Childers (Violet Manning) takes a thankless role well; Charles Brown (Simpson) is clever enough as a silly ass Englishman; Jay Dwiggins (Mr. Manning) furnishes some of the best humor of the picture, and the rest of the company is capable.

The sets are fully up to the best Blue Ribbon standard, supplying richness of scene as well as depth. George Baker directed the production, which is based on a story by Alan Campbell, the English author.

Only one adverse criticism can fairly be directed against the piece: the first reels break a little too slowly into the main theme, and waste a good deal of footage in introductory scenes that might well be abridged by half. But this is a fault that can be overcome readily, and probably will be before the picture is shown to a public that is sure to welcome it.

"THE HOUSE WITH NOBODY IN IT"

(Gaumont-Rialto Star Feature—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY, 2ND

THE unusual story of this drama is strong enough to be effective, even if its production were medicore. The directing, however, is so good that only one criticism suggests itself. A few more explanatory sub-titles would prevent even a temporary misunderstanding, such as a dissolve in the third act occasions. It represents a vision of a group of dancing angels, but might easily be taken for a Bacchanalian revel, or sportive wood-nymphs at play. The action, for the most part, is self-explanatory, so this objection is not serious. To obtain the effect of this vision, by the way, Richard Barrick, the director, employed some unusual triple exposure work.

BRANDON TELLS MURIEL OF HER FATHER'S INSANITY

Ivy Troutman has been given a role that calls for the utmost versatility. From the love scenes of a care-free society girl, to the wild delirium of a drug-crazed woman, she is called upon to portray a wide range of emotions. It is a tribute to her ability that she has been able to accomplish this with such effectiveness.

Muriel Allen is annoyed by the attentions of Brandon, who covets the fortune she will inherit at her wealthy father's death. On his death-bed her father tells the doctor that his wife died in an insane asylum. Brandon overhears this, and when Muriel later rejects him, saying that she is engaged to Bryce, an artist, he reveals her mother's insanity. Muriel breaks her engagement, because of her possible inheritance of the malady, and since her father's money cannot be found, goes to the city to work. She finds that the morphine tablets, which a doctor prescribed for insomnia, make her forget her misery, and she becomes addicted to them. She has a vision in which she sees her final fate if she continues the habit, and resolves never to use the drug again.

She goes back to her old home and is surprised to see Brandon, who is searching for her father's hidden money there. Bryce decides to paint the Allen home, for some time deserted, and calls his picture "The House with Nobody in It." While sketching the house a thunderstorm comes up, and taking refuge on the porch he hears a struggle and looking through the window he sees Brandon struggling with Muriel. He throws Brandon against the fireplace, where a bolt of lightning kills the man, and also discloses the hidden wealth of Muriel's father. On top of the box of money is a letter to the girl, informing her that she is a foundling and that the insane woman was not her mother. Since the taint is not in her blood she readily consents to marry Bryce.

Supporting Ivy Troutman is an excellent cast, comprised of James Levering, Bradley Barker, Frank Whitson and Charles U. Travis.

"THE SPENDER"

(Pathé Gold Rooster—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE elements which make a satisfactory picture are well combined in the fourth subject of the Gold Rooster series. Not only does the picture hold the interest during its occupancy of the screen, but the spectator goes away smiling to himself with the feeling that he has seen something, and is well repaid for his time.

In analyzing the causes, much credit must be given to both scenario writer and director. There are a number of small things, hardly to be noticed in themselves, but which in their ensemble please the eye, and take one along with the picture. Among these is the way the play plunges into action at the start, and the way the scenes join each other smoothly and logically, making unnecessary the use of so many descriptive titles.

"MY FRIENDS, I AM A DISINHERITED MAN!"

But the greatest charm is provided by George Probert, Film Actor Extraordinary and Debonair Gentleman Plenipotentiary. We have long known him on the other stage, yet as a screen actor he will even surprise his old admirers with his new work, which is almost flawless. He portrays the son of a wealthy man in France, whose recklessness causes his father to disinherit him. He smiles jovially, and followed by Gaston, his faithful valet, goes to bid farewell to his cabaret companions, and then is off to America to win an heiress.

This is a picture full of big scenes. Mobs of strikers rush on the factory, cavalry dash from camp to the scene, the crowds surround and set fire to an explosive house, and the factory disappears in flames. All of them are staged with careful attention to details, the one exception being the house used for explosives is by no means the same one when seen in the close-ups.

As Patrick McCabe, an uncouth workman who has "struck it rich," Sam Ryan is excellent. So are Alma Martin as his daughter, and Paul Panzer as the walking delegate, and almost as much can be said for James McCabe, as Gaston the valet. The play is by George B. Seitz, and was produced by Donald MacKenzie.

"THE MAN OF SHAME"

(Broadway Universal Feature—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WILTON LACKAYE, a familiar and well liked figure, both on the screen and on the stage, is here introduced in an excellent vehicle to Universal exhibitors. Mr. Lackaye's debut on this program is by way of a dual role contained in the French novel "Roger La Monte," by Jules Mary. The adaptor, M. B. Harvey, has well retained the Latin flavor of the story and besides has given Mr. Lackaye and his supporting cast plenty of moments in which to grip their audience by acting of the most expressive sort.

THE GAMBLER PLAYS AGAINST HIS BROTHER OFFICERS

The dual role which Mr. Lackaye so successfully carries calls for extremities of dramatic expression. In interpreting the part of Roger La Roque, his characterization is that of an honest, straightforward gentleman, but as Louversan he appears as a vicious villain whose only end, an end which he never accomplishes, is to ruin his innocent double.

A mere outline of the plot will give a definite idea of the interesting character of the production. La Roque, once infatuated by the charms of Julia De Norville, refuses to see her again when he learns that she is married to a man with whom he has become great friends. Peeved at this she half unwillingly takes into her confidence Louversan, a card cheat.

Louversan plots the downfall of La Roque by a clever and carefully planned scheme. He commits a murder, and throws the crime on La Roque, knowing that he will not attempt to defend himself because by so doing he will disclose the faithlessness of Julia De Norville. But all his plans are spoiled by Julia's husband discovering the true character of his wife. He is revealed as a murderer and subsequently dies in jail.

Mr. Lackaye's support is of a high quality. Rosemary Theby appears as Julia, Victor Lewis as her husband, while others are Harry Myers, Evelyn Dubois and Franklin Paul.

"THE REGENERATION"

(Fox—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AT the inception of the motion picture industry wild exaggerations and marked inconsistencies were so noticeable in the type of melodrama then produced that they soon went out of vogue. This latest production of William Fox's is as different from the old time melodrama as night is from day.

There are dozens of realistic touches in every reel comprising the feature. Life of the lower East Side is depicted with a weird mixture of realism and the choicest humor. There are any number of laughs in the picture, but through it all runs the underlying touch of pathos, so elusive to the picture director.

THE GIRL IN THE GANGSTERS' DEN

"The Regeneration" was written by Owen Kildare and produced by R. A. Walsh. It is a debatable question as to who should receive credit for the general excellence of the picture. Its detail perhaps was suggested by the author, but its realism is the result of Mr. Walsh's work.

Like any melodrama, "The Regeneration" reserves the right to jump from the comic to the tragic whenever it desires. Tragedy marks the termination of this picture. The woman who so well succeeded in regenerating the hardened gangster is mortally wounded by a bullet from the gun of her friend's enemy, and she dies, but her work in reforming Owen is complete.

All the good things in the picture cannot be enumerated here, but they will attract attention from even the most hardened picture-goer. The unbounded realism of the fire on the ship, the marked resemblance of the boy, the youth, and Rockliffe Fellows, who interprets the character of Owen at various stages of the picture, the striking atmosphere of the low dives inhabited by the gangs and the excellent types, besides many incidental touches, unite in causing the picture to present such a uniformly fine appearance.

And all this puts to nought the fact that the ship is burned for no definite reason whatsoever. It was a series of wonderful scenes, staged with the utmost realism, but it would have taken better effect if a cause had been given. However, that may pass in such an acceptable picture, because for melodrama "The Regeneration" is excellent.

Anna Q. Nilsson plays the leading feminine role, while Mr. Fellows is Owen. Both register decided successes in their parts. And, in passing, R. A. Walsh has made his mark as a director.

"THE LITTLE MADEMOISELLE"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS romance by Mark Swan is extremely light. The plot unfolds itself slowly, for it stops every now and then to afford Vivian Martin an opportunity to display her caprice and winsome charm, which she does to an extent that is truly delightful. So, blessed with dainty Miss Martin, "The Little Mademoiselle" is a most pleasant light offering. In respect to exhibiting the various fetching moods of the star it compares favorably with "The Wishing Ring," which every World Film exhibitor is bound to remember.

Oscar Eagle has made the most of the material furnished him by the author. The picture has been laid in settings that correspond well with the story's light fantastic quality.

Appearing opposite Miss Martin is Arthur Ashley, a proficient foil for the irresistible ways of the Little Mademoiselle. Mario Majeroni is well cast as Henry Breval, the uncle of Lili (Miss Martin), E. M. Kimball appears as Pemberton, while Lila Chester has a captivating minor role.

The story: Jim Pemberton refuses to study, all his thoughts being concentrated on automobiles. He is disowned by his father and is unable to secure steady employment. One day he meets Lili, the daughter of a French automobile agent who is ignorant of the English language.

Then follow several adventures that the twain experience. Finally they arrive at a race track, where Jim takes the place of an incapacitated driver and wins an automobile race for Lili's uncle, all unknown to the Frenchman, who is frantic over the loss of his niece. Jim, after refuting the attempts of two melodramatic villains to make away with Lili, restores her to Breval, her uncle. Breval demands that she marry his son, but the son, fearing this, has already married and so there is nothing to do but permit Lili's marriage with Jim.

"THE CIRCULAR PATH

(Essanay—Three Acts)

REVIEWED BY T. S. MEAD

THIS photodrama written by H. S. Sheldon offers numerous opportunities for bringing out the abilities along the lines of emotional acting possessed by the two principals. Henry B. Walthall impersonates the character of Darwin Kirby, who first appears as a devout minister, then as a business man untrained in the ways of the world and finally as a derelict of the slums, in a way which displays his genius for interpreting human emotions of widely varying character. Warda Holmes exhibits strong acting in the role of Evelyn Ross, a pleasure loving girl for whom life seems to hold a large share of tragedy. The cast also includes Edmund F. Cobb as Henry Lorrimer, a wealthy man of the world and Camille D'Arcy as Evelyn's mother.

Rev. Darwin Kirby falls deeply in love with Evelyn Ross, who in order to support her invalid mother, has become the mistress of her employer. Evelyn returns Kirby's love, but refuses to marry him unless he gives up the pulpit. Finally Kirby's love for Evelyn conquers his devotion to his work and they are married. Unsuccessful as a business man he is unable to provide the luxuries to which his wife has been accustomed. She becomes discontented with her monotonous existence as the wife of a poor man and is not able to resist the temptation with which Henry Lorrimer, her former employer, besets her path. Returning from a long western trip, Kirby finds that she has gone back to Lorrimer. In a fit of jealous rage he shoots the man, fatally, he thinks, and hides in the slums where he soon drops to the lowest depths of degradation. One day he hears that Lorrimer has recovered from the wound. Summoning all his will power he determines to make a man of himself.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR THE BUSY EXHIBITOR

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

ASSOCIATED SERVICE

"Her Devoted Son." (Liberty. Two reels. Week of Sept. 20.)—The story of a son's devotion to his mother, and incidentally to his sweetheart, is told effectively in this drama, whose locale is Scotland and Southern California. Emory Johnson gives the role of the son, who goes to America in order to earn money with which to pay off the mortgage on the old farm, a vividness that will find response in the hearts of lovers of sentiment. The photography is well done.

"Borrowing Hogan." (Santa Barbara. Two reels. Week of Sept. 20.)—Hogan, manager of a stranded theatrical company, uses his blarneying tongue to avoid the necessity of paying his board bill. The leading lady finds an "angel" and the company is about to depart for the next cafe entertainer. His theatrical associates retown, but Hogan is found to be in pawn because the landlady discovered him in a love scene with sort to a clever scheme to effect Hogan's release. This comedy, though it borders at times on the vulgar, is saved from that fate by the highly ludicrous situations. Ann Kromann and Charles James play the leads.

"A Cattle Queen's Romance." (Ramona. Two reels. Week of Sept. 20.)—The romance of the cowboy who wins the girl is apparently never old, and in this case the cowboy's rival is a dishonest Englishman, who goes to America with the intention of marrying the girl. Arriving at her ranch, he attempts to abduct her, after he has accused the cowboy of theft. The cowboy rescues her, the Englishman is sent to town under guard, and a pretty love scene shows who will be henceforth boss of the ranch. Art Acord and Edith Sterling give pleasing interpretations of the main roles, and the rest of the cast is well chosen.

"A Watery Romance." (Federal. One reel. Week of Sept. 20.)—A large contingent of picture fans will not be denied their slapstick comedies, and "A Watery Romance" will satisfy this longing of theirs perfectly. The plot, an ancient one, is chiefly concerned with the capers of Al Ray and Will Rex (Mr. Smaltz and Mr. Fish), rivals. And one of the principal characters in the piece is a boat, in which Smaltz bores a hole, thus spilling his rival and the girl into the lake, whence they are rescued by the water police. Unfortunately for Smaltz and Fish, the girl falls in love with the Police Chief and elopes with him.

"The Acusing Finger." (Empire. Two reels. Week of Sept. 20.)—A young bank employee, jealous of his rival for the affection of the President's daughter, locks the favored suitor in the bank vault. The accusing finger of the time clock is forever pointing at the hour—a quarter to nine. When the conscience of the jealous one awakens, he leaves the reception at his employer's home, dashes back to the bank, and finds a cracksman about to blow the safe. He overcomes the robber, but the alarm has been turned in, and the arrival of the banker, his daughter and the police make the opening of the vault imperative. The dying clerk points the accusing finger at his rival, who is forthwith convicted of the murder and sentenced to death. As the executioner approaches him, he awakens startled to find that he is still standing at the vault door, with the crime only a dream. The near-murderer becomes best man at his rival's wedding. This melodrama is equipped with all the trimmings of the thriller, and if the almost endless repetition of scenes showing the victim struggling in the vault were trimmed somewhat, it would serve the purpose of its producers very well.

"When Kisses Are Sweet." (Atlas. One reel. Week of Sept. 20.)—A farce whose theme has to do with two husbands who make love (harmlessly) to each other's wives. Wife No. 1, first inoculated with jealousy, mistakes flour on her husband's coat for face powder, and several amusing complications ensue. A maid and her policeman lover add to the gayety of the affair. The cast makes the most of its rather limited opportunities.

"A Kentucky Girl." (Navajo. Two reels. Week of Sept. 20.)—Jean, a mountain girl, falls in love with a young novelist sojourning in the vicinity, whereupon Jean's rural lover, enraged, seeks to kill his rival. The novelist's divorced wife arrives on the scene and gives the impression that the novelist is still her husband. The two men meet on the edge of a cliff, a hand-to-hand fight ensues, and the novelist hurls the mountain boy over the cliff. The novelist is then free to persuade Jean that he has not deceived her with regard to his divorce. Lucille Young gives the character of Jean a pleasing air of reality, William Parsons avoids several pitfalls that always yawn for the hero of melodrama, and Charles K. French is a convincing Father La Rouche, the kindly priest who smooths the difficulties of the lovers. Coincidence is stretched to the breaking-point several times in the picture, but why cavil at streched coincidence since it is the life-blood of melodrama? And melodrama never fails to have its audience.

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"Winning the Widow." (Biograph. Thurs., Sept. 30.)—This picture has not been shown for review. The story follows: In this comedy-drama, a bachelor and a dashing young widow meet at a summer boarding house. She spurns his attentions, and in order to win her by strategy, he gives an impecunious shoe-clerk five hundred dollars to kidnap her child. After a strenuous week of caring for the baby, he is on the point of taking the child back and claiming the widow's hand, when she comes to him—accompanied by the shoe-clerk—whom she introduces as her husband. She thanks him sweetly for having taken care of her baby during the honeymoon, and also for the five hundred dollars which paid their expenses.

Gretchen Hartman, Alan Hale, and Adila Comer play the leads. Walter Coyle is the director.

"Brutality." (Biograph. Fri., Oct. 1.)—In this re-issue, directed by D. W. Griffith, and played by Mae Marsh, Walter Miller, Lionel Barrymore, and Elmer Booth, the terrible effects of a man's temper are shown. After being married for a short time, the husband's brutal nature asserts itself. Just as the wife is about to leave him, unable to longer endure his unsufferable treatment, they go to the theatre. There they see an impersonation of Bill Sykes in Dickens' "Oliver Twist." The tragedy makes a deep impression on the husband's mind, and aghast at the thought that some day he, too, may kill he woman he loves, by strict self-repression, he curbs his violent temper.

"Her Renunciation." (Biograph. Sat., Oct. 2.)—This picture has not been shown for review. The story follows: Miriam Drayton, an artist, her health undermined by overwork, goes to a fishing village for the sea air. There she boards with an aged couple, who pose for her to earn money for an operation on their crippled granddaughter, Lucy. Miriam's lover comes to visit her and is entranced by Lucy's ethereal beauty. Miriam, realizing that her happiness is shattered, leaves them, and back in her studio, completes her painting, which later wins the grand prize. Revisiting Lucy, whose operation has turned out successfully, she saves the girl from drowning at the cost of her own life—a supreme sacrifice of love.

The principals in this piece are Claire McDowell, Hector V. Sarno, Isabel Rea, and Laura La Varnie. The production was in the hands of George Morgan.

"The Seymour House Party." (Biograph. Mon., Sept. 27.)—This picture has not been shown for review. The story follows: Seymour (W. J. Butler), the host of a house party, presents his wife (Clairette Claire) with a costly necklace. The maid (Ilean Hume) steals the gift and places the empty jewel case among the belongings of a guest, Mrs. Stanton (Augusta Anderson), where it is later found by her husband (Charles Perley). At the same time he finds a note from one of the guests to his wife, asking her to pay her bridge losses. He becomes convinced that his wife has stolen the necklace. Mrs. Stanton overhears the maid arranging with her confederate to dispose of the necklace, and manages to get ahead of her to the rendezvous. The thieves capture her and lock her in a room, where she finds the hiding place of the jewel. She drops a note from the window, and struggles with her captors until the police arrive and rescue her. The producer is George Morgan.

"His Wife's Story." (Biograph. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 28.)—This picture has not been shown for review. The story follows. This tale of love and politics has for its basis the blackmailing operations of Fenmore, a secretary in the employ of Courtnay, who is a candidate for mayor. The clerk discovers that Courtnay's wife, a former cabaret singer, had been married to Bryson, chairman of the campaign committee. The clerk also ascertains that Bryson already had a wife and child when the elopement took place. After a series of dramatic episodes, Bryson, furious at Fenmore's disclosures, attacks him and is killed in the struggle. The blackmailer later pays the penalty of his crime. Courtnay is successful at the polls, and finding out the truth in regard to his wife's past, everything is happily settled.

G. Raymond Nye plays the part of Courtnay; Vera Sisson is the wife, Jose Ruben is the clerk, and Bryson's role is played by Charles H. Mailes. The directing is done by J. F. MacDonald.

"A Family Affair." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., Oct. 2.)—Not shown for review. The story in brief follows: Mrs. Glazier, suspecting groundlessly that her husband has been untrue to her, obtains a separation. The daughter is awarded to the mother, and the son to the father, and the boy, growing up without a mother's influence, becomes wayward.

Twelve years after, Glazier decides to send his son away, and writes his wife to meet the youth in the office of a mutual friend. By chance the parents also meet there, and a reconciliation is effected when matters are explained. The cast consists of Edna Mayo, Bryant Washburn, John F. Cossar, Florence Oberle and Lewis Edgard.

"Dreamy Dud." (Essanay. Split reel, with scenic. Wed., Sept. 29.)—Animated cartoon in which a cowboy dreams of a mermaid and her charming ways. Wallace A. Carlson is the artist.

"An Unexpected Romance." (Essanay. Fri., Oct. 1.)—Not shown for review. The story follows: In spite of the landowner's orders, his agent threatens to evict a tenant and his daughter, if the girl does not marry him. The landowner goes to the country for his health, and arrives on the scene just in time to prevent the eviction, and later marries the daughter. G. M. Anderson, supported by Marguerite Clayton, Lee Willard and Harry Todd, plays the lead.

"Off for a Boat Ride." Essanay. Thurs., Sept. 30.)—Not shown for review. The story follows: Father gets mixed up with a pretty girl on the ride, and in the ensuing row several members of the family are kicked into the water. The son comes up in a den of thieves, and they force him to rob his own house. Pandemonium reigns for a while when he is discovered. James T. Kelly, Ann Ivers, Margie Reiger, Jack Pollard and Bud Jamison form the cast.

"The Guilt." (Kalem. Three reels. Mon., Sept. 27.)—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

"Foiled!" (Kalem. Tues., Sept. 28.)—"Bud" Duncan has a strenuous time in this comedy, trying to wed the girl. Pitted against him are cutthroats, yeggs, gunmen, and scoundrels of every description. Bud succeeds in putting them all to rout, until Reckless Reginald, the arch-fiend, employs an East Indian yogi, who by hypnotism and black art, still further complicates the hero's plans. The remainder of the cast is made up of Ethel Teare, H. Griffith, Dave Morris, and Charles Simpson. Rube Miller is the producer.

"The Man on Watch." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 29.)—This episode in the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel" series has to do with the plot of a gang of crooks to steal a magnificent silver service that is on exhibition at the hotel. By disguising one of the band as a waiter, the coup is successful. Through the joint efforts of the hotel detective and the wife of the leader of the gang, the thieves are finally catpured and the silver restored. The final round-up is not effected until many exciting incidents have taken place. The players are: True Boardman, Marin Sais, W. H. West, Ollie Kirkby, and Thomas Lingham.

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

"The Curious Case of Meredith Stanhope." (Kalem. Two reels. Fri., Oct. 1.)—Reviewed at length in the issue of Sept. 18.

"The Runaway Box-car." (Kalem. Sat., Oct. 2.)—Helen Holmes, in this installment of the Hazards of Helen series, captures two train-robbers. The fleeing pair of desperadoes flee down a long grade in an empty box-car, while the girl makes an exciting pursuit in a locomotive. At last, by getting ahead of the car on a siding, she overtakes the thugs. The robbers then atack her, but she resists them until help arrives.

"The Last Rebel." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 23.)—This is a drama with the Civil War as a setting, but possessing a more interesting plot than most pictures of a similar character. At the end of the war Betty Carew gets word that her father and Clay, her sweetheart, have been killed. The overseer of her plantation announces that he holds a mortgage on the place and will foreclose if she does not marry him. Howard Goodrich, a wounded lieutenant in the Northern army, though physically unable to cope with the fellow, forces him to leave the girl. Goodrich offers his fortune to Betty, but she refuses to accept aid unless he marries her. Just as they are coming out of the church, after the ceremony, Clay, her former lover, sees them. He has not been killed, as reported, and has not surrendered, although peace has been declared.

That night Clay sees Betty clandestinely, and their old love flares up again. Clay is engaged in arousing a new outbreak among the Confederate soldiers, but the disgruntled overseer informs the Northern soldiers, and they attack the stronghold of the mutineers. Realizing that Betty loves Clay, Goodrich goes to the fort and changes uniforms with the rebel leader. Clay thus escapes, and Goodrich, after shooting the overseer, is killed.

Ormi Hawley plays the part of Betty, Earle Metcalfe is Goodrich, Kempton Greene is Clay, and the overseer is Herbert Fortier.

"A Silent Accuser." (Lubin. Mon., Sept. 20.)—There is a considerable amount of power in this picture, in spite of the fact that a few of the scenes are overdrawn. A large sum of money is stolen from a surgeon, and suspicion is directed toward his young assistant, who is engaged to the doctor's daughter. The assistant maintains that he was choked senseless by someone in the dark, and that the money was taken by his assailant. The surgeon refuses to believe the young man guilty, and by means of auto-suggestion and hypnotism, contrives to make a servant, the real thief, confess.

"The Careless Anarchist." Lubin. Split reel, with "That Brute" and "Monty and the Missionary." Tues., Sept. 21.)—In which the long-haired nihilist gets blown up thrice by untimely explosions, finally being picked up in a basket in very small pieces.

"That Brute." (Lubin. Split reel, with "The Careless Anarchist" and "Monty and the Missionary." Tues., Sept. 21.)—A rather pointless mother-in-law comedy.

"Monty and the Missionary." (Lubin. Split reel, with "The Careless Anarchist" and "That Brute." Tues., Sept. 21.)—An animated cartoon of ordinary interest.

"A Desert Honeymoon." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 22.)—Will be reviewed at length in the issue of October 9.

"The Level." (Lubin. Fri., Sept. 24.)—This not unusual story is well handled. The interpolated allegory may seem superfluous at first glance, but it is really an integral part of the plot. Philip Craxton, a settlement worker, proposes to Dorothy, a social leader and heiress, but is rejected on the ground that he is not her equal socially. On the other hand, she welcomes the attentions of Dart, who, though an aristocrat, is a roué. A woman comes to Craxton's mission, carrying a child, of which Dart is the father. Philip persuades Dart to marry the mother of his child.

Dorothy sees a vision, in which she, as a spirit, on the pinnacle of success, looks down at struggling mortals, and pitying, comes down from her high estate to help them. Realizing that this vision is a symbol of the attitude she should take in life, she marries Craxton, and helps him in his work. The cast includes Melvin Mayo, Dorothy Barrett, Edythe Sterling and Robert Gray.

"Captain Kidd and Ditto." (Lubin. Sat., Sept. 25.)—The plot of this comedy is original, and more pregnant with smiles and chuckles than guffaws. Two harmless imbeciles, through over-indulgence in piratical novels, each get the idea that he is Captain Kidd. When they meet they are hostile rivals for the name fo the great buccaneer, until they combine forces and take possession of a sight-seeing launch. Their pirating experience is exciting, but short-lived, for some cruel-hearted cops take them into custody. Billie Reeves and Charles Griffith play the title roles.

"The Runt." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 27.)—This picture was not shown for review. The story follows: Tom Reynolds is defrauding the government, and Wilson, of the Internal Revenue Service, sends word to Tom, through the medium of the Runt, to escape before he is arrested. The Runt, who is the down-trodden scullion of the fishing village, secretly loves Tom. Years pass, and Wilson is engaged to be married to Edith, Tom's former love. One day Tom returns. Stark warns Wilson that if he does not arrest Tom, he (Stark) will. Later Stark attempts to kill Tom from ambush, but the Runt springs into the path of the bullet and sacrifices her life for the man she loves. Stark then fires again, this time killing Tom.

"Her Slight Mistake." (Selig. One reel. Tues., Sept. 28.)—This picture was not shown for review. The story follows: Bill, a cow-puncher, answers an ad. in a matrimonial journal, but after receiving a picture of the girl, decides to call it off. A friend of Bill's wires back that Bill has gone crazy, but receives a reply to the effect that Muriel is on her way to nurse her crazy husband. Bill, in the attire of a wild man, flees to the hills. When Muriel arrives, with $50,000 in her grip, she mistakes a naturalist professor for Bill, and marries him. Bill is overjoyed until he learns of the $50,000.

"The Agony of Fear." (Selig. Three reels. Thurs., Sept. 30.)—Will probably be reviewed in a later issue.

"TABLE OF CONTENTS WILL HEREAFTER BE FOUND OPPOSITE INSIDE BACK COVER"

"Mutiny in the Jungle." (Selig. One reel. Sat., Oct. 2.)—This picture was not shown for review. The story follows: Col. Harte, commander of a fortress in India, terrified by the sudden information that the Hindus are planning a revolt, learns that the plans of the fortress are missing. Captain Powers, engaged to Harte's daughter, is suspected and condemned to death. Ralph, the Colonel's son, is really the guilty one. He frees the Captain, who escapes. Ralph then ends his life. The Captain is captured by a gang of mutineers, and again condemned to death, but wins his liberty by saving the son of Din Zedra from a tiger. In a fight with the tiger's mate he is only saved from death by stumbling upon Ralph's corpse, and finding the dead man's revolver.

"The Butterfly's Lesson." (Vitagraph. Mon., Sept. 27.)—The thread of this story is pretty tenuous to be stretched to a thousand feet, but it is handled well. Leila, the butterfly, flirts indiscriminately, and among her victims are Count Malais and Drayton. The Count takes her in his motor boat to a secluded island, and there threatens to compromise her if she does not promise to marry him. Drayton, who is out canoeing, hears her screams and rescues her. As they are going home, Leila resolves to be a butterfly no longer, but decides to marry Drayton. Carolyn Birch and Leo Delaney are the principals. Others are Louise Beaudet and Harry Northup. William Humphrey is the director.

"Through Troubled Waters." (Vitagraph. Three reels. Tues., Sept. 28.)—Notwithstanding occasional instances of poor motivation, this is a fairly interesting picture. The hero, after a year's supposed exposure to a tropical sun, in a state of approximate nudity, still has a dead-white skin—but directors are not infallible.

Gordon White, an untutored rural poet, saves the life of Viola Lorraine, the actress, while she is spending the summer in a nearby hotel. She takes an interest in him and, inspired by her encouragement, he writes a play in which she scores a tremendous success. They are married, but owing to jealousy are estranged. By a coincidence they both board the same steamer to go abroad, and when the boat is wrecked are the only survivors to reach a desert island. There the woman continually refuses his help, until the baby comes.

When a passing ship is sighted, they are loath to leave their happy island existence, but when they get back to civilization they are still happy for a time. The woman, however, decides to return to the stage, but just as she is about to sign a contract, she thinks of her husband's tenderness toward her on the island. She tears up the contract and returns to her husband and child.

The cast is composed of Alfred Vosburgh, Myrtle Gonzalez, Jack Mower, Anne Schaefer and Claire Toner. Produced by Ulysses Davis.

"Rags and the Girl." (Vitagraph. Wed., Sept. 29.)—The good work of Maurice Costello and Adele Garde greatly add to the effectiveness of this picture. Tom Raine, a wealthy young broker, is attacked in a lonely spot by a tramp, who strips the senseless man of his clothes. Dressed in the rags of the hobo, he reaches a hut in time to save a young girl from a beating in the hands of her cruel step-parents.

In spite of his rags the girl loves him, and at the risk of another thrashing, gives him food. Tom takes the girl home to his mother, and subsequently marries her. Beside Maurice Costello and Adele Garde, there are: Mary Maurice, Ethel Corcoran and Florence Natol. The story was written by James Oliver Curwood and produced by Van Dyke Brooke.

"The Plague Spot." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Sept. 29.)—There is much that is highly improbable in the plot of this picture, but its dramatic qualities grip the attention. Old Eben Greggs, a wealthy miser, has a trusted physician in Dr. John Farley, who has discovered a cure for the Bubonic plague. A crook kidnaps the doctor's daughter, and demands as the ransom, his aid in robbing the old man.

The doctor gives the miser a sleeping potion, and the thief rifles the safe. The doctor carelessly drops the point of his fountain pen on the crook's hand, and when his child is returned, tells the thief that he is inoculated with the Bubonic plague. The man offers to return the money if the doctor will cure him.

After the booty is returned, Farley explains that the bacilli have already been rendered harmless by the antitoxin that he administered at the same time.

The cast consists of Donald Hall, Harry Northup, Richard Clarke, Billy Billings and Mildred Platz. Theodore Marston produced the script, which was written by R. Norman Grisewood.

"The Fox-Trot Finesse." (Vitagraph. Fri., Oct. 1.)—Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew take the parts of a fox-trot devotee and her tired husband. Every spare moment of the day the poor man must dance, until he loathes the step. To escape the constant necessity for Terpsichorean effort, he pretends to have a broken bone in his foot.

This little ruse succeeds, until his spouse discovers the deceit. She threatens to invite her mother to come and nurse the afflicted invalid, and no more is said about the injured foot.

"The Ploughshare." (Edison. Four reels. Fri., Oct. 1.)—Reviewed in the issue of Sept. 25.

"The Butler." (Edison. Sat., Oct. 2.)—The young man, living on the allowance granted by his uncle, receives word from the uncle, whom he has never seen, that he is going on a year's voyage, and asking him to take care of his faithful old butler. The butler arrives, and is installed in the young man's home. Through gambling, the young man gets into desperate straits, breaks with his fiancee, and is on the verge of crime, when the butler interferes, saves him from suicide, and then reveals himself as the uncle. Realizing that the young man has much of good in him, he rehabilitates him and brings about a reconciliation with the girl.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Pool Sharks." (Gaumont. Sun., Sept. 19.)—W. C. Fields, famous juggler and comedian of the "Follies," is featured in this slapstick. Admirers of Fields will find his screen work neither as subtle nor as laughable as his stage performance. There is plenty of good fun in the picture, however, and much of the "business" is new. The action centers around a pool contest between two rivals, the winner of which is to marry the disputed girl. Some pool playing develops such as De Oro never saw. Mr. Fields has very good support.

"Keeping Up With the Joneses." (Gaumont. Split reel, with "See America First." Tues., Sept. 21.)—Animated cartoon, in which "Ma" buys a moving-picture outfit with amusing results.

"See America First." (Gaumont. Split reel, with "Keeping Up With the Joneses." Tues., Sept. 21.)—A scenic, showing Nashville and vicinity.

"Con the Car Conductor." (Falstaff. Thurs., Sept. 23.)—As an aged car conductor, Riley Chamberlain has created a delightful character. A young fop, son of a stockholder in the road, complains of him, and he is technically "fired." Unwilling to lose him, however, the superintendent tells him to disguise himself and stay at work. In his disguise he does a good turn for the same fop, who in return gets his father to urge a raise in wages. Burnett Parker and George Barnes are also in the cast.

"Busy Izzie." (Gaumont. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 24.)—George Sidney promises to repeat the success achieved by his long appearance in the spoken version of this comedy. All the good "business" has been retained, and there is plenty of action.

"A Fool's Heart." (Eclair. Two reels. Fri., Oct. 1.)—This has a good story, but it is so poorly told as to be incoherent. Keough, miner and stock gambler, borrows $5,000 from his partner, Van Atta, signing an I. O. U. Reverses continue, and he finally kills and robs a wealthy ranch owner. At the same time a thief has killed Van Atta, and attempts to throw the blame on Keough through the I. O. U. Keough takes refuge for the night in Van Atta's cabin, ignorant of the murder, and when arrested in the morning, the knowledge of his own guilt in the other murder weighs so heavily upon him that he can make no defense, and drops dead over his partner's body. In the cast are Norbert Myles, Edna Payne, Frank Hall, Fred Hearne, Marvelle Spencer, Hal Wilson and Henry Aldrich.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC.

"Pathe Weekly," No. 74. (Pathe.)—Nearly a million children crowd into the New York schools at their opening; the S. S. Sant' Anna, which recently caught fire at sea, leaves New York with 1,700 Italian reservists; envoys of the Allies reach New York to negotiate a loan with American financiers; scenes at the military tournament at Piping Rock; hydroplanes compete for $22,000 trophy at Chicago; Pathe's Paris Fashions in natural colors; women at national golf championship matches at Lake Forest, Ill.; scientists visit La Brea tar beds where fossil remains have been discovered, near Los Angeles.

"The Spender." (Pathe Gold Rooster. Five reels.)—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

"Considerable Milk." (Starlight.) — In this comedy Heinie and Louie plunge into a sudden romance, and wake up in a sea of milk. While sunning themselves on a lawn, they receive a note, offering them possession of a business if they agree to wed two sisters, one beautiful and the other ugly, but both heavily veiled so that the swains must trust to their luck. Of course Heinie's luck is poor, and after the wedding he soon arouses the jealousy of Louie by flirting with his own sister-in-law. The business they come into is a dairy, and after Heinie, in despair, has drank acid, he swallows most of the dairy as an antidote. What he doesn't drink, Louie bathes him in.

"Exploring Ephraim's Exploit." (Pathe.)—This is an exciting Bray cartoon. Eph, an Ethiopian aviator, falls from the clouds, and lands on a pile in the middle of a lake, where he immediately begins fishing, and goes to sleep. Several forms of reptile and insect life crawl over him, but he does not awake until a snake crawls down his neck. Then his startled jumps land him in the jaws of a crocodile.

"The Lost Secret." (Balboa. Two reels.)—A thrilling end awaits the villain in this exciting melodrama. In order to escape foreign spies, Gerard, a chemist, experiments with his new explosive in a lonely shack on the beach. Gorloff, the spy, traces him, and in the guise of a shipwrecked sailor, appeals to and wins the sympathies of Gladys, the chemist's daughter. When the explosive is ready, Gorloff prevails upon the girl to give him the formula for safe keeping, but she sees him spying on her father and, suspecting him, refuses to deliver it. He attacks the girl and gets some of the cartridges containing the explosive. Gerard overtakes him as he is escaping, and he thrusts the small cartridges into his mouth. There is a short struggle, and Gorloff slips over a cliff, striking his chin on a rock. He is torn to pieces by the resulting explosion.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

Animated Weekly. No. 185. (Wed., Sept. 22.)—The Mardi Gras at Coney Island, N. Y., is quite a spectacle; another flooded city (this time it is Newport, Ark.); the dedication of the new Motordrome at Sheepshead Bay, N. Y., with a race in progress; pictures of the French envoys who have come here to open negotiations for the billion dollar loan; poses of Count Von Bernstorff and Secretary Lansing; and Hy Mayer's cartoons are supplemented by a number of other recent occurrences of interest.

"The Broken Coin." (Universal special feature. Fourteenth episode. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 27.)—This number is called "On the Battlefield," and nothing except the striking battle and siege scenes are shown. A great many of these scenes were filmed in the night time. Continual flashes caused by shells and cannon silhouette the figures of the soldiers, creating a most realistic effect. King Michael is a heavy loser after two days' fighting, and when last seen he and his men have taken refuge in the palace, which is suffering largely from the enemy's bombardment. The termination of the chapter leaves the fate of King Michael and his oppressed followers undecided. This instalment is exciting to the last, but for all that, one notices that a supposedly stable wall sways to and fro now and then while a mighty siege gun refuses to "kick."

"Judge Not," or "The Woman of Mona Diggings." (Broadway Universal feature. Five reels. Mon., Sept. 27.)—Reviewed at length in issue of Sept. 25.

"Snatched from the Altar." (Nestor. Mon., Sept. 27.)—This Christie number has both good comedy and quite some suspense, two assets combined that make the reel most enjoyable. Eddie gets drunk the night before his wedding and when he awakes in the morning he discovers an old maid claiming him as her husband. Eddie is horrified and fails to appear at the church, but later it turns out that the woman is really a man, and that the whole affair is a joke. Eddie Lyons and Elsie Gleason are featured.

"Her Three Mothers." (Laemmle. Three reels. Sun., Oct. 3.)—Will probably be reviewed in next week's issue.

"A Mortgage on His Daughter." (L-Ko. Two reels. Sun., Oct. 3.)—The funny L-Ko performer, Hank Mann, appears here as a deep-dyed villain. He holds a mortgage on a pretty girl (Peggy Pearce) and determines to marry her. But he is unsuccessful, as the girl refuses him, so he decides to take poison. Her father also sips a little and thereafter the fun is fast and furious, a chase is introduced and some originality goes along with it. All in all, this is a very funny feature and as a slapstick it ranks as high as low comedies can.

"Her Prey." (Gold Seal. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 28.)—This intense drama deals with an adventuress' attempt to steal a black pearl from a diver. Love, however, intrudes and interrupts her carefully-laid plans. The two reels contain some unusually pretty and appropriate scenes, and the picture has been produced in a consistently good fashion by William Worthington. The story is full of action and the scenes have been so arranged as to create the highest suspense possible. Herbert Rawlinson is the diver, Luella Maxam his sweetheart and Louise Hamilton the adventuress.

"Billy's College Job." (Imp. Tues., Sept. 28.)—A fairly comic reel in which the lover, to be near his sweetheart, disguises as matron and gets a position at the school which she attends. Oscar Nye and Edith Roberts are the leads. Otto Hoffman as Lord Helpus, the rejected suitor, gets in several comedy scenes.

"An All Around Mistake." (Imp. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 29.)—A highly enjoyable comedy, very well presented, featuring King Baggot. King appears as John Goody, who is very much of a henpecked husband. But one night while his wife is away he tears loose and the complicated situations in which he discovers himself later on are exceedingly humorous. Everything considered, the picture will certainly satisfy, as its story and its star are both popular. Supporting are Bessie Toner, William Sadler and Ned Reardon.

"Married on Credit." (L-Ko. Wed., Sept. 29.)—All this comedy results from a minister demanding C. O. D. in the midst of the marriage ceremony. Billie has no cash and is obliged to step out and look for some. In the meantime another suitor arrives, but he encounters the same difficulty, and in the end neither one gets the girl. This is a very funny slapstick with Billie Ritchie and Louise Orth.

"The Wolf of Debt." (Imp. Four reels. Fri., Oct. 1.)—Will be reviewed at length in the issue of Oct. 9.

"The Sheriff of Red Rock Gulch." (Big U. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 30.)—A gambler is forced to flee the town and his baby boy is brought up in care of the sheriff. Years later the gambler returns and indulges in a game of cards with his unknown son. He wins all his money and then his gold mine. Afterwards the sheriff goes to the gambler to demand the money back, but the men are obliged to fight, and the gambler is mortally wounded. He dies telling the sheriff never to let the boy know the identity of his father. This is an excellent story and makes a very good picture. Murdock Mac Quarrie, Arthur Moon and Edna Payne are the principals.

"The Ore Mystery." (Powers. Thurs., Sept. 30.)—This is one of the Lady Baffles and Detective Duck series, and as such is a most laughable burlesque. As usual, Duck refutes all the villainous plans of the followers of Lady Baffles. The usual cast appears rendering the accustomed appropriate burlesque performances that they have given in the other pictures of the series.

"The Ghost Wagon." (Bison. Three reels. Sat., Oct. 2.)—This was made by Joe Franz, the one-time Frontier and Premier director, who is now at Universal City. Edythe Sterling is the heroine, Sherman Bainbridge the hero, and Rex De Roselli one of the heavies. The picture's strong assets are its new and pretty scenes, its clear photography and some thrilling battle scenes between half-breeds and whites. The attempt of three half-breeds to rob an orphaned girl of her gold mine is frustrated by a mine promoter, who finally wins her love. It's one of the old-time Western pictures, but should go over, nevertheless.

"An Innocent Villain." (Joker. Sat., Oct. 2.)—This comedy was written and produced by Harry Wulze with a cast including Bob Vernon and Edna Payne. Hubby is accused of being a crook and lands in jail. When free he comes home and finds his house occupied by a number of girls. Mother-in-law and wife arrive together, and so on. It's a fair picture that should be well received.

Statement of the Ownership, Management, Circulation, etc., required by the Act of August 24, 1912, of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, published weekly at New York, N. Y., for October 1, 1915:

Here's a Big Money-Maker

$25 to $60 extra profit for you each week if you install a Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine. Hundreds of theatres are reaping a harvest of nickels. One of these machines installed last January took in $2,065 the first five months. Hundreds of like records prove the Butter-Kist Popper nets much more profit per square foot than anything else in the theatres, for 70c. out of every dollar's worth of pop corn you sell is clear, clean profit. Big, constant demand. All-year, spot-cash business. No stock to carry. Butter-Kist brings more patrons to your theatre. It is backed by a big national advertising campaign.

43,000,000 Advertisements for Butter-Kist Pop Corn in national magazines and weeklies during 1915 have made Butter-Kist a national treat in every state in the union.

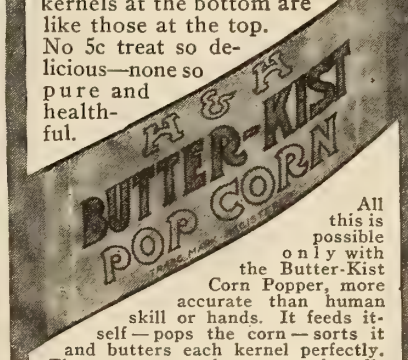
This great advertising campaign is making customers and profits for every Butter-Kist owner and operator and increasing his profits. Hook your theatre to this great national advertising campaign and make big money from the greatest confectionery campaign of the year.

Free Service to Butter-Kist Owners and Operators



Aside from our national advertising our free service to Butter-Kist operators puts you in touch with the very latest and best pop corn and merchandising information. We furnish free motion picture slides, display posters, and have Free Cut Service.

BUTTER-KIST

The Delicious Pop Corn

A Flavory, Savory Confection in a Class of Its Own

Ask for Butter-Kist—the new kind of pop corn. Its appeal is irresistible—once you taste it. Every crisp, crackling, snow-white kernel is perfectly popped and evenly buttered. The kernels at the bottom are like those at the top. No 5c treat so delicious—none so pure and healthful.

All this is possible only with the Butter-Kist Corn Popper, more accurate than human skill or hands. It feeds itself — pops the corn — sorts it and butters each kernel perfectly. Theatres everywhere are installing Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machines and coining big money.

Pay From Your Sales

A small down payment puts this Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine in your theatre or store with all Butter-Kist privileges; pay balance on easy installments. Soon pays for itself out of the money it earns.

21—In the previous question it was stated that if the rheostat contact lever is moved from button No. 4 to button No. 5, there will be included .125 additional ohms resistance in series with the arc. State what effect this will have on the current flow with 110 volts on the line and with the same 50 volt potential drop across the arc.

Ans.—By referring to Fig. 19, it will be seen that by moving the contact lever from button No. 4 to button No. 5, we introduce a resistance of .125 ohms in series with the circuit. The effect of this is to reduce the current flow through the circuit to about 38 amperes, providing the line voltage is maintained constant at 110 and the potential drop across the arc is maintained constant at 50.

The method to be followed in making this calculation is as follows: The circuit carrying 110 volts with a flow of 40 amperes has according to the formula in the previous answer a resistance drop in total of 2.75 ohms, which includes the drop in the fixed and adjustable resistance up to and including the 4th button and the 50-volt drop in the arc.

If we now add an additional drop of 5 volts by moving the contact lever to button No. 5 we introduce .125 additional ohms which makes the total ohms in the circuit 2.875. To find the current which will flow under this condition use the following formula:

$$C = \frac{E}{R}$$

In practical form this reads amperes flowing will equal voltage 110 divided by the total resistance of the circuit which is 2.875; this equals about 38 amperes.

Theoretically, there will be a slightly greater ampere flow in the circuit, due to the fact that when we introduce more resistance in the circuit we thus lower the amperes flowing. Consequently having less amperes flowing, the fixed and adjustable resistance will on that account operate at a lower temperature. The effect of reducing the temperature, on practically any resistance unit, is to lower its resistance, which, of course, allows a greater amount of current to flow through the circuit.

22—Suppose we move the contact lever which was originally on button No. 4 to button No. 3, which cuts out a 5-volt drop, which is equal to .125 ohms resistance. How much current will be flowing under that condition?

Ans.—The cutting out of .125 ohms resistance in series with the circuit reduces the total number of ohms which was originally 2.75 to 2.625 ohms total.

Using the formula above, we find the following results. Amperes flowing equals 110 volts, divided by 2.625 ohms, or about 42 ampere current flow.

Again calling to your attention the effect of change in the ampere flow on a fixed resistance we find that the resistance in the circuit now operating with a current flow of 42 amperes or 5 per cent. more than it originally did, will be hotter, therefore its resistance will be increased slightly and the current will, in view thereof, not be exactly 42 amperes, but slightly less.

23—Do all resistance units increase in resistance as the ampere flow is increased and does the resistance decrease with decrease in the current flow?

Ans.—The resistance material with which we are acquainted in the control of projector arcs is of the kind in which the resistance increases with increase in the current flow.

Some years ago the only good resistance wire which could be had was called Krupp wire and was imported from Germany. This wire was in the main composed of nickel and steel. This wire when cold for a given length and diameter of wire might measure 2 ohms. When made up into the usual spiral coil resistance unit and put into service it would dissipate the current which would manifest itself in heat radiated by this resistance spiral. Under ordinary conditions the spiral would be enclosed in a ventilated protecting case.

Naturally the heat generated would accumulate within the case and the temperature of the wire would increase up to a given point. For such a wire a temperature rise of over 350 to 450 degrees Fahrenheit would be considered allowable. The effect of this temperature rise on the wire in question would increase its resistance about 20 to 25 per cent. It was stated that the original resistance of this unit when cold was 2 ohms. The increase of 25 per cent. would mean that the resistance when hot would be 2½ ohms and as a result the current flowing through the wire would be reduced from 20 to 25 per cent.

This matter of temperature co-efficient in a resistance unit or wire of the ordinary kind accounts for the fact that in many instances a rheostat may blow the fuses when the arc is first switched on and after it has become heated the current has dropped 20 to 25 per cent and then the fuses hold nicely. It is well to remember that in starting the arc, on a resistance of any kind, to separate the carbons about 50 per cent. more than usual when first striking the arc, with the resistance cold. After operating a few minutes the resistance will have become heated and then it is entirely satisfactory to put the carbons closer together as the system has then become normally balanced.

Theatre Building at New Orleans Ushers in Film Prosperity

Season Opens with Encouraging Outlook and South Expects Era of Prosperity—Large First Class Theatres Springing Up in Various Parts of the Crescent City—Exhibitor from Northern Louisiana Shows Canal Street Managers a New Theatre Front for Drawing Crowded Houses

DESPITE pessimistic talk of a nature calculated to scare the ordinary exhibitor, the South has passed through conditions that threatened to disrupt the business, and on September 1 the South looks forward to an era of prosperity that is simply bound to follow the depression of the last six months.

In New Orleans on September 1 there was unwonted activity in theatre rebuilding and renovating; and new theatres are springing up, not like mushrooms, but with a steady growth of first-class, permanent houses.

Pearce's Dreamland, at 318 St. Charles street, opened on September 1, after being closed down for two months, undergoing extensive repairs. The theatre is brand new all over, and it has been labelled one of the handsomest four hundred-seat houses in the city. Its lobby is all new, and it has followed the idea lately conceived in that territory—that of having the screen at the entrance of the theatre rather than in the rear.

A distinctive feature of the new Dreamland is the ventilation system, which consists of a variety of ceiling fans and draft-boxes which convey cooled air from the fourth story direct to the interior of the house.

There is tiled flooring, a marble foyer and telephone boxes and other conveniences for patrons. The angle of the seats is such that a splendid view of the pictures is to be obtained from any part of the house. Two standard Simplex machines and a Gold Radium fibre screen complete the equipment. J. G. Reeder, formerly manager of Mr. Pearce's big Trianon, is the manager. The program will be first-run Generals.

Trophies of Manager-Sportsman on Theatre Front

But it was Ernest Boehringer, a northern Louisiana exhibitor, who made his future Canal street brethren sit up and take notice. He has sprung a brand new type of film palace on little old New Orleans, and one that is perhaps the most unique in the United States. By working a day and night shift, Mr. Boehringer opened his new Columbia, Canal and Burgundy streets, in the first week in September.

The lobby of the Columbia is something new in lobbies, inasmuch as two enormous antlered deer are set in Italian marble at the front of the house, while directly back of them is painted a typical Louisiana swamp scene. Both of these magnificent animals were brought down by Mr. Boehringer's gun. He has hundreds of deer heads and other trophies of the chase which are in generous profusion at all parts of his newest theatre. It is Mr. Boehringer's ambition to rival the famous Buckhorn Cafe at San Antonio, Texas, and a glimpse into his Canal street house makes one believe that he will succeed admirably.

The Columbia seats six hundred. It is on the site of the old Audubon theatre, lately owned by Vic. Perez. It contains three double exits; has an indirect lighting system and a Gold Radium fibre screen. The American Seating Company of Chicago will furnish the seats, but until these arrive the old Audubon seats are sufficing. Mr. Boehringer is one of the best-known exhibitors in Baton Rouge, the state capital, and his venture into the New Orleans field is a new one and is being watched with considerable interest, inasmuch as the picture business in Canal street has heretofore been handled by a few local magnates.

For the third time in three years the Lyceum, the largest family theatre in New Orleans, on St. Charles street, is emerging from extensive improvements which were begun several months ago. The capacity of the house has been greatly enlarged, and it now seats one thousand. A consistent, pulling policy adopted by the present management at the very start is responsible for the success achieved. They started out to give the public the best obtainable pictures at five cents, and certainly succeeded, if patronage is a criterion.

Fichtenberg Buys Two Theatres From Pearce

Herman Fichtenberg, pioneer film magnate of New Orleans, announces a number of important changes in territory surrounding New Orleans. In Vicksburg, Miss., he has purchased the interests of J. Pearce & Sons, which includes the Bijou Dream, a three hundred and fifty-seat house, and the Dreamland, a two hundred and fifty-seat house. This gives Mr. Fichtenberg full sway in the Mississippi city, with three theatres. He will shortly announce a number of improvements.

Mr. Fichtenberg has also absorbed the Bijou and the Bonita in Pensacola, Fla. He has closed up the Bijou, as he did not think Pensacola could support three houses.

In New Orleans, Mr. Fichtenberg thinks he has enough houses for the immediate present; but he has given the city a "skee ball" alley, importing it all the way from the San Francisco Fair for the benefit of this southern city. The "skee ball" alley is located next door to his Plaza theatre, and patrons jump naturally from his film show to his newer form of amusement.

With city exhibitors ever on the alert for something new in the amusement line, it is fair to say that exhibitors in country towns have not been inactive. Road men bring enthusiastic reports of success achieved in the country, and they declare it is not a hard matter to land a good feature with any exhibitor. In Ponchatula, La., an exhibitor recently had phenomenal success with talking pictures, while in Gramercy, La., an exhibitor uses his theatre after the close of the regular show for a dance, charging twenty-five cents for the privilege, and getting it.

Victor Howard has finished the Arcade, St. Ann and Dorgenois streets, and has spent several thousand dollars in installing all the latest improvements. The house contains conveniences that is bound to bring it to the front as one of the best-patronized suburban theatres in the city.

G. B. Mars, one of the best-known suburban exhibitors, will also improve the Mars theatre, and he has in mind a number of other improvements, including possibly a new house.

Over in Algiers, across the river from New Orleans, that city will get for the first time an up-to-date motion picture house, the Market. The Phil Foto interests are constructing this house, and it will cost about $30,000 when completed. It is to be the latest word in picture houses, and safety for its patrons will be one of the chief considerations. The Market is at Teche and Opelousas avenues.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

LIGHT AMBER BEST COLOR COMBINATION FOR LIGHTING

V. L. P., North McAllester, Okla.:—You will please find below these few lines a brief sketch of decorations of walls and my plans of the indirect lighting, which is to be composed of three brackets (on each wall) with shades reflecting the light on paintings as shown—the bracket which reflects light on painting, or circle No. 1 will be five feet from floor; circle No. 2 will be six feet from floor, and circle No. 3 will be 7 feet from floor. As I have never seen any indirect lighting on this principle, I ask your assistance. Would you use colored lights; paintings to be in vivid colors, such as red, green, orange, and so forth? What size lamp would you use? Ceiling color light green, back ground outside painting dark green. Will the lights be too close to the floor? Could I use lights in any other position to answer both purposes? Trusting you will give me your best opinion on the above matter, I am, awaiting your reply.

Ans.—From your sketch I should judge that if the lighting fixtures themselves are not too low so that anyone in the audience might touch them while standing up with hat on, your system should give entire satisfaction. The best color combination for lighting in general for a motion picture theatre is light amber.

I believe a frotsed amber colored lamp in the fixtures you describe would give very good satisfaction. There is another way in which to accomplish a diffused light on the wall, such as you desire by using the very same fixtures with an opaque shade or reflector of the proper design with an ordinary incandescent lamp in the socket.

The opening of the shade or reflector may then be covered in suitable manner with a yellow or amber colored silk or similar fabric. A cover of this kind allows you to use the ordinary clear incandescent lamp, because the silk will diffuse as well as color the light. There are theatres using a scheme somewhat similar to that which you describe, but not with the specially designed diffusing arrangement, such as I mention. Your sketch, Fig. 1, is herewith reproduced for the attention of those who may also be interested in the same lighting system produced by you.

PICTURE NINE BY TWELVE FEET

J. F. R., Wellsville, Mo.—Please state size of motion picture needed for picture nine by twelve feet; also advise as to Stero. and condenser lenses.

Do you think a picture of these dimensions is best suited for room twenty-two feet wide?

We are using A. C. 110 volts at lamp through Ft. Wayne compensarc; Bio carbons 5/8 hard at top and 5/8 cored at bottom.

Ans.—For projection of a motion picture at the distance of 85 feet, giving a picture approximately 9 x 12, either one of the following lenses may be used. For a picture measuring 8.10 x 11.10, 6½ inches E. F. lense should be used. For a picture slightly larger, measuring 9.2 high by 12.3 wide use a lense of 6¼ inches E. F.

For either one of the above motion picture lenses you may use 26 inch E. F. stereoption lense.

I believe your selection of 9 x 12 picture to be entirely satisfactory for a room 22 feet wide, it being understood, of course, that your room near the screen end is at least 14 to 15 feet high, and then you would have to bring the screen right up to the ceiling.

With the Fort Wayne Compensarc running on the middle notch I recommend 5/8 inch cored carbon top and bottom, if on the other hand you desire to operate on the high notch which gives 60 amperes, you should use ¾ inch cored carbon top and bottom.

Use 6½ inch condensers front and back, or possibly 6½ inch back (near arc) and 7½ inch front.

REDUCING AMOUNT OF CURRENT

A. J. B.

Houma, La., Aug. 25.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly let me know how to reduce the amount of current that I am using as the lighting system is A. C., and I am converting same into D. C. I have a Power's machine. I have been operating two shows a week, and my light bill is from $26.00 to $30.00 per month. I have tried the arc and I find that it uses current to the amount of forty cents per hour, which is rather high. We are charged eight cents per K. W. hour, so kindly let me hear from you on same.

Yours truly,

A. J. Bethancourt,
Bijou theatre, Houma, La.

New York, Aug. 31.

Dear Sir:—Yours of the twenty-fifth received. In response I beg to inquire what you are using for converting A. C. into D. C. State the following:

First—Voltage and cycles on your A. C. system.

Second—Do you use single. 2 or 3 phase current.

Third—State make of device, voltage, amperes, etc., stamped on your name plate and when you bought it.

Fourth—State type of Power's machine you are using.

Upon receipt of this information your case will have immediate attention.

Yours truly, J. H. H.

Dear Sir:—Your letter dated August 31 to hand, and in reply will say as follows: Using Wagner 35 ampere single phase rotary converter supply 60 cycles, 220 volts three wire single phase lighting rate eight cents per K. W. hour. Efficiency of above Wagner machine is very low, not over 60 per cent. Power's No. 6 I bought about four years ago.

The machine gives a first class picture, but I find that the amount of current is too much, and I believe I am losing current.

Yours truly,

A. J. Bethancourt.

Ans.—Your bill for current in the amount of forty cents per hour at the eight cent rate is about right for the Wagner thirty-five ampere rotary converter. The efficiency you mention of 60 per cent. is about right for any kind of a rotary converter, and cannot be improved in that type of machine. It may be that you are taking more than thirty-five amperes from the rotary, which would of course increase your current bill.

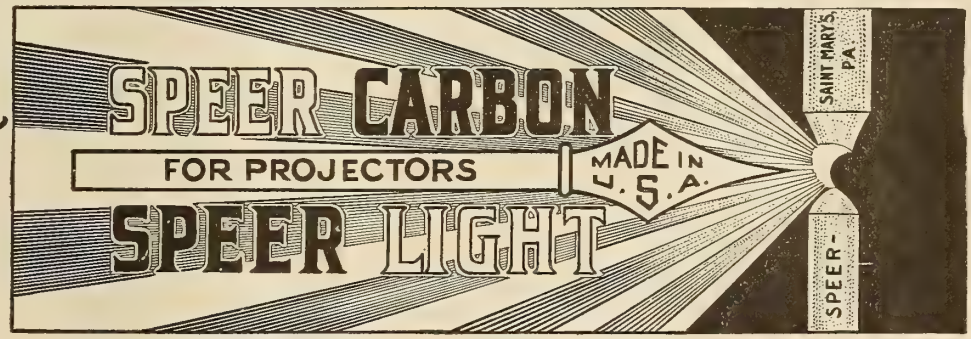

Table of Contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

THE STERN MANUFACTURING COMPANY

109 N. 10th Street PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The only remedy I can offer in your case is to suggest that you cut in more resistance in series with the arc, so as to reduce your current consumption. There are motor generators and similar devices on the market which would operate with greater economy, but in view of the fact that you already have this converter installed and are securing satisfaction, I presume it will be best for you to continue its use, as there is no other remedy which I can suggest.

TREATMENT OF CONDENSERS

B. Carlson, Minneapolis, Minn.:—Dear Sir:—I saw in the September 11 "News" a query from Clarksville, Ark., relating to breakage of condensers.

One of the cures given was to use annealed condensers. I have found that the following method of annealing works fine and even the thickest condensers do not break.

Wrap the new condenser in thin asbestos and lay it on the top of the lamphouse for two weeks; then for two weeks on the rheostat. The condenser can then be safely placed in the mount.

Ans.—I call the attention of others to Mr. Carlson's letter about the treatment of condensers. Not having tried Mr. Carlson's remedy or being acquainted therewith by actual experience I can make no comment, but if he has found it to solve his condenser breakage problem, it might be well worth while for others to try the experiment.

As I understand it the annealing of glass necessitates bringing it up to a considerably higher temperature than can possibly be obtained on top of a lamphouse or rheostat. However, it may have some effect, I hope it does help those who try it.

MEASUREMENTS TO CONFORM WITH TEXAS LAW

J. W. Stewart, Kennedy, Texas.—The subject of your letter of the eighth instant is not fully stated. I can see that your booth is to be changed to comply with the laws of the State of Texas. If you will please mail to me a copy of the said State laws and a drawing showing the plan and sections of your booth, giving all measurements of the same correctly, I should be pleased to further advise you.

If you have only 4 feet 8 inches height from the floor to the ceiling you might be able to increase the height by placing a new skylight over your entire increased booth.

You ask where you can get the material. Contractors in your district could advise you on the subject on that point.

DEATH OF BERT BOHANNON, NICHOLAS POWER REPRESENTATIVE FOR SEVERAL YEARS

TELEGRAMS and messages of condolence have been pouring in at the offices of the Nicholas Power Company, expressing sorrow over the death of Bert Bohannon, traveling representative of that company, which occurred at Stamford, N. Y., Thursday morning, September 9, after a lingering illness of several months. Bohannon had been associated with the Power Company for several years. Prior to his connection with the Power concern, he was identified with the theatrical business for years, and was one of the first to use motion pictures in connection with a vaudeville performance.

Many of Mr. Bohannon's old associates acted as honorary pallbearers at the funeral, held at Evergreen Cemetery, on Monday, September 13.

MOTIOGRAPH OPTICAL SHUTTER IS SET PERFECTLY

The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company is frequently asked by exhibitors why they do not install in their motiograph mechanism a device which will enable the operator to set the shutter while the machine is in operation.

The reasons are chiefly these: A projector whose intermittent movement is so designed that it revolves upon the axis of the intermittent sprocket requires a device of this kind, owing to the fact that framing the picture in this manner changes the relation between star and cam and the shutter, and as a consequence produces a travel-ghost.

Although means are provided to overcome this trouble by shifting the shutter automatically with the sprocket they cannot be made to work perfectly. In the Motiograph the entire framing carriage moves in a vertical plane to frame the picture, and in this way the shutter is kept set perfectly at all times.

NEW RIALTO THEATRE WILL BE THOROUGHLY EQUIPPED

S. L. ROTHAPFEL, originator of the Strand theatre, of which he was the managing director, is now vice-president and managing director of the new Rialto theatre, being constructed on the site of the old Hammerstein vaudeville house on Forty-second street, in New York.

With the determination to bring to this new enterprise nothing but the most up-to-date and modern ideas, Mr. Rothapfel is sparing no expense. He has engaged J. H. Hallberg to prepare plans and specifications for the entire machine booth and projection equipment, ventilating of the booth, installation of the motion picture machines and lense system, special dissolving stereopticons, specially constructed spot lights with dissolving effect attachments, new and novel emergency rheostat equipment for the Edison 110-220 volt D. C. system and a complete motor generator equipment for the control of the projector arcs with a capacity of 125 amperes for each machine.

UNION IN TORONTO FIGHTS TWO THEATRES ACCUSED OF OPPRESSION

A SMALL battle for union rights is being waged on Queen street, one of Toronto's most important business streets, by two theatres. Signs displayed outside ask the public to "Patronize houses that pay a living wage to their employees." Upon inquiry, it was stated that several of the houses in the district, in order to cut down prices were paying far below the union rate to their operators.

As both of the houses are prominent and certainly prosperous, it appears as if the campaign might have good results. Besides the international body, Toronto also has a local association calling itself the Canadian Union.

METCALFE TO ESTABLISH BRANCH HOUSE, PROBABLY IN SEATTLE

G. A. METCALFE, who conducts one of the leading supply houses in California at San Francisco, recently made a trip to the leading trade centers of the Pacific Northwest, and is preparing to open a branch house, probably at Seattle, although the exact site has not been determined upon.

The opening of a branch is made necessary by the great increase in the volume of business done and will enable customers in the Northwest to be served much more quickly than is now possible.

SIMPLEX MACHINES FOR GOVERNMENT MILITARY SCHOOLS

THE Army War College, Washington, D. C., and the School of Musketry, Fort Sill, Oklahoma, have purchased Simplex projectors during the past week.

'FRISCO THEATRE ORDERS NEW POWER'S EQUIPMENT

THE Market street theatre, conducted by Hallihan and Getz, and located on Market street, opposite Fifth, in the heart of the amusement district of San Francisco, has placed an order for two of the latest type Power's Cameragraphs, and will be the first to install the new model in this city.

This house has enjoyed a splendid summer run of business, and is preparing for a heavy fall and winter season.

NEW YORK MOTION INSTALLS THREE POWER'S MACHINES

THE projecting machine department of the Los Angeles General Film Company's office has equipped the New York Motion Picture Corporation studios with three new Power's 6-A projecting machines, and are now installing two of the same type in the new theatre being built by Homer Laughlin, Los Angeles banker, at Long Beach.

REFLEX

The Quality Carbons of the World

Specially Constructed Negative with Copper Coated Core

Here is one of the letters we promised. It comes from a gentleman in Fort Worth, Texas, and was written to a mutual friend.

"I received a dozen carbons from the Reflex people. I am prepared to say that they are a better carbon than the present carbons on the market. They make two kinds, one for A.C. and one for D.C. The carbons for A.C. are by far the best for A.C. I ever used, giving at least 15% better screen illumination than any other brand. The D.C. carbons have a very brilliant white light. This is caused by the special pains they take with their negative carbon, which has a copper coated core which gives a green cast mixed with the violet from the top carbon and makes a Brillianter, Whiter, and Better light. In fact, they are all that could be desired in carbons at this stage.

"The binder seems to be high grade. The core is composed of high grade carbon held together with the best sodium silicate (No_2 Si_4 O_9).

"The carbons last longer, give better results than any I have used, they are not a dirty carbon, they don't fill your lamphouse full of soot."

Remember all these letters are authentic and we will be glad to furnish names and addresses to anyone.

You, Mr. Manager, and you, Mr. Operator, don't you want that "15% better screen illumination" with A. C. and that "Brillianter, Whiter and Better light" with D. C.? Your spectators want it, and it pays to give them what they want.

¾x12 plain cored $10.00 per hundred carbons

⅝x12 plain cored $7.50 per hundred carbons

⅜x 6 copper coated cored $3.75 per hundred carbons

½x 6 copper coated cored $2.75 per hundred carbons

If your dealer cannot supply you, we will fill sample orders in lots of fifty each in all the above sizes, providing cash accompanies the order in full.

COMPLETE EQUIPMENT FOR NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY THEATRES

THE Geneva Amusement Company, of Geneva, N. Y., will very shortly open the new Regent theatre. The equipment for the house is modern and up to date in every particular. Two Power's 6-B machines with motor drive and Hallberg 20th Century 30 to 70 ampere A. C.-D. C. motor generator have been furnished, together with a Hallberg screen, ticker sellers, ticket chopper and other supplies and equipment.

The Colonial theatre of Orange, N. J., has been taken over by Mr. Cuff, formerly of Paterson, N. J., and he has installed two Power's 6-A machines and a Hallberg 20th Century 30 to 70 ampere motor generator set with a special switchboard, with ammeter and volt meter and emergency A. C. economizer installation and switches on the switchboard.

TWO DAYTON THEATRES WILL BE EQUIPPED WITH MINUSA SCREENS

THE Minusa Cine Products Company has received an order from the Auditorium Amusement Company, of Dayton, Ohio, to equip two of its theatres with Minusa screens. This company is one of the most substanital concerns in Dayton.

The Minusa Screen Company received this order through its representative in Dayton, "Dick" Rayner, of the Rayner Feature Film Company. The A. H. Johnson Seating Company is also doing an extensive business for the Minusa company in the Northwest and Alaska.

Hand Picked Theatres for Managers Seeking the Best

By Nathan Myers

Many People on Entering the Business Engage Theatres Not Suited to Their Purpose and Would Do Better in Selecting a Location and Erecting a House According to the Ideas of an Experienced Architect, Whose Judgment Will Save an Exhibitor a Good Many Dollars

OF the many people going into the photo-play field, how many chose their sites and how many are influenced by the sites? In other words, is it not more generally the fact that the theatre is built without reference to the tenant.

We will consider you desirous of engaging a new house. First consider whether you want a six or a seven day town. There is a difference of opinion on this subject of a six and a seven day town. I have heard many an exhibitor claim that the seventh day attendance was negatively felt for two days after; that the money made on Sunday was lost on Monday and Tuesday.

Men who have been used to a six day town, have gone into the other field only to give it up after a good trial. This is a matter for individual thought and decision.

You must carefully weigh the prosperity of the place—if all the people are kept employed and if that employment is all year round. Judge if they are of the picture loving class. Do they lack less expensive pastimes, or are they surrounded by such that the photo-plays would be largely secondary?

Are there numerous theatres in the town already, or is its field insufficiently covered? Or if abundantly provided for, is such provision of the right sort? Are the houses up to the minute?

Somebody Always Ready to Sell, Even in Good Times

Having decided upon the town you will investigate those theatres that are built and are in the market waiting for a new tenant, for in every town, no matter how good the times, some owner always wants to sell.

Judgment to be of any value should be based upon at least a whole day's study right on the site.

The house located in the centre of the city and on the main highway will be benefited by transient business, and longer hours of attendance. It will have need of a large seating capacity. It must be the best in construction, design ventilation and comfort and its show must be nothing but first run pictures of every class. Such a theatre will have a heavy overhead charge which must be met before any profits are shown.

Let us see what is offered by the house more distant from a transient centre. A theatre of lesser seating capacity, say from six to ten hundred, on a less valuable site can be obtained at a greatly reduced rent, run with less help, require less advertising, use second or third run pictures, mean less responsibility and often less competition. True there is little outside of the neighborhood business. The matinees are not profitable, yet do the receipts compare with the expenses. Again we would say, each location requires an individual study.

What to Consider in Picking a Building Site

If you cannot rent a theatre in your town look about for a site preferably upon which no buildings of value exist, which will have to be destroyed. Give consideration to the proximity of car lines, conveniences for parking automobiles, and the busy side of the street. Give consideration to the cost of land and the probable cost of a building that would be demanded by the location.

The sunny side of the street is preferable, because invariably it is the busy side of the thoroughfare. Snow is more quickly melted. After rain storms or after washing up the sidewalks, the pavement dries more quickly.

A site should be avoided where the natural grade of the lot is opposite to the required grade of the auditorium floor, for such a lot would require excessive cost of excavating and perhaps heavy costs of retaining walls, aside from the exit alleys. If possible, the land sloping with the proposed grade of the auditorium is even more preferable.

The shape of the lot is to be considered. A theatre for other than the photo show would be better located on a wide and shallow lot. The photoplay house for better projection and less eye strain should have great depth and little width.

Sites odd in shape, presenting to the casual observer almost insurmountable difficulties, often prove under the hand of the experienced architect most promising subjects.

If you contemplate purchasing a new site, select first your architect and do not move without his advice. Let him point out to you the comparative advantages and disadvantages of each parcel of land and be guided by his judgment.

MELBA AND THE REEL, CLEVELAND, UNDERGO EXTENSIVE REPAIRS; WEST ALLEGHANY, PHILADELPHIA, OPENS

AN extensive addition to the Melba theatre, West 117th street and Detroit avenue, Cleveland, is under course of construction. The changes include a new auditorium, 60 x 120 feet, with a complete rearrangement of the house. The present lobby will be changed into an enlarged lobby and foyer, while a ventilating plant with a capacity of 20,000 cubic feet a minute will be installed. The house will have a capacity of 1,000 seats, with a tier of seven auto boxes, which will seat about forty persons.

The Metropolitan Amusement Company, which owns the Reel theatre, has secured a lease on the Grand theatre, East 9th street and Bolivar road, Cleveland, and will open it as a film house on October 1. President George Hausheer says that the house will be redecorated. This is the second standard theatre that has been converted into a picture house this year, as the Metropolitan has been turned into a film theatre. This deal gives the Metropolitan company two houses within three squares on the same street.

George A. Kramer, Middletown, who recently purchased the Eagle picture playhouse from Charles R. Fay, took charge September 1.

The West Alleghany, at Twenty-fifth and Alleghany avenue, Philadelphia, has reopened after extensive alterations. The new proprietor, B. Amsterdam, has transformed the house with new interior and exterior decorations, also installing a ten thousand-dollar Wurlitzer organ.

Another house to redecorate and repaint inside and out, is the New Majestic Palace, at 2124 Kensington avenue, Philadelphia, of which Eugene McHugh is manager. Special attention is paid here to projection, two Simplex machines being used, and an almost flawless result being thus obtained.

The Miles theatre, Pittsburgh, which has been showing vaudeville, has changed and is now to run nothing but motion pictures. This was decided upon last week.

Notice the deep embossing and the clear-cut, beautiful appearance of this ceiling. Alhambra Theater, Canton, O.

F. J. REMBUSCH INVENTS A NEW WHITE SCREEN FOR WIDE AND LARGE THEATRES

F. J. REMBUSCH, who is well known through his invention, the Glass Mirror Screen, which he has been selling for ten years, has invented a new cloth screen for large and wide theatres that he claims positively overcomes fade-away or distortion on the sides or at extreme angles. It is not an aluminum or gold bronze screen, but a white surface that is the outcome of many years of experimenting.

Mr. Rembusch is also reducing the price of glass mirror screens and increasing their quality. In the new factory at Shelbyville, Indiana, by the aid of electric machinery, a glass mirror screen can be handled with two men, where it formerly took twenty men to carry a large plate by hand straps.

The factory is turning out about thirty screens a week and has a stock of screens on hand at all times. Seven kinds of screens are made, ranging in price from twenty cents to two dollars per square foot, as follows:

Glass Mirror Screen, Glass Translucent Screen for rear projection, Gold Fibre, Silver Fibre, Mirror Cloth, White Fibre, and cloth rear projection screen.

The Mirror Screen Company is also making looking glasses for lobby and large mirrors for inside of theatres, and do resilvering of mirrors, and re-coat cloth screens.

Also, they found exhibitors in a receptive mood and ready to co-operate with the State department.

Flint has a new motion picture theatre, the Garden, which formerly operated as the Bijou. It has been thoroughly remodeled and redecorated. Harold Weiss, formerly connected with the Butterfield enterprises at Battle Creek, is the lessee of the Garden. The formal opening took place September 18.

MISSOURI

October 1 will witness the opening of several new, as well as many rebuilt theatres in St. Louis. Of the new theatres, the Pageant, at 5851 Delmar avenue, a house just completed, will be a first run feature picture theatre under the management of A. E. Morelock. The Pageant is one of the largest one-floor theatres in the Middle West, and in addition to other modern equipment has a Hope-Jones Unit Symphony Orchestra, composed of 32 instruments.

The Shaw, a new theatre at Shaw avenue and 39th street, St. Louis, opened on Labor Day as an all picture house. The Shaw is under the management of Mr. G. T. Meyer, of Meyer Brothers & Pracht, who own and operate the Knickerbocker theatre and airdome at Park and Compton avenues.

The Cinderella, at Cherokee and Iowa, St. Louis, which was formerly the largest dancing palace in that city, is being made into a very large and handsome motion picture theatre, with a seating capacity of 3,000. The Cinderella is equipped with all the modern improvements, including rest rooms for both men and women, a playroom in the basement for the children, and an excellent orchestra that will play dance music for an hour or so after the show each night in order that all who wish may dance. The opening will be around October 1.

Another rebuilt theatre to open soon is the Marguerite Clark, on Olive street near Sarah, St. Louis. The entire interior of the house is to be practically reconstructed, and much wasted space in the former arrangement will be utilized for more seats in the remodeled house. A. M. E. Pasmezoglu will be in active charge of the theatre, which will be renamed the "Congress," opening on October 2.

The King's, on Kingshighway, near Delmar, St. Louis, opened on September 19, after being dark nearly all the time during the past two years. The King's is under the management of Harry Koplar, a well known St. Louis exhibitor.

The Garrick theatre, Sixth and Chestnut streets, St. Louis, which has been closed for the past two years, will reopen as a motion picture house early in October. The Garrick, a Shubert house, has been leased by Harris and Davis, of Pittsburgh. Isaac Lipzin, who has been managing Harris & Davis' three theatres in Cincinnati, is now in St. Louis, and will probably have charge of the Garrick.

Other theatres without airdomes in connection chose September 12 for their opening date, among them being the Lindell, at Grand and Herbert streets, St. Louis. The Gravois, at Gravois and Jefferson avenues, and the Plymouth, at Plymouth and Hamilton avenues, in the same city.

NEBRASKA

Alkire & Arthur have opened the Princess, a new theatre at Webster City. It is a small house, but is neatly appointed and tastefully decorated.

N. B. Reynolds, an exhibitor from Howard Lake, Minn., has gone to Fairfield, Neb., where he has purchased the Fairfield theatre. He has redecorated, refurnished and remodeled part of the theatre.

L. C. Severns has opened the new Crescent theatre at Holdridge. The house seats 600 people.

Decatur has no railroad, but it now has a dandy theatre, the Gold Light, with J. M. Matney as the manager. While the town has a population of only 800, Matney manages to use the same picture for two days and keep his crowds coming.

P. H. Kettleson has just bought the American at Wilton Junction.

The Strand, formerly the American, in Omaha, opened Tuesday, September 14. On the opening night the business center, where the house is located, was almost blocked by automobiles. The prices are 10-20-30 cents. The interior has been decorated in a soft red, with lights snugly hidden in wicker baskets of flowers hanging from the ceiling. The screen is away back on the stage while the operator's box is on the lower floor. W. M. Thomas is manager.

NEW YORK

The Palace theatre, Buffalo, owned by Mitchell H. Mark, has changed its policy under the management of Claude S. Weill and is presenting three features a week, changing the program on Sunday, Wednesday and Friday. The change has met with the popular favor. Mr. Weill has also augmented the Palace orchestra.

The Academy theatre, Buffalo, changed from musical comedy and motion pictures to vaudeville and motion pictures. An entire silent drama bill is featured on Sunday.

Walter Bengough, for the past four years assistant manager of the International theatre at Niagara Falls, has been appointed manager of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, succeeding Edward L. Hyman, who has just resigned.

Albany is to have another theatre, one of the stockholders of the Strand theatre in New York being at the head of the corporation which is reported planning the new structure.

The Bijou Dream theatre at the corner of Main and North Division streets, Buffalo, will soon be razed to make room for the new Bank of Buffalo.

Hart's new motion picture theatre, Bennington, opened to the public September 17. The structure is of brick and will easily seat 1,000 persons.

OHIO

The new Lincoln motion picture theatre, under the management of Michael Moran and located in Himrod avenue, between Murdock and Fruit street, Youngstown, opened September 11. The theatre is a model structure, is of fireproof construction and has been handsomely decorated.

R. C. Stueve announced that the interior of the Orpheum, Canton, would be considerably remodelled within the next few weeks. A better class of pictures will be displayed.

Manager Schram, of the Grand theatre, Youngstown, is now preparing for the installation of a new picture set for motion pictures. This set is to be of Grecian design and will be dimly illuminated while the pictures are being shown. Between pillars and behind a bed of flowers in the foreground, on which the dim light will be thrown, the motion pictures are to be displayed.

OKLAHOMA

Veno Pistocco has purchased the Star-Electric theatre at Savanna, from the Savanna Amusement Company, and after renovating and repairing, will open the fall season October 1. Mr. Pistocco also announces that he will reopen the Star theatre at North McAlester on October 1, having put the Star theatre in a first class condition.

Sans Souci Park Dome, of McAlester, closed for the season recently. The theatre and park will reopen again next spring with added attractions and will show the latest pictures on dates not filled by regular theatrical attractions.

PENNSYLVANIA

The Bijou Dream, a handsome house of 300 seats, which was built by Harry Davis eight years ago in East Liberty, was sold last Friday by David Mintz to a party of eastern capitalists and the house was closed on Saturday. The property adjoining on both sides has also been purchased and it is understood that a large building is to be erected on the property.

The reopening of the new Miles theatre, Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, as a home for high-class photoplays, occurred September 14.

Gentlemen: This is to inform you that Mr....., Manager of the.....Theatre....., Utah, is in the market for a new screen. I am of the opinion that you can sell him one.

I am very glad that I bought a Mirroroid screen. I have one of the best pictures in this section of the country, and my juice consumption is small. I think that the screen will have paid for itself this year on this alone.

In writing Mr..... you may use my name if you so choose.

Trusting that this may be of value to you, I am. Very respectfully yours,

REMBUSCH SCREENS

ANNOUNCEMENT "GLORY LIGHT"

Last week I told you of the new screen made of White Fibre, which I have invented. I got a sample of every other screen that is made by other manufacturers and I placed this White Fibre against other samples, in the same light, and the difference was simply wonderful.

Some friends, to whom I was demonstrating, exclaimed that from every angle it has a glorious light, so I named this screen and I guarantee that if there is any screen of any other make that will compare with it in any way, from any angle, I will forfeit the price of this screen.

JUST THINK OF THIS!

I was in the office of Jones-Linick-Schaeffer, of Chicago, who operate the Orpheum on State Street, the largest moving picture theatre in the Middle West. I asked Mr. Schaeffer, "How is the Glass 'Mirror Screen'?" Mr. Schaeffer answered, "Well, F. J., when we put in the Glass 'Mirror Screen' in the Lyric seven years ago and the Orpheum six years ago, we thought we were spending a lot of money, but it has been the cheapest investment we have ever made because our pictures are always great and it helps our patronage for that reason."

AGAIN: JUST THINK OF IT! A screen that is as good in seven years as the day it left the factory, and this same screen is so good that I defy any other screen manufacturer to put a sample up against it in comparison. This should be reason enough to recommend it to your favor without a lot of conversation on my part.

Music and the Picture

Edited by Ernst Luz

This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

UNSATISFACTORY MUSIC FOR "PEER GYNT"

FOR some time we have been told that we were to have special music for the Morosco feature, "Peer Gynt," with Cyril Maude.

This music has been created under the direction of a well known music publisher. Having every respect for the firm's publications, knowing them to be good music and well arranged, nevertheless at a private showing, with this music played by an orchestra par excellence, at the Broadway theatre, New York, I became more than ever convinced that no individual or corporation can get good or proper musical results for feature photoplays when compelled to confine themselves to the publications of any one publisher.

The music did not conform itself to the picture, but on the contrary the picture had to bend to the music. The "Peer Gynt" numbers by Grieg were appropriate and as they are necessary to picture suggestion, no one could go wrong in placing them, but when a duel is fought to the strains of "Listen to the Mocking Bird" and a duellist dies to the strains of "Dixie" played double forte, I leave you to judge the answer.

When there is a song that must be popularized and the singer sings from Monday to Wednesday night and out on the wild sea waves through a plot to abduct a beautiful female flirt, who does nothing nearly like singing beyond the ringing of a small table bell, it is time to wonder whether we are going back to the days of the illustrated songs, with a probably more refined tone.

The demands of picture music are far greater than the possible supply of any one publisher, and it cannot assist the industry at large to curtail that which is possible in music to less than one per cent. of the available product.

A revised music plot for "Peer Gynt" is given on the following page, which corrects that which, in my opinion, seemed to have been sacrificed at the private showing.

The producers of excellent feature photoplays should feel sure that their good pictures are not made ridiculous, while those interested in the music trade should try not to appear ridiculous in the eyes of those in the photoplay industry. Either of the above can only indefinitely postpone the universal success of picture music.

The picture is a beautiful piece of work, the camera having performed its work beyond the usual expectations. Certain alterations would have made possible the playing of the "Peer Gynt" music, suite No. 1 and 2 by Grieg more consecutively, nevertheless the musical opportunities are excellent and one cannot go amiss in the placing of both the dramatic and the suggested numbers.

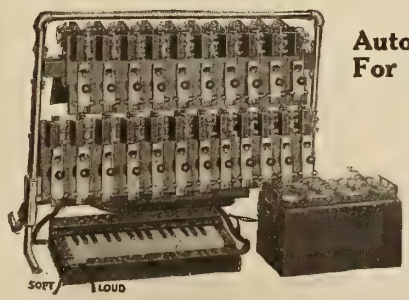
Regardless of any and all criticism it is gratifying to note that the producers of photoplays are inclined to assist in the betterment of picture music.

SOMETHING BRAND NEW IN THEATRE ADVERTISING

THE Bartola Musical Instrument Company, of Oshkosh, Wisconsin, has just put on the market what it calls the Autola. This ingenious device can be placed on the running board of any automobile.

It is operated by electricity from a keyboard placed on the back of the front seat or any other convenient place. Any time desired it can be played.

An exhibitor having one of these instruments and attaching it to his automobile has a method of advertising his show which can not be surpassed. Banners, transparencies and other display methods can be used to make announcements while the people's attention will be attracted by the music.



Although this instrument has been out but a few weeks it is meeting with great success.

BUFFALO MANAGER INTRODUCES ORCHESTRA IN NOVEL WAY

HAROLD EDEL, a Buffalo, N. Y., exhibitor, has a novel way of introducing his orchestra at intermission when they render the overture. Mr. Edel has a stage erected in the yard of the Teck theatre building, and thereon has his orchestra enter in full dress, one man at a time, bow to the audience and take his seat at his stand.

A camera clicked away during the proceedings. Next week, when the overture is played at the Strand, Mr. Edel will precede it with this film introduction of his excellent body of musicians. It should prove to be a decided novelty. When the last man is introduced and seated, the orchestra will commence the overture.

Music Plot for Morosco Feature "Peer Gynt"

THIS plot is adapted so as to make it possible for the pianist, one-man orchestra player, organist or orchestra leader to make some prior preparation for playing the picture.

The numbers suggested need not be used, similar numbers, or numbers suggested by "Notes" will do as well. It is intended that no unnecessary expense be added for the exhibitor or musician.

33.	Heavy Desc. (Grieg).....	Nocturne by Grieg (C. Fischer)..	Bell in tower tolls.
34.	Solvejg Song	Same as 9.....	To end.

NOTES.—In music plot all numbers suggested from "Peer Gynt" suite by Grieg are very necessary and should be used. I can suggest no numbers that would be suitable substitutes. No. 33 can be a heavy, slow, serious number, and is the only Grieg number that can be omitted. Nos. 2, 4 and 32 are Norwegian Peasant numbers. Similar to mazurkas.

Nos. 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 28 and 34 should be the numbers suggested, Solvejg song being a character theme running throughout. No. 11 is an Indian characteristic number. Nos. 12, 13, 18, 21, 22, 23, 29, 30 and 31 are melo-dramatic numbers as published by Photo Play Music Co., No. 1520 Broadway, New York City. No. 14 is a galop used to avoid the hurry No. 13 from being too long and tiresome.

No. 16 should be a waltz of American, Southern or Foster melodies. No. 17 should be a slow, heavy number, with a suggestion of heavy plotting. No. 20 should be "Turkey in Straw," opening PP, playing Forte when banjo players flashed.

No. 25 should have a slight Oriental suggestion, No. 26 a decided African suggestion, No. 27 an Oriental 2/4 number suitable for the usual Oriental dance. For No. 8 organ alone is essential. Can also be used for Nos. 5, 8, 9, 10, 17 and 33.

Nos. 19, 23, 24, 28 and 31 are short, slow Andante numbers and can be played on organ, thereby simplifying segues.
